France is constituted by a marriage in France according to French law, not by married people coming to France and settling there. And community must commence from the day of the marriage. It cannot commence from any other time. It appears to me, therefore, that the proposition for which the executors contend cannot be supported on principle. That, I think, was the view of the Court of Appeal. But they considered that the judgment of Lord Eldon in Lashley v. Hog compelled them to decide in favour of the executors. I must say I rather agree with Kekewich, J., that it is difficult exactly to know what Lord Eldon meant. Mr. and Mrs. Roger Hog, an Englishman by domicil and an Englishwoman, intermarried in England without a settlement. Mr. Hog made a fortune in England, settled in Scotland and became domiciled there. After this change of domicil the wife died in the lifetime of the husband. Some years later the husband died a domiciled Scotchman. There was a good deal of litigation as to the administration of Mr. Hog's estate, and there were several appeals to this House. In one of these appeals among other things this House determined that Mrs. Lashley, who was one of the children of the marriage, had "a claim in the right of her mother, the wife of the said Mr. Roger Hog, who at the time of her death had his domicil in Scotland, to a share of the movable estate of her father at the time of her mother's death." No doubt if the law had not been altered by the Act 18 Vict. c. 23, s. 6, that decision would be binding upon this House in a similar case. But when you are asked to apply the decision to a case where the circumstances are different, it seems to me that the proper course is to ascertain, if you can, the principle of the decision, and then to see if that principle is applicable to the circumstances of the case under consideration. This is the case of a French marriage with a settlement presented and constituted by the law of the land and followed by naturalization in a foreign country; Lashley v. Hog was the case of an English marriage without a settlement and a change of residence to another part of the United Kingdom. Now, what was the principle on which Lord Eldon proceeded? After a long discussion Lord Eldon comes to the point by asking this question: "Why should it be thought an unreasonable thing that where there is no express contract the implied contract should be taken to be that the wife is to look to the law of the country where the husband dies for the right she is to enjoy in case the husband thinks proper to die intestate?" Then his lordship goes on to say: "This has been the principle which, it seems to me, has been adopted, as far as we can collect what has been the principle adopted in cases in those parts of the island with which we are best acquainted, and not being aware that there has been any decision which will countervail this; thinking that it squares infinitely better with those principles upon which your lordships have already decided in this case, it does appear to me, attending to the different sentiments to be found in the text writers upon the subject, that it is more consonant to our own laws, and more consonant to the general principle, to say that the implied contract is that the rights of the wife shall shift with the change of residence of the wife, that change of residence being accomplished by the will of the husband whom, by the marriage contract in this instance, she is bound to obey."

I may observe in passing that in that passage Lord Eldon was referring to the difference of practice in the administration of intestates' effects then prevailing in the different provinces of York and Canterbury, and also to a previous decision in the case of Lashley v. Hog on the question of legitim. It is not, I think, very easy to see how the principle which Lord Eldon selects as the ground of his decision could in the case of an English marriage and the subsequent acquisition of a Scotch domicil be legitimately extended so as to deprive the husband of his own property, and transfer it in his lifetime to the next-of-kin of his wife. It seems to me that that result can only be reached by one or other of two alternatives. Either it must be held that the implied contract on the part of the husband is that in case of a change of a domicil the wife shall enjoy all the rights of a woman married in the country where the new domicil is established, and that he will surrender in her favour so much of his rights as may be inconsistent therewith; or else it is assumed that marriage in Scotland is not required to create communion of goods, but that communion of goods is incidental to the status of married persons in Scotland; or, as Lord Eldon puts it, "the law of Scotland 'recognizes' communion of goods 'in the married state.'"

Now, if that assumption be necessary in order to support Lord Eldon's conclusion in Lashley v. Hog it is obvious that there is so wide a divergence between the law of Scotland, or what is assumed to be the law of Scotland, and the law of France as to make the decision wholly inapplicable to the present case. If on the other hand Lord Eldon's conclusion is a legitimate extension or development of the principle on which his argument is founded, it seems to me that there is no room for the application of the principle in the circumstances of the present case. The principle, as Lord Eldon explains, is founded on the notion that upon an English marriage without an express settlement there is an implied contract that the expectations of the wife are to depend upon the domicil of the husband. Lord Eldon admits, and it was conceded at the bar, that if there had been a written contract dealing with the whole property of spouses present and future, the principle of Lashley v. Hog could not apply. Now the effect of what took place on the occasion of the French marriage, so far as it amounted to a compact in respect to property, must be determined by French law, and it has been proved by the evidence in this case that what did take place was to all intents and purposes equivalent to a written contract.

It appears to me, therefore, that the case is not governed by the decision in Lashley v. Hog, and I think the appeal ought to be allowed.

Lord MORRIS and Lord SHAND agreed with the Lord Chancellor's judgment.

Lord BRAMPTON.—In the year 1854 the plaintiff, Mrs. De Nicols, and her now deceased husband, both being natives of France, domiciled there from their birth, and of full age, were duly married according to the law of that country at the Mayor's office in Paris under the System of Community of Goods contained in the Code Civil.

They remained so domiciled until the year 1863, when they came to reside in, and changed their domicil to, England; and in this country they remained until the husband's death in 1897, the plaintiff, his widow, still continuing her residence here.

By means of such little capital as they were possessed of when they arrived in London, and their own united personal intelligence and industry, they accumulated in England a large fortune, consisting of both movable and immovable property. To-day we are only concerned to deal with that which was movable.

At the time of his death the husband was in ostensible possession of the whole of the joint property; having in March, 1895, made his will purporting to dispose of every part of it, as if it were all his own absolutely. The plaintiff alleges that he was not justified in doing so, claiming that as his surviving spouse she became on his death entitled, under article 1474 of the System of Community, to one-half share of its then available assets. The law of France relating to marriage contracts and the rights of spouses is contained in Title V. of the Code Civil, passed and promulgated in February, 1804, chapters 1, 2, and 3, comprising articles 1387 to 1494 inclusive.

From the general provisions contained in chapter 1, I gather that one great object of the Legislature was to ensure, as far as possible, that, contemporaneously with every celebration of marriage in France, some definite and binding regulation or settlement of the property of the spouses respectively shall be brought into operative existence, leaving it, however, absolutely and without restriction open to the spouses mutually to determine and agree what shall be the character, substance, and provisions of such regulation, provided only that it shall not be contrary to morality, and shall not derogate from certain marital and other rights in no way affecting this present case.

Another object was to provide as much facility as possible for ready, easy, and inexpensive obedience to this requirement by those who are disposed to accept such aid. With a view to these ends, in chapters 2 and 3, the Code sets out in minute detail for the consideration and for the adoption, if they please, of those contemplating marriage, two systems—one called the System of Community, for the regulation of all their movables, both present and future, during the whole period of their coverture, the other, "the dotal system," to which I need not further refer.

In the event of the intending spouses not being willing that their properties shall be regulated by the System of Community, article 1387 provides that they may make a special agreement for themselves as they may deem proper, such special agreement, as a "matrimonial agreement," is by article 1394 required to be reduced into writing, and executed before a notary prior to the celebration of the marriage. The reason for this requirement is very obvious. The system, which was framed with a view to embody such a regulation or settlement as would be acceptable, and best adapted to the requirements of the great majority of French intending spouses, had already been carefully prepared and set forth in detail in the Code, so that it can be easily understood and readily and inexpensively adopted; but no draftsman, however skilful and ingenious, could possibly devise and frame by anticipation a form of settlement to meet the variety of views and caprices of those who preferred to make their own settlement; such could only be prepared when the wishes and intentions of the parties were made known to those whose duty it might be to prepare the instrument in each particular case.

A moment's consideration will suffice to show how absolute and unlimited is the freedom in choice of a settlement to spouses who desire to exercise it, and how erroneous it is to suppose that any particular regulation of their property is forced upon them against their will.

It will be convenient to bear in mind the general features of this system; I have therefore thought it may be useful at once to set out a short epitome of the most important articles.

It is contained in chapter 2 of the Code, and in section 2 is described as a "conjugal partnership," an expression strongly savouring of contractual relations.

By article 1401 the property to be administered under it, described as "community assets," is composed (inter alia) of all the movable property of which the spouses are possessed at the time of the celebration of the marriage, together with all the movable property which comes to them during coverture. By article 1409 the liabilities include the personal debts of the spouses owing at the time of the marriage, the debts incurred by the husband during the community, or by the wife with his assent, the household expenses of the spouses, and the maintenance and education of their children.

The husband is constituted the sole administrator of the assets, and considerable powers of disposition are conferred upon him; but he cannot by a testamentary donation exceed his share.

Article 1441 provides for the dissolution of the community by the death of either of the spouses, and in several other events, immaterial to the consideration of the present question.

On the dissolution of the community by the death of one of the spouses, after all legitimate claims upon the assets have been satisfied the surplus is to be divided by halves between the surviving spouse and those who represent the deceased.

Article 1400 declares that this system is established by the simple declaration that the parties marry under it, or in default of a contract, meaning, of course, such an agreement as is contemplated in articles 1387 and 1393.

I pause here to emphasize the fact that this system operates upon no spouses unless by their mutual assent.

It was under this system, which had been for nearly half a century a very familiar and approved form of settlement, the nature and provisions of which the parties as French subjects must be presumed to have had knowledge, they were married, and upon the faith and under the belief that its provisions would regulate the property of both so long as their married life continued, and that on the death of either it would be divided between the survivor and the representatives of the deceased, the wife placed in the possession of her husband as part of the capital of their "conjugal partnership" such little property as she could then call her own; and from that time until the death of her husband it was never suggested that with the change of domicil to England the rights of property the wife had acquired by her marriage in France vested in her husband as absolute owner, as if they had been married in England without any settlement at all.

The Married Women's Property Acts do not, in my opinion, affect the present case.

The case of Lashley v. Hog, 4 Paton Sc. App. Cas., at p. 603 (A.D. 1804), has all along been relied upon by the defendants as decisive in their favour. Kekewich, J., thought that authority inapplicable, and gave judgment against them. The Court of Appeal, however, adopted the defendant's view and reversed his judgment.

I have the misfortune to differ from the Court of Appeal; it appearing to me that the two cases are distinguishable in very material particulars, and that no part of Lord Eldon's observations in delivering the judgment of the House of Lords can be said to determine this matter. In order to make these distinctions apparent I propose briefly to recapitulate the material facts of that case.

Roger Hog was a native of Scotland, he came to England to better his fortune, and in 1737, being then domiciled there, married Rachel Messing, an English lady. No settlement affecting this case was made on their marriage, but with his wife Mr. Hog received £1,000, which according to the law of England became his sole absolute property, upon the principle that in England a wife can by the common law have no separate legal existence.

They remained resident in England until 1752, when they removed to Scotland, where undoubtedly they became domiciled before 1760, when their coverture was dissolved by the death of the wife. The husband survived until 1798, when he also died, still domiciled in Scotland, possessed of considerable personal property. After his death Mrs. Lashley, who was a daughter of the marriage, as representing the right of her deceased mother, made claim in the Scotch courts upon her father's estate to a share of the personal property, which, as she alleged, her father held in community, according to the then law of Scotland, at the dissolution of the coverture. For Mrs. Lashley it was contended that the Scotch law of community of goods attached itself upon the property of Mr. Hog on his becoming domiciled in Scotland, notwithstanding the fact that his marriage to her mother took place in England without any settlement many years before. This absence of a settlement is a very important feature in that case; which, it is contended for the plaintiff, is absent from the one now before us.

The judgment of the House of Lords was in Mrs. Lashley's favour. Lord Eldon in delivering it had to deal also with a variety of other questions which necessitated a lengthy and complicated discussion, but so far as regarded the matter now before us it is to my mind clear, intelligible, and convincing. He held, first, that the Scotch law of community attached itself upon all the personal property of which Mr. Hog was or thereafter might become possessed during his domicil in Scotland; and secondly, that on the death of Mr. Hog the distribution of his personal estate, including the share of the pre-deceased wife, which up to that event had not been severed, must be regulated by the succession law of Scotland, where his death occurred. As regards the first of these rulings it had been contended for those who opposed Mrs. Lashley's claim that in the absence of a written contract the rights of husband and wife must be regulated by the law of the country where they were domiciled at the time of the marriage; and secondly, that there was on the marriage an implied contract between the spouses that they would be bound to all those conditions and consequences which the law of the country made to follow upon their consent to the marriage itself, and that no change of domicil could alter this matrimonial law or implied matrimonial contract.

Both these contentions were overruled for reasons stated at length in the judgment. The complete absence of any settlement affecting the property was evidently the basis of the decision. The law of England made none; it merely gave to the husband all his wife's property, placing upon him no restrictions. When, therefore, he thought fit to change his domicil to Scotland he took with him, as it were, all his movable property absolutely free and unfettered. The law of communio bonorum would clearly have attached to it if his marriage had been celebrated in that country, but that law became equally attached upon spouses who "in the married state" became there domiciled, at least for so long as that domicil continued, which in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Hog was continuously until they were both dead. In the teeth of these circumstances it is difficult to suggest to oneself how the judgment could have been other than it was. There is nothing in Lashley v. Hog which seems to me to affect this case, but I have dealt with it at some length because it has been so much relied on against Mrs. De Nicols' claim. Of course the grave distinction between that case and this is to be found in the fact that there the change of domicil was from a country in which neither the law nor the parties had made any settlement, to one in which there was in some sort a settlement by the law in the shape of the community of goods. In this case the change was from a country where the most elaborate and binding settlement by the law of France and by contract, as contended, was made on and by marriage, to a country (England) the law of which makes no settlement at all, but ignores the separate legal existence of the wife altogether.

In every civilized country marriage is treated as a contract of grave importance. It is the voluntary union for life of the parties to it. It is created by the bare ceremony of marriage according to the form prescribed by the law of the country in which it is celebrated. It involves incidentally an agreement that the spouses will mutually respect and fulfil those marital rights and obligations which are imposed upon them by that law, as incidents inseparable from their matrimonial union. Among such incidents of a marriage under the law of France is the establishment, or bringing into active operation, of some regulation of their personal property. One mode of accomplishing this is the establishment, by one and the same ceremony which makes them man and wife, of the system of community which could not be attached upon their property without the mutual consent of the spouses—that is to say, by marrying under it; which must be testified either by a declaration of the spouses, or by their omission to make a special written agreement. But once established, the system becomes the regulation or settlement of their choice; and the expression of their mutual intention to be bound by its provisions, creating mutual legal rights and obligations binding upon each, throughout their married lives. In the present case, if credit is to be given to the fourth paragraph of Mrs. De Nicols' affidavit, their so marrying was the result of a provisional agreement between them that it should be so.

It is true this last-mentioned agreement could not, standing alone, be relied on as proof of the contract now sought to be incorporated in the marriage contract; for this simple reason, it was a mere executory agreement which had of itself no effect in establishing the system; that could only be effected by the actual celebration of the marriage. It was, nevertheless, valuable as evidence, if evidence were needed, that the spouses knew (apart from the ordinary presumption of knowledge of the law of their own country) what were the legal obligations towards each other they were about to contract respecting their property, and that they voluntarily undertook them with a knowledge that they would, and a common intention that they should, be binding upon them so long as they both lived.

No set form of words was necessary, nor was any writing required by the law of France; for I take it to be clear that the "matrimonial agreements" mentioned in article 1394 have reference only to the special agreements mentioned in article 1387, and described in article 1393 as "derogating from," or "modifying" the system of, community.

In these voluntary and mutual intentions and acts are to be found all the essential elements of a legal contract, rendered so complete and obligatory by the law of France that nothing could in that country annul or give it greater force.

It is conceded that had the provisions of the system been embodied in the very words of the code in an instrument signed by the parties expressing their intention to marry under it, it would be unobjectionable, and as valid in an English court as a special agreement of the parties made under article 1383. This may at least be taken as an admission that there is nothing in the system itself repugnant to the law of England, and this reduces the objection to one merely of form. What then is the weight of this objection if all required by the law of France has been observed? I have always been under the impression that the form required for a contract by the law of the place where it is made, is both sufficient and requisite for its validity in England. In this case every form required by the Code Civil has been complied with, and I see nothing to prevent the operation of the rule that where there is a marriage contract or settlement the terms of such contract or settlement determine the rights of husband and wife in respect of all movables to which it applies. As a rule the rights of spouses conferred by the law of one country change with every change of domicil, for the law of one country can have no intrinsic force, except within the territorial limits and jurisdiction of that country. But the comity of nations, with a view to the comfort and convenience of their respective subjects, has rightly conceded that there should be some exceptions to this strict rule of the territorial law. By one of such exceptions it is universally admitted that where upon marriage a marriage contract or settlement is made regulating the property of the spouses, such contract or settlement shall have effect given to its provisions, wherever the spouses may afterwards be domiciled.

When Lashley v. Hog was decided in July, 1804, the Code Civil had only been promulgated about five months; this may account for no mention having been made of it. What might have been held had the question then arisen in an English court, as to how far it should be allowed to operate under circumstances similar to those before us, I cannot of course say, for in itself it was an untried novelty. It seems strange that no such question has been raised and decided in an English court hitherto. In dealing with it to-day we have the benefit of nearly a century's experience before us, of the cheerful and ready submission to and approval of this system and enactment so admirably calculated to satisfy the requirements of French spouses by millions of the subjects of a great and powerful country. I am sanguine enough under such circumstances to entertain a hope that your lordships will, in declaring the law of this land, think it right to accord to this system and enactment a place with contracts and settlements as exceptions to the rule of territorial law—even apart from the question of contract, which I have discussed—and carry out the real wishes and advance the interests of the many subjects of France whose properties in their own country are, and in the future will be, regulated by it. Thinking as I do that this case falls within the exceptions engrafted by the comity of nations upon the strict rule of the territorial law, I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be reversed, and that of Kekewich J., restored, and that judgment should be entered for the plaintiff with costs.

Order appealed from reversed and order of Kekewich, J., restored; costs here and below to be costs in the summons.

Solicitors for appellant, Hicks, Arnold, & Morley.

Solicitors for the respondents, Tyrrell Lewis, Lewis, & Broadbent.

Lunacy.

(Lindley, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) Jan. 15.

In re TYE. (a.)

Lunacy—Person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition—Pauper lunatic—Application of property—Jurisdiction—Discretion—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), ss. 116 (4), 117, 299, 300.

A wandering lunatic not so found by inquisition was detained in a county asylum, and maintained there at the expense of a union. By an order of the Master in Lunacy, a sum exceeding £300, which had been found upon the lunatic's person, and represented his entire savings, had been lodged in court, with directions to raise by periodical sales thereout the sum of £35 a year for the maintenance of his destitute wife and daughter. The guardians of the union applied for a small sum in respect of the lunatic's past maintenance and for an allowance of £26 a year for his future maintenance, over and above some provision for the wife.

Held, that, as section 299 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, only gave a power to justices to act summarily in certain cases, and did not interfere with the discretionary power of the Lords Justices to direct the property of the lunatic to be applied for his maintenance, the reasonable application of the guardians should be complied with.

This was an application of the Guardians of the Halifax Union for an order that they might be [illegible] the sum of £6 10s. for the past maintenance of [illegible] Tye, a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition, as from the 11th of July, 1899, and that a sum of £26 per annum might be allowed for his future maintenance and a sum not exceeding £25 per [illegible] for the future maintenance of his wife and [illegible] The lunatic was a master gardener carrying [illegible] business at Elland, in which business he was [illegible] by his wife, who claimed to have contributed by [illegible] labours to the savings which the lunatic had [illegible] at the time of his lunacy, amounting to about [illegible] The lunatic sold his business in February, [illegible] about £50, and from that time to the time of his [illegible] taken charge of as a wandering lunatic his [illegible] was erratic, as he wandered about with the [illegible] including his savings, in his pocket, while [illegible] being left destitute, became chargeable [illegible] union and received out-door relief to the [illegible] a week.

On the 7th of August, 1899, on the [illegible] of the wife, she was appointed committee [illegible] estate of the lunatic, with the powers [illegible] under section 116 of the Lunacy Act, [illegible] that occasion the claim above mentioned was [illegible] forward on behalf of the Guardians of the [illegible] Union, at whose expense the lunatic was [illegible] maintained at the Wakefield Asylum [illegible] he had been transferred from the [illegible] Asylum. The master declined to [illegible] application, but instead he made an order [illegible] lodgment and investment of the [illegible] ing to £336 19s., found upon the [illegible] he was taken charge of, and made an [illegible] to the wife of £35 a year, to be [illegible] periodical sales out of the fund in [illegible] was upwards of sixty years of age [illegible] she was not able to earn any money [illegible] had several sons who made no provision [illegible] she was attended by her daughter [illegible] twenty, who lived with her. In the [illegible] evidence on the point, it was intimated that the lunatic was about sixty-five years of age, and there was only a bare possibility of his recovery.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. [illegible] Barrister-at-Law.

The master, in his judgment, gave a detailed consideration to the sections of the Lunacy Act, 1890, and to section 16 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 103), in which the limitation contained in section 299 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, is not contained; he distinguished the case from those relied on by the guardians—viz., In re Webster, Guardians of the Derby Union v. Sharratt, 27 Ch. D. 710, 33 W. R. Dig. 151; In re Newbiggin, 36 W. R. 69, 36 Ch. D. 477; and In re Winkle, 42 W. R. 513, [1894] 2 Ch. 519, and made the order as stated.

The guardians appealed.

Younger, Q.C., for the guardians, stated the facts. [LINDLEY, M.R.—The initial mistake seems to have been that no provision at all was made for the lunatic.]

Methold, for the wife.—Under section 299 of the Lunacy Act, 1890 (the only section giving the guardians any authority to recover), directly a receiver is appointed, and where the fund is only large enough just to support the family, then the guardians cannot recover for provision made for the lunatic, else the wife and children will become chargeable on the rates. Moreover, under the Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 24, the guardians have 4s. a week from the Government, so they would be paid twice over. [LINDLEY, M.R.—I do not think that section 299 is intended to do more than give the justices power to act summarily in certain cases; it does not interfere with the discretion of this court in cases of this kind. Methold.—The point is a new one.]

LINDLEY, M.R.—I do not think that we need to go through the Acts of Parliament or the authorities any more closely than we have already done. We have had the advantage of considering the master's judgment and we have looked into the Acts. The case is a peculiar one and I do not know that it is likely to be of any value as a precedent, but it stands in this way: we are asked to say that which I confess startles me very much, that is to say, that a lunatic who has property is not to contribute to his own support out of that property. I am not prepared to go to that length at all. It is quite obvious if you look at the Acts of Parliament that there is nothing in them which directs us to go to that length, and it does seem a startling proposition that a person who has the misfortune to be a lunatic and has money should be supported out of the rates. That seems very strange. The fund here is small. It is between £300 and £400, and the master's order is to the effect that the lunatic shall be supported by the guardians and that his wife and family shall have £35 a year, to come, of course, out of the capital as long as it lasts. That leaves the lunatic therefore to be supported out of the rates, though he has money enough to keep him. I do not think that that is in accordance with the way the discretion of the court has been hitherto applied in dealing with a lunatic's property. It is quite new to me that the court ever allows a lunatic who has property to be supported out of the rates. It has applied the property first in support of him. I do not say that this is for the benefit of the lunatic; I do not know that it is. It is not contrary to his interest, of course. But the guardians must support him if the court does not. That is plain; and having regard to the smallness of the fund, the question is, what is to be done so far as the amount goes. Now, one way of doing it (and certainly we have authority to do it) would be to leave him where he is, in the lunatic asylum—the best place for him probably, and to grant him such an allowance out of the capital as would assure him greater comfort than at the rate of 10s. per week. We have ample power to do it. That would leave the wife to be supported out of the rates very likely, she not being able to support herself. That would be one way of looking at it for her benefit and not for the benefit of his family. But I think we ought to look at it a bit closer, and considering the ages of the people and the smallness of the fund, and the kind of life to which these persons have been accustomed, the proposal made by the guardians appears on the whole the best thing to be done—that is to say, not to allow her to be supported out of the rates, but to apply his property so long as it lasts to the extent of 10s. per week to his maintenance in the lunatic asylum (there is no better place for him) and then let his wife have £25 a year so long as the fund lasts. When the fund is exhausted they will both be supported out of the rates, there is no help for it. Then as regards the costs. I do not look upon it as a case of legal rights. I think that the guardians ought not to have any costs, but I do not think they ought to pay any. The receiver is to have her costs out of the fund. If we give all the costs out of the fund there would be very little left, it would all go in costs. The order will be varied by directing £26 a year to be paid to the union and £25 a year to the wife, the wife to have her costs out of the fund. The guardians' claim for £6 10s. for the past maintenance of the lunatic will also be allowed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree, but I think there is very considerable difficulty. In this case Mr. Tye is in the asylum as a pauper lunatic. Now, we have the power to make such order as in our discretion we may think right for the maintenance or benefit of the lunatic or of him and his family. As long as the lunatic continues to be maintained as a pauper lunatic, I have some difficulty myself in saying that we should be entitled to make an order for the appropriation of these moneys for his maintenance. For aught I know, if we did so, there might be considerable difficulty when the accounts of the asylum came to be audited, but I do not understand that we are making the order upon the basis that this lunatic in form is to continue a pauper lunatic. The guardians have made a very reasonable and sensible suggestion in this case and they have told us what they mean to do about this man. I daresay there is no difficulty in carrying out their proposal, but I doubt myself very much whether this man will continue to be a pauper lunatic when our order has been made, and speaking for myself I should have considerable hesitation in making the order if I thought that after we made it this man was to continue a pauper lunatic, because I do not think that in any proper sense of the word the order would then be for the maintenance of the lunatic. On the other hand, the order would really be an order to recoup the union the expense that they incur in the maintenance of the pauper lunatic. Of course we have a discretion, if we think it a right thing to do, to make an order for a sum to be appropriated to the payment of the man's maintenance in the asylum as a lunatic whose maintenance is paid for, and the guardians as I understand are willing to treat him in that way, and under those circumstances I think that we have power to make the order.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree with the Master of the Rolls in his judgment in this case. Suppose the lunatic had not been sent to the county lunatic asylum, but we had to consider what to do with regard to his keep and maintenance, ought we then, seeing that he has a few hundred pounds of his own, to say we will not apply any portion of that sum in maintaining him, but will apply it for the benefit of his wife and family so as to drive him into the union lunatic asylum? I think not. I do not think it would be right in the exercise of our discretion to say that in that point of view it would be for his benefit that he should be made a pauper lunatic, and that by applying the whole of his property for the benefit of his wife and family. It seems to me that it makes no difference that as a matter of fact he has been dealt with as a pauper lunatic. What ought we to do in that case now he has been made a pauper lunatic? It appears to me there are one or two courses. One course would probably be to apply to take him out of that asylum and maintain him in some private asylum. That would be very expensive indeed. Another way would be to apply a sum for his maintenance in keeping him as a private patient in the asylum, and that would be perhaps a strictly appropriate course to pursue. But we have a discretion in the administration of this small fund, and we bear in mind the interest of the lunatic in respect of the wife and family, and the question is, Is it more to his benefit that he should cease to be in any point of view a pauper lunatic, and his wife and family (practically it is the wife) go wholly unsupported, or is it the best to let him, to a certain extent it may be, be called or dealt with as a pauper lunatic, and apply a portion of the sum towards his maintenance and a portion of the fund to the maintenance of the wife and children? Seeing the peculiar circumstances of this case and the smallness of the fund, it appears to me on the whole, in exercising the discretion which we undoubtedly possess, that the best thing would be to do with this small fund what has been suggested and pointed out by the Master of the Rolls.

Solicitors, Bower, Cotton, & Bower, for Longbotham & Sons, Halifax; Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Ramsden, Sykes, & Ramsden, Huddersfield.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Feb. 5.

JONES v. BARNETT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Sale by order of the court—Purchaser for value without notice of superior title—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 70, sub-section 1.

An order of the court under the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 70, sub-section 1, which purports to deal with property belonging to the vendor, which turns out not to be his, does not confer a good title on the purchaser.

Decision of Romer, J. (47 W. R. 493), affirmed.

This was an appeal against a decision of Romer, J. (47 W. R. 493).

The facts were as follows: On the 31st of May, 1894, one Isaac Jones, being indebted to Philip Jones, the husband of the plaintiff, Mary Jones, executed a deed whereby, after reciting the will and death of an uncle, one John Williams, and that Isaac Jones was one of the legatees named in the will and was indebted to Philip Jones in the sum of £350, and had agreed to assign to the plaintiff all his share, right, title, and interest under the will, he, the said Isaac Jones, thereby assigned unto Mary Jones, and Philip Jones thereby confirmed, all the share, right, title, and interest to which Isaac Jones in his right was then, or should, or might thereafter be entitled under the will, to Mary Jones absolutely. Subject to a question whether the words of the grant operated to pass more than a life interest to the plaintiff in the freeholds, the property included a reversion expectant on the death of a life tenant in a leasehold shop and two freehold cottages at Aberavon, near Swansea.

On the 26th of February, 1895, the defendant Barnett obtained judgment against Isaac Jones for £450 in an action in the Queen's Bench Division of Barnett v. Jones, and on the 14th of March, 1895, by an order in that action, a receiver was appointed of Isaac Jones's reversionary interest in the above-mentioned freehold and leasehold property. On the 10th of July, 1895, a petition was presented on behalf of Barnett before Chitty, J., entitled In the Matter of Isaac Jones and the Judgments Act, 1864, praying a sale of the interest of Isaac Jones in the property of which the receiver had been appointed. By an order made on this petition on the 24th of July, 1895, accounts were ordered to be taken of what was due to the petitioner under the judgment of the 26th of February, 1895, of what interests of Isaac Jones had been delivered in equitable execution by the appointment of a receiver, an inquiry whether there were any and (if any) what liens, charges, or incumbrances on the interest in land of Isaac Jones, their amounts and priorities, and of those which were prior and subsequent to the receivership order, and which, if any, created subsequent to that order, were before the registration of that order created in favour of a purchaser for value; and it was ordered that Isaac Jones should pay what should be certified to be due within one month after the chief clerk's certificate, and it was ordered that in default of Isaac Jones paying the amount so certified, his said interests in land should be sold, with the approbation of the judge, free from all liens, charges, or incumbrances created subsequent to the order of the 14th of March, 1895, except any such created in favour of a purchaser for value before the registration of that order.

On the 20th of January, 1896, the chief clerk certified that £509 19s. was due, that the property consisted of the leasehold shop and freehold cottages above mentioned, and that there were no charges or incumbrances on Isaac Jones's interest therein. Isaac Jones having paid no part of his debt, Barnett subsequently obtained an order authorizing him to bid for the property, which was put up for auction on the 16th of December, 1896. Barnett was the highest bidder for £375, and by an order dated the 19th of February, 1897, it was ordered that a person should be appointed to convey the interest of Isaac Jones in the houses to Barnett.

The tenant for life died on the 16th of March, 1897, and Barnett then took possession, and the deeds relating to the property were subsequently handed over to him by the executors of the will of John Williams. Neither Barnett nor his solicitors had any notice or knowledge of the assignment to the plaintiff until a letter came from the plaintiff's solicitor to Barnett's solicitor on the 15th of April, 1897, claiming that the plaintiff, Mary Jones, was entitled to the property under the assignment of the 31st of May, 1894.

The Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 70, sub-section 1, provides: "An order of the court under any statutory or other jurisdiction shall not, as against a purchaser, be invalidated on the ground of want of jurisdiction, or of want of any concurrence, consent, notice, or service, whether the purchaser has notice of any such want or not."

Romer, J., held that this section did not operate to give the defendant a better title to the property than that of the plaintiff, which was prior in date, and that her interest was not affected by the order for sale, and she was entitled to recover possession of the property.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant appealed.

Nevill, Q.C., and W. F. Phillpotts, for the defendant, the appellant.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., and T. B. Napier, for the plaintiff, the respondent.

LINDLEY, M.R., said there was no real difficulty in the case, unless the court were asked to redraft section 70 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. In making the order for sale the court supposed that it was dealing with an interest of Isaac Jones in the land. It turned out that the land was not his, and then it was said that the purchaser had obtained a good title by means of section 70. None of the cases already decided upon the effect of that section touched this aspect of it. The court was now asked to go much further. The section was only intended to cure irregularities, and did not apply to a case in which an order had been made to sell land on the supposition that it belonged to A. when it really belonged to B.

RIGBY, L.J., said that section 70 was not intended to entrap the court into dealing with property with which it had no idea of dealing.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Richard White, for D. Seline, Swansea; Riddell, Vaizey, & Smith, for J. L. Howell, Swansea.

---

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Collins, L.JJ.) — Jan. 27.

"THE SNARK." (a.)

Ship—Damage—Collision caused by running foul of sunken barge—Liability of owner of wreck, where not abandoned, for negligence of independent contractor employed by him to raise wreck.

The owner of a vessel sunk in the fairway of a navigable river, who has not abandoned the wreck, but has agreed to have her raised by an independent contractor, is answerable in damages for the loss sustained by the owners of another vessel running foul of the wreck without negligence, in consequence of the wreck being improperly lighted.

Decision of Barnes, J., 47 W. R. 398, affirmed.

Appeal from a decision of Barnes, J. (reported in 47 W. R. 398).

The plaintiffs were the owners of the steamship Vesta and the defendants were the owners of the barge Snark. The action was in personam to recover damages for injuries sustained by The Vesta, owing to her having run upon The Snark, which had been sunk in the fairway of the Thames. The Snark had, without negligence on her part, been sunk by a collision with a steamer on the 1st of August, 1897. The owners of The Snark employed a contractor named Forrest, who was familiar with that class of work, having been frequently employed by the Thames Conservancy, to raise the wreck for a fixed sum. Forrest went to the Thames Conservancy and gave them notice of the wreck, and on the 2nd of August the Thames Conservancy sent a mark-boat to the spot, for which they were paid by the defendants. Forrest, having got his plant ready, relieved the Thames Conservancy of the task of marking the sunken barge, and the Thames Conservancy's boat was removed. Forrest was guilty of negligence in marking the barge, and in consequence The Vesta ran upon the wreck and was damaged.

Barnes, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs.

The defendants appealed.

Laing, Q.C. (Batten with him), for the appellants.—There was no duty on the defendants to raise the barge. They might have abandoned her altogether. They had also a right to abandon possession of the barge to a contractor for the purpose of raising her, and they would not be liable for the contractor's negligence. The same principle must apply as in the case of handing over a barge afloat. In the case of a highway upon land, a person could not leave an obstruction on it, but a person was not responsible for leaving a ship accidentally sunk at sea. In such cases as Hardaker v. Idle District Council, 44 W. R. 323, [1896] 1 Q. B. 335, the work which the contractor was employed to perform was itself dangerous, and so it was held that a person could not escape liability by employing an independent contractor. In the present case the work was perfectly harmless. The sunken barge was the danger, not the raising of it.

They referred to the cases of Rex v. Watts, 2 Esp. 675; Brown v. Mallett, 5 C. B. 599; White v. Crisp, 2 W. R. 624, 10 Ex. Ch. 312; The Douglas, 30 W. R. 692, 7 P. D. 151; The Utopia, [1893] A. C. 492; The Crystal, [1894] A. C. 508, 43 W. R. Dig. 173; Holliday v. National Telephone Co., 47 W. R. 658, [1899] 2 Q. B. 392.

Carver, Q.C. (Stubbs with him), was not called upon.

SMITH, L.J., in giving judgment, said: This is an action brought by the plaintiff, who is the owner of the steamship Vesta, to recover damages against the owners of a barge called The Snark, which was sunk in the River Thames on the 1st of August, 1897. What happened was this: The owners of The Snark wanted to get their barge up again; they never intended to abandon possession or control of their barge in any shape or way. They got into communication with a man whom I believe is undoubtedly efficient—a man called an under-water man; that is, a man who goes down under water to get up sunken vessels—and they entered into a contract with him to get up this barge. The evidence, as stated by Barnes, J., in his judgment which is under appeal, is this: The officials of the Thames Conservancy were told by Forrest of the sunken barge, and for a short time before the man Forrest brought The Rhoda (that is, I understand, a barge lent by the owners of The Snark), a boat belonging to the Thames Conservancy, with a flag on it, was made fast to The Snark. For this service the defendants paid the Thames Conservancy, and that is done with, long before this accident happened. Then Forrest brought The Rhoda and took charge of the sunken barge, and Forrest and his men alone remained. Forrest was paid for the job which he was executing for the defendants the sum of £25. It has been found in the Admiralty Court that Forrest was guilty of negligence in this, that he did not light the sunken barge in a proper manner. The lights had drifted away from where they ought to have been. They did not notify to the steamers coming up or going down the Thames where the sunken barge in fact was, and the result was that the plaintiff's steamer, The Vesta, coming up the Thames, was of opinion, from the position in which the lights were, that it was all right to go where she went, and ran into the sunken barge and sustained damage. Thereupon an action was brought in the Admiralty Court, in these circumstances, and the first question which had to be decided by the learned judge of that court was whether or not this barge had been properly lighted by Forrest, the man I have mentioned. He found that it was not, and he found that by reason of its not being properly lighted the plaintiff's steamship got the damage complained of. Another question arose—namely, were the defendants liable for this? Now it is said and argued stoutly and vigorously, on behalf of the defendants, that they are not liable. One ground taken before the learned judge in the Admiralty Court was that the defendants were not liable because they delegated the job—and, in doing that, the process of lighting this sunken barge till she was got up—to the man Forrest, who comes within the term, well known in this court, of "independent contractor," and therefore they were not liable for the negligence of Forrest. The Thames is undoubtedly a highway. This man was put to work, and was engaged, in my judgment, in doing work which was likely to cause injury to persons lawfully passing and re-passing along that highway, unless precautions were taken. Thereupon it is said, although that is so, still he was not the servant of the defendants, but he was an "independent contractor." Now, we have had of late years since I have been in this court a great deal to do with this question of independent contractor. At one time, in conjunction with Lindley, M.R., my brother Rigby and myself set to work and wrote a judgment, as best we could, upon this question of independent contractor, and the liability of the independent contractor, and we stated what in our judgment was the law relating thereto. That was the case of Hardaker v. The Idle District Council. It has been referred to by Barnes, J., in this case, and I am not going to refer to it any more at this moment. I see nothing to repent of in what any one of us said in that case. There have been other cases since then which I am not going to refer to, because Bruce, J., in a judgment in Penny v. Wimbledon Urban District Council and Another, [1898] 2 Q. B. 212, 46 W. R. Dig. 138, dealt with the question. That case came before this court on appeal in the next year, 47 W. R. 565, [1899] 2 Q. B. 72, and I then said, and I say it again, that I absolutely agree with the manner in which Bruce, J., put the law applicable to this question of independent contractor, when the defendant is sued for a wrong act. I will just read the passage from his judgment, because I cannot put the matter more tersely or more clearly. It is: "When a person employs a contractor to do work in a place where the public are in the habit of passing, which work will, unless precautions are taken, cause danger to the public, an obligation is thrown upon the person who orders the work to be done to see that the necessary precautions are taken, and if necessary precautions are not taken, he cannot escape liability by seeking to throw the blame on the contractor. Pickard v. Smith is an authority for the proposition that no sound distinction in this respect can be drawn between the case of a public highway and a road which may be, and to the knowledge of the wrongdoer probably will in fact be, used by persons lawfully entitled so to do." I subscribe to every word of that. I have done so, and do so again. That being, in my judgment, the law applicable to this question of Forrest being an independent contractor, that point falls practically within the decision in the case of Penny v. Wimbledon Urban District Council, and the reasons of that decision. Therefore this point does not avail the defendants in the present case. It is said that is all very well in matters arising on land, but it does not apply to matters arising on water, or matters arising, as in this case, with regard to a sunken barge in the River Thames. I will say for myself that I think that counsel for the appellants have made out this distinction, that in the case of a barge navigating, as here, up the River Thames, which goes to the bottom, it is in the power of the barge-owner, if he is so minded, to throw up the barge—abandon it or transfer it, and have nothing more to do with it. But then it would seem to me also that within the terms of the Thames Conservancy Act, which is a private Act, the public authority would have to come in and take up the barge, so as to prevent its being an obstruction to the navigation of the River Thames. It also seems to me to be within the case cited in the judgment of the Privy Council, delivered by Jeune, P. (The Utopia case). It is there laid down: "That although it is in the power of the owner of the barge"—as I say—"to throw up and abandon his sunken barge, and have nothing more to do with it, until he has done that he is under the ordinary liability of every other man." What does Jeune, P., say in his judgment delivered in the Utopia case? Counsel for the appellants said the prior cases to which we have had our attention called were all old cases, but they are summarized, and this is the result. Jeune, P., says ([1893] A. C., at p. 498): "The result of these authorities may be thus expressed: The owner of a ship sunk, whether by his default or not (wilful misconduct probably giving rise to different considerations), has not, if he abandon the possession and control of her, any responsibility either to remove her or to protect other vessels from coming into collision with her. It is equally true that so long as, and so far as, possession, management, and control of the wreck be not abandoned or properly transferred, there remains on the owner an obligation in regard to the protection of other vessels from receiving injury from her." Very well; be it so. Where do you find a tittle of evidence, and what is more, proof, that the owners of this barge abandoned or properly transferred possession, management, and control of the wreck within the meaning of that judgment? Of course they did not. What they did was to employ Forrest to get this barge up, not for the purpose of abandoning control of her, but for the exactly opposite purpose of getting her above water again. This case seems to me to fall within the decision of the Privy Council. I have dealt with the independent contractor point, and for these reasons I am of opinion that the judgment of Barnes, J., should be affirmed.

(a.) Reported by P. B. DURNFORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

RIGBY and COLLINS, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, J. A. & H. E. Farnfield; Stokes & Stokes.

---

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Dec. 13.

GRANT v. THE GOLD EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT SYNDICATE (LIMITED). (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Contract—Agreement by vendor to pay commission to undisclosed purchaser's agent—Action on contract by vendor—Claim by purchaser to set off agent's commission.

The plaintiff was the owner of certain mineral rights in British Columbia, and he agreed with one Govan that

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Govan should have the option of finding a purchaser for the property, and that he would pay him, if successful, 10 per cent. of the price obtained from the purchaser. Govan succeeded in arranging a sale of the property to the defendant syndicate, of which, unknown to the plaintiff at that time, he was a director, and for whom he acted as agent in the transaction. Before the contract was entered into, however, and before the commission had become payable, the plaintiff learned Govan's position with regard to the defendants.

Held, that, the plaintiff having completed the contract without disclosing to the syndicate the agreement to pay commission to their agent, any part of the commission still in the plaintiff's hands could be recovered by the defendants.

By a second agreement between the plaintiff and Govan, made before the commission became due, it was agreed, in consideration of an immediate payment, that Govan should accept a less commission than he was entitled to under the original agreement. The syndicate subsequently became aware of this second agreement, and they demanded and received from Govan, in satisfaction of all claims from him, the amount he had received from the plaintiff.

Held (reversing the decision of Bigham, J.), that the defendants had not lost their remedy by their conduct after they had discovered the real facts of the case. Neither were they bound by the terms of the second agreement between the plaintiff and Govan as to a reduction of the amount of commission; and therefore, notwithstanding that second agreement and their demand and receipt from Govan of the reduced amount of the commission paid him, they were entitled to recover the balance from the plaintiff.

Appeal by the defendants from the judgment of Bigham, J., at trial of the action without a jury.

The action was brought to recover the balance of a promissory note dated the 26th of September, 1896, made by the defendants in respect of the sale of a gold mine to them by the plaintiff. The defence consisted of a counter claim for £500, being the alleged balance of a commission which the plaintiff had agreed to pay to one Govan, who was in fact a director of, and agent for, the defendants, although at the time the plaintiff did not know that he held that position. The only question for decision was whether the defendants were enabled to succeed on the counterclaim. The agreement between the plaintiff and Govan was that the latter should have an option of finding a purchaser for the property, and if successful he was to be paid as commission 10 per cent. of the price obtained. This director arranged a sale to the defendants, but before the contract was entered into or the commission had become payable the plaintiff became aware of Govan's position with regard to the defendants.

On the 8th of January, 1897, a contract was concluded between the plaintiff and the defendant syndicate whereby the plaintiff sold the mine to the syndicate at the price fixed by Govan. The company was floated and 115,000 shares were duly allotted to the plaintiff. Ten per cent. of the shares, amounting to 11,500 shares, were put into the name of a nominee at the request of the plaintiff, and were accepted by Govan as payment of that part of his commission. The syndicate then paid the plaintiff £10,000 in cash, leaving a balance due of £15,000. The plaintiff in March, 1897, saw Govan about it, who said he would try to get the syndicate to pay £5,000 in cash and the balance, £10,000, by a four-month's promissory note. Govan stipulated that if he was successful in procuring this settlement with the syndicate his own commission should be paid at once, without waiting for the promissory note to mature and be paid. Both the plaintiff and Govan regarded the cash commission as not payable until the plaintiff had in fact received his £25,000. The plaintiff agreed to this, on the terms that the cash commission should be reduced to £2,000, thus, in consideration of promising a present cash payment, getting the cash commission reduced by £500. The syndicate paid the plaintiff a further £5,000, and gave him the promissory note for £10,000, and the plaintiff paid Govan the £2,000. Half of the amount of the £10,000 promissory note was paid by the syndicate when the note was matured, and a new note for the remaining £5,000 with interest was given. It was this latter note that the plaintiff now sued on.

The facts as to the agreement to pay Govan commission subsequently came to the knowledge of the syndicate while this note was current, and by resolution of the board of directors the payment and transfer was accepted in full satisfaction of the claims of the defendants against Govan. Subsequently the directors decided that the defendants were entitled to the £500, the balance of the commission originally agreed upon between the plaintiff and Govan, and they claimed to deduct this amount from the balance of the purchase-money due to the plaintiff. On this action being brought to recover that balance the defendants paid the amount into court less £500, for which they also counterclaimed.

The learned judge decided that although the plaintiff, when he ascertained what Govan's true position was, should have insisted upon paying the commission to the defendants, and had no right to pay it to Govan, or to make arrangements by which the amount of the commission was reduced, yet that the defendants had lost their remedy by their conduct after they had discovered the real facts of the case. Knowing the facts they had elected to treat their rights as defined by the second agreement, getting thereby the benefit of an immediate instead of a deferred settlement of the commission. They could not now plead they were not bound by all the terms of the second agreement, one of which was that the commission should be reduced by £500. The defendants' counter-claim therefore failed, and the plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the claim and the counterclaim.

The defendants appealed.

Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., and T. W. Chitty, for the defendants.—Where a vendor agrees to give a commission to the purchaser's agent unknown to the purchaser, the price of the property is presumably swollen by the amount of the commission, and here the £500 which was taken off the commission must be considered as money of the defendants in the plaintiff's hands. They have recovered from their agent what he took by way of secret commission, but that fact does not prevent their recovering from the plaintiff any amount paid to him in excess of what must be taken to be the real purchase-money of the property.

Duke, Q.C., and Kerly, for the plaintiff.—The defendants have no right to recover the sum claimed either at law or in equity. This is not a case where a secret commission is paid to the purchaser's agent. Moral fraud or conspiracy in some form or other must be proved to exist before the purchaser has a cause of action: Salford Corporation v. Lever, 39 W. R. 85, 25 Q. B. D. 363, [1891] 1 Q. B. 168; Lands Allotment Co. v. Broad, [1895] 2 Manson 470. There is no evidence here that the commission was added to the purchase-money. A vendor may be content to take less than the full value of the property in order to secure a purchaser (Whaley Bridge Calico Printing Co.

v. Green, 28 W. R. 351, 5 Q. B. D. 109) so in the Salford Corporation v. Lever a fair price was arrived at and the commission added to it. The onus is on the defendants to show non-disclosure and they have not done so: Cavendish Bentinck v. Fenn, 36 W. R. 641, 12 App. Cas. 652.

Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., in reply.—The decision of the House of Lords in Cavendish Bentinck v. Fenn is distinguished in Archer's case, 40 W. R. 212, [1892] 1 Ch. 322. It was clear that Govan was to act as agent for some principal and could not be in a position to take a commission.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 13.—A. L. Smith, L.J., read the following judgment: The question in this case is, as to what is the position of a vendor of property who pays a secret commission to a person whom he knows to be the agent of the vendee, and the facts are as follows: By an agreement dated the 8th of January, 1897, the plaintiff sold a gold mine in British Columbia, of which he was then possessed, to the defendant syndicate, and he sues the syndicate upon a promissory note for £5,000 given to him by them in part payment of the purchase-money. As to the sum of £500 the defendants counterclaim, and assert that upon the facts which they subsequently discovered they are entitled to recover this sum from the plaintiff, and it is agreed by the learned counsel on each side that this case is to be decided upon the admission that the plaintiff has received this sum of £500 from the defendants. I now revert to the facts antecedent to the agreement of the 8th of January, 1897. In the month of August, 1896, the plaintiff, who, as before stated, was possessed of a gold mine in British Columbia, was desirous of selling it, and he there met a Mr. Govan. By an agreement in writing dated the 26th of September, 1896, and made between the plaintiff and Govan, the plaintiff gave an option on his mineral claims to Govan for a period of six months, and in this agreement it was stated that the option was granted to Govan to enable him to deal with the properties with the object of forming one or more limited liability companies on the London market, and Govan agreed to use his best endeavours with regard to the successful flotation of such company or companies on terms to be thereafter discussed and settled between the plaintiff and him, the plaintiff agreeing to hand Govan on any such successful flotation 10 per cent. on all the sums received in cash or shares accruing to the plaintiff. It will be seen that by this agreement the plaintiff agreed to pay to Govan one-tenth of what purchase-money he might be able to obtain from the company which through his instrumentality was to be brought into existence to become the purchasers of the plaintiff's mine, and I agree with Bigham, J., that, when a vendor sells property subject to the payment by him of a commission, the commission is added to the price asked by the vendor; in other words, the purchase-money by reason of the commission to be paid by the vendor is loaded with the amount of commission so to be paid. At the time when this agreement of the 26th of September, 1896, was entered into, the plaintiff did not know that Govan was agent and managing director, as, in fact, he was, of the defendant syndicate, though he did know that Govan was connected with the companies. The learned judge has found that at this time the plaintiff was acting with perfect honesty and good faith, but this by no means exhausts the case; for after the plaintiff came to this country, until which time the negotiations for sale were not completed, a new set of facts arose, which give rise to the defendants' counterclaim. In the month of December, 1896, the plaintiff came to England at the instance of Govan in relation to the sale of his gold mine. Upon his arrival he went to see Govan, who had a room in the office of the defendant syndicate in Ryder-street. The plaintiff was constantly there, and he admitted in cross-examination that before the contract of purchase and sale of his property was entered into between him and the defendants upon the 8th of January, 1897, he knew that Govan was a director of the defendant syndicate, and that he was, as such director, negotiating with him (the plaintiff) for the purchase of his property on behalf of the syndicate. The plaintiff made an effort in his evidence to get rid of this fatal admission, which was undoubtedly true, by suggesting he had sold the property to Govan before he knew of the above facts, but when pressed in cross-examination this suggestion was found to be without foundation, and in my judgment was clearly not the truth. The price fixed by the contract of the 8th of January, 1897, was £140,000, of which £25,000 was to be paid in cash at certain named times, and the balance by a transfer to the plaintiff or his nominees of 115,000 fully paid-up shares of £1 each in a company about to be promoted by the syndicate. It appears to me plain that the meaning of what took place between the plaintiff and Govan was that one-tenth of the ten-tenths of the purchase-money was to go to Govan as commission, and Govan was to get up a company to buy the plaintiff's mine, and that the price which was to be paid to the plaintiff for the purchase of his mine was to embrace and cover Govan's cash commission of £2,500. At the time when the defendant syndicate contracted to purchase the plaintiff's mine—namely, on the 8th of January, 1897—as a matter of fact the defendants had no knowledge of the arrangement made between their managing director, Govan, and the plaintiff as to the payment of this commission of £2,500 to him, nor did they discover it until the next year—namely, in March, 1898—under the circumstances hereafter mentioned. Upon the 17th of March, 1897, upon which date payment of £15,000, part of the purchase-money, had not become due, it was agreed between the plaintiff and Govan that, if Govan would get the defendant syndicate to pay to the plaintiff £5,000 in cash at once and £10,000 in promissory notes, he would give Govan £2,000 in cash down instead of £2,500 payable to Govan under the agreement of the 26th of September, 1896, and which had not then become payable, and for which Govan would then have had to wait. The plaintiff admitted that at the time he made the agreement of the 17th of March, 1897, for Govan to get him £5,000 in cash at once and £10,000 in promissory notes from the defendants, and for him to pay Govan £2,000 in cash, he (the plaintiff) knew that Govan was a director of the defendant syndicate and was acting for them. Govan succeeded in doing what was desired, and upon the 18th of March, 1897. £2,000 in cash, and upon the 25th of March, 1899, £3,000 in cash, making £5,000 in all, was paid to the plaintiff. The way in which the plaintiff then paid Govan his commission of £2,000 in cash down is very significant, and well worthy of attention, considering the arguments addressed to us by the plaintiff's counsel. The plaintiff under cross-examination admitted that he wrote out a cheque (this was on the 17th of March, 1897) for £1,000, and went with this cheque to a bank where the plaintiff had an account, accompanied by Govan, that Govan took with him a bag, and that the plaintiff asked the cashier to give him bank-notes in exchange for the cheque, which the cashier did, and that the plaintiff thereupon handed £1,000 in notes to Govan. Upon the 25th of March, 1897, the plaintiff drew another cheque for £1,000 to complete the bargain between him and Govan, and the same thing was repeated as regards this cheque as with the former, and Govan was handed by the plaintiff this £1,000 also in notes. It was in this way that the plaintiff paid the £2,000 commission to Govan. It is also a fact of peculiar significance that, when the defendants had floated the new company, and 115,000 of its shares were allotted to the plaintiff in part payment of the purchase-money of his mine, 10 per cent. of those shares—i.e., 11,500—were placed in the name of a Mr. Allingham at the request of the plaintiff, and this allotment was accepted by Govan as payment by the plaintiff to him of his (Govan's) commission, which was to consist of shares. The plaintiff, when challenged as to these transactions, was unable to give any intelligible reason either for the payment of the £2,000 in the notes to Govan, and not by cheque, or for the allotment of the shares in the name of Allingham. It has been well said that secrecy is a badge of fraud, and these transactions, in my opinion, constitute good evidence that the plaintiff knew well that Govan was receiving this commission from him without the knowledge or assent of the defendants. What then is the case proved. It is that a vendor is paying a secret commission to a person whom he knows to be the agent of the purchaser, in order to induce that agent to get the purchaser to pay the vendor a price for his property enhanced by the amount of the commission, of which fact the purchaser had no notice and the vendor knew that he had no notice. The evidence shows that the plaintiff subsequently quarrelled with Govan, and that the plaintiff through others gave information to the directors of the defendant syndicate of what had taken place as regards the agreements of the 26th of September, 1896, and the 17th of March, 1897, and the payment of commission to Govan. I do not understand that the plaintiff informed the directors of the way in which he had paid the commission to Govan. The directors of the syndicate then called upon Govan to explain what he had done, and to return the £2,000, which he had received from the plaintiff, and he thereupon paid to the syndicate the £2,000; and they also insisted that the £500 which formed part of the purchase-money and which the plaintiff had received should be returned to them by him, and they refused to meet the promissory note sued on so far as £500 was concerned, and set up the counterclaim in this action alleging that the 10 per cent. commission was a secret profit or bribe by the plaintiff to Govan, their agent, and that they had unknowingly paid to the plaintiff the amount of the contracted commission (£2,500) in the purchase-money of the mine.

Apart from the point upon which my brother Bigham decided against the defendants, it appears to me that the defendants are in the right in the position they took up, and indeed had it not been for this point, about which hereafter, the learned judge would have decided in the defendants' favour, for the whole tenor of his judgment shows that he would have done so. In my judgment the contract of purchase of the 8th of January, 1897, was a corrupt bargain, as was also the contract of the 17th of March, 1897, and the evidence shows that, when each of those contracts was entered into, the plaintiff well knew that the defendant syndicate had no knowledge of the commission contracted to be paid to Govan by the plaintiff, nor that the purchase-money they agreed to pay to the plaintiff was enhanced by the amount of that commission. It was said by the plaintiff's counsel that the case in the House of Lords of Cavendish Bentinck v. Fenn decided that where a person charges fraud, the onus is upon him to prove it, and to establish his charge in a case like the present he must establish that the person charged had not communicated the act complained of to the injured person, and unless he proves this, the charge is not made out, for it is possible that he may have made the communication, in which case there would be no fraud, and further he must prove that the person making the charge has, in fact, been injured by concealment. Assuming that in the present case this onus of proof is upon the defendants, though I am by no means certain that it is, I say that the defendants have satisfied this onus, and shown out of the plaintiff's own mouth that he knew that Govan had not disclosed to the defendants the fact that he was receiving commission from the plaintiff, and that they have also proved that they have been injured by the amount by which the purchase-money had been increased to pay the contracted commission. For the same reason I need not discuss the case before Romer, J., of the Lands Allotment Co. v. Broad. The Salford case, in this court, is a clear authority that where an agent who has been bribed to do so induces his principal to enter into a contract with a person who has paid the bribe, and the contract is disadvantageous to the principal, the principal has two distinct and cumulative remedies—he may recover from the agent the amount of the bribe which he has received, and he may also recover from the agent and the person who has paid the bribe, jointly or severally, damages for any loss which he has sustained by reason of entering into the contract, and it is immaterial whether the principal sues the agent or the third person first. This is the head-note of this case, and accurately describes what was decided therein. A great deal of argument was addressed to us whether an action for money had and received would lie at the suit of the defendants against the plaintiff in this case. Lord Esher in the above case said it signified not what it may be called, whether damages or money had and received, and Lindley, L.J., said: "It is obvious that in some forms of action the corporation have a right to recover the shilling (i.e., the £2,500 in this case). Under the old practice, I think they could have recovered it by an action for money had and received, and probably they could have recovered it in more ways than one." It is not necessary upon the facts of this case to decide whether money had and received would lie, for I am of opinion that the £2,500 can be recovered from the plaintiff in an action for damages for deceit, though I am by no means prepared to hold that an action for money had and received would not lie. Apart from what I am now coming to and upon which Bigham, J., decided adversely to the defendants, I am of opinion that the defendant syndicate have a good counterclaim against the plaintiff to recover the sum of £500.

The point upon which Bigham, J., decided against the defendants was that in April, 1898, they settled with Govan after they had notice of the agreements of September, 1896, and the 17th of March, 1897, and that they therefore knew that Govan had agreed with the plaintiff for a reduced commission of £2,000, and the learned judge held that the defendants thus elected to adopt the agreement of March, 1897, and take from Govan the £2,000 which he had received under it from the plaintiff, for if there had been no such agreement Govan would not by then have received any commission at all. But how does this afford any answer by the plaintiff to the good cause of action which the defendants then had against him? The plaintiff was no party to this settlement with Govan, which was made solely between the defendants and Govan. The agreement with Govan, which is [illegible] resolution of the 23rd of March, 1898, was only a wiping out and settlement by agreement of the claims of the defendants against Govan, not against the plaintiff. The resolution was as follows: "It is resolved that the repayment of the £2,000 offered by Mr. Govan be accepted with his assurance that he received the money in the full belief that he was justified in accepting it and without any dishonourable intention and thereby unwittingly made a mistake." With all submission to my brother Bigham, I cannot see how this settlement with Govan gets rid of or affords any answer to the cause of action which the defendants had against the plaintiff, any more than the agreement which was set up in the Salford case by way of defence was held to afford an answer by the defendant Lever. For the reasons above I think judgment must be entered for the defendants upon their counterclaim, with costs of action here and below.

Collins, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The result of the transactions between the plaintiff and Govan is that from the outset the plaintiff dealt and intended to deal with Govan as a person who was to stand in a fiduciary relation to the purchaser, whom he was not only to find but to bring into existence. Even, in my opinion, if the agreement of the 26th of September fell short of constituting the plaintiff himself a joint promoter of the company which was to be formed to buy his mining rights, it clearly debars him from contending that in agreeing to pay a commission to Govan he was dealing with a person who he did not suppose was about to be an agent for the intended purchaser. The basis of the agreement was that he should be such an agent, and should promote a company to take over the plaintiff's property on conditions prearranged between the plaintiff and Govan. In my opinion, if a vendor pays a commission to a buyer's agent in order to secure his help in bringing about the sale and does not inform the buyer of the fact, he cannot defend the transaction if impeached by the buyer, who has, in fact, had no notice, by proving that he believed that the agent had disclosed the circumstances to his principal: see Panama Telegraph Co. v. India Rubber Telegraph Works Co., 23 W. R. 583, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 515; Harrington v. Victoria Graving Dock Co., 26 W. R. 740, 3 Q. B. D. 549; and Smith v. Sorby, 3 Q. B. D. 552*n*. I do not think Cavendish Bentinck v. Fenn, is an authority for the plaintiff. In my judgment the plaintiff is not entitled to the sum of £500 which he claims. I think that it is money which he could be compelled to refund if he received it, or which he could be made to pay to the defendant syndicate if they chose to sue upon the agent's contract, or finally, as damages in an action of deceit; and that to none of these actions would the fact that the defendants have claimed and received the sum of £2,000 from Govan be an answer.

Vaughan Williams, L.J.—I agree. In my judgment the syndicate can recover the £500, and if it had not been paid could have recovered the whole £2,500 by action or counterclaim. The form of such action would be an action for damages, quantified, it is true, but still damages; but I do not decide that money had and received would lie, though I doubt it.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Gush, Phillips, Walters, & Williams.

Solicitors for the defendants, Snell, Son, & Greenip.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Buckley, J. } Feb. 5, 6, 7.

West Ham Central Charity Board v. The Company of Proprietors of the East London Waterworks and H. Base. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Waste—Long lease—Deposit of rubbish—Injury to reversion—Countervailing advantage—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 25.

To constitute waste on the part of a tenant there must be a substantial alteration of the thing demised, resulting in an injury to the inheritance; and such an alteration is not the less waste because it may result also in some countervailing advantage greater than the injury.

Therefore, where the land demised was low-lying land, and the lessee shot rubbish containing vegetable matter upon it, and thereby raised it above high-water level, but made it more expensive to build upon, it is no answer to an action for waste to say that it is an advantage for building, for the land to be thus raised. The land demised being building land, the fact that the existence of vegetable matter upon it might, under the Public Health Acts, prevent the lessors at the end of the term from building dwelling-houses upon it, or might put them to the proof that such vegetable matter was not then existing, is an injury to the inheritance making the shooting of the rubbish waste.

The fact that the shooting of the rubbish during the term would prevent the lessors at the end of the term from deriving the special profit to be made by the use of the land in this way, is an injury to the inheritance making the shooting of the rubbish waste.

Action.

This was an action by lessors to restrain the defendants, their lessees, and a sub-lessee, from shooting rubbish upon the land demised. The land was low, marshy ground situate in the parish of West Ham near the River Lea, between two watercourses leading out of it, and was called Oxleas. It was about twelve acres in extent, its surface was below high-water level, and it was protected by banks about five feet high. It had been used as far as it could be used for grazing.

In September, 1830, the Churchwardens and Overseers of the Poor of West Ham let the land to the waterworks company for the term of ninety-nine years at the rent of £70 a year.

The lease recited that the waterworks company were desirous of constructing a reservoir upon the land, and had asked for a lease for the purpose; and among other things the lessees covenanted not to carry away from the land any soil or earth, and two years at least before the end of the term that they would fill up all holes made, and sow the land with grass seed, so that it might be restored to the lessors in the same condition as previous to the lease.

As events happened, the waterworks company did not want to make a reservoir there. It remained grass land until at any rate 1892. In 1894 the defendant Base applied for a lease of the land for the purpose of using it as a rubbish shoot, and in the result the waterworks company in April, 1896, let the land to him for the remainder of the term, less three days, at a rent of £105 a year. There was among other covenants one by the lessee not to do anything contrary to the provisions of the lease under which the lessors held. The learned judge held that his lessors did not either by the lease or otherwise authorize Base to shoot offensive materials on the land, but that they did authorize him to fill up and increase the level of the land. Base carried on the business of a housebreaker, and as such had a large amount of brick rubbish and material of that sort to dispose of. He also collected refuse from street sweepings known as "mud slop." These materials were put upon the land, and in addition ordinary dust-bin refuse from houses, sweepings up of markets, old tin cans, bottles, broken jars, clothes, ashes, dust, and paper, to the aggregate amount of some 150,000 or 160,000 cartloads, and the greater part of the land was thus raised some ten feet higher. Of the amount deposited some 16,000 loads was house refuse, 50 per cent. of which was ashes and inoffensive material, and the rest included a large amount of cabbage-stalks and leaves, and all sorts of vegetable refuse from house consumption. Base was paid from 8d. to 1s. 3d. a load for the house refuse deposited. Fires were kept upon the land and the paper and straw was burnt, but his lordship held that though some of the vegetable refuse had been burnt with the paper and straw, there had been no systematic burning of it, and that a large portion was covered up unconsumed. His lordship also held that it was not proved that this vegetable matter would have become innocuous or have disappeared by the end of the lease. The plaintiffs alleged that by these means the land had been permanently injured, and the value of their reversion greatly lessened; and they claimed an injunction restraining the defendants from bringing any rubbish, earth, or material on the land, or otherwise committing waste upon it, and damages.

(a.) Reported by Neville Tebbutt, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A preliminary objection was taken that there was no such body known to the law as the "West Ham Central Charity Board," and consequently there were no plaintiffs in the action. It was alleged in the statement of claim that in 1870 a scheme had been ordered by the Charity Commissioners for the regulation by the vicar, churchwardens, and overseers of West Ham of the charity to which the land in question belonged, and that in such scheme the vicar, churchwardens, and overseers were called the "Central Charity Board." Counsel now stated that they were instructed to appear for the above persons individually, and undertook that if the objection of the defendants was well founded the pleadings should be amended, making their clients individually parties to the action.

Astbury, Q.C., and A. à B. Terrell, for the plaintiffs.—The defendant Base has committed waste upon our land. He has altered its character and materially injured our reversion. We cannot build upon the land without digging down ten feet to get to solid ground. He has put offensive vegetable matter upon it, and if we desire to build dwelling-houses we shall be prevented by the local authorities under the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, s. 25. In any case it is untrue to say that the land has been made more valuable by what has been done, for we are prevented from making the extra profit by using it as a place to deposit material, which we might otherwise have made. We had a right to have the land returned to us at its original level: Darcy v. Askwith, Hobart 234; Greene v. Cole, 2 Wms. Saund., 644; Simmons v. Norton, 7 Bing. 640; Queen's College, Oxford v. Hallett, 14 East 489. We might have wanted to use it as a reservoir. The lease empowered the defendant waterworks company for that purpose to make certain alterations upon it, but for no other purpose. The defendant waterworks company authorized the defendant Base to use the land as he has done, and are properly parties. Besides, a lessee is responsible to his lessor for the acts of his sub-lessee: London (Mayor of) v. Hedger, 18 Ves. 355; Attersoll v. Stevens, 1 Taunt. 183; and the last note to Greene v. Cole.

Cripps, Q.C., and J. G. Woods, for waterworks company.—Even assuming that waste has been committed, the lessees are not liable for the acts of the sub-lessees unless they have expressly permitted them or connived at them. Liability only attaches to the person in actual possession: Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant (16th ed.), p. 775; Rich v. Basterfield, 4 C. B. 783; Harris v. James, 45 L. J. Q. B. 545, 24 W. R. Dig. 164. In the old case of Huntley v. Russell, 13 Jur. 837, the lease in terms permitted the act complained of; in London (Mayor of) v. Hedger collusion was assumed on the demurrer. Lessees are not liable for the acts of underlessees merely because they do not prohibit the acts complained of. They are not bound to put themselves in such a position as to be able to stop any tort upon the land which the occupier likes to commit. If there has been waste here the damage has been trivial, for the measure of the damage is not the cost of restoring the land to its former condition, but the actual damage to the inheritance, which in this case is trivial, if any at all: Whitham v. Kershaw, 34 W. R. 340, 16 Q. B. D. 613.

Birrell, Q.C., and James Scarlett, for the defendant Base.—In considering whether the nature of the land had been changed the court will consider the circumstances existing at the date of the act complained of, and not those existing at the date of the lease. The best and proper use of the land at present is for building factories, and for that purpose the acts of the defendant now complained of have improved instead of injuring the land. If waste has been committed at all, it is meliorating waste, in respect of which the court will not grant either an injunction or damages: see the judgments in Doherty v. Allman, 26 W. R. 513, at p. 515; 3 App. Cas. 709, at p. 722, and the observations of Jessel, M.R., in Jones v. Chappell, L. R. 20 Eq. 539, 24 W.R . Dig. 306; also Doe v. Burlington (Earl of), 5 B. & Ad. 507, at p 517; Harrow School v. Alderton, 2 Bos. & P. 86; Meux v. Cobley, [1892] 2 Ch. 253, 40 W. R. Dig. 111.

BUCKLEY, J.—The best definition of waste that I have been able to find is that in Darcy (Lord) v. Askwith: "It is generally true that the lessee hath no power to change the nature of the thing demised, he cannot turn meadow into arable, nor stub a wood to make it pasture, nor dry up an ancient pool or piscary, nor suffer ground to be surrounded, nor decay the pale of park, for then it ceaseth to be a park, nor he may not destroy nor drive away the stock or breed of anything, because it disherits and takes away the perpetuity of succession, as villains, fish, deer, young spring of woods, the like; but he may better a thing in the same kind, as by digging a meadow to make a drain or sewer to carry away water." The test as there laid down seems to be whether the act which the lessor says is waste on the part of the lessee alters the nature of the thing demised. At one time it was supposed to be waste for a tenant to build a new house on the land: see Co. Litt. 53a, and Queen's College, Oxford v. Hallett. If that was the law, I think it is plainly not the law now: see remarks of Jessel, M.R., in Jones v. Chappell, I am content to take the law from the words of Denman, C.J., in Doe v. Burlington (Earl of), 5 B & Ad. at p. 517: "Upon the whole there is no authority for saying that any act can be waste which is not injurious to the inheritance either first by diminishing the value of the estate; or secondly, by increasing the burden upon it; or thirdly, by impairing the evidence of title." If the permanent character of the property demised is not substantially altered, as, for instance, by the conversion of pasture land into plough land, by breaking up ancient meadows or the like, I conceive that it is not now waste for the tenant to do things which are not forbidden by the covenants and conditions of his lease: see remarks of Eldon, L.C., in Church v. Brown, 15 Ves. 258, at p. 268. Now, did the defendant Base, by placing this heap of rubbish upon the land, make an alteration in the nature of the thing demised? The defendants admit that in order to build hereafter upon the land an act must be done which in the original condition of the land need not have been done, as ten feet of superimposed material must be dug through before the foundations can be laid. But they say that the extra expense thus caused would be more than compensated for by the additional value of the land when raised. That amounts to a contention that it is allowable to alter the nature of the thing demised to the injury of the inheritance if at the same time there is a countervailing advantage which compensates for the injury. I think not. I think that to alter building land so that in order to build on it it has to be dealt with in a different way than formerly, is waste within the rule. Then the case may be looked at from another point of view. The lessors may want to build cottages upon the land, and it is quite possible that with this material upon it they might be forbidden to do so. The local authorities can under the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, s. 25, forbid dwellings to be put upon land impregnated with fœcal, animal, or vegetable matter." Why are the reversioners to be exposed to this difficulty. Their situation has surely been altered. The defendants say that the vegetable matter will have disappeared by the end of the term. Suppose this is so, still the landowners might have to prove that such was the case to the satisfaction of the local authorities before they could build. They have thus to comply with a new condition. Is not that an alteration of the nature of the thing demised. I need hardly say that the owner ought not to be excluded from the opportunity of building cottages if he is so minded, even if the land is more valuable for factories. There is a third way of looking at the case. Assume the defendants are right in saying that the land cannot be beneficially used for building until it has been raised. Still, the reversioners at the end of the lease would, but for the defendant, have come into the enjoyment of a property from which they could, before building upon it, have obtained additional rent or profit by allowing it to be used for a rubbish shoot. They could have protected themselves by stringent conditions as to the quality of the material deposited, so as to have a perfectly good foundation for building upon it subsequently. Or they could have got an additional rent from a factory builder or from a contractor like the defendant Base for the use of it in that way. The benefit they would thus have derived during that period has been lost. Why should they not be entitled to have the land back at the end of the lease in 1929 as it was in 1830, with the opportunity of making use of it as they pleased? Having regard to the fact that in many agricultural districts there are mining industries which have large amounts of slag and other material to be got rid of, it seems strange that no authority can be found upon the question whether the deposit of such material on land is or is not legal waste. The defendants could not deny that if the land were raised 1,000 or 1,500 feet it would be an alteration amounting to waste, and the plaintiffs would not contend that raising the land a few inches by top dressing it, was waste. It must be largely a question of degree. I think there has been an alteration amounting to waste by what has been done irrespective of the question whether the material deposited is offensive or not, and that, therefore, the waterworks company, having authorized the defendant Base to put material upon the land, are equally responsible with him. I need not, therefore, consider the question which has been raised, whether waste comes under the same category as nuisance.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, A. A. Banes.

Solicitors for the defendant company, Bircham & Co.

Solicitors for the defendant Base, George Goodman.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) Dec. 9.

DAVIES v. JENKINS.
HOWIE, Claimant. (a.)

Bill of sale — Consideration — Occupation of grantor omitted—Specific description of farm stock—Statement of consideration—Accordance with form—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 10, sub-section 2—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 4, 8, 9.

The defendant, Sarah Jenkins, borrowed from the claimant prior to the 29th of April, 1899, at various times sums of money amounting to £40. On that date it was agreed that the claimant should advance her a further sum of £50, and that she should give a bill of sale on her farm stock to secure the sum of £90; and a bill of sale was thereupon executed and the £50 advanced. In the bill of sale the consideration was stated to be "the sum of £90 now due and owing," and the grantor, who farmed the farm herself, was merely described as "Sarah Jenkins, of Ynysgwas Farm, in the county of Glamorganshire, married woman." In the schedule the farm stock was described as "two horses, four cows."

An execution having been levied by the plaintiff upon the goods comprised in the bill of sale, the claimant claimed the goods, and the bailiff interpleaded. The county court judge held the bill of sale to be good, and gave judgment for the claimant. The plaintiff appealed.

Held (following Carpenter v. Deen, 23 Q. B. D. 566, 38 W. R. Dig. 22), that the words "two horses, four cows," were not such a specific description of the farm stock as to satisfy section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882, and therefore they must be excluded from the schedule.

Held, also (sed dubitante), that the bill of sale was void, on the ground that the consideration was not truly stated, since the bill omitting to acknowledge the receipt of the £50 then advanced was not in accordance with the form prescribed by the Act.

Held, also, that the point raised as to the sufficiency of the description of the grantor's occupation must be decided in favour of the validity of the document.

Appeal from county court of Glamorganshire on an interpleader issue.

The plaintiff, a judgment creditor of one Sarah Jenkins, appealed from the decision of the county court judge of Glamorganshire, who had decided that a bill of sale held by the claimant Howie on the defendant's furniture, farm stock, and farming instruments was valid as against the plaintiff's judgment.

The defendant had, prior to the 29th of April, 1899, borrowed on various dates sums of money amounting in all to £40. On that date it was agreed that the claimant should advance the defendant a further sum of £50, and that she should give a bill of sale of her furniture, farm stock, and farming instruments to secure the sum of £90, and a bill of sale was accordingly executed, and the £50 was advanced.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

An execution having been put in by the plaintiff upon the goods comprised in the bill of sale, Howie claimed the goods, and the bailiff interpleaded.

The county court judge held the bill of sale to be good and the schedule to be sufficiently specific, and gave judgment for the claimant.

The plaintiff Davies appealed.

Mallinson (Montague Lush with him), for the appellant. — The bill of sale is void, for it is not in accordance with the form prescribed in the statute. It is bad, firstly, because the grantor is insufficiently described; secondly, the consideration is not truly stated; and thirdly, some of the chattels are not sufficiently specifically described to satisfy section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882. Mrs. Jenkins is described merely as "Sarah Jenkins, of Ynysgwas Farm, in the county of Glamorganshire, married woman," whereas she has been carrying on business for herself as a farmer for some years, her husband having gone to America—but it is not agreed that she is living "separate and apart" from her husband in the legal sense of that expression—and therefore she should have been described as the person farming Ynysgwas Farm—as a farmer—in order that creditors might be able to identify her. The consideration appears on the face of the bill to be "£90 then due and owing," whereas the evidence shows that as to £50 of that sum the statement was incorrect at the time the bill was executed—and the receipt of that advance is not acknowledged. Then the schedule (inter alia) includes "two horses and four cows" on the farm, and that description has been held insufficient in Carpenter v. Deen, 23 Q. B. D. 566, 38 W. R. Dig. 22.

S. T. Evans, for the respondent.—No definite line has yet been drawn by the court within which the "description" of the grantor or a chattel covered by a bill of sale must come, and I submit that where no reasonable doubt can arise as to identification the court will uphold the bill if otherwise valid. If this proposition be not true, then it is impossible to reconcile the various decisions that have been given on this point. As for the first objection, there is no substance in it. The grantor is described as "of" Ynysgwas Farm—that amounts to describing Mrs. Jenkins as the occupier of that farm—i.e., as the farmer of it, and sufficiently describes her. If the consideration has not been "truly stated" the inaccuracy is merely technical, and not sufficient to invalidate the bill, for it is never suggested that the full £90 was not advanced to Mrs. Jenkins. Nor can it be said that the repayment of that sum is not now due and owing. As to the objection that the horses and cows should have been more specifically described, the onus rests on the plaintiff to show that the farm stock cannot be identified. If the description was merely "illusory" the bill of sale on this point might be held to be bad. Witt v. Banner, 36 W. R. 115, 20 Q. B. D. 114, is a good example of a general description that in fact is no description for identification of the goods covered by the bill of sale at all. On the other hand, in Davidson v. Carlton Bank, 41 W. R. 132, [1893] 1 Q. B. 82, the entry in the schedule of the item "1,800 volumes of books (in study) as per catalogue" was held to sufficiently describe the books assigned. [DARLING, J.—Carpenter v. Deen is an authority on this point against you that we must follow.] No evidence has been given that the horses and cows are not those assigned by the bill of sale. The plaintiff has failed to show that the description was not specific, for the county court judge found that there were only two horses and four cows on the farm, and in the absence of evidence of facts showing that the description was not specific it was sufficient: Hickley v. Greenwood, 38 W. R. 686, 25 Q. B. D. 277. [DARLING, J.—How does that finding help you? There might well be two horses and four cows on the farm when the stock was seized, none of which were there when the bill of sale was executed. Therefore the mere number of the stock does not identify the specific stock assigned by the bill of sale.] [CHANNELL, J.—I see in Roberts v. Roberts, 32 W. R. 605, 13 Q. B. D. 794, that "seven milking cows" was not held to be an insufficient description, but no question on that point appears to have been raised, and that case is really no authority on this point. Lindley, L.J., in his judgment (see p. 806), said he thought "twenty chairs, five tables" would be a good description, but that "household furniture and effects" was clearly insufficient, and it is a little difficult to say why "twenty-one milch cows" should be held insufficient in Carpenter v. Deen. The reason, I suppose, is that household furniture is not so often sold or exchanged as farm stock.]

Mallinson replied.

[DARLING, J.—If we hold this bill of sale is bad as to the horses and cows, do you want our decision on the other points raised against its validity. We understand the sale of the horses and cows will cover your judgment. Mallinson.—I ask for a decision on all the points raised, as it is doubtful if the sale of the horses and cows will cover the debt.]

DARLING, J.—I think this bill of sale cannot be upheld, for it is certainly bad as far as the specific description of the horses and cows, and they, at all events, must be struck out of the schedule of chattels purported to be assigned by the grantor. It is plain from the decision given in Carpenter v. Deen that it is not sufficient to merely describe farm stock as "twenty-one milch cows," and it was so held by the majority of the Court of Appeal. In the present case the description is even less specific than in Carpenter v. Deen. So, too, with regard to the two horses, that would follow a fortiori, for the court does not say that you may describe horses less definitely than cows, and Lopes, L.J., in Carpenter v. Deen, at p. 577, went farther and said that horses must be more specifically described than cows or sheep.

Therefore we think the bill of sale as to the farm stock is bad, and the horses and cows must be excluded from it.

Then as to the description of the grantor. She is described as "Sarah Jenkins, of Ynysgwas Farm, in the county of Glamorganshire, married woman," and we think that description sufficiently describes her occupation. It shows that the said Sarah Jenkins occupies the farm and is not merely living there as a maid servant or guest. She is the person who lives there in the sense that she is the occupier of the farm. On this point we decide in favour of the validity of the document.

I now have to decide whether the consideration was stated in accordance with the form required by the Act. It is clear that the form could not be absolutely followed for as to £40 the money had been advanced by instalments, the first as far back as 1897. I think this fact might properly have been set out. Then as to the £50 I think the form given by the statute should have been followed. On the whole I think the consideration was not truly expressed, for it was said to be for £90 now due and owing—whereas £40 of that sum was and £50 was not due and owing—that the bill purported to have been granted. As to the £50 in respect of which the bill was in fact given, that would not become due and owing for six months, whereas the bill declared it was payable at once.

On the whole I think the bill is bad altogether, but certainly it is bad as to the horses and cows.

CHANNELL, J.—This is a case not without difficulty. I am bound as to the identification of the horses and cows to follow the decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal in Carpenter v. Deen, and I agree that the bill of sale is bad on that ground, and that this stock must be struck out of the schedule. But our so deciding that question does not necessarily make void the bill of sale, and indeed as to the occupation point I see no reason to disagree with the view already expressed by my brother, although I feel by no means confident that our decision would on this question be affirmed on appeal. As to the other point—namely, whether the consideration was correctly stated, I think that is a question open to considerable doubt. The statement certainly does not follow the form given, but then a true statement of the transaction would not be in strict accordance with the form, and the question to my mind is whether—it never being alleged here that the whole of the £90 was not bonâ fide advanced—the variation from the form under the circumstances amounts to a substantial misstatement—in other words, whether the consideration was not in fact substantially truly stated. For the reasons I have given I agree that the appeal should be allowed with costs, and that leave to appeal should be granted to the claimant on the two questions only on which we have expressed a doubt, if it should turn out that the amount realized by him by the sale of the horses and cows is insufficient to satisfy the claim. If on the other hand the debt is satisfied, then I understand the appeal will not be brought, and the matter will be ended by our judgment in this court.

Solicitor for the appellant, Richard White, for Ivor Evans, Swansea.

Solicitors for the respondent, Helder, Roberts, & Walton, for R. P. Morgan & David, Neath.

---

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } Nov. 13.

GILES v. GILES. (a.)

Divorce—Practice—Respondent of unsound mind not so found—No appearance—Notice to official solicitor.

Where the respondent, the husband in a suit for dissolution, was a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition, and the suit was in formâ pauperis, the court, before making the decree, required notice of the proceedings to be formally given to the official solicitor.

Hearing before the court itself of a petition in formâ pauperis by the wife for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of the cruelty and adultery of the husband.

The respondent, the husband, was a person of unsound mind, but not so found by inquisition. He had been confined in a county asylum from November, 1894, till he was in October, 1899, confined in another county asylum, where he was served with the petition, &c., in the presence of the medical superintendent and the head attendant. Information of the proceedings had been given to the official solicitor in order that he might act as guardian ad litem, but he had not taken any action. On the application in the registry for the formal certificate as to the proceedings and pleadings being in order, a note was made as to the state of the respondent's mind, that he was a pauper, and of the absence of any application to the court for the appointment of a guardian ad litem.

The court on hearing the evidence was satisfied that it proved cruelty and adultery on the respondent's part before November, 1894.

Walsh, for the petitioner.—No application was necessary to appoint a guardian ad litem; rule 196 of the Divorce Court Rules is not obligatory; here the petitioner is suing in formâ pauperis. This case has not been expressly provided for by the Legislature; see the judgment in the House of Lords in Mordaunt v. Moncrieffe, 23 W. R. 12, L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. & D. 374.

BARNES, J.—Under the Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 13, r. 1, in ordinary actions at law it is provided that where no appearance has been entered on behalf of a defendant of unsound mind the plaintiff shall apply for an order that someone be appointed guardian of the defendant. No provision appears to have been made expressly in the divorce practice, and I think this court should adopt that practice. The official solicitor must be communicated with and the case can be mentioned again to me.

Solicitors, Lovell, Son, & Pitfield, for J. Gordon Walsh, Oxford.

---

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Probate. } Nov. 6.

In the Goods of JOHN GEORGE CAMPION. (a.)

Probate — Will — Administration — Surviving executor absent from England—No intention to return or to continue to act—Application for grant de bonis non on behalf of assignee of reversionary interest.

Where a surviving executor, after proving the will and codicil, left England not intending to return or continue to act, the court, on motion, granted administration de bonis non, with the will and codicil annexed, to the nominee of the assignees of the residuary legatee.

Motion for administration de bonis non, with will and codicil annexed, to Herbert Kidson, the nominee of the assignees of the residuary legatee.

The testator died on the 18th of March, 1890, leaving a will and codicil duly executed, and by which he constituted S. B. Eckett his residuary legatee.

The will and codicil were proved by both executors in October, 1890.

One executor died in 1891, and the same year the other executor left England not intending to return for a long time or to act any longer as executor.

Eckett assigned his interest to the Lancashire and Yorkshire Reversionary Interest Co. (Limited) in 1895 by deed, and subsequently in May, 1899, renounced any right to administration, and consented to a grant to the company. The company nominated their secretary, Herbert Kidson, to make the present application and take the grant.

The testator's estate consisted principally of reversionary interests under two wills which did not fall in till 1898, and the estate then amounted to about £15,000.

Priestley, in support of the application.

BARNES, J., granted the motion.

Motion allowed.

Solicitors, W. J. & E. H. Tremellen, for Blair & Sedden, Manchester.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div.
(Lindley, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) Feb. 2.

SOUTH AFRICAN BREWERIES (LIMITED) v. KING. (a.)

Contract—Conflict of laws—English law and law of South African Republic—Locus solutionis.

Where a contract is made in a foreign country between two Englishmen, and is intended to be performed primarily in that foreign country, this fact is in itself sufficient, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to prove an intention on the part of the parties that the contract shall be governed by the law of the foreign country.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (47 W. R. 681, [1899] 2 Ch. 173) affirmed.

Appeal from the decision of Kekewich, J. (reported 47 W. R. 681, [1899] 2 Ch. 173).

In this case the question for decision was whether a contract made in Johannesburg between a company registered in England and an Englishman resident in Johannesburg, and intended to be performed primarily in Johannesburg, was governed by the law of England or by the law of the South African Republic.

By an agreement in writing dated the 14th of October, 1892, and made between the Natal Breweries Syndicate (South-east Africa) (Limited) (a company registered in England mainly for the purpose of carrying on the business of brewers in the Transvaal and elsewhere in South Africa), of the one part, and the defendant, an English subject, of the other part, and executed in England, the defendant bound himself to serve the syndicate as brewer, or otherwise, in their business of brewers carried on at Johannesburg till the 6th of November, 1894, at a salary of £300 a year. The defendant further bound himself by the said agreement not to engage in any brewing business in South Africa for a period of five years from the determination of his engagement.

In November, 1892, the whole of the undertaking of the syndicate (including the benefit of the said agreement of the 14th of October, 1892) was transferred to the South African United Breweries (Limited), an English company having its registered office in London.

After the expiration on the 6th of November, 1894, of the agreement of the 14th of October, 1892, the defendant continued in the service of the company on terms generally similar to those of his former employment.

By an agreement in writing, dated the 11th of April, 1895, and made between the company or its successors, of the one part, and the defendant, of the other part, and executed at Johannesburg, the defendant bound himself to serve the company (subject to certain rights of dismissal on their part) for a term of five years from the 1st of October, 1894, "as brewer or otherwise in their business carried on at Johannesburg, and in the Colony of Natal, or elsewhere in South Africa," for a monthly salary of £54 3s. 4d. By clause 8 of this agreement the defendant bound himself not to engage in any brewing business in South Africa for the term of ten years from the time of the determination of his employment under the said agreement, except with the consent in writing of the board of directors of the company in London.

In May, 1895, the company was reconstructed, and the whole of its undertaking (including the benefit of the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895) was transferred to the plaintiff company (whose registered office was also in England).

By a memorandum indorsed upon the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895, and dated the 12th of July, 1895, the defendant formally agreed to serve the plaintiff company in the terms in all respects of the said agreement.

On the 3rd of September, 1895, the plaintiff company duly determined the employment of the defendant under the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895, and under the memorandum of the 12th of July, 1895. The defendant having subsequently proposed, in breach of clause 8 of the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895, to undertake the management of a brewery at Durban, in Natal, without the consent in writing of the board of directors of the plaintiff company in London, the plaintiff company issued a writ (the defendant being at the time in England) asking the court to restrain the defendant from the contemplated breach of his undertaking. The defendant pleaded that the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895, and the memorandum of the 12th of July, 1895, were executed in the South African Republic, and that all duties under them were intended to be performed primarily in that country. It also appeared from the evidence that the defendant was advised at the time of his signing the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895, that the stipulation in clause 8 was invalid by the law of the South African Republic, and that he was so informed by the agent of the plaintiff company.

Kekewich, J., though of opinion that on the true construction of the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895, the defendant might have been required to serve in any part of South Africa, though primarily intended to serve at Johannesburg, made a declaration to the effect that the said agreement was governed by the law of the South African Republic, and postponed the further hearing of the action in order that that law might be ascertained.

From this decision the plaintiff company now appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and Younger, Q.C., for the appellants.—The agreement of the 11th of April, 1895, is governed by English law: Hamlyn & Co. v. Talisker Distillery, [1894] A. C. 202. (1) The agreement, it is true, was executed in Johannesburg, but it was in fact a continuation of the agreement of the 14th of October, 1892, which was executed in England. Substantially, therefore, the locus contractus was England. (2) The form of the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895, is English. (3) It cannot be supposed that the parties deliberately entered into a contract which they knew would be invalid. Hence it must be inferred that they never intended the agreement to be governed by Transvaal law. (4) There is no single exclusive locus solutionis. The defendant was liable to be called on to serve anywhere in South Africa. [ROMER, L.J., pointed out certain clauses in the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895, which indicated an intention that the defendant should serve primarily at Johannesburg.]

Buckmaster, for the respondent, was not called upon.

LINDLEY, M.R.—In my opinion the judgment of the court below is unquestionably right. Whatever be the law of the South African Republic, I am clear that the agreement of the 11th of April, 1895, is governed by it. It seems to me certain, having reference to the clauses in that agreement to which attention has been called by Romer, L.J., that it was intended that the agreement should be carried on

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Johannesburg; except so far, of course, as it might be necessary, owing to some pressing matter of business, temporarily to dispatch the defendant to some other country. The defendant contracted at Johannesburg to act as the company's representative at Johannesburg, and his contract is accordingly governed by the law of that country. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Loughborough, Gedge, Nisbet, & Drew; H. G. Campion & Co.

---

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Collins, L.JJ.) Jan. 27.

MAUDE v. BROOK. (a.)

Master and servant—Compensation for injury by accident—Building being "constructed" by means of a "scaffolding"—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.

The building of a house exceeding thirty feet in height was so far completed that the roof was on and the outside scaffolding was taken down, but the inside plastering work was not completed. To enable the plasterers, who were in the employment of the builder, to reach the ceilings and upper parts of the walls of the rooms, movable trestles, with boards placed across the top, were used for the plasterers to stand upon. While some of the plasterers were working on the trestles and boards, another plasterer was plastering the walls of the top landing, not standing upon trestles and boards, and, while so working, he fell over the stairs and was killed.

The county court judge found that the arrangement of trestles and boards was a "scaffolding" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that, therefore, the building was, at the time of the accident, being constructed by means of a scaffolding.

Held, by A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ. (Collins, L.J., dissenting), that there was evidence upon which the county court was entitled to find that the arrangement of trestles and boards was a "scaffolding" within the meaning of the section.

Appeal from the award of the judge of the Leeds County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The respondent was the widow of a deceased workman who while in the employment of the appellant was killed by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment.

The appellant was building two houses, and in November, 1898, the deceased man with other workmen was employed on the inside plastering work of the houses. On the 24th of November, 1898, the date of the accident, the outside scaffolding had been taken down, and the houses had been roofed in, but the inside plastering work had not been completed. The houses exceeded thirty feet in height. In order to enable the plasterers to reach the ceilings and upper parts of the walls of the interior of the houses, movable trestles with boards placed across the top were used. On the 24th of November, 1898, some of the plasterers were working on the trestles and boards, but the deceased man was standing on the landing of the top floor of one of the houses, not upon trestles and boards, plastering the walls, when he fell over the staircase where the banisters had not then been put up, and was killed.

The county court judge was of opinion that the plastering of the walls and ceilings of the unfinished house was part of its construction, and that the arrangement of trestles and boards, although inside the house, was a "scaffolding" within the Act. It formed a platform used by the workman engaged in the higher plastering to reach his work. Although the deceased man was not using the scaffolding himself and did not fall from it, he (the county court judge) was of opinion that the deceased man died from injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment in a building exceeding thirty feet in height which was being constructed by means of a scaffolding, and that his widow was entitled to compensation. He made an award in her favour for £296.

The employer appealed.

Ruegg, Q.C., and A. Powell, for the appellant.—It is not sought to disturb the finding of the county court judge that the plastering work was construction. That is a question of fact in each case for the judge. The arrangement of trestles and boards is, however, not a "scaffolding" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The word "scaffolding" is used in its ordinary and popular sense as a structure of poles and boards lashed together. Two trestles and a board placed across the top do not constitute a scaffolding. No one in ordinary language would call such an arrangement a scaffolding. The section refers to a scaffolding necessary for the particular building under construction—that is, a scaffolding of such a height and nature as to enable a building over thirty feet high to be constructed, repaired, or demolished. The building over thirty feet high is the dominating element. In Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co., 47 W. R. 499, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1018, Collins, L.J., said that "the scaffolding must, in my judgment, have some relation to the height of the building; the word 'scaffolding' must be interpreted by reference to the nature of the work for which the Legislature contemplated that it was to be used—that is to say, in the construction or repair of a building exceeding thirty feet in height by an undertaker who is defined to be the person undertaking the construction, repair, or demolition . . . It is the construction, repair, or demolition of a building, which would primâ facie suggest the building as a whole, and the operation to which scaffolding is contemplated as an essential would seem therefore to be primâ facie the work of constructing or repairing such a building as a whole." Further on he said that "the danger contemplated is that incidental to dealing with a building more than thirty feet high by means of a scaffolding adequate to such a building." The trestles and boards in the present case do not come within that description. They are no more a scaffolding than was the arrangement of a board with one end tied on to the rung of a ladder and the other end resting on the window-sill, in the case of Wood v. Walsh & Sons, 47 W. R. 504, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1009. The county court judge was therefore wrong.

J. A. Compston, for the respondent.—It is impossible to have an ordinary scaffolding in a room in a house. Trestles and boards are used instead. Being movable, they are more convenient, and a plasterer's scaffolding is well known in the trade. In Webster's Dictionary a trestle is defined to be a movable frame or support for anything, as scaffolding, consisting of three or four legs secured to a top piece, and forming a sort of stool or horse used by carpenters, masons, and other workmen. These trestles and boards may well be called a scaffolding, and therefore there was evidence upon which the county court judge was entitled to find that they constituted a scaffolding within section 7, sub-section 1, of the Act.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

He also referred to the definition of trestle in the Imperial Dictionary and the Century Dictionary.

Ruegg, Q.C., replied.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In this case two points were taken before the county court judge. The first was whether the inside plastering work was part of the "construction" of the two houses. The houses were not completed, a great part of the inside plastering work still remaining to be done. The deceased man with others was engaged upon the plastering of the the ceilings and walls of the houses, and while standing on the floor of the top landing of one of the houses doing his work he fell over the stairs and was killed. In my opinion, it being well known what the nature of plastering work is, the county court judge was justified in holding that at the time of the accident the house was being "constructed" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The second point is whether the house was being constructed by means of a "scaffolding" within the meaning section 7, sub-section 1. There is nothing in the Act requiring the scaffolding to be more than thirty feet high; the only requirement in that respect is that the building must exceed thirty feet in height. Certainly there is nothing to limit the accident to a fall off the scaffolding or to some accident occurring on the scaffolding. The question we have to decide is whether the county court judge was entitled to hold that the arrangement of trestles and boards, which were used for the plasterers to stand upon, when necessary, to reach their work, was a "scaffolding" within the meaning of the Act. We have already held in Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co. that it is immaterial whether the scaffolding is inside or outside the building. Suppose a house was being built by means of trestles and boards placed outside, with a ladder to give the workmen access thereto in case of necessity, would not a county court judge be entitled to find that the house was being built by means of a scaffolding? To my mind there would in such a case be evidence to justify his so finding. We have always refused to lay down a definition of the term "scaffolding" as used in the section. We can only say whether in any particular case there is evidence that the arrangement or structure is a scaffolding within the meaning of the section. It seems to me that if this arrangement of trestles and boards were used outside the house for the purpose of its construction, there would be evidence to justify a county court judge in finding that it was a scaffolding. The fact that, instead of being outside it is inside the house, used for the purpose of completing the construction, cannot, in my opinion, warrant us in saying as a matter of law that the arrangement is not a scaffolding. It is said that the term "scaffolding" as used in the section means a scaffolding composed of poles, supports, and planks tied together. I cannot see anything in the Act requiring any such thing. In Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co. I thought that there was evidence that a structure, inside a building, composed of scaffold boards resting on ledgers secured to the iron columns of the building was a "scaffolding" within the meaning of the Act. I cannot say that there is no evidence that the arrangement in the present case was a scaffolding. A number of possibly ridiculous results have been suggested in argument which may arise from our decision. That may be so or not, but during the year and a quarter in which I have been called upon to construe the Act I have come across some rather curious results arising from the language used in the Act. Our duty is to construe the Act. For these reasons I think that there was evidence that this house was being constructed by means of a scaffolding, and that therefore the appeal should be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. In construing the Act we are not, in my opinion, at liberty to confine the term "scaffolding" to that which is the most general form of scaffolding. A structure, whether it is a usual or an unusual arrangement, may be a scaffolding. Supposing that a building over thirty feet in height is being constructed, and on each side of the site there is a wall, of which the builder has the control. If, instead of going to the expense of putting up poles, the builder fixes planks across from one wall to the other, that may be a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act, although no poles are used. The Notice of Accidents Act, 1894, seems to show why the provision as to the height of the building and as to the scaffolding was inserted in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Certain employments mentioned in the schedule to the Act of 1894 are brought within that Act, and amongst them are the "construction or repair by means of a scaffolding of any building which exceeds thirty feet in height, or use or working of any such building in which more than twenty persons, not being domestic servants, are employed for wages." That seems to me to be quite an arbitrary enactment. I cannot say why that should be laid down as a condition of the necessity of giving notice of an accident, unless as a rough test of the importance of the work. I cannot say that the condition as to the construction being by means of a scaffolding is anything more than a rough test of the importance of the building. We have already held in Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co. that it matters not whether the scaffolding is inside or outside the building, nor whether the accident happens by reason of the existence of the scaffolding or not. I apprehend that if a man were injured by a workman letting fall a load of bricks, the case would come within the Act, though the injured man was not on the scaffolding at all. I agree with my lord that the county court judge was justified in finding that the trestles and planks constituted a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act.

COLLINS, L.J.—I regret that I am unable to agree with my brethren. I could not agree with them without going back upon what I said in Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co. Having carefully reconsidered the question, I adhere to what I said in that case, and it is not necessary to repeat it. The only safe rule is to give the word "scaffolding" its ordinary popular meaning. The word must be read with its context, and when so read the ordinary popular meaning is the only natural meaning to be given to it. I cannot think that the arrangement of two trestles in a room with a board laid across the top is a scaffolding within the meaning of the section. I do not think that any ordinary uninstructed person would call it a scaffolding. Certainly I do not think that such a person would call it a scaffolding by means of which a building was being constructed or repaired. The connection in which the word scaffolding occurs in the section points to something in the nature of a scaffolding consisting of poles and supports used for the construction or repair of a building. I do not deny that such a scaffolding may be inside as well as outside the house. To my mind it is not a question of pure fact. I think the court must accept the responsibility of giving some guidance upon the point, without at the same time defining the exact legal meaning of the word scaffolding. In Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers & Co. I attempted to state the direction which a judge should give to a jury, if there were a jury in such a case, as to whether a particular structure was or was not a scaffolding. I venture to claim that my view has the support of authority. In Wood v. Walsh & Sons there was a ladder used for the outside painting of a house, and on one of the rungs of the ladder was tied a board, the other end of which rested upon a window-sill. It was contended that that arrangement was a scaffolding within the Act. I may say that if the trestles and boards in the present case are a scaffolding, I cannot see why the arrangement of ladder and plank in that case was not a scaffolding. In that case A. L. Smith, L.J., said: "Is a ladder a 'scaffolding'? The question has only to be put in order to be answered, for no man in his senses who wanted his house repaired by means of a ladder would say that he wanted it done by means of a scaffolding; if he wanted scaffolding used he would say so. In my judgment this case does not come within the section at all. It has been contended that the attachment of a plank to a rung of the ladder made it a scaffolding; that however is a question of fact, and the arbitrator found that it did not, and I agree with him." In Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co. there was an arrangement of scaffold boards resting on ledgers which were secured to the iron columns and supported in the middle by trestles. A. L. Smith, L.J., thought that there was evidence which entitled the county court judge to find that the structure was a scaffolding, though it was unnecessary to decide the point. I was of opinion that it was not a scaffolding, and I think that Romer, L.J., took my view, because he said that "in construing the language as to the height of the building, regard must be had to the words 'construction,' 'repair,' and 'scaffolding'; they should not be considered separately, but together, for they have a mutual bearing and effect upon each other." That was not a decision as to whether the arrangement in that case was a scaffolding, but the case is of importance upon this point as affording some guidance in the future. The result of holding the arrangement of trestles and boards in the present case to be a scaffolding would have some strange results which the Legislature could hardly have contemplated. It is admitted that the decision would cover the case of a workman employed on the building away from the scaffolding. The danger incurred in such a case would not arise from working on the scaffolding or from something falling off the scaffolding. It must follow that if the house was completed with the exception of the inside plastering, and if there was only one plasterer standing on a board placed on two trestles in a room finishing the plastering work, and another workman stumbled when coming upstairs and injured himself the case would come within the Act. Such a result could not have been contemplated. In my opinion the words "a scaffolding" means one system of scaffolding capable of being used for the construction or repair of the building as a whole.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I desire to say that in Hoddinott v. Newton, Chambers, & Co. I did not hold that the structure was a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act. I merely held that there was evidence which entitled the county court judge to find that the structure was a scaffolding. I said: "I cannot hold that there was no evidence to support the finding that it was a scaffolding." So also in Wood v. Walsh & Sons I merely refused to interfere with the finding of the county court judge.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, W. Hurd & Son, for H. A. Child, Leeds.

Solicitor for the respondent, G. Trenam, for Milling & Dodgson, Leeds.

---

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Collins, L.JJ.) Jan. 20.

HADDOCK v. HUMPHREYS. (a.)

Master and servant—Employment—Accident—Factory—Wharf—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7—Factory and Workshop Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23.

A workman was killed by an accident while he was engaged in removing some timber from a place where it was stored on the premises of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board. By the side of the Canada Dock there was a large open space stretching back from the water for a distance of 150 yards, and on the further side of this space there was a road running parallel with the water. Beyond the road there was a row of offices, to which were attached timber yards. The offices and yards were leased to timber merchants. The timber in question was stored in one of these yards.

Held (Rigby, L.J., dissenting), that the place where the timber was stored was not a wharf so as to come, by virtue of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, within the definition of "factory" contained in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Lancashire County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant was the widow of a workman who had been killed by an accident in the course of his employment. The employers were a firm of carters.

The employers had undertaken with a firm of builders to fetch a log of timber from a place where it was stored on the premises of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board. The log was one of a pile of logs which were stacked in tiers.

The workman was assisting in the removal of the log by the means of a crane worked by hand for the purpose of placing it on one of the employers' carts when he met with the accident, which resulted in his death.

The place where the logs were stored was a timber-yard, which was distant about 150 yards from the water of the Canada Dock, at Bootle. Alongside the water's edge was a large space called the timber quay, which stretched back from the water for a distance of nearly 150 yards, and beyond this, running parallel with the water's edge, was a roadway, which was used by the public during the daytime as a cart-road. On the further side of this roadway was a row of offices, to each of which was attached a yard. These offices and yards were leased by the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board to various timber merchants. One of these yards was the locus in quo. The area comprising the yards was enclosed by a wall and gates. On the further side of this area ran a highway called Regent's-road, and beyond this again there were similar offices and yards.

The question was whether the place where the timber was stored was a wharf, so as to come by virtue of section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act,

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

1895, within the definition of "factory" contained in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The county court judge held that the locus in quo was not a wharf, and made an award in favour of the employers.

The applicant appealed.

Blackwood Wright, for the applicant.—The county court judge failed to distinguish between a "wharf" and a "quay," though section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, speaks of "every dock, wharf, quay, and warehouse," and a distinct meaning ought to be given to each of those words. A quay is a place for discharging cargo. A wharf is an uncovered place for storing cargo. This timber yard was a wharf; if it had been covered with a roof it would have been a warehouse. The word "wharf" in this section ought to be construed with some regard to its original meaning, and not as though this section were one relating merely to shipping matters.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Leslie Scott, for the employers.—The word "wharf" in this section ought to be construed according to its ordinary and popular meaning—viz., as a place alongside water used for unloading. A quay is a species of wharf; otherwise there is no difference between wharf and quay. A wharf may be used as a store, but a place used as a store need not be a wharf.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The question is whether the locus in quo is a wharf or a timber yard. By the side of the Canada Dock, at Liverpool, there is a large open space stretching back from the water for a distance of 150 yards, and on the further side of this open space there is a road running parallel with the water. That this space of 150 yards may be a wharf or quay I do not doubt. And if the deceased man's employment at the time of the accident had been there, the case might have come within the Act. But the accident did not happen there. On the other side of the road there is a line of offices, and at the back of them there is a wall with gates. Behind the wall is a piece of land which is not built upon, and which is enclosed by the wall, and beyond that is a street. The enclosed piece of land is leased in plots by the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board to different timber merchants, to be used by them as timber yards, one of these plots being the locus in quo. Water-borne timber is carried across the quay or wharf, and then taken through a gate into one or other of the timber yards, and there stored. The question is whether one of these plots of the enclosed piece of land is a wharf or simply a timber yard. The county court judge said that it was a timber yard and not a wharf. In my opinion it is not a wharf within the Act. I think that the word "wharf" implies some connection with water, and does not include a yard which is cut off from a quay in the way in which this timber yard is cut off. If it did, then I do not see why it should not also include the yards on the other side of the street. I therefore think that the appeal must be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I cannot arrive at the same conclusion as my learned brethren. I think that the word "wharf" does not necessarily imply anything to do with water. It is derived from an Anglo-Saxon word, and there are similar words in cognate languages. I agree that, according to the dictionary meaning of the word, it does appear that "wharf" is not generally used except in some kind of connection with water, and here it is used under the same heading as "dock." But it seems to me that the proper meaning of the word is a place for the reception of goods, and not specially for the unloading of goods. The place where this timber was stored is a yard used for the reception of timber, and I think we have here all that is required to satisfy the meaning of the word "wharf."

COLLINS, L.J.—I think the county court judge was right. In my opinion, the only safe standard to adopt in giving an interpretation to the words used in section 23 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, is to give to each of them its ordinary popular meaning. Any attempt to refine on their meanings seems to me likely to be fraught with difficulty. In a recent case we put its popular meaning on the word "dock" (Hennessey v. McCabe, ante, p. 231), and so here I think we ought to put its popular meaning on the word "wharf." In my opinion the locus in quo in the present case could not properly be described as a wharf at all. It is contiguous to a wharf where goods are continually in transit, but it is itself a place where an individual timber merchant is entitled to store timber. I do not doubt that if it had been roofed over it would have been a warehouse, but it is not a wharf. I think that in popular language a wharf is a place contiguous to water, over which goods are passed in the process of loading or unloading. In this case there is a large open space which is used for that purpose. It seems to me that before a place can properly be called a wharf it must be shown to be a place of such a sort that goods on it must necessarily be in transit; there must be some limit to the time during which goods are allowed to remain there. If contiguous to the wharf there is a place set apart for the private use of some person using the wharf, that place is not a wharf. The place in question in this case is kept by a particular person, who exercises exclusive rights over it, and it is not a wharf in the popular sense of the term.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the applicant, W. H. Quilliam.

Solicitor for the employers, J. R. Watkins.

---

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Collins, L.JJ.) — Jan. 11.

"THE CAWDOR." (a.)

Admiralty—Practice—Ship—Action of restraint—Bail bond for safe return of vessel—Forfeiture—Discretion of court.

A bail bond given in an action of restraint was conditioned for the safe return of the vessel to the port of Liverpool. On the termination of the voyage the vessel did not return to Liverpool, but put into the port of Dundee, outside the jurisdiction of the English Admiralty Court, from whence she was sent under a charter-party on a fresh voyage.

On the application of the plaintiff, Barnes, J., made an order declaring the bond to be forfeited.

Held, that the order was right.

Appeal from an order made by Barnes, J., on a motion in an action of restraint.

The plaintiff, W. E. A. Graham, was the owner of eleven sixty-fourth shares in the sailing ship Cawdor, which in August, 1898, was in the port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne and was about to be sent by her managing owners to the port of Hartlepool and thence on a voyage to Calcutta.

The indorsement on the writ in the action was as follows: "The plaintiff, as owner of eleven sixty-fourth shares of the sailing ship or vessel Cawdor, of the port of Liverpool, being dissatisfied with the management of the said ship by his co-owners, claims that his co-owners shall give bail in the sum of £2,750, the value of his shares, for the safe return of the said ship to the port to which she belongs—namely, to the port of Liverpool."

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 1st of September, 1898, the defendants put in a bail bond in the sum of £1,718 15s., that sum being the value of the plaintiff's shares after appraisement of the vessel by the marshal of the court. The bail bond was executed by two sureties, and was to the following effect: "Whereas an action of restraint has been commenced in the High Court of Justice on behalf of W. E. A. Graham against the owners of The Cawdor other than himself, now, therefore, we, the undersigned, hereby jointly and severally submit ourselves to the jurisdiction of the said court, and consent that if The Cawdor shall not safely return to the port of Liverpool, and the owners of The Cawdor, other than W. E. A. Graham, shall not in such case pay to the plaintiff the sum of £1,718 15s., execution may issue forth against us for a sum not exceeding £1,718 15s."

The Cawdor proceeded on her intended voyage, and on her return to the United Kingdom in August, 1899, she went into the port of Dundee, outside the jurisdiction of the English Admiralty Court, and, while she was there, she was chartered by her managing owners for a fresh voyage to New York, there to load for Melbourne and Sydney.

The plaintiff thereupon applied to the court that the bond given in the action might be pronounced to be forfeited, and that the amount of the bond might be paid into court if The Cawdor did not within a month return to Liverpool, or, alternatively, that, on delivery up of the bond to be cancelled, the plaintiff might be allowed to participate in the future working of the vessel.

Barnes, J., ordered that the bail bond be forfeited, and that the sum of £1,718 15s. be paid into court within ten days.

The defendants appealed, and it was contended on their behalf that the court would not order such a bail bond to be forfeited except in the event of the vessel being lost.

Carver, Q.C., and Aspinall, Q.C., for the defendants.

Laing, Q.C., and Balloch, for the plaintiff.

The following cases were cited: Lambert v. Aeretree, 1 Ld. Raym. 223; The Margaret, 2 Hagg. Adm. 275; The Regalia, 51 L. T. Rep. 904; The Vivienne, 36 W. R. 110, 12 P. D. 185.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In my opinion the bail bond is a bond which has been given to the court to be enforced if the court thinks right. The effect of the bond is not that in no case can the sureties be called upon to pay the amount into court unless the ship be lost. I think the court has jurisdiction to consider whether in the circumstances of the case the enforcement of the bond would be right as between the parties. By the terms of the bond execution may issue against the sureties if the vessel shall not return to Liverpool. The bond then is given to the court for the safe return of the vessel to Liverpool, and it is to be enforced as and when the judge thinks fit. The vessel did not return to Liverpool, but to the port of Dundee, which is outside the jurisdiction of the English Admiralty Court, and from that port she was sent off on a new voyage to New York. The plaintiff thereupon applied that the bond might be forfeited, or that he might be allowed to participate in the future working of the vessel. The learned judge made an order in the terms of the first alternative. I think that he had jurisdiction to make the order, and that the order is right. I do not think that the cases which have been cited are any authority to the contrary. The argument in support of the appeal comes to this, that the majority-owners ought to be allowed to send the vessel on voyages all over the world until they think fit to bring her back, and in the meantime—that is, perhaps, for years—to prevent the plaintiff from participating in the working of the vessel. I cannot think that that is right. The appeal must be dismissed.

RIGBY and COLLINS, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Charles E. Harvey.

Solicitors for the defendants, Pritchard & Sons, for Hill, Dickinson, & Co., Liverpool.

---

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Collins, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) Dec. 20.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. (a.)

Inland revenue—Income tax—Deduction of tax from interest or annuities—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), s. 24, sub-section 3.

The London County Council, when they paid the dividends due on Metropolitan Consolidated Stock, deducted a sum therefrom at the rate of 8d. in the pound in respect of income tax, in accordance with section 24, sub-section 3, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888. The dividends were paid out of the Consolidated Loans Fund. The Consolidated Loans Fund was made up (inter alia) of rents received by the county council from their tenants, interest received by the county council from local authorities in respect of loans made by the county council, and money raised by rates. The Consolidated Loans Fund was applicable, first, to the payment of the said dividends, and then to the redemption of Consolidated Stock and the payment of various debts and liabilities. The county council claimed to be entitled to retain, as against the Crown, the amount deducted as income tax in respect of so much of the dividends as they stated to have been paid out of rents from tenants and interest from local authorities.

Held, first, that the county council were not entitled to retain any income tax in respect of so much of the dividends as they stated to have been paid out of rents; secondly, that they were entitled to retain the tax on so much only of the dividends as was equal to that rateable proportion of the interest received from local authorities which was applicable to the payment of the dividends.

Appeal from a judgment of a Divisional Court (Day and Lawrance, JJ.) on the hearing of an information by the Attorney-General against the London County Council claiming an order for the payment of certain sums in respect of income tax under Schedule D: [1899] 2 Q. B. 226.

The question was to what extent the London County Council were entitled to retain the sums deducted by them as income tax, when they paid dividends to the holders of Metropolitan Stock.

By the Metropolitan Board of Works (Loans) Act, 1869, s. 4, it was enacted that the board might create capital stock to be called the Metropolitan Consolidated Stock.

By section 5 the sums required for the redemption of the Consolidated Stock and the dividends thereon were to be charged indifferently on the whole of the land, rents, and property belonging to the board, and on all moneys which could be raised by rate.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Section 22 provided for the creation of a metropolitan consolidated rate.

Section 26 provided for the establishment of a Metropolitan Consolidated Loans Fund.

Section 27 provided that the board should carry to the Consolidated Loans Fund the moneys following: (1) All moneys, whether in the nature of capital or otherwise, arising from the sale, lease, or other disposition of lands, rents, and property belonging to the board; (4) such greater or less annual sum as the Treasury might from time to time approve as being in their opinion necessary in order to pay the dividends on and to redeem all the Consolidated Stock in sixty years from the date of the creation thereof.

By section 28 the board was to apply the consolidated Loans Fund according to such regulation as might be approved by the Treasury.

The defendant council succeeded the said board on the 1st of April, 1889.

Section 15 of the London Council (Money) Act, 1889, repealed section 28 of the Act of 1869, and provided for the Consolidated Loans Fund being applied in payment of the dividends on Consolidated Stock and then in purchasing and redeeming Consolidated Stock and in payment of certain other liabilities.

By various Acts of Parliament the Metropoitan Board and the defendant council were empowered to lend to divers local authorities sums of money, and by the said Acts it was directed that the interest paid and principal repaid by the local authorities in respect of such loans should be carried to the Consolidated Loans Fund.

The total sum paid by the defendant council by way of dividends and interest on loans made to the said board and the defendant council during the year the 1st of April, 1897, to the 31st of March, 1898, was £1,142,884 6s. 9d., the income tax on which at 8d. in the pound amounted to £38,096 2s. 10d.

The defendant council, in paying the said dividends, deducted and retained the income tax payable thereon under Schedule D.

The defendants had paid certain sums to her Majesty, but had left a balance of £19,963 9s. 3d. unpaid.

During the half-year the 1st of April, 1898, to the 30th of September, 1898, the defendant council paid by way of dividends and interest on loans made to the said board and the defendant council £587,058 3s. 8d., the income tax on which under Schedule D at 8d. in the pound amounted to £19,568 10s. 1d.

The defendants had paid to her Majesty certain sums, leaving a balance of £11,035 3s. 8d. unpaid.

In the information the Attorney-General charged that all the sums deducted as aforesaid were payable to and should be accounted for to her Majesty by the defendant council.

In argument, however, he gave up the claim in respect of a rateable proportion of so much money as was repayment to the county council of the interest on loans made to local authorities who had deducted income tax under Schedule D before paying the county council.

By section 11 of the information the Attorney-General alleged, by way of alternative, as follows: That the Consolidated Loans Fund has only one constituent portion which is chargeable to the income tax under Schedule D of the Income Tax Acts—viz., the said interest paid to the defendant council by local authorities on the loans made to them, and no other constituent so chargeable, and that such Consolidated Loans Fund is by law applicable, in the first place, to the payment of dividends on Consolidated Stock and loans to the defendant council, and then in purchasing and redeeming Consolidated Stock and the payment of the other matters enumerated in section 15 of the said Act of 1889; that a rateable proportion only, and no more, of the said interest payable by the said local authorities is applicable and applied to the payment of dividends on the said Consolidated Stock and loans to the defendant council; and that, therefore, no part of the dividends paid by the defendant council, excepting only an amount thereof equal to the said rateable proportion of the said interest, is payable out of profits or gains brought into charge to the income tax under Schedule D, and that the defendant council ought to deduct and to account to her Majesty for the whole of the income tax on the said dividends, excepting only the tax on the amount equal to the said rateable proportion of the said interest.

The defendants, in answer to interrogatories, stated that they had paid the sums mentioned in the information by way of dividends on Consolidated Stock partly out of rents and profits of land charged with income tax under Schedule A, partly out of interest on loans to local authorities, and other interest or annual payments charged with income tax under Schedule D, and partly out of sums raised by rate.

They contended that, in so far as the said dividends were paid out of rents and profits of land, or out of interest or other payments already charged with income tax either by way of deduction as and when they were received or otherwise, the said council were entitled to deduct and retain income tax on dividends paid out of such rents and profits, interest, and payments already charged. They claimed to be entitled to do this by virtue of the Income Tax Acts, 1842 and 1853, and the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888. By section 24, sub-section 3, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, it is enacted as follows: "Upon payment of any interest of money or annuities charged with income tax under Schedule D, and not payable, or not wholly payable, out of profits or gains brought into charge to such tax, the person by or through whom such interest or annuities shall be paid shall deduct thereout the rate of income tax in force at the time of such payment, and shall forthwith render an account to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue of the amount so deducted, or of the amount deducted out of so much of the interest or annuities as is not paid out of profits or gains brought into charge, as the case may be; and such amount shall be a debt from such person to her Majesty, and recoverable as such accordingly; and the provision contained in section 8 of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97, now in force in relation to money in the hands of any person for legacy duty, shall apply to money deducted by any person in respect of income tax."

The Divisional Court gave judgment for the Crown, holding that, so far as the sum paid by the county council for interest consisted of rents received by them, they were not entitled to retain any of the deducted income tax, and that, so far as it consisted of interest paid to them by other authorities, they were bound to account to the Crown for the deducted income tax in accordance with section 11 of the information.

The defendants appealed.

Sir Edward Clarke, Q.C., Bosanquet, Q.C., and Ryde, for the appellants.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., and Danckwerts, for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 20.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: Two questions arise in this case—the one as to the true construction of section 24 (3) of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888; and the other, what, upon the facts proved when applied to this section, is the account to be rendered by the London County Council to the Crown. The London County Council has a stock, which is called Consolidated Stock, upon which they pay dividends to the stockholders amounting in round figures to the sum of 1,000,000 of money per annum. By section 24 (3) of the Act of 1888, it is provided that, before the London County Council pays this annual dividend to their stockholders, the council shall deduct the income tax payable thereon under Schedule D—i.e., shall deduct one million of eightpences and unless excused (about which hereafter) the council is bound to render an account to the Crown of these eightpences, which it has thus deducted, and for this amount the council is made debtor to the Crown. For the payment of these dividends and for the payment of the other expenditure of the London County Council the council has a fund, called the Consolidated Loans Fund, which is supplemented by the many receipts of moneys which fall in to the London County Council. These receipts consist, amongst others, of rents, of interest upon loans, of profits made by borrowing and lending money, of profits made by purchasing and selling property, and of money raised by the levy of rates. These receipts are placed together in one fund, which forms the Consolidated Loans Fund. The rents which are received by the London County Council, and which are paid into this fund, amount in round figures to the sum of £100,000 per annum. The interest upon loans which are received by the London County Council, and which are paid into this fund, amounts in round figures to the sum of £500,000 per annum, and the total receipts paid into this fund, including the two sums above mentioned, amount to the sum of about £2,600,000 per annum. The first question is whether the rents of £100,000 per annum thus received by the London County Council, and which have had the income tax under Schedule A of the Income Tax Act deducted by the tenants before these rents were paid to the county council, fall within the provisions of section 24 of the Act of 1888; and this depends on the true construction of that section. By section 23 of the Act of 1888, under the heading "Income Tax," it is enacted that "There shall be collected and paid . . . in respect of all property, profits, and gains, the amounts therein prescribed chargeable under Schedules A, B, C, D, or E." Section 24, so far as it is material, is as follows: "Upon payment of any interest of money charged with income tax under Schedule D"—i.e., upon payment of the annual dividends of £1,000,000 per annum accruing due upon the Consolidated Stock to the stockholders—"the person"—i.e., the London County Council—"by whom such interest shall be paid, shall deduct thereout the rate of income tax in force at the time of such payment"—i.e., income tax payable under Schedule D—"and shall forthwith render an account thereof to the Crown, and for the amount so deducted the person rendering the account shall be a debtor to the Crown." What is the meaning of this? It seems to me plain that where a person pays interest or a dividend which is liable to income tax under Schedule D, that income tax—i.e., the income tax under Schedule D—is to be deducted by the person paying that interest or dividend, coupled with the obligation of rendering an account to the Crown of the amount so deducted, and for which amount the person deducting that tax becomes a debtor to the Crown. If there were no exception in this action, which there is, the London County Council in my judgment would have to render an account to the Crown of the million eightpences which it had deducted before it paid the million of dividend to its stockholders, which deduction would be the income tax payable under Schedule D and has nothing whatever to do with income tax under Schedule A. But there is an exception, and what is it? It is that the person to account to the Crown is not to deduct the income tax payable under Schedule D, and therefore is excused from rendering an account as to this to the Crown, if the dividend paid to the stockholders is paid out of "profits and gains" already "charged to such tax." What tax? Why, charged to the income tax under Schedule D. This is my reading of this section 24, and in my opinion this section, as I have said, has nothing whatever to do with income tax payable under Schedule A of the Income Tax Acts, whereas the county council argues that it has. It is said by the London County Council that the meaning of section 24 is that the Crown in no case is to get income tax twice over, and that it would do so if income tax upon the £100,000 of rents is not deducted from the account rendered to the Crown; for, say the county council, the tenants, before they pay their rents to the council, have already deducted the income tax under Schedule A, and paid it to the Crown; and, unless the London County Council is allowed to deduct this income tax from the account to be rendered, the Crown will get income tax twice over. As regards income tax under Schedule A this apparently would be so, but where is it enacted in section 24 that it is not to be so? As regards income tax payable under Schedule D it is so enacted; but I am clear that this section does not embrace income tax payable under Schedule A. It is said that we should read section 24 in such a way as to make it apply to income tax under Schedule A; but this I cannot do, for the two taxes—i.e., the tax under Schedule A and the tax under Schedule D—are entirely distinct, excepting that they are both taxes upon income, as are the taxes under the Schedules B, C, and E. The tax under Schedule A is a tax upon the gross annual value of property. The tax under Schedule D is a tax upon "gains and profits," an entirely different tax from the tax under Schedule A. Whether the Legislature should have enacted otherwise is not for me to say. It suffices to say that it has not done so. The first point, therefore, taken by the London County Council—viz., that in the account it is to render to the Crown it may deduct the tax paid under Schedule A on the £100,000 of rents—in my opinion fails, and I pass on to the next question. I have already stated of what the Consolidated Loans Fund is composed. It is obvious that, though there is one component part upon which income tax under Schedule D has been deducted before it was received into the fund, to wit, the tax under Schedule D upon the £500,000 of interest received by the council upon loans made by it, on the others no such deductions have been made; for instance, upon the rents, the profits made by buying and selling property, and upon the rates levied by the council. If the London County Council is to escape rendering an account to the Crown of the million of eightpences which it has deducted from the stockholders, it is for it to prove that the million of money paid to the stockholders has been paid out of money which has already paid income tax under Schedule D. Do they prove this? In my opinion they do not; for it is impossible to say out of what moneys which constitute the Consolidated Loans Fund of £2,600,000 they do pay these dividends of £1,000,000 of money annually to their stockholders, whether partly out of the million of rents which have paid no income tax under Schedule D or partly out of profits made by borrowing and lending money, or partly out of profits made by purchasing and selling property, or partly out of the rates, none of which have paid income tax under Schedule D. If it is to be presumed that no part of the money received from rates and paid into the loans fund, together with the other receipts, was used to pay the one million of dividends, as Williams, L.J., thinks should be presumed, though it is a mere presumption and in my opinion not proved, what then? The only effect will be that the loans fund, applicable to the payment of the dividends, will stand, not at £2,600,000, but at that sum less the amount received from rates, which will alter somewhat the rateable proportion mentioned in paragraph 11 of the information. But this is not the real point in the case, for what was really contended for by the learned counsel for the London County Council was that the interest of £500,000 paid to the London County Council was not the only sum in the loans fund which had already paid income tax under Schedule D, but that the £100,000 of rent had also paid this tax, so that it came within section 24 of the Act of 1888. This I have held not to be so. In my opinion upon the facts proved paragraph 11 of the information has been established by the Crown. As the £500,000 of interest received by the council will not pay the million of dividends to the stockholders, it is obvious to me that the dividends, in part at any rate, have been paid out of moneys which had not theretofore paid income tax under Schedule D. I have not to decide whether, if the Crown pushed this case to its extreme limit, the London County Council would have to render an account of the whole of the million eightpences it has deducted from its stockholders; for the Crown does not insist upon this, and asks only for an account less such a rateable proportion as the £500,000 of interest received bears to the whole fund. In my judgment the London County Council cannot ask for more, and it is wrong as to this as also upon the construction of section 24 (3) of the Act of 1888. I think, therefore, that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

COLLINS, L.J., concurred.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., read the following judgment: I agree with the view taken by the other members of the court as to the construction of this very difficult section 24 (3) of 51 & 52 Vict. c. 8, and I think that "such tax" means income tax under Schedule D, and not income tax generally, and that that portion of the income tax which is a charge on rents under Schedule A is not included in the words "paid out of profits or gains," but is rather in the nature of a property tax, but the meaning of the section is by no means clear.

As to the question, what portion of the deduction made by the county council for income tax from dividends paid by the council on stock issued by them in respect of moneys borrowed by them the county council are entitled to retain without accounting to the Crown, by reason of such dividends being paid out of profits or gains brought into charge under Schedule D, my view is that the fact that the principal and interest on the stock is secured by a charge on the entire Consolidated Loans Fund does not prevent the county council in the application of that fund paying the dividends out of any specific portion of the fund out of which it lawfully may be paid. Assume that the fund is derived from four sources—say, (a) interest on moneys lent by the county council, (b) rents payable to the county council, (c) prices of lands sold by the county council, (d) moneys coming from the county rate—why should the fact that the principal and interest on the stock issued by the council is charged on a fund made up as above prevent the council in the application of the fund paying the dividends out of constituent item (a), in so far as that item is sufficient for the purpose?

It is said that the stockholders to enforce their charge could get a receiver appointed for the whole fund. I do not see that this makes any difference, provided the fund yielded sufficient to pay all the charges in due course. It seems to me, therefore, that it is open to us to consider whether there is any proof that the dividends were in fact paid out of rents or profits already brought into charge—that is to say, in the example taken, out of constituent item (a). Now in my judgment if there is any law, regulations, or fact which makes it the duty of the county council in the application of the fund to pay the dividends out of a specific constituent item going to make up that fund, the county council are bound so to apply the fund, unless so to do would be inconsistent with the paramount charge of the stockholders, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary all payments made by the council would be presumed to have been made in accordance with the duty arising on the law, regulation, or fact, as the case may be. This in my judgment would be sufficient proof of payment out of the particular constituent item.

Now, let us see whether we find any law, regulation, or fact governing the application of the Consolidated Loans Fund and making it the duty of the council to pay dividends out of constituent item (a) as far as it will go. In the first place we find that the borrowing of money by the county council is controlled and governed by the Metropolitan Board of Works Loans Act, 1869, and that by section 5 of that Act stock created for the purposes of the Act shall be charged indifferently on the whole of the lands, rents, and property belonging to the board, and that all moneys required for the payment of dividends on such stock and for the redemption of such stock—that is to say, the deficiency after taking into account the lands, rents, property, moneys and fund—shall be raised out of the Improvement Fund and Consolidated Rate. The Act goes on to say how the rate shall be raised, and says that every precept shall specify, first, the proportion of the amount named in the precept required for the purpose of paying (inter alia) the dividends on and the sums required for the redemption of Consolidated Stock under this Act. An instance of how this is done in practice appears at the end of Lord Welby's letter asking for the sanction of the Treasury for the amounts proposed to be raised by rate in 1897. I am clearly of opinion that we here find a duty binding on the county council not to apply in the payment of dividends that amount which is named in the precept as being required for redemption or the amounts therein mentioned as being required for specified capital payments.

Then we come to section 15 of the Act of 1889, which says that the Consolidated Loans Fund shall be first applied in the payment of dividends and in the redemption of stock, and then in the payment of certain specified debts charged on the fund.

There is nothing in this to make either the dividends or any of the specified payments payable out of one constituent item more than another; but the regulations in force in 1897—under section 15 of the Act of 1889—"with respect to the application" of the Consolidated Loans Fund provide that the account to be kept by the council of the Consolidated Loans Fund shall be divided into two parts, an income account and a capital account. [His lordship read the regulations.] It is plain from these regulations that the dividends must be paid out of the receipts of the income account—that is to say, out of interest received by the council on loans and rents and other annual income. Besides the dividends there is payable out of these receipts interest and rents and other payments properly chargeable to income; but these are a very small matter. Redemption and other capital payments are to be paid out of the capital account—that is to say, moneys received by the council (except income) applicable to the payment or redemption of debt, including moneys received by realization of temporary investments of capital.

Now, applying these rules of payment, it seems to me that, although paragraph 11 is generally right in principle, it is wrong in so far as it treats the whole Consolidated Loans Fund as the factor to which the amount of the interest payable by the local authorities must bear a rateable proportion. The sum to which the interest payable by the local authorities must bear a rateable proportion is so much of the Consolidated Fund as is properly carried to the receipts of the income account. This may or may not be an important matter when the figures are examined; but it is important as showing that the Attorney-General was right in law in abandoning paragraph 9 of the information, which charged that none of the said dividends are by law payable out of profits or gains brought into charge to the income tax under Schedule D. The suggestion made in argument that the Crown in abandoning paragraph 9 abandoned the strict rights of the Crown seems to me, I am happy to say, quite unnecessary and untenable; for I do not think that anyone would have had the right to make such a concession in favour of the county council or any other subject.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellants, Blaxland.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor of Inland Revenue

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
North, J. } Nov. 2, 3.

CONSOLIDATED EXPLORATION AND FINANCE CO. v. MUSGRAVE. (a.)

Contract — Indemnifying a bail — Illegality — Shares transferred to bail—Innocent transferror.

It is just as much contrary to public policy for a third party to indemnify a bail as it is for the prisoner himself to do so.

Wilson v. Strugnell, 7 Q. B. D. 548, 30 W. R. Dig. 50, and Herman v. Jeuchner, 33 W. R. 606, 15 Q. B. D. 561, considered.

Action.

The defendant had gone bail for one Jordan, who was charged with fraud in connection with the promotion of a company of T. E. Brinsmead & Sons. In the first instance the defendant had also undertaken to go bail for one Ainsworth, who was charged in connection with the same matter, and in consideration of doing so and in order to be indemnified against any claim which might arise the defendant had agreed with Ainsworth that there should be transferred into the defendant's name 1,500 shares in the London Woollen Co., the defendant undertaking to re-transfer the shares if no claim was made on him. These shares were the property of the plaintiff company, and they had been transferred into the defendant's name under an arrangement come to between Ainsworth and the plaintiff company, by which the plaintiff company should be indemnified against loss in connection with the proceedings pending with reference to the promotion of T. E. Brinsmead & Sons. The consideration for the transfer of the shares to the defendant was stated to be five shillings. Subsequently the defendant became bail for Jordan alone, but otherwise the arrangement held good. Jordan absconded, and the bail was estreated, the defendant being called upon to pay £1,500.

The plaintiff company claimed in this action that the defendant was trustee for the company of the 1,500 shares, and that the shares should be transferred to the company, on the ground that to indemnify a bail was illegal and contrary to public policy.

Haldane, Q.C., and Kenyon Parker, for the plaintiff company.—The object of becoming bail is defeated if the bail receives an indemnity, as he is then no longer interested in the production of the prisoner at the proper time. It is indifferent to the bail whether the prisoner appears or not, for if he does not appear the bail suffers no detriment and the bail has no inducement to see that the prisoner does not abscond. The cases show that a prisoner himself cannot indemnify his bail (Wilson v. Strugnell, 7 Q. B. D. 548, 30 W. R. Dig. 50; Herman v. Jeuchner, 33 W. R. 606, 15 Q. B. D. 561), and the rule is based on considerations of public policy, and it makes no difference therefore if a third party indemnifies the bail.

Macnaghten, Q.C., and Cassell.—The case of a third party indemnifying is different to that of a prisoner himself giving security to the bail; in the former case the person giving security is just as much interested as the bail in seeing that the prisoner surrenders in due course, and therefore considerations of public policy do not arise in that case as they do where the prisoner hands the security to the bail, and nobody is interested any more to see that the prisoner surrenders: Jones v. Orchard, 3 W. R. 554, 16 C. B. 614. Moreover, in Cripps v. Hartnoll, 11 W. R. 953, 4 B. & S. 414, the precise point that an indemnity by a third party is illegal might have been taken, but it was not. The text-books limit the rule carefully to the case of the prisoner indemnifying the bail: see Pollock on Contracts, p. 316 of 6th ed.; Leake on Contracts, p. 626 of 3rd ed.

Stewart Smith, for London Woollen Co.

Kenyon Parker in reply.

NORTH, J., after stating the facts, said: In my opinion this was an illegal bargain. It is said that the cases of Wilson v. Strugnell and Herman v. Jeuchner establish that the rule is that the prisoner alone is debarred from giving the bail security, but I think that the rule is wider than that. It is true that there is no authority to be found as to the case of a third person giving security, and that the text-books cited deal with the case of a prisoner giving the security, but they merely state the effect of the two cases of Wilson v. Strugnell and Herman v. Jeuchner. As was said by the Master of the Rolls in the later case, "When the object of either the promise or the consideration is to promote the committal of an illegal act, the contract itself is illegal and cannot be enforced."

Now, what are the duties of a bail? In Peterdorff on Bail, quoted in Cripps v. Hartnoll, it is stated that "It is essential to the security of the bail that the principal should be compelled to appear at the time and place specified in the recognizance. To enable the bail to effectuate this purpose, they are invested with the same unrestricted authority over the person of the defendant as we have seen is conferred upon them in civil cases. Indeed, in criminal proceedings the power possessed by the bail in obliging the accused to fulfil the terms of the recognizance should be even more unlimited, as by not rendering him they not only forfeit to the public the penalties imposed by law, but perhaps create, in crimes of a flagrant nature, an impossibility of the ends of justice being accomplished. Hence they may seize his person at any time (as on a Sunday) or at any place to carry him to a justice to find new sureties, or be committed in their discharge, and in surrendering the principal they may command the co-operation of the sheriff and any of his officers." Therefore it is seen that the person going bail has to exercise zeal so that he may prevent the accused from disappearing in the interval. Anything which interferes with that duty is illegal. Why should it make any difference that the indemnity is given by a third party and not by the prisoner? I can see none. In either case the public lose the security of the zeal which the bail is supposed to exercise. But then it is said that the third party is as a matter of fact as much interested in the prisoner surrendering as the bail, but the third party cannot do any of the things which the bail is entitled to do to prevent the evasion of the prisoner. That makes the giving of security by a third party to a bail illegal and contrary to public policy.

(a.) Reported by R. SILLEM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The learned judge made an order for re-transfer, holding on the facts that the plaintiff company were not participators in the illegality.

Solicitors, Ralph Raphael; Ashurst Morris, Crisp, & Co.; Nash, Field, & Co.

---

Chan. Div. }
Stirling, J. } Feb. 7, 13.

In re THOMAS.
EVANS v. GRIFFITHS. (a.)

Solicitor—Costs—Taxation—Sale by auction in lots—One title—Different purchasers—"Transaction"—Scale charge—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44)—Construction of General Order, rr. 1, 7, 8.

Where real estate is ordered to be sold and is sold by auction in separate lots to different purchasers for prices under £100, with one title common to all the lots, the solicitor engaged to carry out the sale is, under rule 8 of Schedule I. (Part I.) of the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, entitled to the remuneration of a minimum fee of £3 for deducing title and perusing and completing the conveyance in respect of each sale of a lot, each such sale being a "transaction" within the meaning of the rule.

This was a summons to vary the certificate of the taxing-master.

By an order made in the action on the 12th of November, 1898, liberty was given to the plaintiffs, who were trustees of the testator's will, to sell out of court the residuary real estate of the testator in the cause. Accordingly the plaintiffs put up the real estate for sale by auction on the 24th of January, 1899, in eleven lots. Lots 1 to 6 were sold to a purchaser, P. W., for £1,685 15s., the remaining lots were sold as follows: Lot 7 to T. W. for £28, lot 8 to J. L. (1) for £27, lot 9 to W. G. for £32, lots 10 and 11 to J. L. (2) for £24. The property was freehold, and was held under one title. A separate abstract was delivered to each of the five purchasers. The solicitor of the plaintiffs delivered his bill for deducing title to this property and perusing and completing the conveyances on the basis that the scale of charges established by Schedule I., Part I., to the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act and the rules annexed thereto were applicable. Rule 8 runs as follows: "Where the prescribed remuneration would, but for this provision, amount to less than £5, the prescribed remuneration shall be £5, except on transactions under £100, in which cases the remuneration of the solicitor for the vendor, purchaser, mortgagor, or mortgagee is to be £3." In this case the bill delivered by the solicitor claimed under rule 8 a minimum fee of £3 in respect of each of the said last four sales. The master, holding that as the property was all held under one title, the solicitor was not entitled to do more than treat the whole matter as one transaction, first allowed only 30s. in respect of these four sales, and afterwards reduced the allowance to 15s.

H. W. Loehnis, for the plaintiffs.—Rule 8 is intended to regard the sale of each lot as a separate "transaction," each such transaction being the passing of an estate over to a purchaser: see dicta of Pollock, B., and Hawkins, J., in In re Onward Building Society, 41 W. R. 107, [1893] 1 Q. B. 16. Cholditch v. Jones, 44 W. R. 124, [1896] 1 Ch. 42; In re Margetts, 44 W. R. 462, [1896] 2 Ch. 263; In re Lacey & Son, 32 W. R. 233, 25 Ch. D. 301, also referred to.

W. L. Richards, for a beneficiary under the will.—The solicitor was engaged to do only one "transaction"—viz., a sale by auction ordered by the court within the meaning of the word "transaction," as used in rules 8 and 12 of the Solicitors' Remuneration Act. Where there is only one title, though the words of the rules are wide, a limited construction should be given to them. Regard should be had to the work done by the solicitor: Welby v. Still, [1895] 1 Ch. 524, 43 W. R. Dig. 176.

Cur. adv. vult.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, continued: By his bill the solicitor claimed under the 8th of the rules annexed to the schedule a minimum fee of £3 in respect of each of the sales to the four last-named purchasers. The taxing-master held that rule 8 did not apply, and allowed by his certificate 30s. in respect of these four sales; he afterwards amended his certificate and allowed only 15s. Now, rule 1 [which his lordship read] applies to all sales by auction in lots, whether the property is held under one title or not, except only where in the former case the same purchaser buys several lots and takes one conveyance and only one abstract is delivered. The exception applies to the sale of lots 10 and 11 to J. L. (2), but no further. Consequently the commission is chargeable on each lot sold to a different purchaser, and the master has so held. He has applied rule 7 [which his lordship here read] in allowing 15s. in respect of each of the four sales, but he refused to apply rule 8, which is that relied on by the solicitor, on the ground that the "transaction" to which the rule refers was in this case the sale of the whole property referred to in the order of 1898. It was contended on behalf of the solicitor that each of the five sales was a separate transaction within the meaning of rule 8. The question which I have to decide is one of construction of the rules, and little guidance is to be gained from the consideration that in a particular case or class of cases the remuneration provided may seem to be excessive: Chitty, J., in In re Field, 33 W. R. 553, 29 Ch. D. 608 (at p. 612), makes observations which apply with some force to rule 1 of the General Order. This rule applies to all sales by auction in lots, whether all the lots are held under the same title or whether each lot is held under a separate title. The labour of deducing title in the former case may often, perhaps most often, be less than in the latter; still, cases might occur where the remuneration at the minimum rate in respect of a large number of lots at a price under £50 would be inadequate. The scale of remuneration presumably has been fixed so as roughly to strike a just average in the different cases which may occur. Rule 8 speaks of "transactions under £100." "Transaction" there means the transaction of some piece of business. Whose business is it? The "£100" spoken of is obviously not a sum with which the solicitor is concerned, but one which concerns the person who employs him; the business, therefore, is the business of the client. Further, it must be a piece of business to which the rule is applicable, and the title of this schedule shows that the rule is applicable to sales, purchases, or mortgages. For the present purpose, therefore, the rule may be read as if the word "sales" were substituted for the equally compendious term "transaction." This is confirmed by a note annexed to the schedule and by the words of the rule itself, which speaks of "prescribed remuneration." What is the prescribed remuneration in the present case? It is that spoken of in rule 1 as commission for deducing title, &c., on a sale by auction, and is thereby made chargeable on each lot of the property sold. If rule 1 be read in connection with rule 8, modified in the way I have just mentioned, the natural meaning of the sales referred to in it is sales of the separate lots. The object of rule 8 appears to be to prevent injustice being done to a solicitor in cases where the sum in respect of which his remuneration is payable is small; and that is a matter just as necessary to be provided for in cases where rule 1 applies as where it does not. If, as the framer of the rules must have considered, it was right that solicitors should be remunerated for deducing title and perusing and completing conveyance on a sale by auction in lots by giving them commission chargeable on each lot separately, it seems reasonable that they should be protected against insufficient remuneration in cases where the price for each lot might be small. I therefore come to the conclusion that on the construction of the rule the contention of the solicitor is well founded. No one of the cases cited to me seems directly in point, but they seem to support the view which I have taken. The summons must be allowed.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Greig, Meikle, & Briggs, for Evans & Thomas, Llandyssul; Fielder & Fielder, for W. Hughes Jones, Aberystwyth.

---

Chan. Div.
Byrne, J. } Jan. 23.

In re GOSLING.
GOSLING v. SMITH. (a.)

Charity—Will—Gift limited to old and worn-out clerks of firm—Amalgamation of firms.

A gift to form a fund for the purpose of pensioning off the "old and worn-out clerks" of a firm is a good charitable bequest, and the court will direct a scheme for its administration.

Summons.

This was a summons to determine whether a gift in the second codicil to the will of Bennett Gosling, deceased, of certain Consolidated 3 per Cent. Annuities standing in the names of the testator and his brother, R. Gosling, in order to form a fund to be called the "superannuation fund" for the purpose of pensioning off the old and worn-out clerks of the firm of Goslings & Sharpe, was a good charitable gift; and secondly, whether if such gift were a good charitable gift, a scheme ought to be settled for the administration of the fund, or whether such fund ought to be applied cy-près for charitable purposes.

The facts of the case were as follow:

By a second codicil dated the 18th of October, 1849, to his will, which will was executed the 8th of March, 1844, Bennett Gosling, of the City of London, gave and bequeathed the sum of £1,890 6s. 4d. in Consolidated 3 per Cent. Annuities, standing at that time in his own and in his brother Robert Gosling's joint names, and representing the produce of various sums of money invested by himself at different times in the joint names of his said brother and himself; and testator directed that his executors should cause the same to be invested in trustees' names to be fixed upon by the partners in the firm of Goslings & Sharpe at the time of his death, and that the same should be invested in such trustees' names in some of the Parliamentary stocks or funds of Great Britain, in order to form a fund to be called the "superannuation fund" for the purpose of pensioning off the old and worn-out clerks of the firm of Goslings & Sharpe, and the testator trusted that the partners of the said firm would, in consideration of such bequest, set apart a further sum in order that a beginning might be made for forming such a fund. The testator died on the 12th of May, 1855, and the said will was duly proved on the 23rd of June, 1855. At the date of the hearing of the summons the fund had been increased by additional gifts and accumulations of dividends to £5,567 India 3 per Cent. Stock and a sum of cash. In March, 1896, the firm of Goslings & Sharpe was amalgamated with the firm of Barclay & Co. There was at the time surviving one clerk who had been a servant of the firm in the lifetime of Bennett Gosling. In consequence of the amalgamation, difficulties had arisen as to the proper distribution of the fund, which led to the present proceedings.

Walters, for the trustees.

Howard Wright, for the residuary legatee.—This is not a good charitable gift. There is no public element in the gift; and there is nothing in it which necessarily involves the relief of suffering: In re Clark's Trusts, 24 W. R. 233, 1 Ch. D. 497; Carne v. Long, 8 W. R. 570, 2 De G. F. & J. 275; In re Buck, 45 W. R. 106, [1896] 2 Ch. 727; Cunnack v. Edwards, 45 W. R. 99, [1896] 2 Ch. 679; Commissioners for Special Purposes of Income Tax v. Pemsel, [1891] 1 A. C. 531, 40 W. R. Dig. 217.

Rowden, Q.C., and MacSwinney, for the clerks in the firm at the date of amalgamation.—The gift is not charitable, as it is in no way of a public character, nor for the benefit of the public: In re Foveaux, 43 W. R. 661, [1895] 2 Ch. 501; Attorney-General v. Haberdashers Co., 1 My. & K. 420.

Methold and Hall Hall, for the partners in the firm interested at the date of death and other parties.

Mulligan, Q.C., and Frank Russell, for the clerk in the firm at the date of the testator's death.—At the date of the testator's death there were certain partners in the firm, and the partnership lasted for their lives and for the lives of the survivor. There could be no perpetuity here. The object was a gift to the clerks of this partnership: Cunnack v. Edwards.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Ingle Joyce, for the Attorney-General.—It is not necessary to constitute a charity that it should be a gift for the public at large. This is either a charity, or it is a gift bad for perpetuity or as too vaguely expressed. [He referred to the preamble to the statute 43 Eliz. c. 4; Morice v. Bishop of Durham, 9 Ves. 399, 10 ib. 522.] As to the class of persons for whom gift was intended, the expression pensioning off shows that it can have no reference to rich clerks. The persons dispensing the gift must have regard to the circumstances of the recipient: In re Wall, Pomeroy v. Willway, 37 W. R. 779, 42 Ch. D. 510. It is a class of the public whom it is intended to relieve. If this fund was administered as a charity preference would be given to any deserving old clerk: Attorney-General v. Duke of Northumberland, 28 W. R. 586; 7 Ch. D. 745; In re Slevin, 39 W. R. 538, [1891] 2 Ch. 236.

Rowden, Q.C., in reply.—To establish a charity it must be shown that there is poverty and there must be a geographical area which it affects: Browne v. King, 17 L. R. Ir. 448. [Mulligan, Q.C., referred to In re Tunno, (1886) W. N., 154.]

Ingle Joyce, in reply on new cases.—There is no need for a geographical area in a charity.

He referred to Farrer v. St. Catherine's College, 21 W. R. 643, L. R. 16 Eq. 19; Spiller v. Maude, 32 Ch. D. 158*n*.

BYRNE, J. — Amongst other objects enumerated in the preamble to the statute of Elizabeth, are the "aged" and "impotent." Poor persons are especially mentioned there, and also the supportation, aid, and help of young tradesmen and handicraftsmen and persons decayed. There is some authority for saying that a gift to the aged of a parish generally without expressing that they are also the poor is not good: see Attorney-General v. Haberdashers Co. But in Attorney-General v. Comber, 2 Sim. & St. 93, it was held that a gift to widows and orphans of a parish was a good charitable gift. In Thompson v. Corbey, 8 W. R. 267; 27 Beav. 649, Lord Romilly followed the case of Attorney-General v. Comber, and also expressed a clear opinion that in the case of the gift of the interest of £600 to be divided between twenty aged widows and spinsters of the parish of Peterborough, the word aged would have been sufficient to create a good charitable bequest. [His lordship referred to Powell v. The Attorney-General, 3 Mer. 48, and the judgment of Kay, J., in In re Wall, and continued:] The aged are, as I have said, expressly mentioned in the statute, as also are the impotent. I think "worn out" and "aged" clerks come also within the description "impotent." I think, moreover, having regard to the phrase "pensioning off" and to the frame of the gift, that poor clerks of the firm and those unable to properly provide for themselves and their families are intended to be benefited. It was said in argument that the gift being in favour of clerks in a firm of which the testator was a member points rather to motives of benevolence than to motives of charity. I do not think that this view can be maintained and I may point out that even if the benefits were to be confined to clerks in the subsisting partnership immediately before the testator's death, that partnership would not by the terms of it come to an end until the death of another of the two partners with the testator.

I think it is clear that the benefits of the gift were intended to extend to persons who might not become clerks until after the death of the testator, and who might be absolutely unknown to him.

One other point was taken and strongly argued. It was said that inasmuch as there is no local area, such as a parish or a county referred to, as limiting the section of the public to be benefited, there is no public purpose such as is required to constitute a charity. No authority bearing out this proposition was cited; but a passage in the judgment of the late Chitty, L.J., in In re Foveaux was relied upon: see [1895] 2 Ch., at p. 504. But the Lord Justice does not say that the benefit of the public purpose, if limited, must be limited in point of local area. It says it may be so limited. The case of Browne v. King does not justify the case proposition sought to be established by it, and I think that there are many cases, including Attorney-General v. The Duke of Northumberland which are utterly inconsistent with it.

The fact that the section of the public is limited to persons born or residing in a particular parish, district, or county, or belonging to or connected with any special sect, denomination, guild, institution, firm, name, or family, does not of itself render that which would be otherwise charitable void for lack of a sufficient or satisfactory description or take it out of the category of charitable gifts. I therefore hold it to be a good charitable gift.

After some further discussion his lordship directed a scheme. The trustees were directed to bring in a scheme, and leave was given to the clerks to apply.

Solicitors, Walters, Deverell, & Co.; Freshfields; Hare & Co.

---

Chan. Div. Byrne, J. } Nov. 29.

In re RAYBOULD.
RAYBOULD v. TURNER. (a.)

Administration—Trustee carrying on testator's business—Tort by trustee—Damages—Indemnity—Claim to indemnity out of estate by person recovering damages against the trustee.

Where a trustee is entitled to indemnity from his testator's estate in respect of damages for a tort committed by him in carrying on testator's business, the person entitled to such damages from the trustee may prove for them against the testator's estate direct.

Summons.

This was a summons in an action for the administration of the estate of John Raybould, deceased, for the raising and payment to the applicants, out of the said estate and in priority to the creditors thereof, the sum of £1,092 in respect of damage suffered by the applicants by the working of minerals by a trustee of testator's will under a colliery belonging to testator's estate and ordered to be paid to them by a judgment of the Queen's Bench Division dated the 21st of December, 1898.

The facts of the case were as follow:

On the 8th of October, 1888, Roberts & Cooper purchased from Cornelius Chambers, John Fellows, and Thomas Billing, executors and trustees of the will of John Raybould, deceased, certain freehold ironworks and premises known as the Bromley Works, situate at Bromley Pensnett, in the county of Stafford, together with the machinery and plant then upon the premises, and as the same had previously been occupied and worked by Raybould, and together also with all the mines under the premises. Raybould's trustees, on the sale, retained a colliery known as Pechell's Colliery, which joins Roberts & Cooper's said Bromley ironworks. At this time the Pechell's Colliery had not been worked for some years.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In 1892 Cornelius Chambers, who at that time was the sole surviving trustee of Raybould's will, recommenced to work Pechell's Colliery.

Owing to his works a considerable disturbance was caused which caused considerable structural and other damage at the applicants' ironworks.

The applicants accordingly brought an action for damages in the Queen's Bench Division against him, and judgment was given for them for such an amount as should be found due by a special referee, together with the costs of the action. The referee assessed the damages at £1,092.

Chambers obtained leave from Byrne, J., to defend this action on the ground that what he had done in working the colliery in question was for the good of the estate. Evidence was filed to show that the damages for the tort were not properly payable out of the testator's estate.

Romer, for the applicants.—The applicants are entitled to stand in the shoes of the trustee, and to be indemnified out of the trust estate. In Benett v. Wyndham, 4 De G. F. & J. 259, it was held that a trustee was entitled to an indemnity from the trust estate for damage recovered against him in an action for tort. In Dowse v. Gorton, 40 W. R. 17. [1891] A. C. 190, it was held that where executors had carried on a testator's business in accordance with the provisions of his will they were entitled to be indemnified out of testator's assets, including the assets which had come into existence subsequently to the testator's death. The principle of this case should be applied here for the benefit of the applicants as creditors of the testator's estate.

Stewart Smith, for the trustee.

Rowden, Q.C., and Martelli, for the testator's estate.—The doctrine of subrogation has no application to tortious acts. [They referred to In re Johnson, Shearman v. Robinson, 29 W. R. 168, 15 Ch. D. 548; Worrall v. Harford, 8 Ves. 4.] If the trustee is not entitled to an indemnity, his creditor cannot have a better position.

BYRNE, J.—The first question here is whether there is authority for saying that where damage is the result of the tort of an executor or trustee he has the right to go against the estate of his testator for an indemnity. Now Benett v. Wyndham shows that if a trustee in the ordinary diligent management of his testator's estate commits a tort, if he has acted with care and diligence, he is entitled to be indemnified. I cannot see why a person who obtains judgment against the trustee in respect thereof cannot in such a case seek the indemnity direct out of the estate of the testator. Here all parties interested are present, and assuming this to be a case in which the trustee could himself recover an indemnity there is no reason why the applicant should not recover here. As to this point I am not satisfied that the injury was occasioned by tort otherwise than in a proper manner of working.

I therefore hold that the trustee is entitled to be indemnified out of the estate of the testator against the damages and costs ordered to be paid by him to the applicants, and that the applicants are entitled to stand in his place for the purpose of obtaining such indemnity.

Solicitors, Robbins, Billing, & Co., for W. Waldron, Brierly Hill; Walker & Row; R. H. Bentley, for S. Ward, Dudley.

---

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } June 26;
Divorce. } July 3, 14, 1899.

DICK v. DICK. (a.)

Divorce—Previous suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Decree in restitution suit—Husband temporarily resident out of the jurisdiction—Service of decree—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 68).

Where the respondent in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights was domiciled in this country, but temporarily resident in Ireland, was served in Ireland, and the court considered he was in a position to be able to comply with it, the court held that the service was good.

Hearing of the wife's petition for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of the husband's adultery and failure to comply with a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. The husband was domiciled here, and lived and had cohabited here with his wife, in London, except occasional visits to Ireland. He had no occupation. The wife commenced a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, and service of the citation and petition was made in London. On the 6th of March, 1899, a decree in that suit was made ordering the husband to return to his wife and render her conjugal rights within fourteen days of service. A sealed copy of this order was served upon the husband in Dublin. He did not comply with it, and the wife then commenced the present suit; and the citation and petition in the present suit, with a copy of the order in the restitution suit, were served upon the husband in England. The husband entered no appearance, and the suit was undefended. The above facts and the adultery were proved.

June 26 and July 3.—Pritchard, for the petition, referred to the service in Ireland of the decree in the restitution suit, and referred to the following cases: Pearson v. Pearson, 33 L. J. P. & M. 156; Yelverton v. Yelverton, 8 W. R. 134, 1 Sw. & Tr. 574; Firebrace v. Firebrace, 26 W. R. 617, 4 P. D. 63; Chichester v. Chichester, 34 W. R. 65, 10 P. D. 186; Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier, [1895] A. C. 517, and on the point of desertion he cited the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, ss. 5, 6.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 14.—BARNES, J.—This was a suit by the wife for dissolution of the marriage on the ground of the husband's adultery and on the ground of desertion on his part in neglecting to comply with an order in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The adultery was proved, and also the proceedings in the suit for conjugal rights, and also the service of the order made in that suit on the 6th of March, 1899, requiring restitution of conjugal rights. But the petitioner's counsel very properly called my attention to the fact that the order for restitution of conjugal rights within fourteen days from service of the order was served on the husband at the Gresham Hotel, Dublin, Ireland. He also referred me to cases on the point whether service out of the jurisdiction of such decree was good service or not. The dates—the restitution suit was commenced on the 12th of November, 1898, and the citation and petition were served on the 15th of November at Bedford-row, London. The decree was made the 6th of March, 1899. The citation and the petition in the present suit were filed on the 21st of April, 1899, more than fourteen days after service of a sealed copy of the order in the restitution suit, which was on the 14th of March. The citation and petition in the present action were served on the husband the 21st of

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

April, 1899, at Chester, and a further copy of the order for restitution of conjugal rights was also served then. These dates showed that there might be a point as to whether the service of the order in Dublin was good service. The cases cited, with one exception, deal with the question whether a person not domiciled within the jurisdiction had been rightly served out of it in such a suit, and do not appear to me to have any bearing on this case, because in this case there is no doubt that the husband was domiciled here, and he appears to have been only temporarily resident in Ireland when he was served. The case which I referred to as an exception is Pearson v. Pearson, where it was directed that a decree for restitution of conjugal rights should be served upon the husband, who was then in Shanghai, on his return to England. But that case does not really affect the question in the present case. The Matrimonial Causes Act, 1884, which completely altered the law as to the restitution of conjugal rights, renders it unnecessary to consider the position parties were in prior to that Act, nor is it necessary to consider what would be the position of parties if service were made on the husband when he was not in a position to be able to comply with the order. It was as easy to comply with this order from Dublin as from Chester. The result of the cases, and having regard to the Act of 1884 and the husband being domiciled in this country, is, in my opinion, that the service in Ireland of the order is a good service. I am of opinion, therefore, that the wife is entitled to a decree nisi in this suit for dissolution of the marriage, with costs against the co-respondent, and an order for custody of the children.

Decree nisi.

Solicitors, Winter, Bothamley, & Co.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) Dec. 15.

GARNETT (Appellant) v. COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE (Respondents). (a.)

Inland revenue—Stamp duty—Partnership dissolution—Record of transfer of property—"Conveyance on sale"—"Release or renunciation"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule I.

J. F. and his brother, J. W., carried on business in partnership. J. F., in pursuance of the power for that purpose contained in the articles of partnership, gave J. W. notice to determine it, and J. W. gave J. F. notice of taking over his share in the partnership upon the terms prescribed by the articles. Two instruments were executed to give effect to the dissolution of the partnership—the first a conveyance, whereby the share and interest of J. F. in the real estate of the partnership was released and transferred to J. W. This deed was duly stamped with an ad valorem duty. The other instrument, of even date—after reciting that accounts of the partnership had been made up, and that the amount standing to the credit of J. F. was £41,752 4s. 7d., and that, by the above-mentioned deed of even date, the real estate had been conveyed to J. W., and that the chattel property of the partnership was then in the exclusive possession of J. W., and that the said J. W. had given his promissory note bearing even date therewith for the above said sum—witnessed that J. F. and J. W. declared that the partnership between them should be considered as determined, and J. F. declared that he accepted the said promissory note in full satisfaction of all claims against J. W. in respect of his share and interest in the said partnership and the assets and properties thereof.

The commissioners claimed that this last-mentioned instrument was chargeable with an ad valorem conveyance duty.

Held, that the instrument was chargeable in accordance with the assessment of the commissioners.

Case stated by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue pursuant to the 13th section of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39).

1. On the 4th day of October, 1898, an instrument, of which a copy is annexed to and forms part of this case, was presented on behalf of John William Garnett (hereinafter referred to as the appellant) to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under the provisions of the 12th section of the Stamp Act, 1891, for the opinion of the commissioners as to the stamp duty with which the instrument was chargeable.

2. The instrument is dated the 13th day of September, 1898, and is made between Joshua Francis Garnett of the one part and the appellant of the other part. When presented to the commissioners it was unstamped.

3. The said Joshua Francis Garnett and the appellant (his brother) have for some years past carried on business in partnership as cloth manufacturers under the style of "Greenwood, Garnett, & Sons" at Valley Mills, Apperly Bridge, Yorkshire, and at Greenside Mills, near to the said Valley Mills, having also a warehouse in King-street, Leeds, and by articles of partnership dated the 28th of February, 1893, it was agreed (inter alia) as follows: Clause 2. That the partnership should be deemed to have commenced on the 1st of October, 1890, and should continue until the expiration of six calendar months after notice to determine the same should have been delivered in writing by or under the authority of one partner to the other of them or sent by post as therein mentioned.

4. The articles of partnership contained further provisions as follows:

(3) The net capital of the firm on the first day of October, 1890, shall be taken at the sum of £ (being a sum therein mentioned), in which the parties hereto are interested in the following sums—namely, the said Joshua Francis Garnett in the sum of £ (being a sum therein mentioned) and the said John William Garnett in the sum of £ (being a sum therein mentioned). The capital of each partner shall bear interest after the rate of 2½ per cent., and such interest shall be payable yearly before any division of profits—such capital shall not be withdrawn without the consent of both partners, nor except as hereinafter mentioned shall any further capital be brought into the firm by either party without the consent of the other. The said John William Garnett has also invested with the partnership the sum of £ (being a sum therein mentioned), and the same is therefore a debt due to him from the said firm, and shall bear interest after the rate of 5 per cent. payable yearly before any division of profits or payment of interest to the partners in respect of their capital as aforesaid. Such interest on the said sum of £ therein mentioned as shall from time to time remain withdrawn by the said John William Garnett shall be added to his capital and bear interest at 2½ per centum per annum.

(8) Stock shall be taken yearly up to the first day of October, and as soon as convenient thereafter in each year the partners shall meet at the partnership premises in Leeds for the purpose of balancing up the books and making a general statement of the assets and liabilities of the firm, and the clear profit or loss of each year as shown by such statement shall be taken or borne by the partners in the following proportions—namely (being certain proportions therein mentioned). Each partner shall be entitled to withdraw during the present or any future year 50 per cent. of the profits made in the first or any succeeding year, provided always that no profits shall be withdrawn until after the expiration of one year from the close of the partnership year during which they shall have been earned. Subject to such power of withdrawal, the share of each partner in the profit of any year beyond subsist shall not be withdrawn, but shall remain as capital in the firm until the termination of the partnership, and bear interest after the rate of 2½ per centum per annum, payable by yearly instalments.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(9) A book shall be provided wherein the capital account of the firm and of each partner shall be kept, and the same shall be made up yearly immediately after the preparation of the statement referred to in the last preceding clause, and the capital account so kept shall be signed by and be binding on the partners, except in the case of any manifest error discovered prior to the next occasion of making up such capital accounts.

(10) In case of any partner committing an act of bankruptcy, or suffering his share in the partnership estate and effects to be attached or taken in execution or allowing himself to be arrested for any private debt it shall be lawful for the other of them at any time within one calendar month after the same shall have come to his knowledge to give his co-partner notice in writing announcing a dissolution of the partnership, and such notice may be given either by delivering the same to the partner in default under this clause, or sending the same to or for him by post in manner specified in clause 2 hereof, and thereupon the partnership shall determine. And the partner giving such notice shall be at liberty to insert a notice of such dissolution in the London Gazette, and otherwise advertise the same, and to subscribe as attorney the name of the defaulting partner to any public notice of dissolution as well as his own.

(11) In case of the partnership being dissolved by reason of the death of either partner, or by notice pursuant to clause 10 hereof, the share of such deceased or outgoing partner shall be taken over by the other of them, and the value of such share shall be considered to be the amount standing to the credit of such deceased or outgoing partner in the partnership capital book, with interest thereon from the date of the last preceding balancing, and without any addition for goodwill or any deduction for subsist received up to his ceasing to be a partner, and the value of such share so ascertained shall be paid to the representatives of the deceased partner or to the outgoing partner by equal half-yearly instalments extending over seven years, and be secured by the promissory note of the partner taking over such share, and bear interest after the rate of 3½ per centum per annum, payable half-yearly as aforesaid.

(12) And in case the partnership shall determine by notice given by one partner to the other of them in pursuance of clause 2 hereof, the partner to whom notice shall be so given shall have the option of taking over the share of the partner giving such notice on terms similar in all respects to those prescribed in the last preceding clause, but such option shall not be exercisable unless notice be given to the partner seeking so to retire by the other partner of the intention of the latter to take over the same one calendar month at least before the expiration of the partnership.

5. On the 18th of February, 1898, the said Joshua Francis Garnett, in pursuance of the power for that purpose contained in clause 2 of the articles of partnership, gave to the appellant notice in writing to determine the partnership, and on the 11th of July, 1898, the appellant, pursuant to clause 12 of the said articles, gave notice to the said Joshua Francis Garnett to exercise the option thereby given of taking over his share in the partnership upon the terms prescribed by the said articles.

6. Two instruments were executed to give effect to the dissolution of the partnership—namely, the instrument in reference to which this case is stated, and an instrument of conveyance of even date whereby the share and interest of the said Joshua Francis Garnett in the real estate of the partnership was released and transferred to the appellant.

7. The latter conveyance which was executed before the instrument in reference to which this case is stated, contained recitals showing: (1) That the real estate of the partnership was legally vested in the appellant and the said Joshua Francis Garnett as joint tenants in fee; (2) that the appellant had come to a settlement with the said Joshua Francis Garnett in respect of his share and interest in the partnership business and the assets and effects thereof, and it had been agreed that he should pay to the said Joshua Francis Garnett the sum of £41,752 4s. 7d. in full satisfaction of such share and interest; and (3) that for the purposes of the Stamp Acts the sum of £8,708 6s. 8d., part of the said sum of £41,752 4s. 7d., had been apportioned as the estimated value of the share of the said Joshua Francis Garnett in the said real estate; and it was thereby witnessed that the undivided moiety and all other the part, share, and interest of the said Joshua Francis Garnett in the real estate of the partnership was granted and released by him to the appellant absolutely. The conveyance is stamped with ad valorem conveyance duty on the said sum of £8,708 6s. 8d. (which was the amount fairly attributable to the share of real estate) and with the adjudication stamp, and no question arises on this case in reference thereto.

8. The instrument in reference to which this case is stated contains recitals showing (inter alia): (1) That accounts of the partnership were made up to the 1st of October, 1897, and the amount standing to the credit of the said Joshua Francis Garnett on that day (being the last preceding balance) was £41,752 4s. 7d.; (2) that by an indenture of even date, being the conveyance mentioned in the foregoing paragraph, the real estate had been conveyed to the appellant; (3) that the chattel property of the partnership was then in the exclusive possession of the appellant; and (4) that the appellant had, in pursuance of the articles of partnership and of the agreement thereinbefore recited, given to the said Joshua Francis Garnett his promissory note bearing even date therewith for the said sum of £41,752 4s. 7d. and interest; and it was thereby witnessed that the said Joshua Francis Garnett and the appellant declared that the partnership between them should be considered as determined, and stand dissolved as from the 1st of October, 1897, and the said Joshua Francis Garnett thereby acknowledged and declared that the delivery of the said promissory note for £41,752 4s. 7d. and interest was accepted by him as in full satisfaction of all claims and demands against the appellant or otherwise in respect of the share and interest of the said Joshua Francis Garnett in the business of the partnership and the assets and properties thereof, and the said Joshua Francis Garnett (inter alia) covenanted that he would not during the remainder of his life carry on under the style or firm of Greenwood, Garnett, & Sons the business of a cloth manufacturer or cloth merchant, nor personally or by letter, or by means of agents or travellers, solicit the custom of those who are or have been the customers of the said firm of Greenwood, Garnett, & Sons.

9. The commissioners were of opinion that the last-mentioned instrument was either a conveyance on sale within the meaning of that expression in section 54 of the Stamp Act, 1891, or was a release or renunciation upon a sale of property or of a right or interest in property, and was in either case chargeable with ad valorem conveyance duty, and they refer to the first schedule to the said Act under the heads "Conveyance or Transfer on Sale" and "Release or Renunciation of any Property or of any Right or Interest in any Property."

10. The commissioners accordingly assessed the duty at £165 5s., being ad valorem conveyance duty at the rate of 5s. for every £50 of the sum of £33,043 17s. 11d., being the balance of the sum of £41,752 4s. 7d., the amount payable to the said Joshua Francis Garnett by the appellant for the share and interest of the said Joshua Francis Garnett in the partnership and the assets and effects thereof after deduction of the sum of £8,708 6s. 8d. apportioned to the share and interest in the real estate conveyed, upon which stamp duty had been paid as stated in paragraph 6 hereof.

11. The appellant being dissatisfied with the assessment has, in pursuance of the 13th section of the Stamp Act, 1891, required the commissioners to state and sign a case setting forth the questions on which their opinion was required and the assessment made by them, and the commissioners do hereby state and sign this case accordingly.

12. The questions for the opinion of the court are: (1) Whether the instrument is chargeable with the duty of £165 5s. in accordance with the assessment of the commissioners. (2) If not, with what duty the instrument is chargeable.

Vaughan Hawkins, for the appellant.—The Crown claims that the second deed is also liable to pay an ad valorem duty on all the assets of the partnership other than the land. This deed is not chargeable with such duty. It is not, and does not purport to be, a conveyance, release, or renunciation of any property or estate or interest in property upon the sale thereof. Section 54 of the Stamp Act, 1891, defines the meaning of "conveyance on sale." This section is taken from section 70 of the Stamp Act, 1870. A conveyance within section 54 must be an instrument which purports to convey or by which some interest, legal or equitable, is actually transferred. In the case of Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Angus, 38 W. R. 3, 23 Q. B. D. 579, it was held that an agreement to sell a business and the goodwill thereof, on certain conditions precedent being fulfilled, is not chargeable as a "conveyance or transfer on sale" under section 70 of the Act of 1870. Lord Halsbury, C., at p. 588, says: "In order that section 70 may apply the property must be actually transferred by the instrument itself, not merely by virtue of an equitable doctrine." Further, at the time this deed was executed no legal or equitable interest in the assets remained in the vendor, except the legal joint ownership, of which the vendor was a bare trustee for the purchaser, and which legal right was not meant to be transferred. Before the execution of the deed all the equitable and beneficial interests had already passed from the vendor to the purchaser. Immediately the purchase-money is paid interest in the property passes, even though no deed is executed: Rose v. Watson, 12 W. R. 585, 10 H. L. Cas. 672; Wall v. Bright, 1 Jac. & W. 494. Further, a release or renunciation is not chargeable with an ad valorem duty, unless it be shown to be a conveyance: Great Northern Railway Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, ante, p. 170, 43 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 691, [1899] 2 Q. B. 652. An instrument which is a record of a transaction is not liable to an ad valorem duty unless it is a record of a transfer which is a conveyance itself: Horsfall v. Hey, 2 Exch. 778.

Sir R. Webster, A.G. (Danckwerts with him), for the respondents.—Articles 2 and 12 of the partnership deed of the 28th of February, 1893, constitute an agreement for the sale of the retiring partner's interest in the partnership assets at the dissolution of the partnership to the continuing partner at the latter's option. There was here a sale by Joshua Francis Garnett of his interest in the partnership assets at the time of the dissolution of the partnership, to John William Garnett for the stipulated price—viz., £41,752 4s. 7d. The instrument in question was made or executed upon the said sale and by reason and on the occasion thereof. The effect of the said instrument is to conclusively bar the interest in the said partnership assets (other than the real estate previously conveyed) of Joshua Francis Garnett and to vest the same in John William Garnett within section 54 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and the said instrument is a conveyance on a sale. The said instrument constitutes and was intended to be a record of the sale and of the vesting in John William Garnett of the said Joshua Francis Garnett's interest in the said assets (other than the real estate previously conveyed). The said instrument constitutes a release or renunciation of Joshua Francis Garnett's right or interest in the said partnership assets (other than the real estate previously conveyed). The commissioners' decision is right and correct.

Counsel cited the following cases: Potter v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 2 W. R. 561, 10 Exch. 147; Christie v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 15 W. R. 258, L. R. 2 Ex. 46; Phillips v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, L. R. 2 Ex. 399, 15 W. R. C. L. Dig. 113.

Vaughan Hawkins replied.

DARLING, J.—This case raises a question of considerable importance and difficulty. The facts are these: Two partners having by the partnership agreement stipulated as to the way in which the partnership should be terminated, resolved to put an end to the partnership, and all that we have before us to show how they did it is a deed—a deed which dealt not with the real property of the partnership but with the other things. It is said that the deed requires a stamp as having to pay ad valorem duty by virtue of section 54 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that section is as follows: "For the purposes of this Act the expression 'conveyance on sale' includes every instrument and every decree or order of any court or of any commissioners whereby any property or any estate or interest in any property upon the sale thereof is transferred to or vested in a purchaser, or any other person on his behalf or by his direction."

Now it is said that this is a conveyance or a release—(because "release" is referred to in the schedule) "release or renunciation of any property or of any right or interest in any property—upon a sale." Well, if this is a release of any interest in any property upon a sale of that property by which that interest is transferred to or vested in the purchaser, then this document must pay the ad valorem duty. It is said by Mr. Vaughan Hawkins that this releases nothing, conveys nothing, that the whole thing had been done before, that the property had passed, that the partnership had been dissolved; but that this deed was something for the mutual satisfaction of these people, merely recording something which had been done before. If it did merely record something which had been done before—no matter how long before, but which really was a thing which was passed, I think Mr. Vaughan Hawkins would be right. But what evidence have we that it was so? To a large extent I think this case depends upon a question of fact. The only evidence that we have got is contained in the deed itself, in the recitals, and in the operative parts of the deed; the only evidence as to what had been done appears in the deed, where, for example, it is recited: "And whereas the machinery, implements, plant, utensils, materials, stock of cloth, and so on" in the nature of personal chattels "have been taken over or otherwise retained by and are now in the exclusive possession of the said John William Garnett in pursuance of the said articles of partnership."

For my own part I think it is perfectly good law as stated by the present Master of the Rolls in his text-book: "If a retiring partner instead of assigning his interest takes the amount due to him from the firm and gives a receipt for the money and acknowledges that he has no more claims on his co-partners, they will practically obtain all they want." Well, that might be done without any deed at all; and it is perfectly possible that it might be so done, and that a deed might afterwards be drawn up which would not in any way do it, but would merely record it, and in that way such a deed as that might not require an ad valorem stamp; but I have really to look at what was done here, and the conclusion I should come to, looking at the deed, which is the only record of what took place, is this: That when the deed was made, this arrangement for dissolution and the handing of the property to these people in the proportions agreed, took place; that the deed really was that which effectuated the dissolution of the partnership, and the distribution of the partnership effects as the deed recited, but that it was done by the deed and not by something else. I come to the conclusion, therefore, that there did pass upon the making of that deed an interest in the property upon the sale of that property, that it was transferred, that it was transferred then, that something passed then which had not passed before, that there was a release of something which had not been released before. I quite agree with Mr. Vaughan Hawkins it is possible that all this might have been done without a deed. If it had been done without the deed, and if by any means that transaction could have been questioned—of course it could not have been questioned in the shape of the revenue stamp being wanted, because it is upon the instrument, and not upon the transaction that the stamp duty is imposed—but if in any way it could have been questioned, then I should have said I quite agree that all that was done was done without a deed, all that was sold was sold without a deed, every interest that passed passed without a deed. But when I have the deed and no evidence of anything happening except as the deed recites, then, in this case at all events, I come to the conclusion that what was done was not done in the way Mr. Vaughan Hawkins contends that it was, but that it really was done by the instrument which the parties went to the trouble to prepare, that it was done by the deed, and, therefore, that the deed requires an ad valorem stamp.

CHANNELL, J.—I think there are very nice questions raised in this case. When I say "raised" have been discussed, I am not quite sure whether they are raised or not. I think also that the deed requires an ad valorem stamp; and I should put it in this way: To begin with, undoubtedly there has been a sale in this case; it has been agreed on all hands that there has been a sale at some time, either completed before this deed was executed or not, but that there has been a sale of the partner's share in the partnership assets. Then this is certainly a "release," and I think it is a "release upon a sale" within the meaning of the schedule to this Stamp Act. Mr. Vaughan Hawkins has argued that it is only so if it is a release which passes property. Now, he may or he may not be right in that—I am not quite sure—but I will deal with it upon the footing that he is right in that, and that it is only such releases upon sales as do pass property which are liable to the ad valorem stamp. But how does this release stand? It seems to me to be entirely analagous to, if it is not covered by, the case of Horsfall v. Hey in the Exchequer Report, which has been quoted. The head-note of that case is: "Memorandum that T. has sold to G. all the goods, stock-in-trade, and fixtures" (fixtures was the important part there, because the stamp would not have been wanted so far as the goods were concerned). "Held to require an ad valorem stamp as a conveyance"; and it goes on "Any instrument which operates as a record of the transfer of property is a conveyance within the Stamp Act."

Now, if that head-note is right the thing is quite concluded. That tells us that this is a conveyance, because beyond all possible question it not only is a record of the transfer of property, but all these elaborate recitals were put in purposely for the purpose of recording the transaction and preventing any further disputes between the parties in reference to it; therefore if that head-note were right the case would not be arguable; but it is suggested (and there is something to be said for the suggestion) that it goes beyond the actual decision. The actual decision involves several propositions. First of all it says that it makes no difference that the words used are in the past tense. Now I do not see myself any difference between making a memorandum that T. has sold to G. and making a rather more formal document which says that "whereas certain things have been done,"—which is what this document does—and this document merely in its recitals uses the past tense just as it was used in the case of Horsfall v. Hey. Then the decision in that case apparently is that eo instante with this document—"Memorandum that T. has sold to G. all the goods," that at that instant the goods would pass. That was in 1848. Well now, there was in that case no evidence produced of any prior transaction. I suppose they could have called evidence—it was not in the old days when you could not have called all the witnesses who knew anything about the transaction; at that date they could have proved, I suppose, whether there had been a prior transaction, a sale, or not. But the proposition, as I understand it, put by Parke, B., is, that if it had not been they might have passed before or they might not—if they had not passed before they had passed then. That is exactly the operation of this document. They either had passed before, or if they had not so passed the share or interest in the partnership is absolutely gone the moment that the deed is executed. That much, I think, is quite clear. Now, Horsfall v. Hey seems to say that the words in the past tense will operate as a conveyance just the same as if they had been in the present tense. Rolfe, B., takes a rather technical point that in a deed everybody always does say: "In testimony whereof the parties hereunto have set their hands and seals." That seems rather technical but it may be important. Therefore this document would have passed this share provided it had not been passed before. Now it states that it had been passed, and the point is that it had passed eventually by payment and that the promissory note was equivalent to payment. But the promissory note is given identically with this document and the whole thing appears to me to be absolutely one transaction. If this argument is good it seems to me that by paying your money first and executing your deed afterwards you could always get out of the ad valorem stamp. That cannot possibly be so. It seems to me that the question whether this is to be stamped as a conveyance is very much the same as the question which has arisen over and over again about that rather awkward definition in the Bills of Sale Act about a receipt being a conveyance; and the question is whether it is one transaction. If there is a clearly independent transaction, and it is not all part of one transaction, then the thing would stand upon a different footing. It seems to me that if the parties dissolved their partnership in 1896, and transferred all assets and wound up the whole thing, and then in the year 1897 it occurred to them that it would be rather better to have a release and a mutual document to set it all right, and in the year 1897 they had executed a document which said: Whereas the whole of the affairs in this partnership were wound up in the year 1896, and everything was settled between the parties—and so on; and whereas one of them has requested to have a release or to have a particular covenant—or something of the kind—put in (there are some particular covenants in this case), that then they executed a deed which was a separate transaction, and appeared by the deed to be so; that deed would not be liable to be stamped with an ad valorem stamp; but where according to the appearance of the deed it is a deed which practically effects a transaction, just as the memorandum in Horsfall v. Hey effected the transaction, then it is certainly a "release upon a sale" within the meaning of the Stamp Act; and on the whole I think there is not very much doubt about the matter, although it is perhaps a little difficult to give the very best possible reasons for the decision which I think must be right.

Judgment for the Crown.

Solicitors for the appellant, Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for Tweedale & Clark, Leeds.

Solicitor for the respondents, The Solicitor for Inland Revenue.

---

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — Feb. 27.

GREENWELL AND ANOTHER v. HOWELL AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Local government—Practice—Costs as between solicitor and client—Public right of way—Action of trespass—Person acting under direction of local authority—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (b)—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 26.

A public right of way having been obstructed by the owner of the land through which it ran, the county council passed a resolution, under section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, that the powers and duties of the district council, who had failed to take proceedings to protect the right of way, should be transferred to them. The county council then, under an arrangement with the owner of the land, directed the defendants, two of their officials, to drive along the way so as to enable the question of the public right to be raised. The landowner brought an action of trespass against the defendants, in which the latter obtained judgment.

Held, that the defendants in committing the alleged trespass by the direction of the county council were acting in pursuance of the public duty of protecting public rights of way imposed upon the local authority by section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, and were therefore entitled to their costs as between solicitor and client under section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.

Appeal from the decision of Bruce, J., ordering the plaintiffs to pay the defendants' costs of the action, to be taxed as between solicitor and client.

The plaintiffs were the owners and occupiers of certain land in the parish of Godstone, through which a road ran. There was a dispute as to whether this road was a public highway or not, and the plaintiffs put obstructions across it. The district council having refused or failed to take proceedings in respect thereof upon the representation of the parish council, under section 26, sub-section 4, of the Local Government Act, 1894, that the public right of way in question had been unlawfully obstructed, the county council, upon the petition of the parish council, resolved that the powers and duties of the district council under the section, in relation to the road in question, should be transferred to them. Thereupon a correspondence ensued between the plaintiffs' solicitors and the clerk of the county council, and in the result the former wrote to the latter that as the county council had resolved that the powers and duties of the district council in relation to the road in question should be transferred to them, and as the Highways and Bridges Committee had been authorized to institute legal proceedings to obtain the removal of the obstructions, the plaintiffs had no desire to place themselves in opposition to the properly constituted highway authority, and they had accordingly removed the obstructions complained of, without in any way admitting that the road was a public way, and that they would prosecute anyone trespassing on the road. The letter also stated that in order that the question of right of way might be tried before a competent tribunal, the plaintiffs were prepared to bring an action of trespass in the Queen's Bench Division against any person so trespassing, and they suggested that the question whether it was a public right of way or not might be conveniently raised by the county council authorizing their surveyor, or some other person on their behalf, to commit a nominal trespass. Thereupon the two defendants, who were respectively the county surveyor and the deputy clerk of the county council, acting under the directions of the county council, drove along the road in question. The plaintiffs then brought this action of trespass. The defendants pleaded that the road was a public highway, and that in using the road they were not guilty of trespass.

At the trial Bruce, J., found that the road was a public highway, and gave judgment for the defendants with costs. The defendants thereupon applied for an order that the defendants' costs should be taxed as between solicitor and client under section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. The learned judge, in giving judgment upon this point, said that it was the duty of the county council, in the circumstances, to appoint persons to drive along the road for the purpose of testing this right, and the defendants were the persons who were directed or ordered by the county council to test the right. They drove along the road as the servants of the county council, their act was the act of the county council, and therefore, in his opinion, it was an act done by the defendants in pursuance of a public duty, because in doing what they did they were acting in pursuance of the authority of the county council. He accordingly made an order that the defendants' costs should be taxed as between solicitor and client. The plaintiffs appealed from the order so made.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Neville, Q.C., and McSwinney, for the plaintiffs.—This case does not come within section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. The action is not brought against the county council, but against two individuals who committed what was alleged to be an act of trespass. The preamble to the Act states that it is an Act to generalize and amend certain statutory provisions for the protection of persons acting in the execution of statutory and other public duties. The defendants were not acting in the execution of statutory or other public duties. They were only acting in the course of their private duty towards their employers. They were merely private individuals insisting upon a public right of way, just as any other private individual could have done. It is the duty of the district council or of the county council to protect public rights of way; it is not the duty of the defendants. The court can only look at the constitution of the action. The county council, not being parties to the action, cannot in any event be made liable for costs. They might have directed two men of straw to commit the trespass, in which case the plaintiffs, even if successful, could not have got costs, and yet it is said that, being unsuccessful, they must pay costs as between solicitor and client. This is strong to show that the local authority must be the defendants to bring the case within the protection of the statute. Even if the county council need not be defendants on the record, still it must appear upon the face of the record that the defendants were acting under their directions. This ought to have been pleaded, but it was not. Upon the face of the record the defendants were merely private individuals sued for a trespass. The order of the learned judge was therefore wrong.

Jelf, Q.C., and George Humphreys, for the defendants.—It is admitted by the plaintiffs that if the county council had been made defendants the Act would apply. The defendants were acting under the orders of the county council in committing the trespass, and the plaintiffs might have sued the county council. They did not do so as they knew that the defendants were substantial men acting for the county council. Section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894, imposed the duty of protecting public rights of way and preventing the obstruction thereof upon the district council, and in certain circumstances on the County Council. The obstruction need not be a physical one, the threat to prosecute anyone using the road being an obstruction. Inasmuch as it would be practically impossible for the whole council to commit an act of trespass in order to enable the question to be raised, they directed the defendants, who were two of their officials, to do so. The defendants, therefore, were acting on behalf of the county council in pursuance of a public duty under section 26 of the Act of 1894. Section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, accordingly applies, that section not being limited to an action against a public body, but extending to an action against "any person." That Act was passed to "generalize" and amend certain statutory provisions for the protection of persons acting in the execution of statutory duties. It repealed certain sections of former statutes, but it was not intended in any way to cut down the protection given by those statutes. Many of those statutes—e.g., section 106 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, and section 264 of the Public Health Act, 1875, gave protection not only to the local authority, but also to any officer of the local authority or any person acting in his aid. The learned judge was therefore right.

They referred to Chambers v. Reid, 14 W. R. 370, 13 L. T. Rep. 703.

Neville, Q.C., replied.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This an appeal from an order of Bruce, J., after the trial of an action without a jury. The plaintiffs were the owners of certain land, across which it was alleged that there was a public right of way. A dispute arose upon this question, and the plaintiffs at first obstructed the way and afterwards removed the obstructions, but threatened to prosecute anyone found trespassing thereon. An arrangement was then arrived at between the plaintiffs and the County Council that in order to raise the question whether a public right of way existed the county council should send someone to commit a nominal act of trespass, and the plaintiffs would then bring an action of trespass. Accordingly, by the direction of the county council, the defendants, who were two officials of the council, drove over the way in question. It was known to the plaintiffs that the defendants were acting under the directions of the county council, though I do not say that that is a material element in the case. The present action was then brought, and the learned judge found that a public right of way existed, and gave judgment for the defendants. The defendants thereupon contended that they were entitled to costs as between solicitor and client under section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. The question we have to decide is whether this case comes within that Act. Section 1 provides, so far as material, that where, after the commencement of the Act, any action is commenced against any person for any act done in pursuance or execution, or intended execution, of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority, certain results are to follow. Pausing there, the section does not say that the action must be against a public body, but against "any person." The section then goes on to provide that in such a case the following provisions shall have effect: "(a) The action shall not lie unless it is commenced within six months next after the act complained of." It seems to me that if the plaintiffs had brought this action more than six months after the act of trespass complained of, that clause would have afforded a defence, though of course such a defence would have had to be pleaded. Then by clause (b) "wherever in any such action a judgment is obtained by the defendant, it shall carry costs to be taxed as between solicitor and client." The question we have to determine is whether the defendants here committed this act of trespass in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority. It is clear that they were acting under the directions of the county council for the purpose of enabling this action of trespass to be brought to determine the question whether or not a public right of way exists. Therefore the question is whether what the defendants did under the directions of the county council was an act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority. That brings me to section 26 of the Local Government Act, 1894. Sub-section 1 of that section makes it the duty of every district council to protect all public rights of way, and to prevent as far as possible the stopping or obstruction of any such right of way, whether within their district or in an adjoining district in the county or counties in which the district is situate, where the stoppage or obstruction thereof would, in their opinion, be prejudicial to the interests of their district. By sub-section 3, a district council may, for the purpose of carrying into effect this section, institute or defend any legal proceedings, and generally take such steps as they deem expedient. By sub-section 4, where a parish council have represented to the district council that any such public right of way has been unlawfully stopped or obstructed, it shall be the duty of the district council, unless satisfied that the allegations of the representation are incorrect, to take proper proceedings accordingly; and if the district council refuse or fail to take any proceedings thereon, the parish council may petition the county council, and if that council so resolve, the powers and duties of the district council under the section shall be transferred to the county council. The plain meaning of that section is that if a person obstructs a highway, whether by means of a physical obstruction or by a threat of legal proceedings, it is the duty of the district council to take proper proceedings, and, if they refuse or fail to do so, the county council may resolve that the powers and duties of the district council in regard thereto shall be transferred to themselves, and, if the county council do so, it is then their duty to take proper proceedings. That being so, it was the duty of the county council, in the circumstances, to take proper proceedings in regard to this alleged public right of way, and the act of the defendants, being done under the directions of the county council for the purpose of protecting the right of way, was an act done in pursuance of a public duty within the meaning of section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. I therefore agree with the judgment of Bruce, J. It is said that it was not pleaded that the defendants were acting under the directions of the county council. To my mind, it was not necessary, nor would it have been good pleading, to have pleaded that fact, because it was not a defence to the cause of action. It would have been like a plea to damages, which has always been held to be improper. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. At first I did not realize that section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, extended its protection not only to the public body, who are the principals, but also to the individuals who carry out the mandate of the public body. That being so, the only question is whether the defendants here, in committing the act of trespass complained of, acted in pursuance of a public duty under the Local Government Act, 1894. It seems to me to be clear upon the facts that they did. I do not think that the case can be better put than it is in the judgment of Bruce, J., with which I entirely agree.

ROMER, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Norton, Rose, Norton, & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Wyatt & Co.

---

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — Feb. 24.

CASS v. BUTLER. (a.)

Master and servant—Compensation for injuries by accident—"Undertakers"—Sub-contractor—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 4, 7.

A sub-contractor is not an "undertaker" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Appeal from the award of the county court judge of Leeds under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The respondent on the appeal was the widow of a deceased workman, Henry Cass, who, at the time of the accident causing his death, was in the employment of the appellant, who carried on business as a painter. The respondent claimed compensation under the Act on behalf of herself and other dependants.

A builder named Gould had entered into a contract with the Corporation of Leeds to build an electrical station for them. Gould then made a sub-contract with the appellant, whereby the latter undertook to do the painting work of the whole of the building. Cass was employed by the appellant on the painting work, and while he was standing on a scaffolding, which belonged to Gould and was used in the construction of the building, engaged in painting the iron girders of the roof, a plank broke and he fell and was killed. At the time of the accident the building was over thirty feet in height, and was being constructed by means of a scaffolding. It was admitted that the building was being painted for the first time.

The county court judge held that the appellant was an "undertaker" within the meaning of the Act, and that the painting of the new building was "construction." He accordingly made an award in favour of the respondent for £235 6s.

Ruegg, Q.C., and A. Powell, for the appellant.—The appellant does not come within the definition of "undertakers" in section 7, sub-section 2, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. A sub-contractor is not an "undertaker." By section 7, sub-section 2, undertakers are defined as meaning, in the case of a building, "the persons undertaking the construction, repair, or demolition." The contractor Gould was the person who undertook the construction of this building. It is not like the case of two or more independent contractors for different parts of one building, as in Mason v. A. R. Dean (Limited), 16 Times L. R. 212, where each contractor may be an "undertaker." Section 4 is strong to show that a sub-contractor is not an undertaker, because the term "undertaker" is there used in contradistinction to sub-contractor. That section makes a contractor liable though he may have made a sub-contract for the execution of the work or any part thereof. Secondly, painting is not "construction." In Wood v. Walsh & Sons, 47 W. R. 504, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1009, painting the outside of an old house was held not to be "repair." There can be no distinction between that case and the present.

Temple Franks, for the respondent.—There is nothing in the Act to show that a sub-contractor may not be an "undertaker." Mason v. A. R. Dean (Limited) decided that anyone undertaking a substantial part of the construction is an undertaker, and that there can be several undertakers in the construction of one building. That being so, there is no reason why a sub-contractor cannot in law be an undertaker, and the county court judge has found that the appellant here was an undertaker. That is a finding of fact from which no appeal lies. Section 4 is not against this view. That section merely gives a remedy against the contractor in addition to that against the sub-contractor, who may be a man of straw. It does not say that a sub-contractor cannot be an undertaker. If the court is against the respondent upon this point, the question whether painting is "construction" does not arise.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In my opinion the learned county court judge was wrong. I take the facts to be these: A builder and contractor named Gould had entered into a contract to build an electrical station. Gould then made a sub-contract with the appellant, who carried on business as a painter, by which the latter was to do the painting work of the building. The appellant employed the deceased man, Cass, on the painting work, and Cass, while engaged in painting the girders of the roof, was killed by an accident. I do not think it necessary to determine whether painting this new buiding for the first time is "construction." The other point that has been raised is that the appellant is not an "undertaker"; that Gould is the undertaker, and is liable, if anyone is, and that the appellant is not liable. In other words, it is said that a sub-contractor for doing part of the construction of the building is not an "undertaker" within the meaning of the Act. It is said, on the other side, that both Gould and the appellant are "undertakers," and that the respondent had the option of suing either the one or the other, or both. I do not think that this latter view is the meaning of the Act. The term "undertakers" is defined by section 7, sub-section 2, as meaning, in the case of a building, the persons undertaking the construction, repair, or demolition. In my opinion Gould is the person who undertook the construction of this building. In Mason v. A. R. Dean (Limited) a builder had contracted with a building owner to construct a theatre, and by the contract the building owner had power to let off a specified part of the work to another contractor. The building owner did, under the power reserved to him by the original contract, enter into a contract with another contractor for this latter to do part of the work of construction, and we held that this latter contractor, who was not a sub-contractor, but who had contracted direct with the building owner to do part of the construction, was an "undertaker" within the meaning of the Act. The present is a very different case from that. That is my view of the meaning of the term "undertakers" in section 7. That view is fortified by section 4, which makes it still more clear that a sub-contractor is not an undertaker within the Act. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

COLLINS and ROMER, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, W. Hurd & Son, for H. A. Child, Leeds.

Solicitors for the respondent, Hamlin, Grammer, & Hamlin, for C. Dunn, Leeds.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Feb. 16.

In re TRENCH TUBELESS TYRE CO. (LIMITED). BETHELL v. TRENCH TUBELESS TYRE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Liquidator—Notice of proposed appointment of particular person—Subsequent appointment, without previous notice, of another person—Validity.

It is competent for a company, after passing a resolution for voluntary winding up, to proceed forthwith, without previous notice of intention, to the election of a liquidator; and this general power will not be abrogated even in cases in which notice has been given of intention to elect a particular person as liquidator, and such person is not elected.

Decision of Kekewich, J., ante p. 200 reversed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J., on the 15th of December, 1899 (ante p. 200), refusing, on a motion by the defendant company in an ordinary debenture-holder's action, to order that the receiver already appointed in the action on the 1st of December, 1899, should hand over to Mr. Marreco, the alleged liquidator of the company, certain books and documents belonging to the company and not comprised in the debenture-holder's security.

It appeared from the affidavit of the receiver in the debenture-holder's action, read before Kekewich, J., on the 15th of December, 1899, that he was perfectly willing to hand over the books and documents in question as the court might direct, but that in the meanwhile he was informed by his solicitors that they had grave doubts as to whether Mr. Marreco had been properly appointed liquidator of the company.

It appeared from an affidavit of the secretary of the defendant company that at an extraordinary general meeting held on the 1st of November, 1899, the defendant company had duly passed the two following resolutions: (1) That the company be wound up voluntarily; (2) that Mr. W. Walker be appointed liquidator.

On the 6th of November notices were sent out convening an extraordinary general meeting for the 16th of November, for the purpose of confirming the above two resolutions.

On the meeting being held on the 16th of November, the first of the above two resolutions was confirmed; but the appointment of Mr. Walker was not confirmed, and Mr. Marreco was appointed in his place.

On these facts Kekewich, J., found that the appointment of Mr. Marreco as liquidator was invalid; and refused to order the receiver in the debenture-holder's action to hand over to him the books and documents in question.

From this decision the defendant company now appealed.

Ward Coldridge, for the appellant company.—We have two grounds for this motion. (1) The liquidator is properly appointed. Liquidators may be appointed, without previous notice, at the general meeting at which a resolution for voluntarily winding up is passed: Oakes v. Turquand, 15 W. R. 1201, L. R. 2 H. L. 325, per Lord Chelmsford, at p. 355; In re Welsh Flannel and Tweed Co., 23 W. R. 558, L. R. 20 Eq. 360. Here, it is true, notice was given to appoint a particular liquidator; but that resolution having been lost, it may be treated as though no notice had ever been given of it, and an effective resolution to wind up having been passed, the company was thereupon free forthwith to elect whatever liquidator it chose: In re Indian Zoedone Co., 32 W. R. 481, 26 Ch. D. 70. It took advantage of this freedom, and elected Mr. Marreco. (2) Even suppose that the election of Mr. Marreco is invalid. Yet he is still the duly authorized nominee of the company for the purpose of receiving these documents.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Warrington, Q.C., and Martelli, for the receiver, the respondent.—This is not the case of a company being wound up simply, and of its then proceeding to appoint a liquidator without previous notice. Here a meeting was expressly called to confirm the appointment of a particular gentleman, and to substitute another in his place at the last moment is practically to amend the previous resolution. That, however, cannot be done.

LINDLEY, M.R.—For a time, I admit, I thought that the notice convening the meeting for the 16th of November was possibly calculated to mislead. But when I look more closely into the law applicable to the matter, and especially when I bear in mind that it is now well settled that it is competent for a company, as soon as a winding-up resolution is passed, to proceed forthwith, without previous notice, to the appointment of a liquidator, the case assumes a different aspect. In this case I do not myself believe that those who supported Mr. Walker were in fact misled, or were subject to any surprise. If anyone thought that the only thing that could be done at this meeting was either to confirm or reject Mr. Walker's appointment, then I think he made a mistake in point of law. It appears to me that there are two answers to the contention of the respondent: (1) That this second resolution was not an amendment of the former one, which was duly put to the meeting and duly rejected; (2) that if the court gave effect to the objection now raised, it would mean enabling directors to palm off their nominee upon the company, unless the meeting should be postponed and a fresh notice sent out. I think that that ought not to be allowed. I think that the appointment of Mr. Marreco is good; but even if it were not, I should incline to believe that he was still entitled to the receipt of these books and documents as the nominee for that purpose of the company. I prefer, however, to base my decision on the ground first indicated.

RIGBY and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.JJ., concurred.

Solicitors, Phillips & Boyle; Francis & Johnson.

---

From Chan. Div.
(Lindley, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) — Jan. 23, 30.

In re WREXHAM, MOLD, AND CONNAH'S QUAY RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Railway company — Receiver and manager — Cost of litigation—"Other outgoings"—Jurisdiction of court —Railway Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 127), s. 4—Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 5.

Since the passing of the Judicature Act, 1890, there can be no doubt that the court has power to order the payment of costs of proceedings under a special Act, though the special Act contains no provision for this purpose.

A railway company incurred costs in defending an action brought by a contractor for a large sum. During the course of the proceedings a receiver and manager of the company was appointed, on the petition of a judgment creditor, and inquiries as to creditors were directed by the receivership order. Leave was given to the company to continue to attend the proceedings commenced by the contractor.

Held, that the costs incurred in resisting the contractor's claim were not "other outgoings" within the meaning of section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, but that all such costs incurred since the receivership order ought to be treated as incurred in pursuance of the inquiries directed by that order, and ought to be paid in priority to any future payments to any creditors of the company who had benefited by the opposition to such claim.

This was an appeal against a decision of Byrne, J., which raised the question whether costs incurred by a railway company in defending an action were "other proper outgoings" within the meaning of section 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867. The facts were as follows: An action was commenced by the executors and trustees of the will of Benjamin Piercy against the Wrexham Co. to enforce certain claims against the company. On the 23rd of July, 1897, an order of reference to arbitration was made in that action. While this arbitration was pending an order was made on the 8th of September, 1897, under the provisions of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, upon the petition of the Great Central Railway Co., a judgment creditor, appointing a manager and receiver until further order to manage the undertaking of the Wrexham Co., and the works and property comprised in such undertaking or connected therewith, and to receive the tolls or sums of money arising upon or out of the said undertaking. And it was ordered that the receiver and manager should, out of the money to be received by him, pay all expenses (if any) proper and necessary to be paid by him for the maintenance, management, and working of the said railway, and proper outgoings in respect of the said undertaking, the costs of the petitioners and respondent to the petition to be taxed by the taxing-master; and inquiries were directed (1) what was due to the petitioners upon their judgment debt, and (2) whether there were any other, and what, debts of the respondents, and whether the same, and which of them, were incumbrances or charges upon the undertaking, or tolls and moneys arising out of the same, or any and what part of the same respectively; and how the same respectively were created; and what were the right and priorities of the persons for the time being interested therein; and liberty to reply was reserved. An advertisement for creditors was issued, and Piercy's trustees lodged a claim against the Wrexham Co. as creditors in the proceedings under the order of the 8th of September, 1897. On the 16th of November, 1897, Piercy's trustees applied by summons that, notwithstanding the order of the 8th of September, 1897, and the advertisement for creditors to prove their claims in pursuance of the said order, the applicants might be at liberty to carry on the action and to proceed with the arbitration above referred to, the subject-matter of which arbitration proceedings being the same as the claim entered in the claim-book in chambers against the Wrexham Co.; and, in the alternative, as to how the claim of the said trustees against the said railway company was to be determined.

The Wrexham Co. and the Great Central Railway Co. were respondents to that summons.

On the 22nd of November, 1897, an order was made on the summons to this effect, as appears by the master's indorsement: "Order for liberty as asked within, and to include also liberty for the Wrexham,

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

&c., Railway Co., to continue to attend the proceedings by arbitration. Claimant's costs to go with the claim."

An award was made in the arbitration, and on the 15th of March, 1898, judgment was entered up in the terms of the award, which was to the effect that the company should pay and issue or transfer to Piercy's trustees £23,643 cash, £6,933 in ordinary fully paid-up stock of the company, £1,733 in Perpetual 4 per Cent. Preference Stock of the company, and £4,286 in C Debenture Stock of the company; each party to pay his or their own costs of the action, counterclaim, reference to arbitration and award. The effect of this award was that the claims of the Piercy trustees were considerably reduced.

The Wrexham Co., its directors, and Mr. Pollitt, the solicitor for the company, then applied that the costs incurred in the defence of the action and arbitration should be treated as proper outgoings, and should be payable in priority to the claims of the debenture-holder of the company.

Byrne, J., refused the application on the ground that as the undertaking could have been carried on equally well if the company had not resisted the claim of the Piercy trustees, the costs incurred in resisting such claim were not proper outgoings within the meaning of section 4.

The applicants appealed.

C. A. Russell, Q.C., and R. J. Parker, for the appellants.

Neville, Q.C., and F. Thompson, for certain debenture-holders.

Whinney, for other debenture-holders.

M. Romer, for the Great Central Railway Co.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 30.—LINDLEY, M.R.—This is a case of some novelty and some little difficulty, and gives rise to the question of what ought to be done about some costs, which I will refer to presently, when an order appointing a receiver and directing inquiries has been made under the Railway Companies Act, 1867. Section 42 of the Act stopped the breaking up of a company by the seizure of its rolling stock. The Act provided that instead of doing that a judgment creditor might apply for and obtain a receiver, and if necessary a manager, by a petition in the Court of Chancery. This was in 1867. Then the Act goes on to say what the receiver is to do, how he is to deal with the money, "and all the money received by such receiver or manager shall, after due provision for the working expenses of the railway and for the proper outgoings in respect of the undertaking, be applied and distributed under the order of the court in payment of the debts of the company and otherwise, according to the rights and priorities of the persons for the time being interested therein." Then, on payment of the amounts so due, the court may discharge the receiver. Rules have been made for carrying that Act into effect, and the common form of order has been ever since the Act was passed to appoint a receiver and if necessary a manager, and to direct inquiries for the purpose of ascertaining how the assets ought to be distributed, and in this particular case the order directs an inquiry of what is due to the petitioner, who is an alleged creditor, and an inquiry "whether there are any other and what debts of the company, and whether the same and which of them are incumbrances or charges on the undertaking, or moneys arising out of the same or any and what part of the same respectively, and how the same were created, and what are the rights and priorities of the persons for the time being entitled in respect thereof." Now, the Act says nothing at all about costs, and if there were no jurisdiction to give costs I suppose nobody would get any costs under this Act, but of course that cannot be so. There must be somewhere or other some power for making an order for the payment of costs which are incurred by the petition and consequent on it, and ever since the Act of 1867 has been passed orders have been made for the payment of those costs. In this particular case the costs of the petitioner were ordered to be paid by the company.

Now, where does that power come from? Where is the jurisdiction to do that? You cannot find it in the Act, but that section of the Act of Parliament, like others sections, is based upon the footing that the courts have jurisdiction to order costs in those cases, and the court has always exercised such jurisdiction. Any doubt there may be about the jurisdiction of the court to order costs in distributing funds under an Act of Parliament which says nothing about them is removed by the important section which was put into the Judicature Act of 1890—section 5—which was passed for the purpose and with the objects which were explained by this court in In re Fisher, 42 W. R. 241, [1894] 1 Ch. 53, 450. It runs thus: "Subject to the Supreme Court of Judicature Acts and the rules of court made thereunder and to the express provisions of any statute whether passed before or after the commencement of this Act"—those last words are not in the rule: "The costs of and incident to all proceedings in the Supreme Court, including the administration of estates and trusts, shall be in the discretion of the court or judge." Then come these words, which are of importance—"and the court or judge shall have full power to determine by whom and to what extent such costs are to be paid." The reason and the object of that section was that there was some doubt as to the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery to order costs under special Acts of Parliament relating to the compulsory purchase of land. One of the instances which was mentioned was whether a railway company, for example, buying land under some special Act could be ordered to pay the costs of the investment and so forth. There was a difference of opinion about it, and that section was passed in order to remove all doubt. As I understand that section it is, as I said it is in In re Fisher, that where there is an Act of Parliament relating to funds to be distributed and proceedings to be taken for the purpose of having them distributed according to the Act, the court which has to do the distribution and award the money, has jurisdiction over the costs, and must make the proper order for the payment of them. Therefore, although the Railway Companies Act, 1867, says nothing at all about costs, I have not the slightest doubt that the practice which has prevailed from the beginning of ordering costs to be paid out of the funds in the hands of the receiver is perfectly justifiable, and, as I say, if there was before any doubt on the matter, that doubt is removed by the Act to which I have referred.

The facts in this case are as follow: The company had issued a number of debentures and some ordinary stock. In 1893 an action was commenced by the executors of a contractor claiming large sums of money from the company. The executors claimed £60,000 cash and a very large sum in debentures. £25,000 I am told. That was met by a counterclaim for the conveyance of some land. That dispute was, of course, a very complicated one, and an order was made to refer the whole matter to arbitration. That was done on the 23rd of July, 1897. On the 8th of September, 1897, an order was obtained by a judgment creditor appointing a receiver and manager, and directing the inquiries to which I have referred. The consequence of that was that the executors of Piercy felt a little embarrassed. They did not know whether it was best or right to bring in their claim under the order directing inquiries, or whether it was better to go on with the arbitration, and therefore they took out a summons for leave to go on with arbitration. That summons was served upon the judgment creditor and upon the company, but it was not served, as far as I can see, upon the debenture-holders, and I do not see that it would be necessary, but I suppose their interests were represented. Upon that summons leave was given to the executors to carry on the proceedings in the arbitration, and leave was also given to the company to attend those proceedings. No order was drawn up; it was an order made in chambers, and the first question we have to consider is, What was the meaning of that order, what did it really mean? I cannot help thinking that the true meaning of it was that the company not only should attend the proceedings (which was an order not worth making) but that it should oppose the proceedings and do as it had been doing up to that time—fight the claim of the contractor's executors and fight on behalf of everybody interested in the assets of the company. We cannot doubt for a moment that that was the real meaning of the parties and of the order itself. But be that as it may, it becomes very important to determine, because this case to my mind turns upon the true effect of that order. I regard it, and we all regard it, as an order—an arrangement, because I dare say it was arranged, I do not know—to the effect that the company should oppose and fight that claim in the arbitration rather than the matter should be brought into chambers, and fought all over again in the interests of everybody. Then the arbitration proceeded, and an award was made in favour of the executors, but cutting down their claim very considerably, and in particular cutting down their claim to debentures. Instead of obtaining from the arbitration the large amount of debentures sought, they obtained a comparatively small number. They only got £4,300 C Debenture Stock, they got some ordinary Preference Stock and cash, and got a good deal, but they did not get anything like the quantity of debentures which they sought. So that in the result the upshot was that the company defended that claim for the benefit of other debenture-holders, and other debenture-holders got the benefit, for if the claim had not been resisted and fought the executors might have established a claim to a large sum of debentures which they would have recovered pari passu with the C debentures. Now, the arbitrator made no order as to costs—that is to say, as between the claimants, the contractor's executors on the one side and the company on the other. Each had to pay his own costs. Now the first question is, How are the company's costs to be obtained? In order to obtain them a summons was taken out for payment of these costs in priority to everybody and upon the footing that, although they could not be called "the working expenses" of the railway, yet they might and ought to be regarded as "other proper outgoings in respect of the undertaking." Byrne, J., was unable to adopt that view and he decided against the applicants and said they were not such costs as could be fairly and properly regarded as "other proper outgoings in respect of the undertaking," and he refused the summons. There is, then, an appeal to us, and the same contention was made before us that these costs ought to be regarded as proper outgoings in respect of the undertaking; but we feel the same difficulty that Byrne, J., did in that. They are certainly not working expenses of the railway, and without going so far as Kay, J., did in In re Eastern and Midlands Railway Co., 45 Ch. D. 367, 39 W. R. Dig. 190, and saying that the proper outgoings must be equivalent to or substantially the same thing as working expenses—without cutting it down so narrowly as that—it would be stretching the ordinary meaning of the words "other proper outgoings in respect of the undertaking" to say that they included the costs of the litigation in respect of this claim. We are not prepared to do that, and therefore we do not differ from the construction put by Byrne, J., upon this section; but there is this to be said. It does not follow that there is no provision to be made for these costs, and taking the view which we do of the order giving the company leave to attend, and treating that as an authority to defend for the benefit of all the debenture-holders, we are of opinion that these costs incurred since the order, should be regarded as costs of the proceedings in the matter of this company, and that these should have priority over the debenture-holders who have got the benefit of the resistance to that claim. That, we think, is the fair upshot of the whole matter, and therefore we propose, while agreeing with Byrne, J., in the construction he put upon the Act, to vary the order, and add this declaration: "That the costs incurred by the Wrexham, Mold, and Connah's Quay Railway Co. in the defence of the action Whitwham v. The Wrexham Co., in the arbitration of such action and proceedings consequent thereon since the 8th of September, 1897 (not before; they ask for costs before that, which they are clearly not entitled to, those costs are ordinary debts of the company so far as we can see), ought to be treated as incurred in prosecuting the inquiries directed by the order of the 8th of September, 1897, made in the above matter, and were incurred for the benefit of the debenture-holders and other creditors of the Wrexham Co., and ought to be paid with the costs of this appeal in priority to any future payments to them or any of them." Then there ought to be liberty to apply to the judge to whose court the proceedings in this matter are attached for payment and for it to be worked out. That is how the matter stands, and that exhausts the whole thing.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I entirely agree with the Master of the Rolls in the result of his judgment, and also in the reasons he has given for it.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. I should like to add this, although I think it is covered by what the Master of the Rolls has said, but I should like to make it perfectly clear. It does not follow from our judgment that all costs incurred by parties to this order, or to the inquiries thereby directed, would of necessity be paid in priority to the claims of the debenture-holders or of the judgment creditors; for example, I can well understand that some costs under the order, or in carrying out or in answering the inquiries thereby directed, may have been incurred under such circumstances as would show that they were really incurred for the benefit—not, for example, of the debenture-holders, but, say, of the judgment creditors, and those ranking after them. In a case like that, for example, I think the costs would be provided for, but would not be provided for in priority to the debenture-holders. Or costs might be incurred by the company which were not really for the benefit of the debenture-holders or judgment creditors, in which case those costs would be provided for after providing for the costs of the debenture-holders and the judgment creditors. In the present case as decided by the judgment of the Master of the Rolls why we have given these costs in priority to debenture-holders and the judgment creditors the ordinary creditors and the shareho because, as pointed out by the Master of the Rolls, the costs were really incurred for the benefit of all those classes.

Solicitors, Norris, Allens, & Chapman, for J. B. Pollitt, Manchester; Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Evan Morris & Co., Wrexham; Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for Alsop, Stevens, Harvey, & Crooks, Liverpool; Cunliffes & Davenport, for R. B. Lingard-Monk, Manchester.

---

From Chan. Div.
(Lindley, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) Jan. 22.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BRIGHTON AND HOVE CO-OPERATIVE SUPPLY ASSOCIATION. (a.)

Highway—Nuisance—Obstruction — Loading and unloading of vans—Injunction.

The private reasonable right to use a public highway in carrying on a business must, in a case of difficulty, give way to the public right of using the highway. What is a reasonable user of a highway depends on the facts of each particular case. It is not enough that the user consists in an aggregate of lawful acts.

This was an appeal against a decision of Kekewich, J., by which he granted a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from causing a nuisance to the public by obstructing and putting to unreasonable and excessive user the public highway on which their premises abutted, and by obstructing and using, to the interference with and danger of the public, the footway on the side of the highway.

The action was brought by the Attorney-General on the relation of James Pack, a lodging-house keeper, of 21, Lansdowne-street, Brighton, for an injunction to restrain the defendants, who carry on business in the same street, from causing a nuisance to the public and to the plaintiff by an alleged unreasonable user of the street, through blocking it with carts and vans, and causing an offensive smell by allowing accumulations of droppings from their horses. The plaintiff complained that the defendants used the street for loading and unloading their vans, so that not only the roadway but also the foot pavement was obstructed from early in the morning to late at night. In the result the question became only one as to the right of the public generally to restrain the alleged nuisance, the plaintiff abandoning any claim for private damage.

The defendants appealed.

Warmington, Q.C., and A. Beddall, for the defendants, the appellants.—The purposes for which a highway exists have to be considered. You cannot enclose it. If you are willing to remove an obstruction you do not cause a nuisance for which an injunction will be granted. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—You cannot test an unlawful obstruction by saying that you are always willing to move apart.] There is no evidence of inconvenience being suffered by the public. Public means not only people passing to and fro, but also the adjacent owners. If you cannot load and unload in the highway, business would stop. This is not an illegal exclusion of the public from the highway. [LINDLEY, M.R.—There is a conflict between private and public rights.] We can use the highway for our business as long as we do not unreasonably affect our neighbours. It is a mere question of excessive user. How are you going to measure excess. Are the public inconvenienced; if not, an injunction will not be granted. Our user is not excessive, therefore an injunction ought not to be granted.

They referred to Rex. v. Cross, 3 Camp. 224; Rex. v. Jones, 3 Camp. 230; Attorney-General v. Sheffield Gas Consumers Co., 1 W. R. 185, 3 De G. M. & G. 304; Original Hartlepool Collieries Co. v. Gibb, 5 Ch. D. 713, 25 W. R. Dig. 121.

Macmorran, Q.C., and E. A. Parkyn, for the respondent, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, M.R.—It appears to me that it is quite impossible for us to reverse this judgment, by which the learned judge has granted an injunction to restrain the defendants from causing a nuisance to the public by obstructing and putting to unreasonable use a public highway known as Lansdowne-street, or by obstructing and using to the interference with and danger to the public, the footway. Now, the substance of the case is this: It is said that the defendants have got a large business, a business which is beneficial to the public as well as to the shareholders. They have stores, and they supply things which the public want, and they carry on that business in a street the roadway of which is a little less than twenty feet wide. Their business evidently, from the evidence, has increased of late years, and the complaint is that they obstruct the street. Now, let us first of all look and see to what extent they obstruct, and without reference to anything about reasonable or unreasonable let us see what they do. They certainly block up one-half of the street for some distance by putting six vans—we will call it six, that being the number which is now apparently used—which are packed close together tail on towards the kerb and projecting into the road. The vans have horses, and the horses are turned round so far as they can be, so as to leave as much room as possible on the other side of the vans. There is no obstruction at all at night—that seems to be conceded—but during the day-time there are half-a-dozen vans there packed in the way to which I have alluded every other hour. They begin at 8.45 and go on until 9.40. Then there is an hour clear, then there is another hour loading and unloading and then there is another hour clear, and so on every other hour during the daytime. From 8.45 to 5.45 there is this accumulation of vans and horses, and there is the loading and the unloading across the pavement to such an extent that the foot passage is materially obstructed. There is evidence—evidence which I do not and cannot disregard—that the passage—I mean by that the carriage-passage—along the street is obstructed. I do not mean to say that it is stopped long, but the evidence is that it is such a nuisance to get along that people shirk the street. There is evidence that carriages have been turned back and there is evidence from one person, at all events, that if you drive along there you are very apt to be annoyed by these horses, which interfere with the passing horses. The passage left is very narrow and if there happens to be anything in the passage at the time you want to pass you cannot pass at all. Those are the facts, and upon those facts it is impossible to say there is not an obstruction to the right of way in fact.

Now, primâ facie that is enough to constitute a legal nuisance—a nuisance that is not a lawful nuisance, but a nuisance in point of law to a highway. The public have a right to pass and repass freely and without obstruction, not only over the half of the street occupied by the defendants' vans, but over the whole of the street. Of course there must be in all streets and in all populous places a good deal of give and take, and it would be ridiculous to say that because a cart is standing opposite a house for a short time, that is such an obstruction as to amount to a nuisance. Of course that is absurd, and the whole difficulty in this case arises from the difficulty of drawing the line. I will refer presently to what I consider to be the line. Now let us look and see what the defendants have to say for themselves. They say they are carrying on a lawful business in a way which is reasonable, and so reasonable that it is really necessary if they are to carry on their business here at all, that they should do pretty much as they are doing. It strikes me if you look only at the carrying on of their business, that what they are doing is perfectly reasonable. They have a large business, there is a great deal of loading and unloading to be done; they have a lot of carts, and they do not dawdle as far as I can see—that is to say, that each cart is loaded and unloaded with fair dispatch; there is no complaint about that, and therefore you have to consider what is the consequence of their reasonable exercise of their rights coming into conflict with the rights of the public to use this highway. Now, I take the law to be that which was laid down long ago, and I believe with perfect correctness, in Rex v. Russell, 6 East 427, at p. 430. The facts there were not quite the same as here, but what I am going to read appears to me to express in better language than I could what the law is, and it has the great advantage of having stood the test, of the best part of a hundred years of criticism. What the court said was: "It should be fully understood that the defendant could not legally carry on any part of his business in the public street to the annoyance of the public. That the primary object of the street was for the free passage of the public, and anything which impeded that free passage, without necessity, was a nuisance. That if the nature of the defendant's business was such as to require the loading and unloading of so many more of his wagons than could conveniently be contained within his own private premises, he must either enlarge his premises or remove his business to some more convenient spot." I take that to be the law—what does that mean? and in substance what does it come to? It comes to this, that in a case of doubt, in a case of difficulty, the private reasonable right to carry on one's business must give way to the public right of using the street. If the public right of using the street is so obstructed in fact in that, that right cannot be used to the extent which the law requires, then the private right must give way, and, to my mind, it is not an answer to say that the defendants can go on using this street in a way that is reasonable if you look to their interests alone. It is urged, as of course it is always urged, that it is difficult to draw the line. I admit that it is extremely difficult to draw the line. You may say that if a cart stands opposite a grocer's door for five minutes to take up some goods it is obstructing the street, and of course it is, to a certain extent, but it is to such an extent as that it would be ridiculous to say that that is an indictable nuisance, or an actionable nuisance, or a ground for an injunction. It is a question of degree. You may say, What is the difference between one cart and two? You cannot draw the line—nothing is more common in life than to be unable to draw the line between two things. Who can draw the line between plants and animals? and yet who has any difficulty in saying that an oak-tree is a plant and not an animal? Now, when you come to look at the facts of this case there is such an amount of obstruction, obstruction to such an extent, as to block up this street so long and so much that people avoid it rather than face the inconvenience of going along it, and that is to my mind utterly unjustifiable. I think the injunction ought to be affirmed, with the variation that the word wilfully ought to be struck out. I think the appeal ought to be dismissed, and dismissed with costs.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree, because I regard the decision in the court below as a decision upon a question of fact as to which there was evidence. I do not agree or I should not agree if the decision in the court below had been a decision of law resulting from the facts proved in evidence. I think it is right to make the observations that I am going to make because I cannot help feeling that the decision which we are giving to-day is one of great public importance in all populous places where commercial business is conducted, and I should not like it to be said hereafter that there has been a decision in the Court of Appeal, which shows that it is unlawful to do the particular kind of act which was done by the defendants here. Because if that were our decision here I should hesitate a long time before I could assent to it, because I think that such a decision would be a very serious blow to the interests of the public throughout the kingdom by preventing commercial business being securely carried on at all in crowded neighbourhoods. That there was a physical obstruction in this case, of course, is beyond a douht. There was less room in the highway by reason of what the defendants did. There was displacement in the room available by the presence of the defendants' carts there, but this action could not be supported merely by showing that there was a physical displacement or a physical reduction in the amount of room available for the public during the time that the defendants' carts were standing at their warehouse. It must be shown to support this action not only that there was such a physical displacement or physical reduction in the temporarily available use of the highway by the public; but it must be shown that such displacement or reduction was not consistent with the full user of the highway. Now, a highway is primarily, no doubt, for the purpose of the passage of her Majesty's subjects, but it is also for the purpose that those who pass along the highway shall be able to stop at such houses as abut on the highway, and either call for goods or persons there, or discharge goods or persons there. The fact that you temporarily reduce the width of the roadway does not make that act unlawful and does not make your obstruction an unlawful obstruction. It not only does not do so in a broad street, but it does not do so in a narrow street. If you have got a narrow street that will only admit of one vehicle going down, and which will not admit of two broad vehicles going down for the moment, no doubt if you have a cart drawn up at a house in that narrow street you are physically reducing that highway, it is no longer available for the public during the time that that cart is standing in a narrow street; but it is no more unlawful to call at a house in such a narrow street than it is unlawful to call at a house in a large street. In either case part of the proper and part of the lawful user of a highway includes access to the premises which abut upon the highway.

Then if the cases are looked at I do not think that there will be found any case, at all events of an indictment, in which there has been a conviction upon evidence which merely shows excessive user, a very large user of a lawful right as distinguished from an improper user of a highway. In Rex v. Russell there was obviously an improper user of the highway and in Rex v. Cross and Rex v. Jones; in all of them there was an improper user of the highway, but in each one of those three cases the judgment as delivered expressly asserts the right of access to houses provided it is reasonably exercised. To take the judgment of Lord Ellenborough in Rex v. Jones, he says: "If an unreasonable time is occupied in the operation of delivering beer from a brewer's dray into the cellar of a publican, this is certainly a nuisance. A cart or wagon may be unloaded at a gateway, but this must be done with promptness." I will not occupy time by reading the other two judgments, but each one explicitly affirms the lawfulness of such user of the highway. So much for the common law cases, but in Attorney-General v. Sheffield Gas Consumers Co., the same proposition is affirmed as plainly as can be by Lord Cranworth in delivering the judgment of the court. On the other hand, it cannot possibly to my mind be said, that no amount of user could possibly amount to a nuisance if that user consisted of an aggregate of lawful acts. I do not agree with that proposition at all. The truth of the matter is that you have always got in these cases, before you can answer the question, Aye or no, was that particular user necessary or reasonable? to take in consideration all the facts of the case. If you are dealing with a narrow street, a single carriage street, it obviously may be necessary to block up that street much more than it ever can be in a wide street with a wide roadway. Again, if a railway station or business premises have got a yard in which they can discharge, I take it that that would be one of the circumstances which might be taken into consideration in showing that it was wholly unreasonable in them, and unnecessary for them, having the benefit of such a yard, to obstruct the highway by discharging their wagons or loading their wagons at the kerb-side. And one of the circumstances that you have to take into consideration would be, if a man or a company have got so large a business that the aggregate of the occasions upon which they can lawfully use that highway would really deprive the rest of the public substantially of the use of the highway in the daytime; nobody, I think, can doubt that that would be an unlawful obstruction, because the unreasonableness of the proceeding is only demonstrated by showing the effect upon the public of the number of occasions upon which the defendants used the highway for this purpose.

In these circumstances I agree with the decision of Kekewich, J., because, as I understand, on the evidence before him, he has come to the conclusion that the user by the defendants of Lansdowne-street was unreasonable and unnecessary. In those circumstances I agree with his decision.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree in thinking that we ought not to interfere with the injunction granted by Kekewich, J., subject to the clerical alteration which has been pointed out by the Master of the Rolls. No doubt any tradesman is primâ facie entitled in respect of his bordering on a highway, to use that highway in a reasonable way for the purpose of unloading and loading goods from and into carts for the purposes of his business; and such loading and unloading would not of necessity be an unreasonable user of the highway merely because it might cause a temporary obstruction or some inconvenience to passers-by or others using the street. Whether a user by a tradesman of a highway for such purposes is reasonable or unreasonable is a question of degree and of fact to be determined in each particular case. It does not follow that because the user is really required or is useful for the purpose of carrying on that tradesman's business it must of necessity be held a reasonable user. For example, suppose a person established a very large business indeed requiring the use of an enormous number of vans, and his premises bordered on a very narrow highway, it might well be that in order to enable him to carry on his business he would require to keep the highway exclusively for himself and his wagons the whole day long, and so as not to allow anybody else to be able to come up or down that highway. I should say in such a case as that his user of that highway would not be a reasonable user of it, even though it might be useful or necessary for his business, it amounting practically to an appropriation of the highway to himself for the purposes of his business. Now in the present case the question is whether the user of the defendants of this highway is or is not, looking at the whole facts of the case, a reasonable user. In my opinion, on the evidence, it is not reasonable, for I think that it practically amounts to an appropriation by them of at least half this highway for several hours in every day except Sundays exclusively for the purposes of their business, making it, as it were, a part of their business premises—a private yard, as it were, of their own. And moreover during those hours they are, in my opinion, on the evidence, also seriously interfering with the public user of even that portion of the highway that they do not occupy or appropriate to themselves, and I am further satisfied that what they are doing has caused and is causing considerable inconvenience to the public, so much so that, in my opinion, on the evidence, the public are beginning to cease to use this highway because of the seriousness of the obstruction. In my opinion, what the defendants are doing amounts, on the whole, to an improper user of this highway on their part, and one which ought to be, and has been, properly restrained by injunction. Of course this order does not stop the defendants from using it for the purpose of loading and unloading in a reasonable manner. It only stops them from committing a nuisance—that is, using it in an unreasonable manner. And reasonable user is not a nuisance, and so is not restrained.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Booth & Smee, for Fitzhugh, Woolley, & Co., Brighton; Radford & Frankland, for Woods & Holmes, Brighton.

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Jan. 26.
Byrne, J. }

NOTT v. WILLIAMS. (a.)

School — Subscriber to school — Management of school vested in subscribers—Bonâ fide subscriber.

In a case in which the management of a school and the right to appoint the teachers were, under a deed, vested in the subscribers to the school to the amount of twenty shillings and upwards,

Held, that certain persons, on behalf of whom subscriptions were sent to the treasurer of the school on the day of the election of head master, with a view to their voting at such election, and whose subscriptions were returned by him to the person sending the same, were not bonâ fide subscribers with a right to vote at such election.

It appears to be a right inherent in such a body of subscribers to refuse to admit a new subscriber for good cause.

This was an interlocutory motion in the above action on the part of the plaintiffs suing on behalf of themselves and all other managers and subscribers of a school at Saughall, in the county of Chester, to restrain the defendant James Williams and his son James Hyatt Williams from remaining in possession of the school premises, and the defendant J. H. Williams from teaching in, or intermeddling with, the school. The school was constituted by a deed of July, 1851, under the School Sites Acts, and therein it was provided "that the management, direction, control, and government of the school, and the situation, appointment, and dismissal of the schoolmaster and schoolmistress and their assistants shall be vested in and exercised by annual subscribers to the amount of 20s. and upwards to the said school." The head mastership of James Williams having properly terminated and a committee of selection having considered a new appointment, a general meeting of the managers was summoned for the 3rd of October, 1899, to elect a new head master. On the morning of that day the treasurer of the school received from a Mr. Harvey, who was himself a bonâ fide manager, postal orders to the amount of £19 19s. 6d., and a list of persons who expressed a wish to become subscribers. The treasurer returned these postal orders to Mr. Harvey. At the meeting the persons on behalf of whom these subscriptions had been sent appeared and claimed to vote as managers. Thereupon the chairman adjourned the meeting elsewhere. The would-be subscribers, however, remained behind, and purported to elect J. H. Williams, the defendant, as schoolmaster. At the adjourned meeting the old subscribers elected a Mr. Duckworth as schoolmaster. J. H. Williams affected to act as master, and when the old managers went to the school and introduced the new master he called upon the children to recite the multiplication table. The facts are further explained in the judgment.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Levett, Q.C., and E. P. Hewitt, for the plaintiffs.—The managers of the school are empowered to make rules and are under no obligation to accept subscriptions. There is no evidence that these postal orders were in fact annual subscriptions.

H. Lynn and T. A. Organ, for the defendants.—The managers and subscribers are identical. The only question is whether the persons whose names were submitted to the treasurer had become subscribers to the school. The subscription money was properly sent to the treasurer. He returned it on his responsibility, but no resolution was passed at a general meeting of subscribers that the money should not be accepted. There is no inherent right in existing subscribers to exclude others without due cause. The deed is under the School Sites Acts and the school is constituted thereunder for the benefit of the whole parish. Every inhabitant of the parish has power to become a subscriber and take part in its management.

BYRNE, J.—In this case there is an injunction asked by persons who are undoubtedly annual subscribers and managers of the school (to put it shortly) to restrain the defendants from intermeddling in the school as masters or in the carrying on of its work. One of the defendants claims to be head master of the school. The plaintiffs sue on behalf of themselves and all the other managers and subscribers mentioned in the writ—that is to say, it is a representative action on behalf of the managers and subscribers of the school. It seeks an injunction to restrain the defendants, one of whom claims to be a master at the school, from acting as head master, retaining control in, or otherwise interfering with, the school. The remaining defendant is the father of the defendant who claims to be head master. His appointment duly and properly came to an end. Arrangements were then made for the election of a new head master and under the deed constituting the school it is provided "that the situation, appointment, and dismissal of the schoolmaster and schoolmistress and their assistants shall be vested in and exercised by annual subscribers to the amount of 20s. and upwards to the said school." After the matter had been before a committee of selection a meeting was appointed for the 3rd of October, 1899. On the 3rd of October, 1899, a letter was received by the treasurer of the school from Mr. Harvey containing postal orders for £19 9s. 6d., and a list of names of persons desirous of becoming subscribers. The 9s. 6d. is accounted for in this way. There were nineteen names of persons who had never subscribed before, but suggested that they wanted to subscribe and one of the persons named had subscribed, not £1, but a lesser sum, and the 9s. 6d. was to make up the amount. That came to the treasurer on the very day when the meeting was to be held to appoint the new schoolmaster, and it is very fairly admitted—though it must have been admitted on the facts as they came out—that it was a move on the part of one party in the district to obtain the appointment of their nominee as master. And of course the postponement until the last moment of paying the money was a favourable piece of tactics on their part, as they thought, because there would not be time before the meeting came on to take proceedings to stop them from attending at the meeting, or indeed to allow time perhaps for the other party to bring up twenty similar subscribers. The treasurer returned to Mr. Harvey, who was himself a bonâ fide subscriber and manager of the school, the postal orders which he had sent. Then the meeting takes place, and to the meeting there came these would-be members. The chairman sees at a glance that there are present others than those whom he recognizes as managers of the school and adjourns the meeting. The meeting then takes place at a subsequent period of the day, when these newly-introduced people were not present, and the master has been duly appointed at such meeting, unless these newly-introduced people are entitled to say that they were managers and were themselves entitled to appoint, for after the adjournment of the meeting they remained, as I understand, and themselves proceeded to appoint their candidate. Of course this has all led to a good deal of trouble, because when the managers of the school (I use the word as meaning the plaintiffs, and not these new persons whose money came on that particular day) went down to the school to introduce the new master, there was another supposed master in possession, and a discussion arose. The children were told, "This is your new master," whereupon the voice of the chairman was drowned at the direction of the defendant calling upon the children to recite the multiplication tables. Of course this sort of thing cannot go on, and therefore it is necessary, even on an interlocutory motion, to ascertain on the materials before me who is the duly elected person. I have come to the conclusion that the expression "the annual subscribers" who are made the persons to appoint and dismiss a schoolmaster means bonâ fide annual subscribers to the amount of 20s., and does not mean persons who simply choose to come forward with money in their hands to the amount of 20s. and to say, "Now I am coming to the meeting, and I am going to have a voice in the voting for a particular schoolmaster." To give an illustration. Suppose a candidate for the schoolmastership had chosen himself to find the money and bring up twenty or thirty new individuals on the morning, and say to the treasurer at the meeting (I do not know that it is any better because it arrived in a letter in the morning), "Here is my £1; I am going to vote." I do not think that this can be the meaning; it must be bonâ fide annual subscribers. Having regard to what took place on this occasion, I cannot, on the materials now before me, regard these persons as bonâ fide annual subscribers. I agree that if a man says, "I wish to become an annual subscriber," he does not thereby legally bind himself to subscribe for more than the current year; but he is holding out certainly an expectation that if things go well with him he will continue his subscription. It is not suggested that five or six of these people, at any rate, found the money actually for the payment of their subscription. It is agreed that it is not proved before me that they did not find the money; but when I find Mr. Harvey, who was the collector general of the funds, and who in fact sends it in a lump sum, is able to pledge himself to all but five, I think that he must have some information which leads him to believe that the other four gentlemen did not find their own money. In the circumstances of this case I am of opinion that these persons were not at the time when they sought to vote and elect a schoolmaster bonâ fide annual subscribers within the meaning of the deed. Therefore I think that the second defendant was not duly elected master and that the other election was a good election. Of course this is not a final determination of the case, but it is a very important matter, and one which I am bound to decide as best I can on the materials before me. There will be an order to restrain the defendants from remaining in possession of the schoolhouse or other the premises belonging to or forming part of the school referred to in the writ of summons, and an order to restrain the defendant James Hyatt Williams until judgment in this action or further order from presenting himself at the said school, or teaching or attempting to teach therein. Costs will be costs in the action. There is one observation that I ought to have made. I did not overlook the other point that was taken, and probably I ought to have mentioned it. That is with reference to the power of the existing board of management in a proper case and for a right cause to refuse to admit a new subscriber. I think such a power as that must be inherent in the managers of a body of this description. I say for good cause, and it might be that there are very few cases in which you could make out good cause.

Solicitors, Preston, Stow, & Preston; Baker & Nairne.

---

Chan. Div. }
Buckley, J. } Feb. 14, 15.

TEBB v. CAVE. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Dwelling-house—Covenant for quiet enjoyment—Adjoining house of greater height—Injury to demised house—Smoking chimneys.

The erection by a lessor, of a building of such a height and so near the demised dwelling-house as to alter the ordinary currents of air and cause the wind to blow down the chimneys and make them smoke, and thus cause grievous annoyance to the lessee, is a physical interference with the house, and a breach of a covenant by the lessor that the lessee should enjoy the premises without any interference or disturbance by the lessor.

Action.

This was an action by the lessee of a dwelling-house for damages against the lessor for having erected a building which caused the chimneys of the demised house to smoke. The house in question was a three-storey house in the Finchley-road, Hampstead, and in June, 1895, the plaintiff, its owner, let it to the defendant, who was a physician and surgeon, for twenty-one years, at a rent of £130. The lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to use the house otherwise than as a private dwelling-house and the residence of a physician and surgeon; and by the lessor, that the lessee, observing and performing the covenants and agreement thereinbefore contained, "shall and may peaceably hold and enjoy the said premises during the term hereby granted, without any interruption or disturbance whatsoever from or by the said lessor or any person or persons lawfully or equitably claiming through, under, or in trust for them or either of them." The house was not actually finished at the date of the lease, but was so soon afterwards. The defendant knew at the time that the plaintiff intended to practice his profession in the house. The defendant was also owner of the adjoining land, and at the date of the lease, or shortly afterwards, he began to build upon it a building to be used as residential flats. This building stood on the side of the demised house, a few feet away from it, and in August after the lease it had reached some ten feet above the ground. It was subsequently finished, being carried several feet higher than the demised house. The consequence was that when the wind lay in certain quarters the chimneys of the plaintiff's house on the side next the new building smoked, and the plaintiff was unable to have fires lit in some of the best rooms of his house which he desired to use as bedrooms from time to time for his patients. To remedy this zinc extensions, or tall-boys, were placed upon the front stack of chimneys, and were carried across the intervening space to the defendant's building for support, and these proved beneficial; but the same thing could not be done to the stack of chimneys at the back. Cowls were, therefore, placed upon these latter chimneys, but they proved ineffectual to prevent the smoking. The consequence was that there was a grievous annoyance to the plaintiff through smoke. The plaintiff therefore brought this action for an injunction against the defendant erecting or permitting to remain erected upon his land any buildings so as to obstruct the access of air to the plaintiff's chimneys so as to cause them to smoke, and for damages for breach of the covenants and obligations of the lease. At the trial, however, the plaintiff did not press for a mandatory injunction, and the case proceeded upon the question of damages.

H. Terrell, Q.C., and Lyttelton Chubb, for the plaintiff.—The house was let for the purpose of being used as the residence of a physician and surgeon, and the defendant having rendered it unfit for that purpose is liable to an action for damages: Robinson v. Grave, 21 W. R. 223; Aldin v. Latimer, Clark, & Co., 42 W. R. 553, at p. 554, [1894] 2 Ch. 437, at p. 444. But beyond this he is liable for the injury caused to the house generally, whether under his covenant for quiet enjoyment, or as having acted in derogation of his grant: Sanderson v. Mayor of Berwick-upon-Tweed, 33 W. R. 67, L. R. 13 Q. B. D. 547; and see judgment of Lindley, M.R., in Robinson v. Kilvert, 37 W. R. 545, at p. 547, 41 Ch. D. 88, at p. 95. Dennett v. Atherton, 20 W. R. 442, L. R. 7 Q. B. 316, has been dissented from in the cases last cited.

Astbury, Q.C., and Popham, for the defendant.—The law has been carried to its extreme limits in Sanderson v. Mayor of Berwick, and the judgment of Fry, L.J., must be considered with reference to the particular facts of that case: see judgment of

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lindley, M.R., in Manchester, &c., Railway Co. v. Anderson, [1898] 2 Ch. 394, at p. 401, 47 W. R. Dig. 168. Aldin v. Latimer, Clark, & Co. was decided upon the question of derogation from grant, and is no authority against the defendant, in an action on the covenant for quiet enjoyment. The defendant has a good defence to the charge of derogation in the knowledge by the plaintiff of the defendant's intention. Mere annoyance or inconvenience to the lessee is not sufficient to give an action upon the covenant: Jenkins v. Jackson, 37 W. R. 253, 40 Ch. D. 71; Robinson v. Kilvert. To give rise to an action there must be a physical interference with the demised property: Manchester, &c., Railway Co. v. Anderson. Interference with light or air is not actionable under a covenant for quiet enjoyment or as being in derogation of grant: Potts v. Smith, 16 W. R. 891, L. R. 6 Eq. 311, and Birmingham, &c., Banking Co. v. Ross, 36 W. R. 914, L. R. 38 Ch. D. 295. In no case has the interference with access of air causing chimneys to smoke been held actionable, although it was the second count in Davies v. Marshall, 9 W. R. 866, 10 C. B. N. S. 697, 709.

BUCKLEY, J.—The plaintiff's case has been put in two ways. He says he is entitled to recover in the first place under the covenant for quiet enjoyment because the acts complained of are an interference with the quiet enjoyment the defendant covenanted to give him; and secondly, that apart from that or in addition to that, the acts which have been done have been in derogation from the grant made to him by the lease. The cases which have been referred to on those two heads to some extent overlap each other, and I do not know that it is desirable or useful to keep them separate. When the lease of the house was granted the defendant knew that the plaintiff proposed to practice his profession of a physician and surgeon there, and this fact was, upon the authority of Robinson v. Grave, relied on as making the act of the defendant a derogation from grant. I do not think there is much to be made of that point. I have no doubt that a physician and surgeon does not like smoky chimneys, but I do not know that he dislikes them more than anyone else. Whether his house is occupied by patients, or by visitors, or by himself and his family, he is quite entitled to enjoy it in a condition of reasonable comfort. The next case cited, Dennett v. Atherton, was much nearer the point. If the law as there stated by Willes, J., was the law now I should have some difficulty in deciding in the plaintiff's favour. But that case was considered and commented on in Sanderson v. The Mayor of Berwick-upon-Tweed, where Fry, L.J., delivering the judgment of the court, said: "In coming to this conclusion we have not lost sight of the observations on the nature of such a covenant which were made by Willes, J., in Dennett v. Atherton. But it appears to us to be in every case a question of fact whether the quiet enjoyment of the land has or has not been interrupted, and where the ordinary and lawful enjoyment of the demised land is substantially interfered with by the acts of the lessor, or those lawfully claiming under him, the covenant appears to us to be broken, although neither the title nor the possession of the land may be otherwise affected." It is said by the defendant, and said truly, that that case is the utmost limit to which the law has been carried. It went beyond the question of title and possession, and to cases where the enjoyment of the demised land was substantially interfered with by the acts of the lessor. That case is again referred to in the judgment of Lindley, L.J., in Robinson v. Kilvert, 37 W. R., at p. 547, 41 Ch. D., at p. 96. Further observations upon the question will be found in the judgment of Stirling, J., in Aldin v. Latimer, Clark, & Co., where the question arose both as to covenant for quiet enjoyment and as to derogation from grant. The defendant cited the observations of Lindley, M.R., in Manchester, &c., Railway Co. v. Anderson, where he says: "Even the judgment of Fry, L.J., in the case that carried it farthest, Sanderson v. Mayor of Berwick, in which he says that anything which substantially interferes with the enjoyment by the tenant is a breach of that covenant, must be taken with reference to the facts then before the court. . . . But to say that partly blocking up a street, which is an inconvenience to the public and an inconvenience to anyone residing near the place is a breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment, is going far beyond any authority I am aware of." That is the greatest qualification of Sanderson v. Mayor of Berwick which, as far as I know, is to be found. In these circumstances I have to consider whether the defendant in building so as to cause the smoke to be driven down the plaintiff's chimneys was or was not doing something which substantially affected the plaintiff in his enjoyment of the house, although it did not affect either his title or possession. It has been submitted that to be actionable there must be something in the nature of a physical interference with the land demised. The defendant has interposed something which causes the ordinary currents of wind which might or would be harmless in themselves to be diverted by an obstruction, and the wind to be driven down the chimneys, with the result that they smoke. It seems to me that that is a physical interference with the enjoyment of the plaintiff's house, and is within the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and is a breach of it. In these circumstances I need not consider how the matter would have stood upon the question of derogation from grant, in connection with which the plaintiff relies upon facts in respect of the nature of his occupation of his house. I rest my decision upon the covenant for quiet enjoyment.

Order for inquiry as to damages.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Thorneycroft & Willis.

Solicitors for defendant, Newman, Paynter, & Co.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 31.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LONDON. (a.)

Justices—Appeal—Order for maintenance of pauper— 43 Eliz. c. 2, ss. 6, 7—Poor Relief Act, 1819 (59 Geo. 3, c. 12), s. 26—Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 122), s. 36—Police (Metropolis) Act, 1839 (2 & 3 Vict. c. 71), s. 50.

There is no appeal to quarter sessions from an order of justices against relatives for the maintenance of a pauper.

An order by a metropolitan police magistrate against the relative of a pauper that he should pay 2*s.* 6*d. a week towards the maintenance of such pauper is not an order "in which the sum or penalty adjudged to be paid" is "more than three pounds" within section* 50 of the Police (Metropolis) Act, 1839.

Rule nisi for a certiorari to quash an order of the London Quarter Sessions.

---

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 4th of May, 1899, orders were made by the magistrate of the Greenwich police-court against John Grist and Walter Grist, the illegitimate sons of Mary Ann Grist, that they should pay to the guardians of the Greenwich Union the sum of two shillings and sixpence a week, each, towards the relief and maintenance of Mary Ann Grist, who was poor and unable to work and had become chargeable to the union.

The Grists appealed to the London Quarter Sessions, who quashed the order, on the ground that the Grists, being illegitimate, were not liable to contribute to the support of their mother.

The guardians of the Greenwich Union, at whose instance the original order was made, did not appear before the quarter sessions, but they obtained the present rule nisi to quash the order of the quarter sessions, on the ground that the justices had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

Proceedings for an order for the maintenance of poor and impotent persons are taken under section 7 of 43 Eliz. c. 2, as amended by section 36 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868.

Section 7 of 43 Eliz. c. 2 enacts as follows: "The father and grandfather, and the mother and grandmother, and the children of every poor, old, blind, lame, and impotent person, or other poor person not able to work, being of a sufficient ability, shall at their own charges relieve and maintain every such poor person in that manner, and according to that rate, as by the justices of peace of that county where such sufficient persons dwell, or the greater number of them, at their general quarter sessions shall be assessed."

Section 26 of the Poor Relief Act, 1819, gave to any two or more justices for the county in which "such sufficient person" shall dwell the same power as, by virtue of section 7 of 43 Eliz. c. 2, the justices in their general quarter sessions had.

Section 36 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868, enacts as follows: "So much of the Act of the forty-third Elizabeth, chapter two, and the fifty-ninth George the Third, chapter twelve, as enables orders of maintenance to be made by justices having jurisdiction in the place where the persons upon whom they are to be made dwell, and as prescribes the penalty for disobedience, and section 78 of the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834 shall in respect of any order to be made hereafter be repealed; and such orders shall be made by the justices in petty session assembled at their usual place of meeting, having jurisdiction in the union or parish to which the poor person in whose behalf the same shall be sought to be made shall be chargeable, and shall be entered in the manner prescribed by the said Act of the eleventh and twelfth Victoria, chapter forty-three, for enforcing orders of justices."

Section 6 of 43 Eliz. c. 2 provides "that if any person or persons shall find themselves aggrieved with any sess or tax, or other act done by the said churchwardens and other persons, or by the said justices of peace, that then it shall be lawful for the justices of peace at their general quarter sessions, or the greater number of them, to make such order therein as to them shall be thought convenient, and the same to conclude and bind all parties."

W. M. Thompson showed caused on behalf of J. and W. Grist.—There is an appeal from an order for maintenance to the quarter sessions by virtue of section 6 of 43 Eliz. c. 2, which has not been repealed. The justices of the peace mentioned in section 7 are the same as those mentioned in section 6, from which an appeal is therein given. The words "at their general quarter sessions" in section 7 merely indicate that the assessment of the "sufficient persons" is to be made within the quarter sessions district in which they reside, and do not mean that the jurisdiction is to be exercised by the quarter sessions. Section 50 of the Police (Metropolis) Act, 1839, provides for an appeal from a metropolitan police magistrate to quarter sessions in every case of a summary order or conviction in which the sum or penalty adjudged to be paid exceeds three pounds. An order for the payment of two shillings and sixpence a week is an order within the meaning of that section.

Humphries, in support of the rule.—There is no right of appeal to quarter sessions. Under section 7 of 43 Eliz. c. 2, orders for maintenance were to be made by the quarter sessions. Section 6, therefore, could confer no right of appeal. The Poor Relief Act, 1819, gives to petty sessions a concurrent right to make orders for maintenance, and the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868, takes the jurisdiction from quarter sessions and from the set of petty sessions mentioned in the Poor Relief Act, 1819, and gives it to another set of petty sessions. Section 78 of the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834, merely gives directions as to enforcing the orders when made. In none of these provisions is any mention made of an appeal to quarter sessions. The orders in this case are not orders adjudging the payment of a sum or penalty exceeding three pounds, within the Police (Metropolis) Act, 1839.

CHANNELL, J.—The rule must be made absolute. There is clearly no appeal to quarter sessions from an order of the petty sessions ordering a person to contribute to the maintenance of his mother. The power to make these orders was originally given by 43 Eliz. c. 2 to the quarter sessions. It is true that in the same Act a right of appeal is given from acts done by justices, but that means only acts done by justices out of quarter sessions. It is doubtful how far that right of appeal exists at the present time, because a code relating to appeals has been enacted which might be held to take the place of the general provisions of the Act of Elizabeth.

The Poor Relief Act, 1819, gave to the petty sessions the same power to make orders as the quarter sessions had. That Act gave no right of appeal from the order of petty sessions, nor have any of the subsequent Acts done so. The result is that no such appeal exists. None of the appeals given by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts appear to fit the case; but I am inclined to think that where imprisonment is ordered there is an appeal.

It remains to consider whether there is a right of appeal under section 50 of the Police (Metropolis) Act, 1839, on the ground that the order was for the payment of a sum exceeding £3. The order in this case was one the payments under which might or might not exceed £3. That does not, however, make it an order for the payment of that amount. If the old woman died or received a legacy or obtained employment, the payments under the order would cease.

BUCKNILL, J., concurred.

Rule made absolute.

Solicitors for J. and W. Grist, Foy & Co.

Solicitors for the Guardians of Greenwich Union, Saw & Co.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). Dec. 15.

FOX v. STAR NEWSPAPER (LIMITED). (a.)

Practice—Nonsuit—Discontinuance—Ord. 26, r. 1.

A plaintiff can no longer elect to be nonsuited. Should he wish to discontinue the action at the trial, he must do so under ord. 26, r. 1, by leave of the judge.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (46 W. R. 340, [1898] 1 Q. B. 636) affirmed.

Appeal from judgment of Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, Chitty, and Collins, L.JJ., 46 W. R. 340, [1898] 1 Q. B. 636), affirming that of the Lord Chief Justice.

The action was brought for an alleged libel. At the trial before Lord Russell, C.J., and a special jury, the plaintiff's counsel said he should offer no evidence, and claimed to be nonsuited.

The Lord Chief Justice said he could not enter a judgment of nonsuit, and directed that judgment should be entered for the defendants. This judgment was affirmed by the Court of Appeal; and the plaintiff again appealed.

The appellant in person.

Blake Odgers, Q.C., Temple Franks, and L. Williams for the respondents, were not called upon.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—This was an action for libel. After the jury had been sworn and the pleadings opened, the plaintiff claimed to be nonsuited. The Lord Chief Justice held that he was not entitled to be nonsuited, and directed a verdict for the defendants. The sole question on this appeal is, whether the old system by which a plaintiff at his own election could lose his writ as it was said, and at his election bring another action for the same cause, is still a system which exists in our law. I am very clearly of opinion that it does not. Our whole system has been changed, and I think the reason why the word "nonsuit" itself is not now to be found in the rules is that it was determined that the power of a plaintiff at common law to claim a nonsuit, or the plaintiff in equity to dismiss his bill at his own option, should no longer be permitted, and it is probable that the word discontinuance was supposed to apply to both forms of procedure, both at common law and in equity. Accordingly, by ord. 26, r. 1, the only mode by which a plaintiff can submit to defeat is under that order, unless he allows the proceedings to go on until the verdict is recorded against him. The word "discontinuance" no doubt had under the former system the more limited application, and the old system of nonsuit is manifestly no longer capable of being reconciled with the new procedure either in form or substance. The substance is that when it once comes into court, and when the plaintiff offers no support to his action, there must be a verdict for the defendant. This was the course pursued by the Lord Chief Justice. I think it was entirely right, and I move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lords MACNAGHTEN, MORRIS, and SHAND concurred.

Judgment appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for appellant, J. G. Lincoln.

Solicitors for respondents, Harrison & Davies.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) Feb. 22.

BRENDA STEAMSHIP CO. (LIMITED) v. T. & H. GREEN. (a.)

Ship—Charter-party—"Cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside steamer"—"Any custom of the port to the contrary notwithstanding"—Exclusion of custom.

By a charter-party a ship was to proceed to the Surrey Commercial Docks and there deliver a cargo of timber, "the cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside at charterer's risk and expense, any custom of the port to the contrary notwithstanding."

A custom of the port of London with regard to timber ships required the shipowner to place the timber either into barges or on to the quay.

Held, that the custom of the port was excluded by the charter-party, and that the charterers were bound to pay the expense of taking the cargo from the ship's rail to the barges or on to the quay.

Appeal from the judgment of Mathew, J., reported in 4 Com. Cas. 209.

The plaintiffs were the owners of the steamship Brenda, and the defendants were the charterers.

By a charter-party, which was in the form known as the Chamber of Shipping Wood Charter (Scandinavia and Finland), 1898, The Brenda was to proceed to ports in the Baltic and there load a cargo of timber, and being so loaded, was to proceed to the Surrey Commercial Docks, and there deliver the same; "the cargo to be brought to and taken from alongside the steamer at charterers' risk and expense, any custom of the port to the contrary notwithstanding." The charter-party was in print, the names of the ports being written in.

The sum claimed by the plaintiffs in this action represented the cost of discharging the cargo at the Surrey Commercial Docks from the ship's rail into barges and on to the quay, which sum had been paid by the plaintiffs under protest to the stevedores employed in the discharge of the ship.

For the purposes of the action it was admitted that, in the absence of any provision in the charter-party negativing it, there was a custom in the port of London with regard to timber ships which enlarged the ordinary meaning of "alongside" and "delivery," by requiring the shipowner to do work outside his ship in placing the timber into barges or on to the quay, but that such custom did not require him to stow timber in the barge or to stack it on the quay.

Mathew, J., held that the custom of the port was excluded by the charter-party and gave judgment for the plaintiffs for the amount claimed.

The defendants appealed.

English Harrison, Q.C., and D. C. Leck, for the defendants.—The present form of charter-party is new. It is a general form of charter, being in a printed form, and is to be read as applicable to other ports besides London. The words "any custom of the port notwithstanding" ought to be construed as extending only to the words immediately preceding, "at charterers' risk and expense," and not to the words "to be brought to and taken from alongside the steamer." The question of what is "alongside" the steamer is still governed by the custom of each port, but any custom as to risk and expense in other respects is excluded. The meaning placed on the words "to be taken from alongside" in Aktieselkalb Helios v. Ekman, [1897] 2 Q. B. 83, 2 Com. Cas. 70, 163, 45 W. R. Dig. 149, is the correct one.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They also referred to Stephens v. Wintringham, 3 Com. Cas. 169; The Nifa, [1892] P. 411, 41 W. R. Dig. 223.

T. E. Scrutton, for the plaintiffs, was not called upon.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of opinion that the judgment of the learned judge is right. The question is whether the shipowners or the charterers are to bear the expenses of taking the cargo from the ship's rail and placing it in barges or on to the quay. Apart from any custom of the port, all that a shipowner has to do to deliver the cargo is to offer the cargo to the consignee over the ship's rail. The work of discharging has been called a joint operation, because, though one set of labourers frequently does the whole of the work, the shipowners' part of the discharge is finished when the cargo has been put over the ship's rail, it being the duty of the consignee to take it from the shipowner there. The charter-party here has, in my opinion, eliminated the custom of the port. I cannot agree with the contention that the words of exclusion refer only to the immediately preceding words, "at charterers' risk and expense"; they refer to the whole sentence. The custom of the port of London therefore being eliminated from the case, it was the duty of the charterers to take the cargo from the shipowners when put over the ship's rail. They did not do so, and the shipowners in consequence incurred the expense of taking it from the ship's rail to the barges and on to the quay. The shipowners are entitled to recover that expense from the charterers. With regard to the cases which have been referred to, the contest in each of them was whether the custom of the port was or was not inconsistent with the charter-party. The words in this charter-party cut out the custom altogether. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Apart from the custom of the port, the word "alongside" means at the ship's rail. If therefore the custom of the port is, as I think it clearly is, excluded by the express terms of the charter-party, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the expense of taking the cargo from the ship's rail as an expense which ought to have been borne by the charterers.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. I think that the argument of the defendants is too fine. The meaning of the charter-party is that, in considering the relative obligations of the shipowners and the charterers as to loading and discharging the cargo, the custom of the port is to be disregarded, and the relative obligations are to be determined by the general law.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Botterell & Roche.

Solicitors for the defendants, Lowless & Co.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Feb. 16.

KIMBER AND OTHERS v. ADMAMS. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Covenant—Restrictive covenant—Meaning of "house"—Flats.

The term "house" in a restrictive covenant in a conveyance on sale prohibiting the erection of more than a certain number of houses on a certain piece of land, will be construed, in the absence of indications to the contrary, as being equivalent to a block of flats, but not to each single flat.

This was an appeal from a decision of Cozens-Hardy, J., the substantial effect of which was that the term "house" in a restrictive covenant in a conveyance on sale must not be construed as synonymous with "flat."

By an indenture dated the 24th of December, 1885, four pieces or parcels of land situate in, and having a frontage of 400 feet to, Turney-road, Dulwich, were conveyed by the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Co. to J. C. Lovell and W. M. Yetts, in consideration of the sum of £800, and the said J. C. Lovell and W. M. Yetts thereby covenanted with the said railway company that no house should be erected on any part of the said four plots of less value than £500, and that not more than ten houses in all should be erected on the said four plots.

By four several indentures dated respectively the 20th of October, 1887, the 24th of July, 1888, the 2nd of September, 1889, and the 10th of September, 1892, certain portions of the aforesaid four plots of land (amounting together to one-half thereof) were conveyed to the respective plaintiffs; and by an indenture dated the 16th of November, 1899, the remaining half of the said four plots was conveyed to the defendant. All the above five indentures of conveyance lastly hereinbefore mentioned were expressly made subject to a restrictive covenant similar to that contained in the indenture of the 24th of December, 1885.

The defendant having proposed to erect on his half of the said four plots of land, and having already commenced to erect, four blocks of flats, each of which was planned to contain four separate flats—making sixteen flats in all—the plaintiffs moved before Cozens-Hardy, J., on the 26th of January, 1900, for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendant from proceeding with his proposed buildings, on the ground that the latter were a breach of the aforesaid restrictive covenant. It appeared from the evidence read at the trial that each of the proposed flats was intended to consist of two living rooms, a kitchen, a scullery, and offices, and would be calculated to let at about 7s. 6d. a week. The defendant admitted by his counsel (though only for the purposes of the motion) that he was bound, as between himself and the plaintiffs, by the terms of the said restrictive covenant. Cozens-Hardy, J., decided, however, that a flat was not a house within the meaning of the covenant, and declined to make the order asked for. From this decision the plaintiffs now appealed.

Cozens-Hardy, for the appellants.—A flat is substantially a separate house: Rogers v. Hosegood, ante, p. 202; Attorney-General v. Mutual Tontine Westminster Chambers Association (Limited), 24 W. R. 996, 1 Ex. D. 469. It is certainly a separate house for the purposes of burglary and house-breaking: Evans and Finch's case, Cro. Car. 473; Lee v. Gansel, 1 Cowp. 1. Certainly, too, it was a separate house under the old Franchise Law of 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45). I rely also on Chapman v. Royal Bank of Scotland, 30 W. R. 81, 7 Q. B. D. 136, per Huddleston, B., at p. 140, and Yorkshire Fire Insurance Co. v. Clayton, 30 W. R. 174, 8 Q. B. D. 421. Popular language would never call a block of flats a house.

Buckmaster, for the respondent, was not called upon.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that, in my opinion, the judgment of the learned judge below is perfectly correct. [The learned judge read the covenant.] What does the word "house" mean in this covenant? Does it refer to the way in which the building is to be sub-divided and let? I think not. I know, of course, perfectly well that there are senses in which a portion of a house may be regarded as a separate house—for the purposes, for instance, of rating and the franchise. But when you come to use "house" in documents of this description, that interpretation can no longer be applied.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. I assent, however, to the plaintiffs' argument so far as this, that I admit that, in construing this restrictive covenant, we must have some regard to its object. And if I found myself in this position, that I could see no object in this covenant so long as the term "house" were limited to a mere brick and mortar erection in its entirety, I should certainly go further and put on it a meaning that would cover its user as well. But that is not the case here. Anyone, I think, who is familiar with building estates in the neighbourhood of London will find no difficulty in discovering the object of this covenant, even if he be content to take the term "house" in its ordinary meaning of a brick and mortar erection in its entirety.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Todd, Dennes, & Lamb; Cree & Sons.

---

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) Feb. 5.

SPENCER v. LIVETT, FRANK, & SON AND JOHN AIRD & CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Compensation for injury by accident —"Factory"—"Shipbuilding yard"—Ship in dock being repaired—Factory and Workshop Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 16), s. 93; Sched. IV., Part II., cl. 24—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.

By section 7, sub-section 2, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, a "factory" has the same meaning as in the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1891.

By section 93 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, non-textile factory means any premises named in Part II. of Schedule IV., which, by clause 24, includes "shipbuilding yards"—that is to say, premises in which any ships are made, finished, or repaired.

Held, that an ordinary dock in which a ship is repaired is not a "shipbuilding yard," and therefore not a "factory" within the Act of 1897.

Appeal from the award of the Southampton County Court judge under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The respondent on the appeal claimed compensation from Messrs. Livett, Frank, & Son, the appellants, and from John Aird & Co. for personal injuries by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment.

The appellants were ship's chandlers, who also undertook the painting of ships.

The British India Steam Navigation Co. employed the appellants to paint the inside of their steamship Jelunga, which was then at Southampton Docks. She was accordingly taken into the inner dock and made fast to the dock quay. For the purpose of painting her it was necessary to remove a quantity of stone ballast from her hold. By arrangement with the appellants, Messrs. John Aird & Co. undertook to do this part of the work, and for this purpose the appellants selected a number of men, including the respondent, who were paid by John Aird & Co., but who were under the control of the appellants' foreman.

The ballast was taken out of the ship's hold by means of the ship's crane worked by hydraulic power, which, together with the machinery which worked it, was wholly on board the ship. The crane was worked by one of the ship's crew. The ballast was put into a bucket attached to the end of the chain of the crane and lowered into barges belonging to John Aird & Co., and lying alongside the ship. While the respondent was in the hold filling the bucket the crane was set in motion without notice and the bucket struck and injured him. The respondent claimed compensation against both the appellants (Messrs. Livett, Frank, & Co.) and John Aird & Co., and the appellants clamed an indemnity against John Aird & Co. in case they were held liable to pay compensation.

The inner dock where the ship was lying was practically surrounded by warehouses, and on the dock quays there were a number of cranes placed at intervals which were used in loading and discharging ships.

It appeared that a firm, called Messrs. Day, Summers, & Co., were at the same time putting new ceilings in the ship, and one of the witnesses stated that it was a customary thing for Day, Summers, & Co. to do repairs to ships in that and any other dock, wherever they could get work.

The county court judge found that at the time of the accident the respondent was solely in the employment of the appellants, and not of John Aird & Co., and was employed in and about the crane and machinery which was being used to discharge the ballast; that the appellants were the "undertakers," and had at the time of the accident the actual use and occupation of the dock in which The Jelunga was, and were temporarily using the ship's engine and crane for the purpose of unloading the ballast from the ship into the dock; that the dock in which The Jelunga was, including the quay and all that part of the dock filled with water, was a "factory" within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897; that the ship's engine and crane used to discharge the ballast was a "factory" within the meaning of the Act; that it was the usual and ordinary course of business that ships should be repaired in the dock in question both as to the ship itself and her machinery; that The Jelunga was on this occasion in the dock for the purpose, amongst others, of repair, and was actually in course of being repaired at the time of the accident; and that the ship's engine and crane were being used in the performance of work necessary to be performed for repairing and painting the ship as described in the evidence. The learned judge came to the conclusion that the respondent was employed on or about machinery used in the process of unloading into a barge, and therefore on to a dock within section 23, sub-section 1, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and that consequently he was employed "on or in or about a factory," within section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897; and further, that by section 93 of the Factory Act, 1878, and

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Schedule IV., Part II., clause 24*, the dock was a "factory" within the Act of 1897. He accordingly made an award in favour of the respondent for £40, and held that the appellants were not entitled to be indemnified by John Aird & Co.

R. M. Bray, Q.C., and S. H. Emanuel, for the appellants.—The first point decided by the county court judge—namely, that the respondent, being employed on or about machinery used in the process of unloading from a ship on to a barge in a dock, was employed in or about a "factory" within section 23, sub-section 1, of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895, and therefore came within section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is now covered by the decision in Hennessey v. McCabe, ante, p. 231, [1900] 1 Q. B. 491. That case, which followed Flowers v. Chambers, 47 W. R. 513, [1899] 2 Q. B. 142, is conclusive upon the point against the respondent. The second question is whether the dock comes within the definition of "shipbuilding yard" in clause 24 of Part II. of Schedule IV. to the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. It would be stretching the language of the enactment beyond all reason to hold that an ordinary dock is a "shipbuilding yard," that is, a place where vessels are repaired, merely because some repairs are executed upon one of the ships in the dock.

Clavell Salter, for the respondent.—It is admitted that the first point is concluded against the respondent by Hennessey v. McCabe. When the case was in the county court that decision had not been given. As regards the second point, it is a question of fact in each case whether the place is a "shipbuilding yard" within the definition in Schedule IV., Part II., clause 24, to the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. The circumstances of each case vary, and the county court judge has found as a fact that this dock was used as a place in which repairs to ships were executed, and was therefore a "shipbuilding yard." This ship was being painted and repaired in the inner dock.

He referred to section 7, sub-section 3, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

E. F. Lever, for John Aird & Co.

Bray, Q.C., was not called upon to reply.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In this case the ship was in Southampton Docks, and the owners wanted to have her painted inside. In order to do so she was brought into the inner dock, and it was necessary to take out her ballast. This was done by means of the ship's crane with a bucket attached to the end of the chain. The ballast was loaded into the bucket and lifted out of the hold by means of the crane and was then lowered into lighters alongside. The respondent was working in the hold, loading the bucket, when the crane was set in motion, and the bucket struck him and caused the injuries complained of. The question is whether the Act applies in such a case. As I have had occasion to say more than once the Legislature has excluded ships altogether from the Act. In Hennessey v. McCabe, a ship was being loaded in a dock from barges by means of a steam winch, and we held that the steam winch was not used in the process of loading from a dock, and was not therefore a "factory" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. That case was decided after the decision of the county court judge in the present case; otherwise his decision upon that point would have been different. That point therefore fails the respondent.

It was then said on his behalf that as section 7 of the Act of 1897 includes employment in a "factory," and as the word "factory" is to have the same meaning as in the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878—which defines a non-textile factory as, among other things, "any premises or places named in Part II. of the said schedule," that is, Schedule IV., "wherein . . . steam, water, or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there"—this inner dock is a factory within the Act. In the first place I cannot see that there was any manufacturing process carried on there. But that is not all. Among the premises named in Part II. of Schedule IV. are (clause 24) "Shipbuilding yards, that is to say, any premises in which any ships, boats, or vessels used in navigation are made, finished, or repaired." Can it be said that this inner dock was a shipbuilding yard? The phrase seems to me to mean a place where ships are built or repaired. I cannot think that upon the evidence in this case this dock was a shipbuilding yard. As my brother Romer pointed out during the argument, if the contention of the respondent is correct, one ship going into a dock where there are twenty or more ships loading and discharging for the purpose of being repaired would make the dock a factory so far as regards all the other ships. This point also fails the respondent. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add that section 7, sub-section 3, of the Act of 1897, so far from helping the respondent, is conclusive against him. It says that a workman employed in a factory which is a shipbuilding yard shall not be excluded from the Act by reason only that the accident arose outside the yard in the course of his work upon a vessel in any dock, river, or tidal water near the yard. That clearly implies that a dock like this in which a ship is being repaired is not a "shipbuilding yard."

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. In my opinion the Legislature in defining a "shipbuilding yard" contemplated premises where the business of building, finishing, or repairing ships is carried on. It does not include premises where by a mere accidental circumstance a ship is repaired. The definition must be dealt with in accordance with common sense. Premises are not necessarily a "shipbuilding yard" because a ship happens to be repaired there.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Speechly, Mumford, & Rodgers, for C. Lamport, Southampton.

Solicitor for the respondent, French & Co., for E. R. Ensor, Southampton.

Solicitor for John Aird & Co., J. Robinson.

---

* 60 & 61 Vict. c. 37, s. 7: "(1) This Act shall apply only to employment . . . on or in or about a . . . factory. . . (2) 'Factory' has the same meaning as in the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1891. . . ."

41 & 42 Vict. c. 16, s. 93: "The expression 'non-textile factory' in this Act means . . . any premises or places named in Part II. of the said schedule" (Schedule IV.) "wherein, or within the close or curtilage or precincts of which, steam, water, or other mechanical power is used in aid of the manufacturing process carried on there."

Schedule IV., Part II., clause 24: "'Shipbuilding yards,' that is to say, any premises in which any ships, boats, or vessels used in navigation are made, finished, or repaired."

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. — Jan. 11, 12.

PAYNE v. THE CORK CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Voluntary winding up—Reconstruction—Sale of assets—Dissentient member—Purchase of interest—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 161.

Where a company is being wound up voluntarily, and a shareholder has dissented from a sale to a new company, he cannot be deprived by the articles of association from having the benefit of the provisions of section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862, relating to the purchase of his interest.

Motion.

This was a motion by the plaintiff, who was the holder of 200 shares in the defendant company, for an injunction to restrain the company and its voluntary liquidator from carrying into effect certain resolutions and agreements, which had been passed and confirmed by general meetings of the company, for the purpose of reconstructing the company on the footing of a sale of its undertaking and property to a new company in consideration of partly-paid shares in such new company.

The plaintiff had given notice to the liquidator of his dissent from the resolutions, and required him either to abstain from carrying the resolutions into effect or to purchase the interest of the plaintiff at a price to be determined in the manner specified by section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862. The liquidator took up the position that the plaintiff was precluded by articles 130 and 131 of the company's articles of association from acquiring the rights given to dissentient members by section 161. The plaintiff thereupon commenced these proceedings.

The Companies Act, 1862, s. 161, provides that where any company is proposed to be or is in the course of being wound up voluntarily, and the whole or a portion of its business or property is proposed to be sold to another company, the liquidators of the first-mentioned company may, with the sanction of a special resolution, receive in compensation for such sale, shares or other like interests in such other company for the purpose of distribution amongst the members of the company being wound up, and any sale so made by the liquidators shall be binding on the members of the company, subject to the proviso that a dissentient shareholder may, by giving notice to the liquidators in the manner prescribed by the section, require the liquidators either to abstain from carrying the resolution into effect or to purchase his interest at a price to be determined as thereinafter mentioned.

Articles 130 and 131 of the company's articles of association were as follows:

"130.—Any such liquidator may (irrespective of the powers conferred upon him by the Companies Acts and as an additional power), with the authority of a special resolution, sell the undertaking of the company, or the whole or any part of its assets, for shares fully or partly paid up or the obligations of or other interest in any other company, and may by the contract of sale agree for the allotment to the members direct of the proceeds of sale in proportion to their respective interests in the company, and in case the shares of this company shall be of different classes, may arrange for the allotment in respect of preference shares of this company, of obligations of the purchasing company, or of shares of the purchasing company with any preference or priority over or with a larger amount paid up than the shares allotted in respect of ordinary shares of this company, and may further by the contract limit a time at the expiration of which shares, obligations, or other interest not accepted or required to be sold shall be deemed to have been refused and be at the disposal of the liquidator or the purchasing company.

"131.—Upon any sale under the last preceding article or under the powers given by section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862, no member shall be entitled to require the liquidator either to abstain from carrying into effect the sale or the resolution authorizing the same or to purchase such member's interest in this company; but in case any member shall be unwilling to accept the shares, obligations, or interest to which under such sale he would be entitled, he may, within fourteen days of the passing of the resolution authorizing the sale, by notice in writing to the liquidator, require him to sell such shares, obligations, or interest, and thereupon the same shall be sold in such manner as the liquidator may think fit, and the net proceeds shall be paid over to the member requiring such sale."

Rowland Whitehead, for the plaintiff.

W. F. Hamilton, for the defendants, the company and its liquidator.

STIRLING, J., said: The question which arises on this motion is whether the plaintiff, who is a shareholder in the defendant company and has dissented from the sale which has been agreed to be made, and has been approved by a resolution of the company, to a new company to be formed in consideration of the issue of shares, has been deprived of the safeguards which are attached by section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862, to sales under that section.

Now, the question which has been raised before me is whether the articles of association effectually deprive the plaintiff, as a dissentient shareholder, of the benefits conferred by section 161, and two of the articles of association are relied upon—namely, articles 130 and 131. They are, as has been observed, two of a group of clauses which are found under the heading "Winding up," and they relate to sales in a winding up. [His lordship read the articles, and continued:]

Now, what has taken place is this. On the 20th of November, 1899, an extraordinary general meeting was held, at which the following resolutions were passed: "(1) That it is desirable to reconstruct the company, and accordingly, that the company be wound up voluntarily, and that Mr. Thomas Rees, of 12, Aldgate, E., be and is hereby appointed liquidator for the purposes of such winding up. (2) That the said liquidator be and he is hereby authorized to consent to the registration of a new company to be called the Cork Co. (Limited), with a memorandum and articles of association in the form of a draft signed for the purpose of identification by the chairman of this meeting. (3) That the draft agreement signed for the purpose of identification by the chairman of this meeting be and the same is hereby approved, and that the liquidator be and he is hereby authorized, pursuant to section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862, and to article 130 of the company's articles of association, to enter into an agreement with the proposed new company (when incorporated) in the terms of the said draft, with such modifications as he may from time to time deem expedient, and to carry the same into effect." Then, upon the 5th of December, those resolutions were confirmed. The liquidator has proceeded to enter into, and to carry into effect, an agreement to the effect stated in the third resolution. The plaintiff is a shareholder who opposed the passing of the resolutions and did not vote in favour of them at either of the meetings, and on the 9th of December he, by letter addressed to the liquidator, expressed his dissent from the special resolution, and required the liquidator to do one of two things, that is to say, either to abstain from carrying the resolution into effect, or to purchase the interest held by him at a price to be determined in manner specified in section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862. In answer to that application the liquidator sends a letter in which he states this: "The liquidator has been advised that the provisions of articles 130 and 131 of the company's articles of association, copies of which are annexed, preclude members from acquiring the rights given to dissentient members by section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862. Under these circumstances we presume you would wish the liquidator to assume that your letter of dissent is a notice under article 131 that you require him to sell the shares in the new company to which you would be entitled under the scheme of reconstruction, and that the net proceeds thereof should in due course be paid over to you." The plaintiff does not take that view of his letter, and has brought this action, and he now moves for an injunction to restrain the liquidator from carrying the agreement into effect without making proper provision for the payment to him of what may be found coming to him under the provisions of sections 161 and 162 of the Act.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Now, the question which I have to decide is whether these articles of association, 130 and 131, preclude the plaintiff from insisting on his rights under section 161. Under section 133 of the Act of 1862 certain consequences follow from a voluntary winding up of the company. It is provided: "The property of the company shall be applied in satisfaction of its liabilities pari passu, and subject thereto shall, unless it be otherwise provided by the regulations of the company, be distributed amongst the members according to their rights and interests in the company." Then liquidators are to be appointed for the purpose of winding up the affairs of the company and distributing its property. Then, "Upon the appointment of liquidators all the power of the directors shall cease, except in so far as the company in general meeting or the liquidators may sanction the continuance of such powers." Then "The liquidators may, without the sanction of the court, exercise all powers by this Act given to the official liquidator," and among those is a power "to sell the real and personal and hereditable and movable property, effects, and things in action of the company by public auction or private contract, with power to transfer the whole thereof to any person or company or to sell the same in parcels" (Companies Act, 1862, s. 95).

Now, a power to sell means, in the absence of any contract, a power to sell for money, and a person who exercises such a power is bound to sell for money. But the Legislature has seen fit to extend the powers of voluntary liquidators by section 161, and has provided that: "Where any company is proposed to be or is in the course of being wound up altogether voluntarily and the whole or a portion of its business or property is proposed to be transferred or sold to another company the liquidators of the first-mentioned company may, with the sanction of a special resolution of the company by whom they were appointed conferring either a general authority on the liquidators or an authority in respect of any particular arrangement, receive in compensation or in part compensation for such transfer or sale of shares policies or other like interests in such other company for the purpose of distribution amongst the company being wound up, or may enter into any other arrangement whereby the members of the company being wound up may in lieu of receiving cash, shares, policies, or other like interests, or in addition thereto, participate in the profits of or receive any other benefits from the purchasing company." I pause there to observe that the agreement which was sanctioned by the resolution, and which has been agreed to be carried out, is a sale which falls within the terms of that portion of section 161. It is a sale in which they are receiving as compensation, or part compensation, certain shares in the new company. But the power which is conferred by that section is not absolute. It is subject to this proviso. It says: "Any sale made or arrangement entered into by the liquidators in pursuance of this section shall be binding on the members of the company being wound up, subject to this proviso, that if any member of the company being wound up, who has not voted in favour of the special resolution passed by the company of which he is a member at either of the meetings held for passing the same, expresses his dissent from any such special resolution in writing addressed to the liquidators or one of them, and left at the registered office of the company not later than seven days after the date of the meeting at which such special resolution was passed, such dissentient member may require the liquidators to do one of the following things as the liquidators may prefer—that is to say, either to abstain from carrying such resolution into effect, or to purchase the interest held by such dissentient member at a price to be determined in manner hereinafter mentioned, such purchase-money to be paid before the company is dissolved, and to be raised by the liquidators in such manner as may be determined by special resolution."

Now, the object of this section is very clearly explained by Chitty, L.J., sitting as a judge of first instance in the case of Cotton v. Imperial and Foreign Agency and Investment Corporation, [1892] 3 Ch. 454, at p. 460, 41 W. R. Dig. 36. He says: "The 161st section is in substance this: When there is a winding up, whether voluntarily or by the court or under supervision, the duty of the liquidators under the Act of Parliament is to turn all the assets of the company into money, and having paid the creditors and the costs of the winding up then to distribute among the members according to their equities the surplus, if there be any. Then it was seen that there were many cases in which a company might wind itself up voluntarily or the like merely for the purpose of reconstruction, and that it would be very advantageous that there should be taken a power in substance for the company to reconstruct itself. That was one of the objects that was sought to be accomplished by the 161st section; but the gist of the enactment is this—that the liquidators in a winding up, instead of selling for money, may sell for shares; but as a safeguard against that, and against imposing possibly a liability upon a member of the company which is being wound up by seeking to force upon him shares which were not fully paid up, the Legislature has, by way of protecting his interest, said in substance that if he dissents he may receive the value of his shares in money. That is, in short, an explanation of the meaning and effect of the 161st section. It relates to what may be done where there is a winding up." In the present case we have a sale in a winding up to which this section 161 relates. The articles of association by article 131 say: "Upon any sale under the last preceding article, or under the powers given by section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862, no member shall be entitled to require the liquidator either to abstain from carrying into effect the sale or the resolution authorizing the same, or to purchase such member's interest in this company."

Supposing then that this sale was carried out exclusively under section 161, would that bind the plaintiff so as to deprive him of his rights under section 161? It seems to me that it would not—that the article would be ultra vires for that purpose. The Legislature has conferred on voluntary liquidators a power of selling in a particular way, and it has attached to that, provisions which constitute a safeguard for the protection of dissentient shareholders, and in my opinion it is not competent for the company, by articles framed in this way, to deprive the shareholders of that protection. It seems to me that the language of Byrne, J., in the case of In re Peveril Gold Mines (Limited), 46 W. R. 198, [1898] 1 Ch. 122, at p. 126, with reference to a right conferred by another section, applies. He said this: "I am of opinion that the company had no right, having regard to the Act of Parliament, to enter into such contract as a condition and part of the general contract binding upon all shareholders, whatever separate or distinct bargain they might have the power to make with an individual who happened to be or to desire to become a shareholder. This article appears to be one more attempt to remove a statutory safeguard of the inexperienced intending shareholder. Not one per cent. of intending shareholders read the articles before applying for or accepting a transfer of shares, and a shareholder does not expect to find that he has entered into a special contract waiving his statutory rights." That seems to me to be applicable to the present case.

But then it is said that this is a sale which the company had power to authorize, and did authorize, by its articles of association, irrespective of section 161, and doubtless article 130 does purport to confer on the liquidator a power of doing this very thing irrespective of the powers conferred on him by the Companies Acts and by way of additional power. Then the question comes to this: Has the company power by its articles of association to confer such an additional power upon the liquidator? The Legislature has said that the liquidator shall sell for money, but it has conferred on a voluntary liquidator a power of selling for shares subject to certain safeguards. The first part of this article 130 purports to confer by way of addition on the liquidator the power of sale for shares, and by article 131 it purports to confer the power of doing so without regard to the safeguards imposed by section 161. Now, it seems to me that when the Legislature has conferred on a liquidator a power to do a particular thing, subject to certain safeguards being observed, it is not within the power of the company to say that the liquidator shall do the very same thing without regard to those safeguards. I take it that the meaning of the Legislature in imposing those safeguards is this, that the thing may be done, but if it is done it must be done in the way in which it has pointed out and in no other. The case is, in that respect, somewhat similar to the statutory power of borrowing. If a company is authorized to borrow up to a certain amount, that means that it may not borrow beyond, and it is well established that any attempt by the company to borrow beyond that amount is ultra vires. So here, the liquidator is authorized to do a particular thing in a particular way and on particular terms, and it seems to me it is beyond the powers of the company to authorize him to do the same thing upon other terms and in another way than that which is prescribed by the Legislature. Article 131 does not stop at the point to which I have read. It goes on: "But in case any member shall be unwilling to accept the shares, obligations, or interest to which under such sale he would be entitled, he may, within fourteen days of the passing of the resolution authorizing the sale, by notice in writing to the liquidator, require him to sell such shares, obligation, or interest, and thereupon the same shall be sold in such a manner as the liquidator may think fit, and the net proceeds shall be paid over to the member requiring such sale." Now, supposing that the earlier part of that article 131 were omitted—and practically for this purpose it must be omitted as being, in my opinion, ultra vires—this portion of the clause cannot be relied upon against the plaintiff. In that respect it falls precisely in terms within the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in Baring-Gould v. Sharpington Combined Pick and Shovel Syndicate, 47 W. R. 564, [1899] 2 Ch. 80. I desire to refer to the portion of the judgment of the Master of the Rolls which is found at p. 90 of the report in [1899] 2 Ch. as being in support of the view which I have already expressed with reference to the early part of article 131. The point which was decided precisely in Baring-Gould v. Sharpington Combined Pick and Shovel Syndicate was this, that a stipulation contained in the articles of association with reference to the mode in which the shareholders were to be paid did not constitute an agreement within section 162. The Master of the Rolls says this: "I come to the conclusion that there was no agreement between the company on the one side and Mr. Baring-Gould on the other which could deprive him of his rights as a dissentient member under section 162. Any contrary interpretation of that section would come to this, that the company could by the articles of association made beforehand—before there was any dispute with a dissentient member—bind all the members, and deprive them of the benefits conferred on them in the event of their becoming dissentient members under section 162. I do not think this can be done by the articles of association. This is my view of the joint effect of sections 16, 161, and 162." The Master of the Rolls there appears to be of opinion, as I read his judgment, that it is impossible by articles of association to deprive the dissentient members of the benefits conferred on them by section 161.

Then as to the case of Cotton v. The Imperial and Foreign Agency and Investment Corporation, the sale there purported to be made, was not a sale in a winding up, and that was the ground of the decision. It was a sale by a company as a going concern under the power conferred on it by the memorandum of association, and as the Lord Justice pointed out, the validity of that sale could not be impeached by the liquidator, but the question would be, when he received the shares, which were the consideration for the contract of sale, what he was to do with them. That does not apply to the present case, because this is on the face of it a sale in a winding up. In my judgment, therefore, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief which he asks, and there ought to be an injunction, unless the liquidator is willing to give an undertaking which seems to me may be very well in the form given by the liquidator in the case of Baring-Gould v. Sharpington Combined Pick and Shovel Syndicate, which is stated at p. 82 of the report—namely, not to part with the assets of the defendant company without setting apart a sufficient sum to answer what may be found due to the plaintiff.

Solicitors, Fraser & Christian; Ashurst, Morris, Crisp & Co.

Chan. Div. } Jan. 23.
Byrne, J. }

In re DUKE OF NORFOLK'S PARLIAMENTARY ESTATES. (a.)

Settled land—Scheme for improvement approved by trustees, who had not capital moneys in their hands—Improvements executed at expense of tenant for life—Reimbursement—Settled Land Act, 1882, ss. 21, 22, 25, 26.

Trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts may approve a scheme by the tenant for life for the execution of improvements thereunder, although at the time of giving such approval they have not in their hands capital moneys for the execution of such improvements; and when, after such approval, the tenant for life, with the knowledge of such trustees, has expended money for such purpose, it is lawful for the trustees, if such early expenditure is for the advantage of all parties concerned, and subject to the proper certificate being obtained, to reimburse him out of capital moneys which may subsequently come to their hands.

Summons.

This was an application under the Settled Land Act, 1882, by the Duke of Norfolk, as tenant-in-tail of certain Parliamentary estates, for the purpose of determining whether he was entitled to be reimbursed by his trustees for certain sums of money advanced by him for the purpose of paying for improvements executed on such estates.

The facts of the case were as follows:

Under section 58 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the applicant had the powers of a tenant-for-life over such estate. He had from time to time submitted to his trustees schemes for the improvement of the estates at a time when they had not in their hands any capital moneys or moneys sufficient to pay for such improvements. The applicant accordingly executed the improvements at his own expense. At the present time the trustees had capital moneys in their hands sufficient to pay for the improvements.

Ingle Joyce and Dixon, for the applicant.—Nothing in the Act requires that capital moneys must be in the hands of the trustees before a scheme is submitted to them for their approval. [They referred to sections 2 (9), 21 (3), 26 (2) (3) of the Settled Land Act, 1882; In re Millard's Settled Estates, 41 W. R. 577, [1893] 3 Ch. 116.] [BYRNE, J., referred to In re Marquis of Bristol's Settled Estates, 42 W. R. 46, [1893] 3 Ch. 161.] In In re Millard it is not stated that the trustees must have the capital moneys in their hands before they sanction a scheme.

They referred to Round v. Turner, [1889] W. N. 38; In re Tucker's Settled Estates, 43 W. R. 581, [1895] 2 Ch. 468; In re Hotchkin's Settled Estates, 35 W. R. 463, 35 Ch. D. 41.

Levett, Q.C., and Stone, for the trustees.—There is nothing in the Settled Land Act to allow such a dealing with capital moneys as is here proposed. [They referred to sections 21, 22, sub-section 3; In re Millard's Settled Estates, and Marquis of Bristol's Settled Estates.] To enable trustees to give their approval they must have the money in their hands. Otherwise it may happen that new trustees may be fettered in the exercise of their discretion by something that former trustees have done. Section 26, sub-section 2, shows that to a valid scheme the consent of the trustees is necessary.

Dixon, in reply.—In In re Hotchkin's Settled Estates there was no capital money in the hands of trustees when the improvements were executed.

He referred to Duke of Marlborough's Settlement, 34 W. R. 377, 32 Ch. D. 1.

BYRNE, J.—This case raises an important question under the Settled Land Act, 1882, and one which does not appear to have been the subject of reported decision; it is, whether or not trustees for the purposes of the Act may approve a scheme for improvements submitted to them by the tenant for life before they have moneys in their hands available for the proposed expenditure. There is a second question, which falls for decision in case the first should be answered in the affirmative—viz., whether or not, when a scheme has been approved in such circumstances, and the improvements have been executed and paid for by the tenant for life in anticipation of moneys becoming afterwards available for the purposes of the approved scheme, the trustees are entitled, either with or without the approval of the court, to reimburse the tenant for life the moneys so expended. The trustees may not apply capital moneys in their hands in or towards payment for improvements unless prior to the execution of the work a scheme has been submitted to and approved by them. There are no words in the Act in terms negativing the right of trustees to approve of a scheme in anticipation of moneys coming to their hands, but I have to consider the scope and provisions of the Act to see whether or not such a right is conferred upon them. It has already been determined in the case of In re Millard's Settled Estates that a prospective order cannot be made by the court authorizing payment by the trustees for work to be done under an approved scheme out of moneys not in their hands at the time when the order is asked for. That was a decision of the Court of Appeal turning upon section 26 (2) (iii.) and it was recognized by the Master of the Rolls in his judgment that there are no negative words to say the court cannot make such an order, but he points out that under the other clauses of the same sub-section the trustees cannot pay except upon certificates, which cannot be given prospectively, and takes that as an indication that it was never intended that the court should make a prospective order, and he states that he cannot find in the Act anything which authorizes the court to make prospective orders of the kind. That case does not decide the point now before me, although it has an important bearing upon it from the reasoning adopted, and I will mention particularly one passage in the Master of the Rolls' judgment where he says at p. 120: "What is wanted is protection—that is, protection for those interested in the land; and as practical men we know that to authorize a thing to be done is a very different thing from approving it when it has been done." It was urged on behalf of the tenant for life, and it is the fact, that in In re Millard the schemes had been approved by the trustees, and it was never suggested in argument, or in the judgments, that such approval was not within the power of the trustees, although the point, if a sound one, would have afforded a complete answer to the application; and the observation is of great weight, though it must not be pressed too far, as the point does not appear to have been suggested or argued and it may have been passed by as immaterial, having regard to the construction placed by the court upon the clause of the sub-section under which the order was sought. The case of In re Marquis of Bristol's Settled Estates was on an application made under section 15 of the Settled Land Act of 1890, and it determined that a prospective order could not be made under that section to take effect upon moneys which might thereafter arise, but in the course of his judgment Kekewich, J., in considering the meaning of section 26 of the Act of 1882, makes some observations ([1893] 3 Ch. 166) showing that in his view the use of the words "to be expended" points to moneys in hand, and he says: "It seems to me there would be very great difficulty in holding that if expenditure were sanctioned now, there being no money out of which that could be made, there would not be a charge which would have to be raised in the same way as any other charge on the land." To some extent this line of reasoning is applicable to an objection to a construction of the section which would give a power to approve a scheme in anticipation of subsequent receipt of moneys, as there would undoubtedly be grave difficulty, to say the least of it, in the way of refusing a subsequent order for payment on proper evidence that the moneys had been expended in accordance with the scheme previously approved, especially having regard to the fact that the scheme to be submitted under section 26 (1) must show the proposed expenditure for the execution of the improvement. In re Tucker's Estate, also an application under the Act of 1890, deals with the principle upon which the court ought to exercise its discretion in respect of allowing the tenant for life to be reimbursed moneys he has expended without first submitting any scheme, and the observations which have been referred to of the Master of the Rolls and Lopes, L.J., in that case about the duty of a tenant for life to submit a scheme must be read in view of the fact that it does not appear by the report that there were no capital moneys available at the time the tenant for life made the expenditure.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I do not think that section 2, sub-section 9, or section 33 of the Act really afford any assistance in the matter, and I only mention them to show that they have not been overlooked. Capital money arising under the Act shall, "when received," be invested in any of the modes pointed out by section 21 of the Act including (iii.) in payment for any improvement authorized by the Act. The words "when received" point to the expression "capital money arising under the Act" being used as including money to arise at a future date, and I do not see any good ground for limiting it so as to exclude moneys which may arise at a future time, though not receivable immediately or within any given period. Section 22, sub-section 1, provides that capital money shall, in order to its being invested or applied as aforesaid, be paid either to the trustees of the settlement or into court at the option of the tenant for life and shall be invested or applied by the trustees or under the direction of the court accordingly, and sub-section 2 provides that the investment or application by the trustees shall be made according to the direction of the tenant for life; section 25 describes improvements authorized by the Act; and then section 26 deals with the procedure to be adopted where the tenant for life is desirous that capital money shall be applied in or towards payment for an authorized improvement. The tenant for life may submit for approval to the trustees or to the court, as the case may require, a scheme for the execution of the improvement. I do not think that I ought to put so narrow a construction upon section 26, sub-section 2, as to hold that it means that the capital money must be actually in the hands of trustees before a scheme is approved by them; or upon section 26, sub-section 3, as to say that it means that the money must be actually in court before a scheme is approved, and, indeed, I think it is clear that a literal construction to that effect is impossible, and I may refer to section 22, sub-section 7, which shows that securities for capital money are not capital moneys, although they may be converted into money which shall be capital money arising under the Act. It would be a reductio ad absurdum to say that, there being thousands of pounds of what had been capital moneys invested in consols, and in court, or in the hands of the trustees, it is necessary as a preliminary to the approval of a scheme that the consols should be converted into actual cash. Then it is suggested that if there is money receivable under an existing contract either presently or in the near future, or if there be securities in court or in the hands of trustees capable of being immediately converted into cash, the amounts so receivable or capable of being turned into cash may in effect be regarded as money in court, or in the hands of the trustees, as the case may be, so as to be in substance and effect moneys in court or in hand; but I feel the difficulty that the moment a departure is made from the supposed literal construction the matter is very much at large, and I do not see where to draw the line. Is it to be at money immediately payable under a contract, money payable by instalments under a contract, money to be paid in a year, or in two years, or in twenty years? I was much impressed by the argument that if trustees or the court may approve a scheme before capital moneys are available, the tenant for life and the trustees or the court may be really committing the estate to an expenditure before the period arrives at which a judgment ought to be exercised, and section 53 of the Act and the observations of the Master of the Rolls and Kekewich, J., that I before quoted, are appealed to in support of this argument. But I think the true answer is to be found in this. The scheme of the Act is to give wide powers to the tenant for life and to give power of consent to trustees upon the footing that they will act fairly in the exercise of their respective powers, and that neither the trustees nor the court will sanction schemes which are improvident or which will unduly fetter any discretion which ought to be exercised at a later date; and there is always this safeguard that tenants for life and trustees joining in improvident schemes or not acting with a due regard to the interest of the remaindermen are running the risk of the possible establishment of a personal liability against themselves. The Act is framed for honest folk, and what are considered sufficient safeguards and protection are provided for the parties interested. I think the observation of the Master of the Rolls is to be read with regard to the subject-matter of the case before him, and that he is dealing with the case of safeguards provided by the Act before payment can be actually made, and not with the case of approval of a scheme. I can see many considerations weighing against the contrary view. Suppose, for example, a tenant for life is desirous of selling a portion of his estate with the special object of effecting what he considers a great improvement upon the remainder of it. I think it would be most unfortunate if he should be obliged first to sell and then to find that the trustees did not approve of his scheme. Upon the whole case and a consideration of the terms of the Act I have come to the conclusion that a scheme may be approved, although there are not at the time capital moneys in the hands of the trustees for carrying it out.

Upon the second question I am of opinion that, if after a proper scheme has been duly approved the tenant for life, with the knowledge of the trustees, bonâ fide expends money for the purpose of and in accordance with such scheme, early expenditure being for the advantage of all parties interested, there is no prohibition to be found in the Act against the trustees, when they have capital money in their hands, adopting his expenditure and recouping him what he has actually spent, subject to the proper certificate being obtained. The question of what might happen should the tenant for life die after his expenditure and before recoupment, and another tenant for life succeed and direct the moneys to be applied in some other way does not arise for decision, and I therefore express no opinion about it. I ought to add that in the present case there is not the faintest suggestion that the several schemes, the payments in anticipation by the tenant for life, and the repayments by the trustees have been otherwise than prudent and for the advantage of all persons interested.

Solicitors, Few & Co.

---

Chan. Div. } Farwell, J. } Dec. 13, 14.

HEXTER v. PEARCE. (a.)

Specific performance—Lease of minerals—Undivided moiety—Inconvenience.

An agreement by one of two tenants in common of land to make a lease of the minerals contained in his share can be enforced by specific performance.

Inconvenience caused by the other tenant in common having granted a lease of the minerals contained in his share to another person is not sufficient ground for the court to refuse specific performance in such a case: Price v. Griffith, 1 De G. M. & G. 80, distinguished.

Action for specific performance of a contract to make a lease of the clay and other minerals in or upon an undivided moiety of and in certain freehold lands.

The defendants, P. W. Pearce and his wife, were together entitled to the whole fee simple of an undivided moiety of certain lands at Kingsteignton. In 1894 they, together with the owners of the other moiety, by deed granted a licence to the defendant Wilkinson to dig and remove potter's clay from the fields in question and some other lands for five years from the 29th of September, 1893, upon certain terms as to rent and royalties.

In 1896 P. W. Pearce and his wife agreed with the plaintiffs to grant them "a full and proper lease to work, dig, and sell the clay or other minerals in and upon the said moiety of the lands" for seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years at the option of the plaintiffs from the expiration of the licence to the defendant Wilkinson.

Subsequently, in 1898, the defendant Wilkinson, who had received notice of the agreement last referred to, obtained from the defendants P. W. Pearce and his wife and the owners of the other undivided moiety a lease or licence to mine, dig, raise, and remove the clay in and from the entirety of the lands in question, and this lease purported to commence at the expiration of the former licence granted to him. The defendants Pearce consequently refused to carry out the agreement of 1896, and the plaintiffs brought the present action. The evidence showed that there was still a large quantity of the clay left in the land, and that it had often been worked simultaneously by different persons at different places.

Warmington, Q.C., and Badcock, Q.C., for the plaintiffs.—There is no direct authority for granting specific performance in a case as the present, but Burrow v. Scammell, 30 W. R. 310, 19 Ch. D. 175, and Porter v. Lopes, 7 Ch. D. 358, 26 W. R. Dig. 157 are similar. A tenant in common can do all that an owner can do; he can sell, lease, or dispose of his share of the property. To give only damages would be to give a tenant in common a right which the owner of the entirety has not. Specific performance is the appropriate remedy for the breach of a contract dealing with land. The reason for refusal, which consists in the fact that a decree for specific performance may result in a law suit, applies also to the case of a conveyance, and in that case it is clear that there would be no refusal.

Vernon Smith, Q.C., and Ward Coldridge, for the defendants Mr. and Mrs. Pearce.—This mine is one which cannot be satisfactorily worked in common. Our defence is twofold: (1) The agreement is too uncertain to be enforced; (2) it affects an undivided moiety of a mine and is therefore inconvenient: see the dictum of Knight-Bruce, L.J., in Price v. Griffith. 1 De G. M. & G. 80, at p. 84. The proper remedy in this case is damages and not specific performance.

T. L. Wilkinson, for the defendent Wilkinson.—The evidence shows that specific performance of this agreement would be impracticable.

Warmington, Q.C., replied.

FARWELL, J., after stating that in his opinion the agreement was not too uncertain to be enforced, and that there was a sufficient amount of the clay in question still remaining, continued as follows: The point in the case is therefore whether specific performance ought to be granted of a contract for letting an undivided moiety of mineral property, and I am asked to decide generally that the court will not grant specific performance of such a contract. No authority has been cited to me which shows the existence of such a rule, unless I could read the dictum of Knight-Bruce, L.J., in Price v. Griffith, as sufficient. The case was really decided, as was pointed out by Bacon, V.C., in Burrow v. Scammell, on the ground that the agreement was void for uncertainty. The dictum of the Lord Justice is in one sense merely a truism; but I think it means that there was a clear intention on the part of the lessor to grant a lease of the entirety and nothing else, and there would have been some hardship in compelling him to grant a lease of a moiety only when he did not intend it, having regard to the fact that it was a lease of mineral property. The present case is different in the material point that here there is a clear intention to grant a lease of the moiety. The case of Burrow v. Scammell is to some extent an authority, if authority were needed, for holding that the court will give specific performance of a contract relating to an undivided moiety. To my mind the whole doctrine of specific performance rests on the ground that a man is entitled in equity to have the specific article for which he has contracted, and is not bound to take damages instead. The right to sue on the contract is the same in law and in equity, but the remedies differ, and the court of equity will grant the equitable remedies in all cases unless there has been some conduct on the part of the plaintiff disentitling him to the relief in equity, or, in some rare cases unless there would be a great hardship imposed on an innocent grantor or lessor by reason of some mistake which he has made, although the other party has not contributed to it.

I think the case which Knight-Bruce, L.J., had in mind could fall into this second class. I am not aware that the court has ever taken into consideration the comparative convenience or inconvenience of the plaintiff and defendant apart from the considerations which I have mentioned. Whether the contract is convenient or not is for the parties to consider before they enter into it. As regards a purchaser from a tenant in common, whether the purchase is of the fee or a term of years, I cannot myself see that such purchaser need have any greater difficulty in working the minerals than the tenant in common would himself have had. I cannot assume that the defendant Wilkinson will act unreasonably. If he acts reasonably, I find on the evidence before me that there is no difficulty in working the clay. If I assumed that he was going to act unreasonably I should not allow his intended impropriety to constitute a foundation for a defence which he would not otherwise possess. I think this is a case in which I ought to give specific performance.

(a.) Reported by J. F. ISELIN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Crowders, Vizard, & Oldham, for Windeatt & Windeatt, Totnes; Mann & Crimp, for T. & J. Hutchings, Teignmouth.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) } Feb. 1.

KEMBLE (Plaintiff) v. ADDISON (Defendant).
SPOONER (Claimant). (a.)

Bill of sale — Registration — Validity — Affidavits — Description of grantor's occupation—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 10 (2).

A married woman living apart from her husband was employed as manager of a dressmaking business at a weekly salary. In a bill of sale of which she was the grantor, and in the affidavit filed on registration, she was merely described as a married woman.

Held, that the registration was bad because her occupation was not described.

Appeal from an interpleader issue tried in the Westminster County Court.

In October, 1899, the plaintiff having recovered judgment against the defendant for a debt incurred in May, 1899, seized in execution certain goods at 3, Cork-street, where the defendant resided.

The claimant claimed the goods under a bill of sale granted by the defendant on the 5th of August, 1899.

At the trial of the interpleader issue it was contended that the bill of sale was bad because the affidavit filed on registration did not contain a proper description of the occupation of the defendant.

The defendant was a married woman living apart from her husband.

At the time when the bill of sale was executed she was employed as manager of a dressmaking business in High-street, Kensington, at a weekly salary. In the bill of sale she was described as "Dorothy Addison, the wife of Robert Addison, of 3, Cork-street, Burlington-gardens." In the affidavit it was stated: "The said Dorothy Addison resides at 3, Cork-street, Burlington-gardens, and is a married woman"; no other description of the occupation of the defendant being given.

The county court judge gave judgment for the claimant. The plaintiff appealed.

Macaskie, for the appellant.—Section 10 (2) of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, requires that an affidavit shall be filed on the registration of every bill of sale which shall contain "a description of the residence and occupation of the person making or giving the same." The description of the defendant in the affidavit is insufficient. She ought to have been described as a dressmaker. The bill of sale is therefore void as against the appellant.

He cited Luckin v. Hamlyn, 18 W. R. 14, 21 L. T. Rep. 366; Allen v. Thompson, 4 W. R. 506, 25 L. J. Ex. 249; Adams v. Graham, 12 W. R. 282, 33 L. J. Q. B. 71; Downs v. Salmon, 36 W. R. 810, 20 Q. B. D. 775; Feast v. Robinson, 63 L. J. Ch. 321; Usher v. Martin, 61 L. T. Rep. 778, 38 W. R. Dig. 20.

Biron, for the respondent.—The description of the defendant in the affidavit is a sufficient description, because it is one which enables her to be identified by those who knew her at her place of residence.

He cited Throssell v. Marsh, 53 L. T. Rep. 321, 34 W. R. Dig. 22; Phillips v. Burt, 2 F. & F. 862; Bath v. Sutton, 27 L. J. Ex. 388, 7 W. R. C. L. Dig. 13.

CHANNELL, J.—The point is not free from difficulty, but I think the appeal must be allowed and that the bill of sale is bad by reason of the misdescription of the grantor's occupation in the affidavit. The cases clearly show that the occupation of the grantor of a bill of sale, if he or she has one, must be described, and that the occupation so described must be the one with which he in fact occupies himself. I do not quarrel with the language of Romer, J., in Feast v. Robinson where he says: "The word 'occupation' in this Act means the business in which a man is usually engaged to the knowledge of his neighbours. The intention is that such a description shall be given that if inquiry be made in the place where the person resides he may easily be identified." In that passage Romer, J., merely adopted the view expressed by Martin, J., in Luckin v. Hamlyn. The difficulty is to know what is the knowledge of the man's neighbours and who are his neighbours. In the case before Romer, J., the grantor of the bill of sale was a partner in several businesses, but he neglected them and spent his time amusing himself in the country; at the same time he was more than a sleeping partner of the businesses and he was known to the creditors of the different businesses as the only monied man in them. The bill of sale, however, was given over his goods in his country residence and persons inquiring about him there would have identified him by the description of his occupation as given in the bill of sale—that is to say, "a gentleman of no occupation." They would have identified him more readily by what he seemed to be doing than by reference to businesses which he neglected. It was accordingly held that the description was sufficient, the judge no doubt treating as the grantor's neighbours the persons who knew him at the place where he resided.

In the present case, the lady, the grantor of the bill of sale, in fact occupied herself by attending to a dressmaking business in Kensington. She received a salary for so doing, and, as was obvious to everyone, she went to business daily. She was at the same time residing in Cork-street, and it may be that people who knew her in Cork-street did not know what her business was, but knowing that she went from home daily during business hours they must have been aware that she had some business. Can it therefore be doubted that she had an occupation within the meaning of the Act, and that that occupation was that of a dressmaker? If the occupation had been merely of a temporary character, it would not have been necessary to describe it. In some cases the description of such a temporary occupation might even be misleading. There was no evidence, however, that the defendant's occupation in this case was temporary. I think, therefore, that the defendant had at the date of the bill of sale an occupation within the terms of the Act, that that occupation was that of a dressmaker, and that as the affidavit did not describe her as of that occupation there was a misdescription, and the bill of sale is bad.

BUCKNILL, J.—I am of the same opinion. Each case must be governed by its own particular circumstances, and the question for the court is in each case whether the Act has been reasonably complied with. The Act does not require the most minute description of the occupation of the grantor of a bill of sale, but it does require a description sufficient to afford a guide to persons desirous of making inquiries for their own protection. There must be a sufficient description to enable such persons to identify the grantor of the bill of sale.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The facts of the present case are that the grantor was a lady having a residence in Cork-street. She did not stay at her residence during the day, but employed herself in a dressmaker's business in Kensington. This she did, not as a mere dilletanti, but in order to earn her livelihood. Ought that fact to have been stated in the affidavit? Clearly it ought to have been stated. As it has not been stated the Act has not been complied with, and the bill of sale is bad.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, James Hall.

Solicitor for the respondent, F. Hastings Dauney.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 31.

HENDERSON (Respondent) v. MERTHYR TYDFIL URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL (Appellants). (a.)

Solicitor—Costs—Solicitor employed at a fixed salary—Solicitors Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 28), ss. 4, 5.

A public body employed a solicitor to do their legal and other work at a fixed annual salary. The costs of the public body in legal proceedings to which they were a party having been ordered to be paid to them by the other party to the proceedings,

Held, that they were entitled to charge, as part of such costs, sums in respect of the services of their solicitor, provided that such sums did not exceed an undue proportion of the solicitor's salary, having regard to the work done

Appeal from the Glamorganshire County Court.

The Merthyr Tydfil Urban District Council employed a qualified solicitor as clerk at an annual salary of £400. For this salary he was required to perform all the duties, legal, parliamentary, or otherwise, of his office, including the prosecution and defence of legal proceedings brought by or against the council, and to devote the whole of his time to such duties. He was paid his out-of-pocket expenses.

In an action brought against the council, judgment was entered for the council with costs, to be taxed as between solicitor and client. On taxation the registrar disallowed all the items except those which represented disbursements, on the ground that, inasmuch as the council were not liable to pay the profit costs to their solicitor, they were precluded from recovering such costs from the other side by virtue of section 5 of the Solicitors Act, 1870. The items allowed amounted to £17, and those disallowed to £11. The council applied to the county court judge to review the taxation. He refused to do so, but gave leave to appeal.

R. V. Bankes (Lewis Thomas with him), for the appellants.—The agreements between solicitors and their clients referred to in sections 4 and 5 of the Solicitors Act, 1870, are agreements by which a lump sum is agreed to be paid by the client to the solicitor in some particular litigation, and not, as in the present case, agreements whereby an annual payment is made for the solicitor's services. It follows that the proviso in section 5, that the client who has entered into an agreement of the kind referred to shall not be entitled to recover from any person more, by ways of costs, than is payable by him under such agreement, does not apply. A proportion of the salary paid by the appellants to their solicitor would presumably be paid for his services in the litigation in respect of which the costs were awarded. The registrar ought to have allowed the profit costs, so as to indemnify the appellants to that extent. No one could say what was the exact proportion of the salary referable to this litigation, but the amount of the items, £11, was not an unreasonable proportion. Galloway v. Corporation of London, 15 W. R. 1032, L. R. 4 Eq. 90, assists the appellants.

John Sankey, for the respondent.—The registrar was right. Costs are an indemnity. The appellants would have had to pay their clerk his salary whether the action had been brought or not. The respondent is only liable to pay to the appellants the costs in which they have been involved by the proceedings. As they are bound to pay to their solicitor his disbursements only, these are the only costs which they can charge against the respondent.

CHANNELL, J.—The appeal must be allowed. The district council have a considerable quantity of work to be done, both of a litigious character and of a non-litigious character. They made a bargain with a solicitor to do the whole of this work for the annual sum of £400 and out-of-pocket expenses. It is said that when in the course of litigation they obtain an order for the payment of their costs by the other side, that is only by way of indemnity. That is, no doubt, true. Again, it is said that the appellants' agreement with their clerk is only valid by virtue of section 4 of the Solicitors Act, 1870. Section 5 of the same Act provides that where there is an agreement between a solicitor and his client, such as is mentioned in section 4, for paying a lump sum in respect of the solicitor's services, "the client shall not be entitled to recover from any other person under any order for the payment of any costs which are the subject of such agreement more than the amount payable by the client to his own attorney or solicitor under the same." We have to apply that provision to the present case. It is a provision easy to apply when the agreement relates only to the work in the bill which is being taxed, but it is not easy to apply when the agreement relates both to that and other work. The registrar in taxing the bill in this case finds that £11 of the bill is charged as the remuneration of the solicitor for his work, and he strikes out that amount on the ground that the work was paid for by the salary of £400 allowed by the council to their solicitor.

The terms of the remuneration of the solicitor were that he was to be paid £400 a year for the work comprised in the bill and for other work. A certain proportion then of the £400 would be paid in respect of the work comprised in the bill. It cannot in the present case be shown that £11 was an undue proportion of the £400 to be paid for this work. It is for the party objecting to the allowance of the usual costs in such circumstances to show that the allowance will give more than an indemnity, and in all ordinary cases, such as the present, it is impossible for him to show it. In some cases, however, he may be able to do so. If, for instance, by reason of the case going to the House of Lords, the litigation had become very expensive and the profit costs had amounted to, say,

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

£500, the council only paying to their solicitor £400 for the whole year's work, then it would be apparent that £500 was too much. They would not be paying their solicitor £500 in respect of the particular work and therefore could not recover it.

Here, however, the registrar was wrong in disallowing the whole of the profit costs. The unsuccessful party was liable to pay the proportion of the £400 paid in respect of the work comprised in the bill. It must be assumed until the contrary is shown that £400 is a proper sum to be paid to the solicitor for his year's work and also that £11 is a proper sum to be paid to him for this part of his work. The council must therefore be presumed to be paying their solicitor £11 out of the £400 for this very work. It seems to me, therefore, that, unless something could be shown which it is most improbable in this case can be shown, the whole of the £11 ought to have been allowed. There ought, therefore, to be a review of the taxation. Cases such as this arise frequently, and I believe they are always dealt with in the way I have mentioned.

BUCKNILL, J., concurred.

Solicitors for the appellants, Morgan & Upjohn, for John Vaughan, Merthyr Tydfil.

Solicitors for the respondent, H. P. Beecher, for F. Sydney Simons, Merthyr Tydfil.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 24.

STANTON (Appellant) v. BROWN (Respondent). (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Reservation of exclusive sporting rights—Severability—Ground Game Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 47), s. 3.

A lease of a farm contained a reservation to the lessor of "the exclusive right . . . to enter upon the said farm for the purpose of sporting or otherwise."

Held, that the reservation was severable and was not wholly void as being in contravention of the Ground Game Act, 1880, and that a person who with the permission of the tenant was shooting partridges on the farm was liable to be convicted of trespassing in pursuit of game.

Case stated by justices of the county of Gloucester.

The respondent was charged on an information preferred by the appellant with having unlawfully trespassed in search of game upon lands in the occupation of Josiah Hook.

At the hearing of the information the following facts were proved:

By an indenture of lease dated the 12th of March, 1888, and made between Charles Holborow Stanton of the one part and Josiah Hook of the other part, a farm and land were granted to the tenant for the term of seven years from the 29th of September, 1888.

After the reddendum in the lease the following reservation appeared: "Reserving nevertheless unto the said lessor all the timber and other trees now standing or growing upon the said farm or lands, and the exclusive right of the lessor and his friends to enter upon the said farm for the purpose of sporting or otherwise."

This lease expired by effluxion of time, and the tenant continued to occupy the farm as tenant from year to year up to the date of the hearing.

The lessor had for many years past authorized his brother, the appellant, to shoot game on the farm, and this authority was acted upon from time to time.

On the 6th of September, 1899, and on a previous occasion, the appellant entered upon the land with the consent of the lessor for the purpose of shooting partridges, and he found the respondent also shooting partridges there. He claimed that he was entitled to do so under a permission granted to him by the tenant.

The tenant gave evidence that after the expiration of the lease he had continued to hold the land without any new arrangement being entered into between him and the lessor. He considered that he had joint rights of shooting all game with the landlord and stated that he had never shot any game himself, but he had given permission to others, including the respondent.

On these facts the justices were of opinion:

Firstly, that the terms of the lease subsisted so far as consistent with a tenancy from year to year.

Secondly, that, having regard to the decision in the case of Jeffryes v. Evans, 13 W. R. 864, the reservation in the lease (which operated as a re-grant by the tenant) was an agreement, condition, or arrangement which purported to divest or alienate the right of the tenant to kill and take ground game, and was therefore ipso jure void under the 3rd section of the Ground Game Act, 1880.

Thirdly, that the said exclusive reservation of sporting in the lease was inseverable in its terms and that there was no authority to support the contention that it could be held to be good in part as to winged game, and void in part as to ground game. Being a criminal or penal case they were of opinion that they should construe the Act strictly, and that they could not cure any defect or rectify the reservation by the importation of any implied words that might or ought to be introduced to express the contention that ground game was excepted from the reservation.

Fourthly, that as a natural consequence the parties to the lease were thrown back upon their common law rights, and that by the common law the tenant had the right to kill both the winged and ground game on the land and could lawfully authorize the respondent to do so.

They did not consider that the assertion of right by the respondent was presented in a form that ousted their jurisdiction, but they dismissed the information on the points of law above set forth.

The opinion of the court was asked on the questions: (1) Has the term "sporting" a more limited interpretation since the passing of the Ground Game Act, 1880, than it had before, and does it now include shooting or coursing hares and rabbits? (2) Whether or not upon the said questions of law the said justices were correct in their determination as aforesaid? (3) If not, what should be done or ordered by the said court in their premises?

The Ground Game Act, 1880, s. 1, confers on every occupier of land "as incident to and inseparable from his occupation of the land, the right to kill and take ground game thereon, concurrently with any other person who may be entitled to kill and take ground game on the same land." The right is exercisable only by the occupier himself or by persons duly authorized by him in writing as mentioned in section 1 (1). By section 3, "Every agreement, condition, or arrangement which purports to divest or alienate the right of the occupier as declared, given, and reserved to him by this Act, or which gives to such occupier any advantage in consideration of his forbearing to exercise such right, or imposes upon him any disadvantage in consequence of his exercising such right, shall be void."

W. L. Richards, for the appellant.—The reservation of sporting rights is severable, and the fact that it is void as to ground game does not avoid it altogether. Section 3 of the Ground Game Act, 1880, avoids an agreement only so far as it is contrary to the express provisions of the Act: Gaskell v. King, 11 East, 165; Harrington v. Kloprogge, 2 B. & B. 678*n*.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The respondent was not represented.

Cranstoun (who had been instructed on behalf of the justices, but had no locus standi) referred as amicus curiæ to Beardmore v. Meakin, 20 L. J. Notes of Cases, p. 8, as showing that a reservation in a lease which contravened the provisions of the Ground Game Act, 1880, did not invalidate the rest of the instrument.

CHANNELL, J.—I think that this is a very clear case. Looking at the provisions of section 3 of the Ground Game Act, 1880, it seems to me that that section cannot mean that an agreement as to game which contains something in contravention of the occupier's right to destroy ground game is to be void in its entirety, and the case of Beardmore v. Meakin shows that that is not its meaning. The section cannot mean that the reservation is void in its entirety for it applies not only to agreements made since the passing of the Act, but has also a retrospective operation as regards agreements made before that date; on that construction of the section, therefore, the Legislature would, in the case of a reservation prior to the Act, at the same time give the occupier the ground game and also take away the reservation to the landlord of the winged game. I think that the word "void" in this section means that the agreement is to be void so far as it is contrary to the enactment. The appeal must therefore be allowed, and the case remitted to the justices.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, A. H. G. Heelas, Stroud.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Channell, JJ.) Jan. 16.

CHARNOCK (Appellant) v. MERCHANT (Respondent). (a.)

Criminal law—Evidence—Evidence of accused person—Previous convictions and cross-examination as to—Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41), ss. 1, 12—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 1, sub-section (f); s. 6.

By section 1 (f) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, it is provided that a person charged and called as a witness in pursuance of that Act shall not, with certain exceptions, be required to answer any question as to his previous conviction; and section 6 provides that "this Act shall apply to all criminal proceedings notwithstanding any enactment in force at the commencement of this Act. . . ."

The appellant was charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with an offence under the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894, section 12 of which Act provides that in any proceeding against any person for an offence under that Act such person shall be competent, but not compellable, to give evidence. He gave evidence on his own behalf, and in cross-examination was asked whether he had been previously convicted of an offence under the same Act. He answered in the affirmative. The justices convicted him.

Held, that the evidence as to the appellant's previous conviction was not admissible, and therefore that the conviction was bad.

Section 1 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, applied.

Case stated by the justices of the peace for the county of Hereford sitting at the petty sessions of Wigmore.

On the 27th of June, 1899, an information was preferred by the respondent, an inspector of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, against the appellant, a master of a public elementary school, under section 1 of 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, charging him with having unlawfully and wilfully assaulted a child in his charge under the age of thirteen years. At the hearing it was proved that the appellant committed the offence charged. The appellant was called as a witness on his own behalf by his counsel, who pointed out to the court that section 12 of the Act under which the charge was laid gave him the right to do so. Upon cross-examination the appellant was asked whether he had been previously convicted of a similar offence. His counsel objected to the question on the ground that it was inadmissible under section 1, sub-section (f), of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898. The justices overruled the objection on the ground that as the appellant had tendered his evidence under the provisions of 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, s. 12, the section of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, did not apply, and they therefore allowed the question to be put. The appellant admitted that he had been previously convicted of a similar offence. The justices convicted him. In the case they stated that the appellant's answer in no way affected their minds, as the fact of his previous conviction was well known to all of them.

The questions stated for the opinion of the court were:

1. Whether under the circumstances stated in the case the question as to the previous conviction was admissible.

2. Whether, if the question was wrongly admitted, the conviction was thereby invalidated, as the justices found the appellant guilty of the offence charged on the facts proved before them.

H. Lynn (T. A. Organ with him), for the appellant.—The justices were clearly wrong. By the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894, it is provided that any person charged under that Act may give evidence on his own behalf. In his cross-examination there are no restrictions as to what questions may be put to him. In this case the justices appear to have been of opinion that as the appellant was prosecuted under that Act the question as to his previous conviction was admissible. This is clearly not so. Section 1 (f) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, provides that a person charged and called as a witness in pursuance of that Act shall not be asked or required to answer any question tending to show that he has been convicted of any other offence, and section 6 of the same Act provides that that Act "shall apply to all criminal proceedings, notwithstanding any enactment in force" at the commencement of that Act. [The court here stopped counsel.]

Cecil Walsh, for the respondent.—The decision of the justices was right. The appellant tendered himself as a witness, not in pursuance of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, but in pursuance of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894, under which Act he was proceeded against. Section 6 of the Act of 1898 does not make any alteration in the provisions of Acts prior to it which are not inconsistent with it. In the Act of 1894 there is no provision inconsistent with the Act of 1898. Section 1 of the Act of 1898 was only intended to apply to indictments, and not to proceedings before a court of summary jurisdiction. However, even if the question as to a previous conviction in this case was not admissible, the conviction should stand, because the justices state, in the case, that the answer to such question did not affect their decision, as the fact of the previous conviction was well known to them, and therefore, as a court of summary jurisdiction, they were entitled to make use of such knowledge.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

GRANTHAM, J.—I am of opinion that the conviction was wrong, and that the magistrates adopted an illegal course. The question they allowed to be put to the appellant was legally inadmissible. The justices state in the case that the appellant's answer as to his previous conviction in no way affected their minds as the fact of that previous conviction was well known to all of them, and it may be that the fact of the previous conviction did not affect their judgment, but this they do not state. It was argued on behalf of the respondent that, owing to the words in section 6 of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, "notwithstanding any enactment in force at the commencement of this Act," the provisions of section 1 of that Act do not apply to alter the provisions of previous Acts which are not inconsistent with it. As to this argument I can only say that since the Act of 1898 it has always been the practice of judges in prosecutions under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, to apply the Act of 1898. I am therefore of opinion that the conviction was wrong and that it should be quashed.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. Section 6 of the Act of 1898 has established one principle that must be observed in all criminal courts and cases. If it were not so the defendant in prosecutions under the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, could still be cross-examined as to previous convictions, and if he did not give evidence on his own behalf counsel for the prosecution would be entitled to comment on that fact in his reply. Since the Act of 1898, however, the practice of the judges has always been to the contrary, and section 6 of that Act clearly shows that that practice is the right one. I am therefore of opinion that this conviction must be quashed.

Appeal allowed and conviction quashed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Baker & Nairne.

Solicitors for the respondent, Chester, Broome, & Griffiths, for Corner & Co., Hereford

---

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Channell, JJ.) Jan. 16.

COUNCIL OF THE PHARMACEUTICAL SOCIETY OF GREAT BRITAIN (Appellants) v. WHITE (Respondent). (a.)

Poison—Sale of—Agent only authorized to take orders and give receipts—Pharmacy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121), s. 15.

By section 15 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868, it is enacted that no person shall sell or keep an open shop for the retailing, dispensing, or compounding poisons not being a duly registered pharmaceutical chemist or chemist and druggist.

The respondent, who carried on the business of a seedsman and florist, acted as agent for a chemical company who manufactured a certain weed-killer which contained a poison—namely, arsenic. The respondent did not keep the article on his premises, but was authorised to take orders for it, which he sent on to the manufacturers, and to receive payments and give receipts.

Held, that he had not committed any offence under section 15 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868.

Appeal from the county court of Worcestershire.

In this case the action was brought under the Pharmacy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121), s. 15, to recover a penalty from the defendant for selling a certain weed-killer admitted to contain a poison—namely, arsenic, he, the defendant, not being a duly registered pharmaceutical chemist or chemist and druggist.

From the facts found by the learned county court judge it appeared that the defendant carried on business as a seedsman and florist, and that he acted as agent for the Boundary Chemical Co., Liverpool, the manufacturers of the said weed-killer, with authority to take orders for the said article, and to receive money and give receipts in respect of such orders. The defendant did not keep the weed-killer on his premises, as the company delivered it to the purchasers.

On the 27th of May an inspector, instructed by the plaintiffs, visited the defendant's shop and asked for two gallons of the weed-killer. The defendant said that he did not keep the article in stock but that he would send the order on to Liverpool or that the purchaser could do so himself. The inspector asked the defendant to send for it and paid him the purchase-money.

The learned judge gave judgment for the defendant on the ground that he was not the seller of the weed-killer within the meaning of the section. From this decision the society now appealed.

Section 15 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868, enacts as follows: "From and after the 31st of December, 1868, any person who shall sell or keep an open shop for the retailing, dispensing or compounding poisons . . . not being a duly registered pharmaceutical chemist or chemist and druggist, or who . . . shall fail to conform with any regulations as to the keeping or selling of poisons made in pursuance of this Act . . . shall for every such offence be liable to pay a penalty or sum of five pounds. . . ."

Crump, Q.C. (T. R. Grey with him), for the appellants.—The judge has found that the respondent was the agent of the company in Liverpool, and that he was not the seller. He was wrong in so finding. The respondent was clearly the seller within the meaning of the section, the object of which is to protect the public by requiring that these poisons should be sold by a qualified person. If the retailer of the poison does not come within the section, the object of the section would be defeated. In the present case the respondent is the person who sells and who keeps an open shop; he is therefore the person who is required to be properly qualified: Templeman v. Trafford, 30 W. R. 78, 8 Q. B. D. 397. The section applies to everyone who sells, whether on his own account or for any other person: see Hawkins, J., in Pharmaceutical Society v. Wheeldon, 24 Q. B. D. 683. In Pharmaceutical Society v. London and Provincial Supply Association, 28 W. R. 957, 5 App. Cas. 857, it was held that the actual seller must be a qualified person. Whether he be principal or agent matters not. If the agent contracts to sell the poison it is immaterial that the poison is not kept on his premises. Lord Blackburn in that case says: "A person shall not only not sell, but shall not keep an open shop for the sale." The respondent, as the facts show, clearly comes within the provisions of the section, as he both keeps a shop for the sale and conducts the sale.

Cavanagh, for the respondent, was not called upon

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

GRANTHAM, J.—I have no doubt that in this case the county court judge was right. He has found as a fact, and there was evidence before him to justify that finding, that the defendant did not sell this article. The evidence as to the position of the defendant was practically uncontradicted. He was a florist, and knowing what was useful for killing weeds he was ready to advise people where to get it, and he thought he might assist his own business and make a little money, and so he arranged with the firm in Liverpool, who were the sellers and who as it were kept the shop for it, that he would tell people who wanted to buy weed-killer to go to them. He said in his evidence that if anybody came to him for it he told them they could either send the order direct to the company at Liverpool, or if they liked he would take the order and send it on, and he was provided with bill-heads by the Liverpool firm for the purpose of giving receipts for the money which was paid him on their account. For that recommendation he was entitled to receive a commission of 25 per cent.

That being so, it seems to me that he was not the person who was managing the sale. He was merely the conduit pipe to introduce the one person to the other. Suppose a person goes into a chemist's shop to buy some poison and in that shop there is some unqualified person whom he requests to provide him with some rat poison. The assistant says, "There is my master at the other counter, if you go to him you can get it." Thereupon the master, who is a qualified person, hears what is asked for and supplies it. Can it be said that the assistant who first saw the purchaser and told him where to go is the person who sold it? Certainly not; and if that is so in a shop where the poison was kept, how could it be said that the person who did not keep it on his premises at all, who did not make it and did not deliver it, was the seller or the person who managed the sale? I quite accept, as I am bound to do, the judgment of Lord Selborne in the House of Lords in the case of The Pharmaceutical Society v. London and Provincial Supply Association (Limited), and, although it does not apply to this case directly, I think the learned county court judge has been guided by it. I also accept the judgment of Hawkins, J., in the case of The Pharmaceutical Society v. Wheeldon which has been cited, but I do not think it touches this case at all. I do not think that the county court judge could have come to any other conclusion than the one to which he did come.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the county court judge must be taken to have found as a fact that the defendant had not the control and management of the sale. The cases clearly establish that a person acting in the control and management of the sale is liable as seller, although he is not the principal but only the agent. Here, however, it seems to me there was ample evidence upon which to find that the defendant had not the control and management of the sale. As far as I can gather from the cases the person having the control or management of the sale was the person who might do or might not do the things which the Act required to be done with reference to the sale. The respondent was merely a messenger or something of the sort, though he received 25 per cent. commission. He might be supposed to get that commission because, as a florist, he recommended this substance as an effective weed-killer, and it was obviously for that reason he was employed.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal upon terms as to costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Flux, Thompson, & Flux.

Solicitors for the defendant, Timbrell & Deighton, for Dobbs & Hill, Worcester.

Q. B. Div. (Ridley and Darling, JJ.) — Nov. 1.

BARNACLE v. CLARK. (a.)

School board — Disqualification of member — Member "concerned . . . in any work done under the authority of such board"—Sale of gravel and sand to contractor with the board—Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), s. 34.

The respondent, a member of a school board, supplied sand and gravel to a builder who had entered into a contract with the said school board for the erection of some school buildings. The sand and gravel were used in the course of the said contract being carried out, and the respondent, when selling the said sand and gravel to the contractor, knew they would be so used.

By section 34 of the Elementary Education Act, 1870, it is enacted that "No member of a school board shall in any way share or be concerned in the profits of any bargain or contract with, or any work done under the authority of, such school board."

Held, that the respondent had committed an offence within the above section, he having been concerned in work done under the authority of the school board of which he was a member.

Case stated by justices in and for the county of Northampton.

This was information preferred by Henry Edwin Barnacle, of Stanwick, in the county of Northants, clerk in holy orders, against Christopher Clark, of Stanwick aforesaid, farmer, for that he, the said Christopher Clark, between the 28th of January and the 11th of February, 1899, at Stanwick aforesaid, then being a member of the Stanwick School Board, did share or was concerned in the profits of a certain bargain or contract with, or certain work done under, the authority of the school board or managers appointed by them—to wit, did supply sand and gravel to one Alfred Traynar, of Islip, in the said county, builder, he being then a contractor with the said school board for the building of schools at Stanwick aforesaid, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

On the hearing of the information it was proved (a) That the defendant did supply sand and gravel, and between the times mentioned in the said information to the said Alfred Traynar; (b) that the said Alfred Traynar was between the times mentioned in the said information a contractor with the Stanwick School Board under a contract in writing for the building of schools at Stanwick aforesaid, and that such sand and gravel were to the knowledge of the defendant sold to the said Alfred Traynar to be used in the building of the said schools; (c) that part of the sand and gravel supplied by defendant to the said Alfred Traynar was delivered by the defendant at the site of the said schools, and part was fetched from the defendant's sandpit by the said Alfred Traynar or his agents.

Such evidence was strengthened by the production of an account which the defendant furnished to Traynar, and the payment of which was acknowledged by the receipt signed by the defendant at the foot thereof.

At the time the defendant did supply such sand and gravel aforesaid it was proved that he was then acting as chairman of the said Stanwick School Board.

The proceedings in this prosecution were taken under the 34th section of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 75 (The Elementary Education Act, 1879), and it was contended on the part of the prosecutor that the defendant's action came within that section, in that he was sharing or being concerned in the profits of the bargain or contract with Traynar, or work done under the authority of the said school board.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It was not suggested on the part of the prosecution that the defendant had made any excessive profit out of the sand and gravel supplied to Traynar, and it was contended that the only place at Stanwick where sand could be purchased was from him, the defendant, and that if he had not supplied the sand the contractor, Traynar, would have had to go some miles before he could obtain a supply, which would have been more expensive, owing to the cartage. The contractor, Traynar, in his examination in chief stated that he bought some sand from Rushden to mix with defendant's sand, this, he stated, because the Rushden sand was a little finer. It was admitted by the contractor that he obtained the leave of the architect of the schools before using the sand and gravel purchased from the defendant, and that in dealing with the defendant he paid for the sand and gravel at the regular charges, and also that before the contract was signed the defendant was a stranger to him.

As a point of law it was contended on behalf of the defendant that sand and gravel were such products of the soil as would come under the exception in sub-section 1 of section 34 of the Education Act, 1870, by analogy to the exception under section 46, sub-section 2 (a) of the Local Government Act, 1894. It was also contended that the word "profits" governed the whole of section 34 of the Education Act, 1870, and that the whole of the work done by Traynar was so done under and in pursuance of his written contract with the school board, and that the defendant did not in any way share, nor was he concerned in, the profits of such contract.

It was further contended that, even if the word profits did not govern the latter part of the said section, the supply of sand and gravel to Traynar was not work done under the authority of the said school board.

The justices decided that the defendant had not been guilty of any offence within the meaning of section 34 of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 75, and they therefore dismissed the information.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether, upon the facts of the case above stated, the justices' decision was erroneous in point of law.

By the Elementary Education Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 75), s. 34: "No member of a school board and no manager appointed by them shall hold or accept any place of profit the appointment to which is vested in the school board or in any managers appointed by them, nor shall in any way share or be concerned in the profits of any bargain or contract with or any work done under the authority of such school board or managers appointed by them, provided that this section shall not apply to: (1) Any sale of land or loan of money to a school board; or (2) any bargain or contract made with or work done by a company in which such member holds shares; (3) the insertion of any advertisement relating to the affairs of any such school board in any newspaper in which such member has a share or interest, if he does not vote with respect to such sale, loan, bargain, contract, work, or insertion. Any person who acts in contravention of this section shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding £50, and the said place of profit and his office as a member or manager shall be vacant."

Austin Metcalfe, for the appellant.—The respondent clearly infringed the provisions of section 34. He was concerned in the profits of a contract with the school board or was concerned in work done under the authority of that board. It could not be said that he came within the exemptions contained in the proviso to the section on the ground that this sale of gravel and sand was a sale of land. This case came within the authority of Nutton v. Wilson, 37 W. R. 522, 22 Q. B. D. 744.

G. Sills, for the respondent,—The decision of the justices was right. The respondent in no way shared in the profits or loss of the work. He only sold his sand in the ordinary way to the contractor. Section 34 created a criminal offence, and therefore it must be construed strictly. It only provides that a member of the school board shall not be concerned in the profits of any work undertaken by or carried out under the authority of the school board. It does not provide that a member of a school board may not supply goods to the contractor. It must be shown that the member is interested in the contract itself. There was no evidence that the respondent in any way shared in the profits of the contract. This case was distinguishable from Nutton v. Wilson. In the case of Le Feuvre v. Lankester, 2 W. R. 307, 3 E. & B. 530, which was an action to recover penalties under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, from the defendant for having acted as mayor while disqualified by being interested in a contract with the council, it was held he was not liable. Coleridge, J., there stated that "in order to make it a case which can be brought within the statute, the person must have a share or interest, directly or indirectly, in a contract or employment with, by, or on behalf of the council." In the present case the respondent was not in any way so concerned.

Metcalfe, in reply, cited Tomkins v. Jolliffe, 51 J. P. 247.

RIDLEY, J.—It appears clear to me that the decision of the justices was wrong, and that the respondent brought himself within the operation of section 34. No doubt the respondent unwittingly offended against the statute, and it is not suggested that what he did was done for any corrupt purpose; but nevertheless he ought to have been convicted. The object of the Legislature in enactments such as the Act under which the information in the present case was taken out, was discussed in Nutton v. Wilson, a somewhat similar case to the present one. That was an action to recover penalties under the Public Health Act, 1875, alleged to have been incurred by the defendant for having acted as a member of a local board after he had become disqualified owing to his being concerned in contracts entered into by the board. The decision in that case shows the lines upon which we ought to construe the Act which we are dealing with in the present case. Lindley, L.J., in that case said (on p. 748): "To interpret words of this kind, which have no very definite meaning, and which, perhaps, were purposely employed for that very reason, we must look at the object to be attained. The object obviously was to prevent the conflict between interest and duty that might otherwise inevitably arise."

The object of the Legislature in the Act we are now construing is obviously the same. The respondent supplied sand and gravel to the contractor. Did he in any way share or was he concerned in the profits of any bargain or contract or work done under the authority of the school board? It is not necessary for me define the expression "profits of any contract or bargain," but it is quite clear that the respondent was "concerned . . . in work done under the authority of" the school board. I think, therefore, the justices were wrong, and that they ought to have convicted the respondent.

DARLING, J.—I am of the same opinion. The object of such legislation as this is clearly expressed by Lindley, L.J., in Nutton v. Wilson. We ought not to be hypercritical in interpreting provisions of this nature, for the object is clearly that members of a public body such as a school board should be beyond the suspicion of deriving profit, either directly or indirectly, by reason of their being members of such board.

Appeal allowed; case remitted to convict.

Solicitors for appellant, Samuel Price & Sons, for Darnall & Price, Northampton.

Solicitors for respondent, Nicholson, Graham, & Graham, for James Heygate, Wellingborough.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., Rigby and Vaughan Williams L.JJ.) — Feb. 13, 16; March 8.

In re MARYON-WILSON.
WILSON v. MARYON-WILSON. (a.)

Inland Revenue—Settlement estate duty—Legacy by testator in satisfaction of previous covenant—Settlement of legacy by instrument outside will—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 5, 6 (2), 8 (4)—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19—Effect of covenant to pay "without any deduction."

Settlement estate duty arising under section 5 of the Finance Act, 1894, is in all cases primarily payable, in the absence of indications of a contrary intention, out of the settled property.

In re Webber, Gribble v. Webber, 44 W. R. 489, [1896] 1 Ch. 914, overruled.

This primary incidence may, however, be shifted on to the residuary estate by the presence of clear indications of intention—e.g., by a direction to pay "without any deduction."

Decision of Kekewich, J. (47 W. R. 635, [1899] 2 Ch. 489), affirmed on the point of law, but reversed on the point of construction.

Appeal from the decision of Kekewich, J., given on the 24th of June, 1899 (47 W. R. 635, [1899] 2 Ch. 489).

By an indenture of settlement dated the 23rd of July, 1895, and made in contemplation of the then intended marriage of his daughter Eva Kathleen Maryon-Wilson, the late Sir Spencer Maryon-Wilson, baronet, covenanted with the trustees of the said settlement that, in case the then intended marriage of his said daughter should take place, his executors or administrators should, within six calendar months from his decease, pay over to the said trustees the sum of £25,000, with interest on the same at the rate of £3½ per cent. per annum from the day of his death, "without any deduction." The said settlement further provided that the said sum of £25,000 should be held upon the trusts therein more particularly declared, including an ultimate trust in favour of Sir Spencer Maryon-Wilson, his executors, administrators, and assigns. The marriage of the said Eva Kathleen Maryon-Wilson was subsequently solemnized.

By his will, dated the 1st of August, 1896, Sir Spencer Maryon-Wilson, in pursuance of the above covenant, devised certain freehold estates to trustees for the term of 2,000 years, to the intent that they should raise and pay (inter alia) the said sum of £25,000, together with interest thereon as before mentioned, to the trustees of the said settlement.

The testator died on the 31st of December, 1897.

A question having arisen as to whether the settlement estate duty of 1 per cent. imposed in respect of the said sum of £25,000 under section 5 of the Finance Act, 1894, ought to be paid out of the £25,000, or out of the residuary estate of the testator, it was decided by Kekewich, J., (1) that the duty was primarily payable out of the settled sum of £25,000; and (2) that the testator's covenant to pay "without any deduction" had not the effect of shifting the burden on to the residuary estate.

From this decision the defendants, the trustees of the settlement of the 23rd of July, 1895, now appealed.

Butcher, Q.C., and Austen Cartmell, for the appellants.—(1) Settlement estate duty in a case such as this is primarily payable out of the residuary estate: In re Webber, 44 W. R. 489, [1896] 1 Ch. 914. The present case is not within the exception grafted on to the above decision by section 19 of the Finance Act, 1896. We rely also on the reasoning used in the decision in In re Gray, 44 W. R. 406, [1896] 1 Ch. 620. (2) The burden of paying this duty is anyhow thrown on to the residuary estate by the covenant to pay "without any deduction" in the settlement of the 23rd of July, 1895: In re Parker-Jervis, 47 W. R. 147, [1898] 2 Ch. 643; In re Lord Fitzhardinge, 80 L. T. Rep. 376.

Warrington, Q.C., and O. Leigh Clare, for the respondent.

Austen Cartmell replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

March 8.—LINDLEY, M.R.—The sections of the Finance Act, 1894, which are important are sections 1, 2, 5, 6 (2), 8 (3) and (4), 9, and 14 (1). The Finance Act, 1896, s. 19, is also important. I do not stop to comment on their exact language. The argument for the appellants, so far as it is based on the Finance Acts, is reducible to the following propositions: (1) That by the Act of 1894, ss. 5 and 6 (2), the settlement estate duty is payable by the executors of the testator; (2) that the Finance Act does not say by whom the duty so payable is ultimately to be borne in a case like the present, section 8 (4) not applying; (3) that, consequently, the duty must be borne by the residuary legatees. The first two of these propositions are correct, but the third is, in my opinion, erroneous, although it was adopted by North, J., in In re Webber. The executors pay the settlement estate duty as trustees for somebody, but as trustees for whom? Certainly not as trustees for the residuary legatees, who take no interest whatever in the fund in respect of which the settlement estate duty is payable. The executors pay that duty as trustees for those who are beneficially entitled to that fund, and upon plain principles of equity the executors are entitled to be repaid out of that fund what they have by law to pay in respect of it. In my opinion it lies upon the beneficiaries of that fund to show why this burden, which thus falls upon them, should be borne by somebody else. The settlement estate duty, although described and imposed as a further estate duty, is imposed, not on the general estate of the deceased, but on specific portions of it, and ought in common fairness to be borne by those who take those portions. To facilitate collection the executors have to pay it, but this I regard as mere machinery. The Legislature by the Finance Act, 1896, has amended the law as expounded by North, J. (see 59 & 60 Vict. c. 28, s. 19), and has declared that the settlement estate duty payable in respect of property settled by a will is to be borne by the settled property. Kekewich, J., treats this enactment as a recognition by the Legislature of the soundness of the reasoning which led to the decision. I cannot so regard the enactment. It corrected a mistake, and so saved further litigation. If North, J.'s, reasoning is adopted and applied to all settlements of money to be paid on death, we shall have this extraordinary anomaly—that if a settlement is made by will the settlement estate duty is to be borne by the settled property, whereas if the settlement is made by deed that duty is not to be borne by that property at all. This is an utterly irrational conclusion, and is not one at which we are compelled to arrive by the language of the statutes themselves. If there were nothing else in the case, the settlement estate duty would, in my opinion, have to be borne by the settled fund.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

But then we have to consider the covenant of the testator. He covenanted to pay his daughter's trustees £25,000 "without any deduction." These words are very important. They show that possible deductions were thought of, and that the settlor clearly intended that his daughter's trustees should be paid £25,000 in full, without any deduction of any sort or kind. It is urged that there is no difference between a covenant to pay £25,000 and a covenant to pay £25,000 without deduction. But, however this may be, the latter form of expression leaves no room for doubt as to the intention of the parties, whilst, if the words "free from deduction" are omitted, the intention is by no means equally clear. The language of the covenant in this case is too plain to be got over. It is agreed on all hands that the daughter's trustees are to receive £25,000 free from estate duty. But it is urged that the "settlement estate duty," although called a "further estate duty," and made payable by the executors of the covenantor in respect of the settled fund, ought not to be treated as a deduction from it, but rather as a charge on it when paid over. I cannot accede to this argument. It may be conceded that the settlement estate duty is a charge on the settled fund, and that, so far as the Finance Acts are concerned, the executors have to pay it simply for facility of collection. But in the present case we have to consider the trustees of the daughter's settlement on the one hand, and the testator's residuary legatees on the other, and, as between them, his covenant is so plainly worded as to preclude any deduction from the £25,000 in favour of the residuary legatees. They are entitled to nothing out of the testator's estate until the £25,000 has been paid without deduction, pursuant to his covenant. The executors have to pay the settlement estate duty not simply because the statute requires them to pay it, but also because their testator has thrown the burden of it on his general estate, in exoneration of the £25,000 which was settled on his daughter. Similar observations apply to the trusts of the term of 2,000 years created by the testator's will to raise and pay the £25,000 in performance of his covenant—that is, without deduction as above explained. As between the daughter's trustees on the one side and the devisees of the estates subject to the term on the other side, the burden of the settlement estate duty falls on the latter and not on the former. In other words, the trustees of the term must, if necessary, raise and pay not only £25,000, but also the settlement estate duty payable in respect of it. The result, therefore, is that the decision appealed from must be reversed, and the duty in question, and the costs of the litigation, must be borne by the testator's general estate.

RIGBY and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Evans, Foster, & Wadham; Bell, Steward, & Co.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Feb. 14.

MILBANK v. MILBANK. (a.)

Practice—Affidavit of documents—Documents of title—Privilege—Particulars—Production.

As the authorities stand, privilege can be claimed for several deeds which are merely described as "a bundle of documents." The fact, however, that a transaction is embodied in a document which is protected from production on the ground of privilege, does not take away the right to have particulars of the transaction, if the same is pleaded in too general a way.

This was an appeal from an order of Kekewich, J., refusing the plaintiff discovery and particulars of certain documents. The facts were as follow:

The action was brought to establish the title of the plaintiff to a certain freehold estate. In her statement of claim she alleged that her deceased husband was (subject to a legal mortgage in fee made in 1883) tenant in tail of the estate, with remainder to the defendant for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainders over; that her husband had created a base fee which had afterwards been enlarged by him into a fee simple; and that by his will he had devised the estate to her.

By his defence, the defendant denied the enlargement of the base fee, and pleaded that the mortgagees of the estate, in valid exercise of their statutory power of sale, had sold and conveyed the estate to him for valuable consideration, and that he had purchased the same in good faith and without notice of any claim which the plaintiff's husband, or she as claiming through him, might have had to the estate in priority to the title of the mortgagees, and he relied on his title as bonâ fide purchaser.

He also pleaded that he had remortgaged the estate so purchased by him to the same mortgagees; and that the action could not be maintained in their absence.

The defendant made an affidavit of documents, in which he claimed privilege from production for "documents numbered 1 to 21 in a bundle marked A," on the ground that they related solely to the defendant's case and not to the case of the plaintiff, and did not tend to support it, and did not contain anything impeaching the case of the defendant.

The plaintiff took out a summons for an order that the defendant should make a further and better affidavit of documents, and in particular set out full and sufficient particulars of the documents so numbered 1 to 21; and, further, that all such documents or other documents (if any) relating directly or indirectly to the alleged purchase and mortgage transactions might be produced for the inspection of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff also took out a summons for particulars of (1) the alleged sale and conveyance by the mortgagees, stating when such sale and conveyance were executed, and what was the valuable consideration for the same; and (2) the alleged remortgage, stating when the same was executed, and for how much; and for inspection of the documents.

---

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The summonses came on to be heard before Kekewich, J., on the 20th of January, 1900, when the defendant by his counsel offered to insert in the order a statement that the bundle marked A included the documents in question.

Kekewich, J., held, on the authority of Taylor v. Batten, 27 W. R. 106, 4 Q. B. D. 85, that privilege had been properly claimed, and that no further affidavit of documents could be required. He also held that as the plaintiff was not entitled to discovery she could not obtain further information about the documents by way of particulars.

The plaintiff appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and Buckmaster (Marcey with them), for the appellants.—A plaintiff is entitled to have particulars of a transaction which is set up by a defendant, and is of a nature to defeat the claim in the action. It was argued that if there is no right to particulars information cannot be got by way of discovery. But this case is the reverse to that proposition. The plaintiff is entitled to have particulars of this transaction. She has to reply on this defence, and cannot do so without knowledge of this transaction which is pleaded in the defence. But if the plaintiff is entitled to have particulars, the defendant cannot defeat that right by making an affidavit on an application for discovery.

They referred to Taylor v. Batten, 27 W. R. 106, 4 Q. B. D. 85; Ind, Coope, & Co. v. Emmerson, 34 W. R. 636, 33 Ch. D. 323, and 36 W. R. 243, 12 App. Cas. 300; Attorney-General v. Emerson, 31 W. R. 191, 10 Q. B. D. 191; and to ord. 31, r. 15, and ord. 19, r. 6.

Warmington, Q.C., and John Henderson, contrà.—The rule of the court is that nothing shall be done to impair privilege which has been properly claimed and has been held to exist.

They referred to Bewicke v. Graham, 29 W. R. 436, 7 Q. B. D. 400; Morris v. Edwards, 37 W. R. 721, 23 Q. B. D. 287, 15 App. Cas. 309, 39 W. R. Dig. 162; Budden v. Wilkinson, 41 W. R. 657, [1893] 2 Q. B. 432; Roberts v. Oppenheim, 32 W. R. 654, 26 Ch. D. 724.

Buckmaster replied.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I do not think there is any real difficulty in this case, although these questions about documents are very important. The application before us is two-fold, and it is necessary to distinguish one application from the other. It is an appeal from an order of Kekewich, J., refusing particulars and refusing inspection. Now, I will address myself, first of all, to the particulars. The plaintiff is claiming certain estates, which the defendants say she is not entitled to and they say they are. They say in their defence, paragraph 3, that certain mortgagees whose mortgage was created in 1883, and is in no way disputed, have in the valid exercise of their statutory power of sale sold and conveyed these estates to the defendants. That is the long and short of it. Now the plaintiff says, "I want the particulars of that transaction." Without going further I cannot conceive that this is such a plea as the defendant ought to be allowed to maintain without particulars. I quite agree that you might have taken out a summons to strike it out, but you need not do that. The plaintiff does not want to strike it out. The plaintiff wants particulars of the transaction which is here referred to. Notwithstanding the ingenious arguments we have heard about production I cannot see that they have any relevancy at all upon the question of the particulars the defendant ought to give of that transaction if his pleading is in such a general way as to be technically irregular and insufficient. It appears to me on that short ground that the plaintiff is entitled to the particulars of that transaction. Now, it does not follow because that transaction is embodied in a deed that the plaintiff is not entitled to the particulars of the transaction. It is not asking for a copy of the deed or the contents of the deed. It is a false point altogether to say that because I am not bound to produce a deed I am not bound to answer any questions relating to the transaction which is embodied in the deed. It is a totally different thing.

As regards the inspection there is greater difficulty, and as the authorities now stand I am not prepared to say that a defendant cannot claim privilege for a lot of deeds which are simply described as a "bundle of documents." I think that we have gradually slid into a lax practice about that, because by allowing affidavits in that form and holding them sufficient a person may render it utterly impossible for anybody to test whether the documents put into the bundle do or do not relate to his case exclusively. I think there is great danger of persons being able to obtain protection for documents to which they are not really entitled by having regard to that form which is comparatively modern. The right to put documents into a bundle was a concession to prevent what was very often a grievous oppression in compelling defendants to set out a long list of documents which nobody cared anything at all about. But, on the other hand, I think we have been a little lax in opening the door to enable defendants to obtain protection for documents which, if they described them properly, they would not be able to obtain protection for. I merely say that because I think we have been a little lax, but as the decisions stand I am not prepared to say that that affidavit now it has been patched up by the statement embodied in the order is not technically sufficient. It was originally obviously insufficient for this reason—namely, the pleadings show that they must have deeds relating to the matter which they had not disclosed at all. That made the affidavit obviously wrong, but that has been patched up to this extent, that it is now to be treated by us as it has been treated by the court below, as if it is a bundle of documents relating to the transactions. Having regard to those authorities beginning with Taylor v. Batten, followed by Morris v. Edwards and by Budden v. Wilkinson, I am not prepared to say that those documents are not protected. I rather think they are. Therefore our order must be in favour of this appeal as regards particulars, but not as regards inspection.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree in granting the particulars and refusing inspection.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. There are two observations I wish to make. One is that we are now making the order for these particulars because the allegations in paragraph 3 are too general. If the facts relied upon in paragraph 3 had been properly pleaded they would have been pleaded with more particularity. There has been a good deal of discussion about particulars. Particulars at different times in the history of proceedings at law and in equity have differed somewhat. Sometimes particulars have been mere matters that were allowed in order that there might not be a surprise at the trial. Sometimes they have been limitations of the claim, whether it was the claim of the plaintiffs or the claim of the defendants so as to limit the field of the evidence at the trial, but particulars under the Judicature Act are allowed for quite a different purpose—they are really supplementary to the pleading, they are amendments of the pleading, and these particulars we are ordering to-day are amendments of the pleading. I do not wish to say anything as to matters that we have not got to decide to-day, as to what may be the effect of rule 15 of order 31, but, speaking for myself, it seems to me that the defendants here will be rash if they consider that those particulars are not a pleading within the meaning of rule 15 of order 31, because it is as an amendment to the pleading that we are really ordering these particulars. It would not, it seems to me, be at all right that the defendant, if he ought to have set out these matters in his defence, should get any advantage or avoid any liability by his own failure to have done that which he ought to have done. One word more about rule 19*a* of order 31. I wish to say of that, that I am expressing no opinion as to how far the learned judge, if he had been asked to do so, which he was not, could have looked at the papers in this bundle when an application was made for production and inspection.

Solicitors, G. M. Saunders; Burch, Whitehead, & Davidsons.

---

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Collins, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) Dec. 8.

EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES (Appellants) v. BISHOP (Respondent). (a.)

Inland revenue—Income tax—Life insurance company—"Annual profits and gains"—Participating policyholders—Return of surplus by way of bonus—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), Schedule D.

By the articles of the charter of a life insurance company which had a capital divided into shares, it was provided that the company could issue participating policies, that the insurance business should be conducted on the mutual plan, and that, after the owners of the capital stock had received dividends to the amount of 7 per cent., the other earnings of the company should be allowed to accumulate, and that every five years a balance should be struck and the surplus (after deducting a sufficient sum to cover risks and obligations) be divided among the policyholders.

Held, that such surplus was an annual profit or gain of the company liable to be assessed to income tax under Schedule D of the Income Tax Act of 1853.

Last v. London Assurance Corporation, 34 W. R. 233, 10 App. Cas. 438, and New York Life Insurance Co. v. Styles, 14 App. Cas. 381, 38 W. R. Dig. 89, considered.

Decision of the Divisional Court (Darling and Channell, JJ.), 47 W. R. 556, [1899] 2 Q. B. 439, affirmed.

This was an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision of the Divisional Court, 47 W. R. 556, [1899] 2 Q. B. 439. The facts and arguments sufficiently appear from the judgments.

Sir R. T. Reid, Q.C., and Foote, Q.C. (C. H. Neish with them), for the appellants.

Cripps, Q.C., and Danckwerts, for the respondent, were not called on.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This is an appeal against a judgment of my brother Darling and my brother Channell. Speaking for myself I cannot doubt that they were right in the opinion which they formed. It is a question whether three sums of £80,000 made by the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States in this country are liable to be charged with income tax under Schedule D. The court below held that those sums are liable, and the Equitable Life Assurance Society appeal.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Now, this is by no means virgin soil. Similar, though not identical, cases to this have already been twice before the House of Lords. In Last v. London Assurance Corporation, 34 W. R. 233, 10 App. Cas. 438, it was decided in favour of the Crown, and in New York Life Assurance Co. v. Styles, 14 App. Cas. 381, 38 W. R. Dig. 89, it was decided in favour of the subject; in the one that income tax was payable, in the other that it was not payable; and a very excellent argument has been addressed to us as to the distinction between these two cases. The Equitable Life Assurance Society contend that this case falls within Styles' case, in which the House of Lords held that income tax was not payable. On the other hand, the surveyor of taxes contends that this case falls within the decision in Last's case, and the court below have held that he is right.

Now, first of all, what has Last's case decided? There had been prior to the judgment of the House of Lords a considerable divergence of opinion; starting between my brother Day and myself, it went on in the Court of Appeal between Lord Esher, M.R., and Cotton, L.J., on the one side, and Rigby, L.J., on the other, and culminated in the House of Lords with Lord Blackburn and Lord Fitzgerald on the one side, and Lord Bramwell on the other.

Now, what did Last's case decide? I will just read the head-note because it describes tersely the facts and the decision in that case. It runs thus: "A life insurance company issued 'participating policies' at an increased premium, according to the terms of which at the end of each quinquennial period 'the gross profits' of such policies were thus dealt with: two-thirds were returned by way of bonus or abatement of premiums to the holders of such policies then in force; the remaining third went to the company who bore the whole expenses of the business, the portion remaining after payment of expenses constituting the only profit available for division among the shareholders. Held, . . . that the two-thirds returned to the policyholders were 'annual profits or gains' and assessable to income tax."

That was a company managed by directors; it had shareholders and there were shares, and it had, as in the present case, participating policyholders who were not members of the company but, by taking out policies with that company, participating in bonuses, and paying, of course, an increased premium, they were entitled to the return of a bonus or an abatement of the premium they paid if and when the profits made by the company were sufficient to allow the return of bonuses or an abatement of premiums to the persons who took out participating policies. It was argued in that case all the way through, from the time it was before my brother and myself up to the House of Lords, whether these returns or bonuses which were made to these participating policyholders were profits, or whether they were part of the expenses of carrying on the business of the company; and the House of Lords ultimately held, after a conflicting decision, that they were not part of the expenses of carrying on the company, but that they were profits made by the company, because it was out of these profits that the bonuses which were made by the company were returned, and therefore they being "gains and profits" made by the company in the way of their business—it matters not in what form they dealt with the profits after they had been earned—income tax attached to them before the return was made to the policyholders. Now, that undoubtedly is the decision in Last's case.

I will cite the way in which Lord Bramwell, who was the dissentient judge in the House of Lords in Styles' case—which I am coming to in a moment—describes the decision in Last's case, in short. He says (at p.

turned into 7 per cent. He says that is so slight as to justify him saying that the principle of this decision does not apply to a company with a very small capital. But that can make no difference in point of principle; and also I think when it is examined it is not a fact in substance, because although that is the capital of the company, and the 7 per cent. is what the shareholders divide, still if we accept the principle of Last's case, what this company are doing is, they are carrying on an enormous business and making an enormous profit. It is true that after they have made a profit they distribute that profit to persons other than themselves, but the management of it, the whole conduct of the business earning the annual profits, is just as much done by the company here as it was done in the case of the company in Last's case. If those are profits before they are distributed, they are just as much profits in the hands of the company here as they were in the hands of the company in Last's case; and I consider that Last's case does decide it. The principle of it is that where you have this division between a company and policyholders who are not members of the company, then those sums are not part of the expenses of earning the profits but are themselves the profits earned. For these reasons I am clearly of opinion that the judgment of the court below is right.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. We have not got in this case to decide a question of abstract justice as to the incidence of taxation. We have to deal with a statute, and we have to ascertain what is the line drawn by that statute, and we have to decide on which side of that line this particular case comes; and if the case comes plainly upon one side of the line, it is no good for those who wish that the case were on the other side of the line to say, the case is not much over the line; it is only a little past the line.

Now, before saying anything else as to this case, I would like to point out that it does not matter when you are dealing with the question whether or not a particular receipt is a profit for the purpose of taxation, whether or not, for the purposes of distribution or carrying on the business, the machinery of a company is used. The decision in Styles' case is a decision which is really based upon the relations of the members of the insurance association in that case to each other; and the fact that their relationship was worked out by means of any incorporated company was not allowed to differentiate the case, or affect the case, in any degree whatsoever. And so I agree in the present case. The mere fact that the relation of the parties interested in this business was worked out in this case by the machinery of an incorporated company, does not make any difference whatsoever. But you have to look and see who are interested in the matter, and if you find as a fact that there are those interested in the matter who take a profit outside and beyond the portion of the surplus which is paid to the vendors in reduction really of the cost of insurance, in such a case the company is not merely machinery for working out the mutual relation of the members of the mutual insurance co.; it is something else. It is a company the machinery of which is used for the purpose of making a surplus beyond the expenditure and applying that surplus not merely in reduction of the costs of insurance to which the members contribute, but also in paying the profit as such to someone else. Of course when you look at Last's case there is, as a fact, a very significant difference between Last's case and Styles' case, and between Last's case and the present case —that is to say, in Last's case the machinery of the company was not used only for the purpose of distributing the surplus of the receipts beyond the expenditure in the reduction of the cost of insurance, but one-third of such surplus was handed over as profits to the company and dealt with for good and all as profits. In Styles' case there was no such dealing with any part of the surplus whatsoever. The whole of the surplus was appropriated to the reduction really of the cost of insurance; but in the present case it is not true to say that the whole of the surplus is used in reduction of the cost of insurance, because there is some of it paid to the shareholders of the company, who are entirely different people to the members of the mutual insurance body. They, it is true, are only shareholders in a company which in a sense came into existence for the purpose of working out the relations of the members of the mutual insurance to one another, but they are at the same time something different and they receive moneys as profits in which the members of the insurance have no interest whatever—that is to say, they receive the difference between the 4 per cent. and the 7 per cent. clearly as profits going into their pockets. That difference between 4 per cent. and 7 per cent. on the £20,000 deposit provided by the shareholders does not differ in kind one jot from the one-third profit that went to the company in Last's case, and I agree therefore, to the full, that this case is really governed by Last's case.

I want to say one word about the surplus here. It seems to me that Lord Halsbury when he delivered his judgment in Styles' case was of opinion that if you had one insurance company which consisted simply of members of a mutual association and you had no such outside body receiving profit as you had in Last's case, yet if that insurance company made a surplus by the investment of their money in a trade or business, that would clearly be carrying on a business and making a profit thereby; and I do not understand him to say that in that case he would have excluded any part of the surplus from taxation whether it was returned to the members or whether it was not; but as I understand the decision of the majority, they do draw a distinction and they seem to say that in respect of so much of the surplus as arises from the mutual insurance business, by which I suppose is meant so much as arises from the rates of premium charged, over and above the actuarial rates in principle or by a fortunately healthy state of things, the profit being above what was necessary for the purpose by what I may call an accident, that in such a case you are to charge the income tax on so much of the surplus as is made by what I will call outside business, and not to charge it in respect of so much of the surplus as comes from the excess which has been collected for the purpose of the premiums.

Now in the present case I do not understand that the appellants in any way suggest that they are exempt from taxation in any respect excepting in respect of so much of the surplus as comes from the business done by this company in respect of participating policies. They do not deny that if the premiums had been invested, or still less if they had been invested in carrying on a subsidiary business, that so much of the surplus is taxable; but even in respect of so much of the surplus as is properly attributable to the business of issuing these policies to the participating members, it seems to me for the reasons which my brethren have given and which I also have tried to express, that it is plain that the income-tax must be paid, because the company do not in respect of that part of the surplus pay it all back to the members of the mutual association, but really pay a part of it as a profit to a body outside the mutual insurance association, or outside the aggregate of the participating policyholders in the shape of the 7 per cent. which is paid to the shareholders of this company.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Neish, Howell, & Macfarlane.

Solicitor for the respondents, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. — Nov. 23.

In re PARRY AND HOPKIN'S ARBITRATION. (a.)

Will—Tenant for life and remainderman—Leaseholds—Permissive waste—Liability of tenant for life.

Where a claim was made by a legal remainderman against the estate of a deceased ligal tenant for life on account of dilapidations on a freehold and leasehold estate,

Held, that in spite of covenants to repair, the estate of the tenant for life was not liable.

Morgan Thomas, who died on the 23rd of December, 1885, by his will dated in 1885, gave a freehold dwelling-house and also certain leasehold dwelling-houses to his wife Mary for her life, and after her death to his niece Sarah Thomas absolutely.

There was a covenant in both leases that the lessee would, during the term, repair and keep in repair the dwelling-houses and premises, and deliver them up in good repair at the end of the term.

Mary Thomas died in December, 1897, and by her will appointed Edward Hopkin and Richard Thomas her executors.

The testator's niece Sarah Thomas (now Sarah Parry) claimed £368 12s. 6d. by way of dilapidations against the estate of Mary Thomas, on the ground that both the freehold and leasehold hereditaments had been allowed to go out of repair during the life of Mary Thomas.

The matter by agreement between the parties was referred to an arbitrator, who stated a special case for the opinion of the court as to the question of law.

It was submitted by the executors that there was no cause of action by a remainderman against the representatives of the tenant for life for permissive waste.

L. M. Richards, for the executors of Mary Thomas, referred to the case of In re Cartwright, Avis v. Newman, 37 W. R. 612, 41 Ch. D. 532.

Rowland Rowlands, for Sarah Parry, relied on In re Betty, [1899] 1 Ch. 821, 47 W. R. Dig. 211.

NORTH, J.—I do not think this action will lie against the tenant for life. The leaseholds are given to a tenant for life and remainderman, and the tenant for life is bound to perform the covenants. I think the case of In re Betty is to be distinguished, as in that case an equitable tenant for life was held liable for the consequences of not performing the covenants to repair. Here a legal tenant in remainder claims as against a legal tenant for life for losses occasioned by failure to repair. In re Cartwright is to the point, though it was a freehold estate which was concerned in that case, and not leasehold; but I do not see what difference that makes in principle. I know of no action to enforce such a claim as this.

Solicitors, T. Protheroe Price, for T. T. Lewis, Bridgend; Wrentmore & Son, for Stockwood, Bridgend.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. — Jan. 16; Feb. 15.

BRITISH MOTOR SYNDICATE v. TAYLOR. (a.)

Patent — Infringement — Patented articles bought in England and sent abroad for sale—"Making use of" the invention—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), Schedule I., Form D —Damages—Assessment.

A person who transports patented articles from place to place in the United Kingdom, but so that the articles are not serving the purpose for which they are patented, does not "exercise" or "put in practice" the patented invention; but the export abroad of such articles with a view to a sale is at least indirectly a "making use" of an invention, and is an infringement within the meaning of Schedule I., Form D, of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883.

The measure of damages is what the defendants would have had to pay for permission to do that which they wrongfully did.

This was a summons to vary the certificate of the master upon an inquiry as to damages.

The plaintiffs were the owners of a patent for apparatus for starting gas motors, and on the 15th of November, 1897, brought this action for infringement.

On the 4th of April, 1898, a judgment was taken by consent for an injunction and delivery up of the infringing articles, and for an inquiry as to what damages had been sustained by the plaintiffs by reason of the defendants' infringement of the letters patent.

The master assessed the damages on the basis that the defendants infringed in respect of twenty-seven articles, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to damages to the amount of £10 in respect of each. The defendants contended that they infringed as regards eight articles only, and that the amount of damages ought to be £3 instead of £10.

As to the first question, the evidence showed that the defendants bought in England twenty-seven infringing articles; that they sold seven of them and used another in England, and that as regards the remaining nineteen, they sent them abroad to their French house in Paris, where they sold them to various foreign firms.

Hume Williams, Q.C., and Lainé, for the applicants the defendants.

Moulton, Q.C., and A. J. Walter, for the plaintiffs.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, said: The question is whether there has been an infringement in respect of these nineteen articles. This depends on the construction of the patent. The form of the patent is that found in the first schedule to the Patents, &c., Act of 1883, Form D. It confers on the patentee the sole privilege to make, use, exercise, and vend the invention within the United Kingdom, and to have and enjoy the whole profit and advantage from to time accruing by reason of the invention, and commands all her Majesty's subjects that they do not at any time during the continuance of the patent either directly or indirectly make use of or put in practice the invention or any part of the same.

The defendants in this case did not make the invention if (as seems not probable) that applies only to the manufacture of the patented article. Passing by for the moment the words use and exercise, did they vend it in the United Kingdom?

It appears to me to be established by the case of

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Johnson, 45 W. R. 481, [1897] 2 Ch. 322, 46 W. R. 255, [1898] A. C. 200, that in order that a sale may be an infringement, some material part of the transaction of the sale must be done in England. I think this is brought out very clearly by the observations of Lord Herschell in advising the House of Lords. Now, in the present case there is no evidence that any part of the transaction of sale took place within the United Kingdom; all that appears to have been done within its limits was to send the infringing articles beyond those limits with a view to a sale there.

There remains then to be considered the words "use, exercise" in the granting part of the patent, and the expressions "make use of or put in practice" in the prohibitory part. On this Lord Herschell makes some observations which are to be borne in mind: "Supposing that a case of vending could not be established, that no part of the sale was constituted in this country, and that the only charge possible were a charge of using, I do not intend to express any opinion but I desire distinctly to reserve my opinion whether the mere transport from place to place in this country of a patented article would necessarily be a using in this country." He goes on to point out that there may be cases—viz., those where the article is, when applied in a particular way of itself serving the purpose for which it is patented, these may be an infringement. He then adds that "in a case where the person transporting it or warehousing it gets no advantage out of the patent—that is to say, where it can be no more easily, and no more safely, and no more advantageously carried, warehoused, or stored, than if the article were not a patented one, but were an article entirely outside the patent—it by no means follows that the transporting from place to place or otherwise dealing with the patented article in that kind of way would constitute a using," and he said, "I do not desire to decide that point now, but I wish to draw attention to that distinction."

The patented articles in the present case, when being transported from place to place in this country were not serving the purpose for which they were patented, and in my opinion the defendants did not during that transport "exercise" or "put in practice" the patented invention. What the defendants did was to carry these articles out of the kingdom with a view to selling them—that is, with the object of turning them to profitable account. By so doing the defendants attained two objects: (1) They prevented an order being made for the delivering up or destruction of the infringing articles; and (2) they actually obtained the benefit of the proceeds of sale. Is that or is it not "to use" the invention, or "directly or indirectly to make use of it"? The question is a difficult one, and there is very little authority on it. In Von Heyden v. Neustadt, 28 W. R. 496, 14 Ch. D. 230, the patent was for a new process of making a well-known chemical product, and James, L.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, says: "A person who makes, or procures to be made abroad, for sale in this country, and sells the product here, is surely indirectly making, using, and putting in practice the patented invention." Again, in United Telephone Co. v. Sharples, 33 W. R. 444, 29 Ch. D. 164, Kay, J., says: "It is admitted by the counsel for the defendant that if a man buys abroad, imports into this country, has in his possession here and sells, although to a foreign customer, an instrument which he knows would, if made, sold, or used in this country, be an infringement of an English patent, that would be an infringement of such patent. I confess I have little hesitation in acceding to this," and his lordship held that on that ground there had been an infringement in the case before him. [In the report of the same case in 2 Rep. Pat. Cas. 28, the words are "that would be a user which would be an infringement of the patent."] The first meaning assigned to the word "use" in Johnson's Dictionary is "to employ to any purpose"; it is therefore a word of wide signification. It seems that "use" and "make use of" are wider than "exercise" and "put in practice," and without saying that no limit is to be placed on the two former expressions in the patent, I think that they are not confined there to use of a patented article for the purpose for which it was patented. In my opinion the transport within the United Kingdom of articles made according to the plaintiff's patent in the circumstances which occurred in this case, was indirectly at least "making use" of those articles within the meaning of the patent, and consequently is an infringement.

The remaining question is as to the amount of the damages. The principle on which these are to be assessed were discussed in the recent case of Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Puncture Proof Pneumatic Tyre Co., 16 Rep. Pat. Cas. 209. [His lordship referred to the judgment of Collins, L.J., p. 216.]

The plaintiffs seek to have the damages assessed on the principle that the measure is the sum which the defendants would have to pay for permission to do that which they wrongfully did.

His lordship reduced the amount assessed by the master at £10 per article to £5 per article, on the ground that on the evidence £10 per article was more than the defendants would have had to pay for permission to do that which they wrongfully did.

Solicitors, Everett & Hodgkinson, for Parker Woodward, Nottingham; Norris, Allens, & Chapman.

---

Chan. Div. } Feb. 27.
Byrne, J. }

BALDWYN v. SMITH. (a.)

Lunacy—Lunatic—Contract to purchase real estate—Contract carried out by committee under direction of court—Voidable contract—Conversion of lunatic's estate.

A direction by the Master in Lunacy to the committee of a lunatic to carry out a contract by such lunatic for the purchase of real estate, and to provide the purchase-money out of such lunatic's personal estate, amounts to an election on the part of the lunacy authorities to confirm the voidable contract of such lunatic, and the result will be to effect a conversion of the estate so contracted to be purchased as between the lunatic's heir-at-law and next-of-kin, and such estate will accordingly descend to the heir.

Point of law.

This was an action set down for argument as a point of law. The plaintiffs, who were the personal representatives of William Baldwyn, deceased, claimed as against the defendants, his co-heiresses, a declaration that certain hereditaments known as the Badsey estate formed part of the deceased's personal estate, or alternately that the said estate devolved on the defendants as real estate subject to a lien or charge of £3,703 14s. for unpaid purchase-money, and subject to the obligation of the defendants to exonerate the personal estate of William Baldwyn to the amount aforesaid, with interest thereon from the date of the contract to purchase the said estate.

The point of law raised was, whether, assuming William Baldwyn, deceased, to have been a person of unsound mind at the date of the said contract, a conversion of his personal estate into real estate was effected by two orders, dated respectively the 12th of August, 1892, and the 7th of August, 1895 (made in the matter of William Baldwyn, a person of unsound mind), so as to bind his next-of-kin.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The facts of the case were as follow:

On the 30th of June, 1890, Baldwyn attended a sale by auction, at which certain freehold hereditaments at Badsey, near Evesham, in the county of Worcester, were put up for sale. Baldwyn bid for the property and was declared the purchaser. It was assumed, for the purpose of the argument, that he was at this time of unsound mind. Before the purchase had been completed, Baldwyn was adjudged a lunatic, and one Edward Grantham Righton was appointed his committee.

On the 12th of October, 1892, the Master in Lunacy made an order to the following effect:

That the contract dated the 30th day of June, 1890, entered into by the said William Baldwyn, for the purchase of certain hereditaments and premises at Badsey, near Evesham, in the county of Worcester, belonging to William Smith, of Evesham aforesaid, be carried into effect and that the purchase of certain buildings adjoining the said land retained by the said vendor at the request of the said William Baldwyn be effected at the price of £100, and that the Masters in Lunacy do settle and approve of a proper assurance thereof to the said William Baldwyn and that the said Edward Grantham Righton as such committee of the estate do pay the sum of £3,309 6s., the balance of the purchase-money, and all interest due thereon and the sum of £100 out of any money in his hands available. That the said Edward Grantham Righton, as committee of the estate of the said William Baldwyn, do give the necessary notice for calling in the sum of £4,000 due from William Chichester secured by mortgage dated the 12th day of July, 1869, upon premises at Dymock, in the county of Gloucester, and do in the name and on behalf of the said William Baldwyn take such proceedings and do and execute such acts, deeds, and things as the Masters in Lunacy shall approve of for making the same available.

On the 7th of August, 1895, the Master in Lunacy made a further order "that the purchase of the Badsey estate mentioned in the order dated the 12th of August, 1892, be forthwith completed," and that the said E. G. Righton do, out of the moneys received by him as directed in the schedule thereto and "any money in his hands available for that purpose, pay the sum of £3,703 14s. 10d., the purchase-money for the said estate and interest thereon." It was alleged that the master in making these orders expressly left open the question as to the effect of the orders to operate a conversion of Baldwyn's estate as between his co-heiresses and next-of-kin. Nothing, however, to this effect was inserted in the orders themselves.

Baldwyn died on the 26th of November, 1898, intestate.

Rowden, Q.C., and Buckmaster, for the plaintiffs.—It is a rule of the court in dealing with the property of a lunatic never to alter the devolution of the property: Attorney-General v. Marquis of Ailesbury, 36 W. R. 737, 12 App. Cas. 672. Strictly speaking there cannot be a contract with a lunatic: In re Rhodes, Rhodes v. Rhodes, 38 W. R. 385, 44 Ch. D. 94; Lunacy Act, 1890, ss. 120, 123. When the court adopted the contract in this case it did not desire to abandon its general principles and to effect a conversion. If conversion was effected at all, it was effected by the committee, but this was beyond the power of a committee. All that the orders meant to effect was a change in the lunatic's investments.

Levett, Q.C., and Napier, for the defendants.—The contract was affirmed by the master, and in this way a conversion was effected: Lawes v. Bennett, 1 Cox Ch. Cas. 167. An order in lunacy may effect a conversion: Jones v. Green, 16 W. R. 603, L. R. 5 Eq. 555; In re Freer, Freer v. Freer, 31 W. R. 426, 22 Ch. D. 622. If an order in lunacy is not to have its natural effect there must be some words inserted in the order for the purpose: In re Barker, 29 W. R. 873, 17 Ch. D. 241.

Rowden, Q.C., replied.

BYRNE, J.—In this case a man of unsound mind, but not so found, contracted to purchase certain real estate. He was subsequently found to be of unsound mind, and his committee was ordered to carry out the contract. I take it to be that the court exercised on behalf of the man the power of confirming the contract, which he might have exercised on his own behalf had he subsequently become sane. The court acting exactly as it would do in the case of an infant with a view to benefit the lunatic, ordered the contract to be carried out. I take it that this acted as an election on the part of the lunatic not to reject a voidable contract. Different considerations suggest themselves when the question is whether real estate shall be purchased or whether it shall be sold. I hold here that there has been a confirmation of the contract with the necessary legal consequences, and that a conversion has been effected. The estate so purchased descends to the defendants as the lunatic's co-heiresses, and the action must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, Crowders, Vizard, & Oldham, for Smith & Smith, Evesham; Smiles & Co., for E. S. Wood, Winchcomb.

---

Chan. Div.
Buckley, J. } March 6, 7, 8.

HONOUR v. THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF THE UNITED STATES. (a.)

Insurance—Life policy—Practice—Declaration as to future interests—Refusal to accept premiums—Repudiation of policy—Action by holder.

The court will refuse to make a declaration as to the validity of a policy of life assurance during the life of the assured, even when the society issuing the policy has refused to accept from the holder premiums due upon it upon the ground that the policy is void.

Action.

By a policy of assurance dated the 8th of July, 1897, the defendant society, in consideration of a payment in advance of £48 10s., and of half-yearly payments of like sums to be made at the office of the society on or before the 16th of December and June in every year, promised to pay to the executors or administrators of one Powis, or to his assigns, £4,000 upon satisfactory proof of his death. This policy was made to replace an earlier one made temporarily, and was, on the 6th of July, 1897, assigned by Powis to the plaintiff.

Due notice was given of the assignment to the society. Two of the premiums having been paid, the plaintiff made a legal tender of a third on the 16th of June, 1898, the day on which it was payable, but the society refused to receive it.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiff thereupon brought this action, alleging that the society were still refusing to take the premium, and that the refusal was a repudiation by the society of the policy and all contracts thereunder. He claimed a declaration that the policy of assurance and the contracts thereunder were valid and subsisting, and that he was entitled to the benefit of them, and for an injunction to restrain the society from repudiating by words or acts the policy and contracts.

The defendants, in their defence, alleged that the policy was null and void, because it was really effected by the plaintiff, who had not any insurable interest in it, and not by Powis, who was his agent only, and also on the ground that it was obtained by misrepresentations. They counterclaimed for a declaration that the policy was void and ought to be delivered up to be cancelled.

The defendants at the trial raised a preliminary objection that the action was premature, the declaration asked for being as to future rights.

Bray, Q.C., and Sheldon, for the defendants.—The person assured is still alive; the plaintiff has no present rights under the policy, and cannot come now and ask to have the question of the validity of the policy tried: Bright v. Tyndall, 25 W. R. 109, 4 Ch. D. 189; Kevan v. Crawford, 26 W. R. 49, at p. 52, 6 Ch. D. 29, at p. 42. He may have an action for damages.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and N. C. Home, for the plaintiff.—In Bright v. Tyndall the question raised was fictitious. Here the plaintiff has done an act repudiating the policy. It is clear that the plaintiff could bring an action for damages, which implies the validity of the contract; why, then, should not the court make a declaration to that effect?

J. M. W. Holmes held a watching brief for the Star Life Assurance Co.

BUCKLEY, J.—It is a matter of common experience that the court does not take upon itself to define the rights of parties until the time comes when those rights are present rights. At present the plaintiff has no claim under the policy. Before the life assured by the policy drops the society may get further information as the facts upon which they rely by way of defence. Why should they be called upon at this date to prove their case? The plaintiff could bring an action for damages for repudiation of the policy, but he does not do that as the damages would probably be nil. It is, however, to be remembered that the condition of the policy is that the premiums should be paid on or before the days mentioned, and that the defendants have refused to accept the payments. And I understand that they intend to refuse to accept those that become payable in the future. The plaintiff must not be prejudiced by their conduct. I shall refuse to make the declaration and injunction asked for by the plaintiff upon the defendant society undertaking not to rely upon the non-payment of the premiums upon the proper days in any action the plaintiff may bring in the future in respect of the policy.

[Upon this decision the plaintiff agreed to put a certain witness in the box, and the defendant society withdrew their objection to the date of the action, and the trial of the claim and counterclaim proceeded with the result that the court declared the policy null and void.]

Solicitors, Hugh Rose-Innes; John W. Sykes.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Feb. 6.

REG. v. DE GREY.
Ex parte KING'S LYNN DOCK CO. (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Appeal against assessment to quarter sessions—Parish council—Notice to—Service of proper notice upon not a condition precedent to entertaining appeal—Poor Relief Act, 1743 (17 Geo. 2, c. 38)—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73).

The service of notice on the town council of a municipal borough is not a condition precedent to the hearing by the quarter sessions of appeals from a poor rate.

Reg. v. Justices of Kent, 80 L. T. Rep. 622, not followed.

Rule nisi for a mandamus to the recorder of King's Lynn, commanding him to hear and determine, or to enter and respite, two appeals between the King's Lynn Docks and Railway Co. and the Assessment Committee of the King's Lynn Poor Law Union with respect to two several rates or assessments made for the relief of the poor of the parish of St. Margaret's, in the borough of King's Lynn, dated respectively the 21st of November, 1898, and the 26th of May, 1899.

The King's Lynn Docks and Railway Co. appealed to the recorder from the two rates. The notices of the appeal were addressed to the Churchwardens and Overseers of the Poor of the Parish of St. Margaret's, in the borough of King's Lynn, in the county of Norfolk, and to the Assessment Committee of the King's Lynn Poor Law Union. The notices were served on the clerk of the peace of the borough, who also held the office of town clerk. The recorder, upon the authority of Reg. v. Justices of Kent, 80 L. T. Rep. 622, 47 W. R. Dig. 108, declined to hear or to enter and respite the appeals on the ground that notice had not been served upon the town council of the borough.

The rule nisi was obtained on the grounds (1) that the town council of King's Lynn were not entitled to notice of the appeal; (2) that if they were entitled to notice they had had it; (3) that in any case the appeals ought to have been entered and respited.

Marshall, Q.C. (Cunningham Glen and A. M. Talbot with him) showed cause.—By 17 Geo. 3, c. 38, s. 4, and 41 Geo. 3, c. 23, s. 4, persons wishing to appeal against the rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor must serve notice of appeal in writing upon the churchwardens and overseers of the parish. By the Local Government Act, 1894, ss. 5 and 6, the power of appointing overseers of the poor is vested in, and the powers, duties, and liabilities of the overseers, or of the churchwardens and overseers in respect of appeals as to poor rates are transferred to, the parish council. Section 52, sub-section 5, of the same Act, says that all enactments in any Act relating to any powers, duties, or liabilities transferred by this Act to a parish council from overseers, or churchwardens and overseers, shall be construed as if any reference therein to them referred to the parish council. In King's Lynn there is no parish council, but there is a town council, it being a municipal borough, so that it comes under section 33 of the Local Government Act, which provides that the Local Government Board may on the application of the council of any municipal borough make an order conferring on that council any powers, duties, or liabilities of overseers, and any powers, duties, or liabilities of a parish council. An order of the Local Government Board dated the 7th of April, 1897, transferred the powers, duties, and liabilities of the overseers respecting appeals or objections by overseers in respect of the valuation list or appeals in respect of the poor rate, to the town council; and the terms of section 6 of the Local Government Act were made to apply subject to the modification of town council for parish council. The town council, therefore, is substituted for the overseers, and must receive notice in writing of an appeal. It was so held in regard to a parish council in Reg. v. Justices of Kent. [CHANNELL, J.—In that case, which was decided by Darling, J., and myself, I am satisfied that our attention was never called to the real point. If it was wrong, I should like to be a party to setting it right.] Service of notice on the clerk of the peace who happened to be town clerk as well, is not a service on the town council.

(a.) Reported by P. B. DURNFORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They referred to Reg. v. White, 14 Q. B. D. 358; Reg. v. Justices of Wilts, 8 B. & C. 380; Reg. v. Surrey Justices, 29 W. R. 260, 6 Q. B. D. 100; Reg. v. Inhabitants of Skircoat, 28 L. J. M. C. 224, 7 W. R. C. L. Dig. 3.

Littler, Q.C. (F. K. North with him), in support of the rule.—The service was good since the town council knew all about the matter. Notice to the overseers is still a good notice. Nowhere in the Local Government Act is it said that notice is to be served on the town clerk instead of the overseer. So long as the notice came to the knowledge of the town council, there is no provision as to the form of the notice. But notice is not a condition precedent to hearing or entering and respiting the appeal; the authorities show that the decision in Reg. v. Justices of Kent cannot stand. The matter is not covered by Act of Parliament. Section 52 of the Local Government Act says nothing about borough councils, and the order of the Local Government Board does not deal with that section.

They cited Shrewsbury Railway Co. v. Leominster Overseers, 21 J. P. 149; Liverpool United Gaslight Co. v. Everton Overseers, 19 W. R. 412, L. R. 6 C. P. 414, and Reg. v. Justices of Surrey.

CHANNELL, J., said: We have come to the conclusion that the rule must be made absolute. The real question, though two or three others have been argued, is whether the decision of Darling, J., and myself in the case of Reg. v. The Justices of Kent is right or not. Of course, in another court, before other judges, there might be a question whether it was binding or not, but the rule was moved before Darling, J., and myself, and I think I have my learned brother's authority, from what passed then, to say that he would concur in the view I take about the case now. There were two points decided there. One point was that by the operation of the Local Government Act—it was the Act there, and not the order of the Local Government Board, as in the present case—a parish council, where there is one, has been substituted for overseers in all matters relating to appeals against a poor rate. It was decided by the court that that was so, and that, in consequence, by virtue of section 52 of that Act, the word "overseers" in the old Act of Geo. 2 is to be read as parish council. I have now somewhat more doubt than I had at the time whether we were right, because that point has been more fully argued. I am not prepared to say that we were wrong, and I am still inclined to think we were right.

But then there was another point—namely, that in the case of an appeal against a poor rate the giving of proper notice is a condition precedent to the hearing and determination by the court of quarter sessions. Now, that previous decision of ours was given per curiam, perhaps the stronger thing to say is that it was a mistake. It arose from our attention not having been called to the fact that there is a difference between the old Act of Geo. 2 on this point and the other Acts under which it has been held that notice of appeal is a condition precedent to the hearing. We did not have our attention specifically drawn to the difference between poor rate and other appeals. In these circumstances, whatever would have been the decision of two other judges, we certainly are not bound to follow that case, and I do not think other judges would be bound to follow that decision, because they would see on the face of the report that the cases of Shrewsbury Railway Co. v. Leominster Overseers; Liverpool United Gaslight Co. v. Overton Overseers; and Reg. v. Surrey Justices, were not drawn to our attention. At any rate, whether the other judges would say so or not, I am quite clear that it is right that I should say we are not bound by it. That being so, the learned recorder has jurisdiction, assuming that he came to the conclusion that the right notices had not been given, to entertain the appeals and direct them to be adjourned according to the provisions of the statute of Geo. 2. No specific application was made to him on the point, and in many cases that would be fatal, but I do not think that could be said here. It is not necessary to make a formal application for adjournment. Consequently we must hold, that, although the recorder was right, having regard to the fact that Reg. v. Justices of Kent was quoted to him, yet he had jurisdiction to entertain the case and order an adjournment, and therefore the mandamus must go.

BUCKNILL, J., concurred.

Rule made absolute.

Solicitors, Burton, Yeates, & Hart, for Coulton & Son, Lynn; Crossman, Pritchard, Crossman, & Block, for Seppings & Wilkin, Lynn.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 29.

FELTON AND ANOTHER v. BOWER & CO. (a.)

London—City of London Court—Jurisdiction—Issue of summons with leave—Cause of action arising within the city—London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. lxxvii.), s. 39—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 74, 185.

In the City of London Court it is not necessary, in actions where the jurisdiction of the court is based on the cause of action arising within the city, that the leave of the judge or registrar should be obtained for the issue of the summons.

Appeal from the decision of Lawrance, J., in chambers, granting a writ of prohibition directed to the City of London Court.

The plaintiffs, who are wire merchants trading in Germany, brought an action against the defendants in the City of London Court to recover £1 6s., the balance of the price of goods sold and delivered.

The defendants' place of business is at Hull, and none of the defendants reside within the City of London.

The goods were ordered by the defendants at 23, Billiter-street, in the City of London, from W. F. Dennis & Co., who are the sole agents for the plaintiffs in London.

The action was commenced by a default summons, which was issued in the ordinary way and not by leave of the judge or registrar, as is required by section 74 of the County Courts Act, 1888, in cases where the defendant does not reside within the district of the court, and no copy of the affidavit, mentioned in the County Court Rules, ord. 5, r. 9*a*, was served with the summons as is required by ord. 7, r. 3*a*.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

At the trial of the action before the registrar the defendants objected to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground, among others, that the necessary steps in pursuance of section 74 of the County Courts Act, 1888, had not been taken. The registrar overruled the objection and—the defendants having declined to contest the action on the merits—gave judgment for the plaintiffs.

The defendants thereupon applied to the High Court for a writ of prohibition restraining the City of London Court and the plaintiffs from further proceeding in the action. Lawrance, J., to whom the application was made, granted the writ. The plaintiffs appealed.

Section 39 of the London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852, enacts as follows: The "summons in any action commenced in the City of London Court may issue provided the defendant or one of the defendants shall dwell or carry on business or have employment within the City of London or the liberties thereof at the time of the action brought, or provided the defendant or defendants shall have had employment therein at some time within six months next before the time of the action brought, or if the cause of action either wholly or in part arises therein."

Section 185 of the County Courts Act, 1888, enacts as follows: "The courts held by virtue of the London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852, shall be held by the name of the City of London Court, and shall be a court of record, and its decisions shall be subject to appeal in the same way and on the same conditions as decisions of a county court are subject for the time being. The judge and officers of the City of London Court shall respectively have and exercise the like jurisdiction, power, and authority in all respects, except the power of appointing officers, as are for the time being possessed and exercised by the judge and officers respectively of a county court. The rules and orders in force for the time being for regulating the practice of and costs in the county courts, and forms of proceedings therein, shall be in force in the said City of London Court, to the exclusion of any other rules and orders; and the same fees shall be taken for proceedings in which jurisdiction is hereby given to the court as upon similar proceedings in the county courts, and such fees shall be applied in the same manner as fees taken under the provisions of the said London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852, provided that nothing in this Act shall take away, lessen, or diminish any of the powers, rights, or privileges of the judge of the said court, or the authority of the mayor, aldermen, and commons of the City of London in common council assembled, in relation to such court, or to the judge or officers thereof, or to the fees taken therein, as such powers or authority heretofore existed."

Section 74 of the same Act enacts as follows: "Except where by this Act it is otherwise provided, every action or matter may be commenced in the court within the district of which the defendant, or one of the defendants, shall dwell or carry on his business at the time of commencing the action or matter, or it may be commenced, by leave of the judge or registrar, in the court within the district of which the defendant, or one of the defendants, dwelt or carried on business at any time within six calendar months next before the time of commencement, or with the like leave in the court in the district of which the cause of action or claim wholly or in part arose."

Danckwerts, Q.C. (H. Niebel with him), for the plaintiffs.—The City of London Court, prior to 1888, had power, by virtue of section 39 of the London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852, to issue summonses against a defendant resident out of its jurisdiction, when the cause of action arose within its jurisdiction, without the leave of the judge or registrar. Sections 74 and 185 of the County Courts Act did not take away that jurisdiction inasmuch as general legislation does not repeal particular legislation without express words. On the contrary, the jurisdiction was saved by the proviso that the powers, rights, and privileges of the judge of the court should not be taken away, lessened, or diminished. Kutner v. Phillips, 39 W. R. 526, [1891] 2 Q. B. 267, is in point.

Bonsey, for the defendants.—Obtaining the leave of the judge or registrar is a matter of procedure, not of jurisdiction, and section 185 of the County Courts Act expressly substitutes its own procedure for the old procedure of the City of London Court.

CHANNELL, J.—The question is whether, where the defendant resides outside the jurisdiction of the City of London Court, and it is not shown that he has, or has had, employment within the jurisdiction, but the cause of action arose wholly or in part within the jurisdiction—whether in that case it is necessary to obtain the leave of the judge or registrar for issuing the summons. Mr. Danckwerts says that Kutner v. Phillips is a binding authority. I am going to follow Kutner v. Phillips, but, at the same time, I am not sure that it is an authority for the present case. Some of the reasoning of the judgments in the case is applicable to the present one, and some is not. The question in Kutner v. Phillips was whether the provisions of section 39 of the London (City) Small Debts Extension Act, 1852, and section 74 of the County Courts Act, 1888, were consistent or inconsistent in regard to the jurisdiction of the court over defendants who have employment within the city. Nothing could be clearer than that in regard to that jurisdiction the two provisions were not inconsistent. So far as the decision in Kutner v. Phillips rested upon that consideration it is not an authority for the present case, because I think the two provisions are inconsistent in so far as they relate to the point at issue here.

Section 39 of the Act of 1852 gives jurisdiction where the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction. Section 74 of the County Courts Act, 1888, gives the same jurisdiction with a qualification. The two provisions are, therefore, inconsistent. Therefore the reasoning on which Kutner v. Phillips was decided is not binding on us.

It has, however, been pointed out that the Act of 1852 deals specially with the City of London Court, and that the County Courts Act, 1888, is a general Act. The rule in that case is that general legislation does not overrule special legislation unless a clear intention is expressed in such general legislation to repeal the special legislation. I can see nothing in the County Courts Act, 1888, to show that it was intended that the City of London Court should no longer exercise the jurisdiction to issue without leave summonses in cases where the cause of action arose within its jurisdiction. It follows that the court can still exercise that jurisdiction without leave. The rule for a prohibition ought therefore to be discharged.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree with my learned brother as regards the inconsistency between section 39 of the Act of 1852 and section 74 of the County Courts Act, 1888. But one cannot read the judgments in Kutner v. Phillips without seeing that the jurisdiction of the City of London Court has not been interfered with by the County Courts Act except in so far as the jurisdiction has been added to. It was intended, while making new rules for the court, to leave its jurisdiction unimpaired.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, H. H. Crawford.

Solicitors for the defendants, Prebble & Hall.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 29.

PALMER v. SNOW. (a.)

Sunday—Sunday trading — Barber — Words ejusdem generis—Lord's Day Observance Act, 1676 (29 Car. 2, c. 7), s. 1.

A barber is not within 29 Car. 2, c. 7.

Case stated by the stipendiary magistrate of South Staffordshire.

An information was laid by the respondent against the appellant charging that he, being a tradesman—to wit, a barber and hairdresser—did work of his ordinary calling on the Lord's Day, contrary to the Lord's Day Observance Act, 1676.

Section 1 of the Act provides as follows: "No tradesman, artificer, workman, or labourer, or other person whatsoever, shall do or exercise any worldly labour, business, or work of his ordinary calling upon the Lord's Day or any part thereof (works of necessity and charity only excepted)."

It was proved or admitted that the appellant was a barber and hairdresser, and that he kept his shop open on Sunday, the 24th of September, 1899, and shaved several customers and cut the hair of others. No articles were bought or sold in the shop.

The magistrate convicted the appellant.

Shearman, for the appellant.—The persons named in the Act are placed in a descending scale of rank, so that if a barber is not a tradesman or artificer he is not within the terms of the Act at all, because workman and labourer imply someone of lower rank than the rank of a barber. The words "or other person whatsoever" are to be construed as applicable to persons ejusdem generis with the preceding words: see Sandiman v. Breach, 7 B. & C. 96. In Reg. v. Silvester, 33 L. J. M. C. 79, a farmer was held not to be a person to whom the Act applied, because farmers were a class of persons so well known that if it had been intended to include them they would have been specified among the persons to whom the Act applied. So in the case of barbers, if the Legislature had intended to prohibit them exercising their calling on Sunday they would have specifically named them. Barbers at the period when the Act was passed were a far more important class of persons than they are at the present time. They had been incorporated as a craft in the reign of Henry IV., and combined with shaving and hairdressing the practice of blood-letting. An Act was passed for their benefit in the reign of Henry VIII. enjoining surgeons against blood-letting and the "feat or craft of barbery or shaving." The word "tradesman" in the Act means a person who deals in goods by retail. "Artificer" is a person who works on raw materials.

Dickens, Q.C. (W. Shakespeare with him), for the respondent.—A barber is within all the terms used in the Act. He is a tradesman because he, in ordinary language, plies a trade, and he is both an artificer, workman, and a labourer, because he earns his living by the work of his hands: see Phillips v. Innes, 4 Cl. & Fin. 234.

CHANNELL, J.—The appeal must be allowed. All that it is necessary for us to decide is that a barber is not a tradesman, because the information only charged the appellant that he was a tradesman. We are, however, not satisfied to base our decision on that point only, because it has been suggested that a barber comes within the other terms used in the Act. I do not think that he does. The Act under which the proceedings were taken differs from the Scotch Act under which Phillips v. Innes was decided, for the Scotch Act begins by enacting that no ordinary labour or handicraft shall be carried on on Sunday. If that provision were in force in England, this case might be within it. But the English Act is not so general in its terms. It only relates to certain specified persons "or other person whatsoever." It has already been decided that the latter words are to be read ejusdem generis with the preceding words.

With regard to the word "tradesman" I am strongly of opinion, though that word is often used as distinguished from gentleman or professional man so as to include barber, yet that it does not bear that meaning in this Act, but means rather a person who carries on the trade of buying and selling goods. In that case a barber is not within it. "Artificer" means somebody who makes something, so that a barber is not within that term; nor is the appellant, whatever his assistant might be, a workman or labourer, for those terms imply someone who is employed by another. A barber therefore does not come within any of the persons specified in the Act. The fact that the business of a barber was at the time when the Act was passed a well-known one, and one of more importance than it is now, is an additional reason for holding that the Act was not intended to relate to barbers.

BUCKNILL, J.—Barbers at the date when the Act was passed were an important class of persons—quite as important as surgeons. They would not, therefore, be included under the general words. Nor is a barber included under the term "tradesman," because he does not carry on a business which consists of buying and selling, nor is he an "artificer," for he does not make things. Nor, again, is he included under the term "workman or labourer," because he is not in the employment of another.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Maudes & Tunnicliffe, for Dallow & Dallow, Wolverhampton.

Solicitors for the respondent, Murr & Rusby, for Sharpe & Derby, West Bromwich.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 22.

SAVOY HOTEL CO. (Appellants) v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (Respondents). (a.)

Shop Hours Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 62), ss. 9, 10—"Shop"—"Public-house or refreshment-house"—Hotel—"Domestic servant"—Page-boy.

Any place of business having a public-house licence

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

is a shop within the meaning of the Shop Hours Act, 1892, notwithstanding that it is an establishment which would ordinarily be termed a hotel, and not a public-house.

A young person employed as a page and messenger boy in such an establishment held not to be wholly employed as a domestic servant within the meaning of the same statute.

Case stated by a metropolitan police magistrate.

Upon the hearing at the Bow-street police-court on the 27th of February, 1899, of a summons upon complaint made on behalf of the respondents that the appellants during a certain week in January, 1899, at the Savoy Hotel and Restaurant, the Strand (being a shop within the meaning of the Shop Hours Act, 1892), in the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, did unlawfully employ in or about the said shop one Arthur Knight (being a young person within the meaning of the said Act) for a longer period than seventy-four hours, including meal-times, whereby the appellants became liable to the penalty provided by the said Act; and further, that the appellants at the said Savoy Hotel and Restaurant did unlawfully fail to keep exhibited the notice required by section 4 of the said Act, the following facts were proved or admitted:

The appellants are the owners of the Savoy Hotel and Restaurant, which is licensed to be kept as an inn for the sale of intoxicating liquors under the Act 9 Geo. 4, c. 64, and the Acts amending the same.

The premises are structurally adapted for use as an inn or hotel for the reception of guests and travellers desirous of staying therein and for supplying refreshments to the public, and include a restaurant, grill-room, and dining-room in which meals and intoxicating liquors are supplied to members of the public, whether guests staying at the hotel or not. There is no bar or counter for the sale of intoxicating liquors, but intoxicating liquors are sold by retail by supplying them in the said restaurant, grill-room, and dining-room and to guests in their rooms. The business of the said restaurant is conducted in the same manner as that of other high-class restaurants in London, and refreshments are sold there to the public as at other restaurants. The excise licence is granted under the statute 43 & 44 Vict. c. 20, s. 43, sub-section 4.

Arthur Knight, a boy of fifteen years of age, was employed by the appellants at the Savoy Hotel as a page-boy in the general service thereof for eighty-nine hours per week or thereabouts instead of seventy-four hours. He slept in the hotel. The first thing in the morning he assisted in dusting the reception-rooms, but he was principally employed as a messenger taking up messages to and sending off telegrams and messages for persons staying at or using the hotel and restaurant.

There was no notice at the said hotel such as is required by the provisions of the said Acts to be exhibited in shops where young persons are employed.

On behalf of the appellants it was contended that whereas the word "shop" is defined by the Shop Hours Act, 1892, to include licensed public-houses and refreshment houses of any kind, the said Savoy Hotel was not a public-house nor a refreshment house within the meaning of the said statute, and that the said expressions "public-house" and "refreshment house" were only intended to apply to ordinary public-houses where intoxicating liquors were sold at a bar, and to refreshment houses licensed for the sale of wine and beer under 23 Vict. c. 27.

It was further contended that the page-boys employed in the said hotel were domestic servants and thereby exempt from the operation of the Act.

On behalf of the respondents it was contended that the Savoy Hotel or some part or parts thereof came within the definition of the word "shop" in the Shop Hours Act, 1892, and that the said page-boys, including the said Arthur Knight, were employed there within the meaning of the said Act.

The magistrate was of opinion that, regard being had to the nature of the business carried on as above stated at the Savoy Hotel, it was such a licensed public-house as to fall within the definition of the word shop in the said Act. And he was of opinion that Arthur Knight being so employed as above stated was not wholly employed as a domestic servant within the meaning of the said Act. He therefore convicted the appellants and inflicted a fine in respect of the offence charged in each summons.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether on the facts stated the decision was right.

Section 3 of the Shop Hours Act, 1892, prohibits the employment of a "young person" in or about a shop for a longer period than seventy-four hours, including meal times, in any one week.

Section 4 requires a notice referring to the provisions of the Act to be kept exhibited in a conspicuous place in the shop.

Section 9 provides that "unless the context otherwise requires, shop" means retail and wholesale shops, markets, stalls, and warehouses in which assistants are employed for hire, and includes licensed public-houses and refreshment houses of any kind. "Young person means a person under the age of eighteen years."

Section 10 provides that nothing in the Act shall apply to "any person wholly employed as a domestic servant."

Avory, for the appellants.—The conviction was wrong on two grounds. First, the Savoy Hotel is not a public-house or refreshment house within the meaning of the Act. The definition of "shop" must be read with due regard to the objects of the Act. "Shop" is to include "public-house" where necessary for the purposes of the Act. A house which is used mainly for selling liquor, although generally called a public-house, is to be a shop within the Act. But the Savoy Hotel is not a house of that description. Secondly, the boy was wholly employed as a domestic servant and is therefore within the exemption. A page-boy is in the same position as a waiter, who is a domestic servant and requires a licence under the revenue laws: Spencer v. Sheerman, 23 L. T. Rep. 873, 19 W. R. C. L. Dig. 87. He is not a shop assistant and the Act does not apply to him.

Daldy, for the respondents.—The conviction was right. The Shop Hours Act, 1892, ought to be liberally construed: Collman v. Roberts, 44 W. R. 445, [1896] 1 Q. B. 457. "Public-house" is defined to mean "an inn or tavern; in England especially, one which rarely accommodates lodgers and which has for its chief business the selling of beer and other liquors": Century Dictionary. Its primary sense is an inn, and it is used in that sense in the Act of 1892. The magistrate has found as a fact, on sufficient evidence, that the boy was not a domestic servant.

He also cited London and Suburban Land and Building Co. v. Field, 16 Ch. D. 645, 29 W. R. Dig. 66; Coombs v. Cook, Cab. & Ell. 75.

Avory replied.

CHANNELL, J.—This case is not altogether free from difficulty, but I have come to the conclusion that the appeal should be dismissed. The object of the statute is to restrict the number of the hours of employment in shops of young persons under eighteen years of age. The employment of young persons in factories had already been provided for by statute, and the intention of the Act of 1892 was to extend similar provisions to different kinds of employment, the nature of the employment affected is to be gathered from the Act itself. The recital is not very important, but it shows that the object of the Act was to prevent the injury to the health of young persons employed in shops and warehouses caused by the length of the period of employment. After forbidding in section 3 the employment of young persons in or about a shop for more than seventy-four hours, including meal-times, in any one week, the Act goes on in section 9 to define the meaning of the word "shop." It commences by defining it as meaning "retail and wholesale shops, markets, stalls, and warehouses in which assistants are employed for hire," and this is the primary meaning that the word bears throughout the Act; the section then goes on to say, "and includes licensed public-houses and refreshment houses of any kind." The meaning of legislating in this way is that the Legislature intended to bring within the Act something that otherwise would not be within it, but would nevertheless be within the mischief against which the Act was intended to provide. Neither a licensed public-house nor a refreshment house comes within the ordinary meaning of the word "shop," but the Legislature were of opinion that there were some public-houses and refreshment houses as much within the mischief sought to be guarded against as any ordinary shop. That being so, we ought not to give any importance to the fact that the Act appears to apply to establishments which one would have thought there would be no intention to include within its scope, for we know that the result of an interpretation clause is frequently to bring incongruous things within the operation of a statute. There being then some licensed public-houses and refreshment houses to which the definition of "shop" was intended to apply because they were in the mischief of the Act, how far is that definition to be held to extend? The section in terms applies to licensed public-houses of any kind, and I think that every place of business having a public-house licence must be held to be within the Act; there is no greater hardship in making the Act apply to employment in the grandest hotel than there is in applying it to a public-house of an inferior description. I think, therefore, that we are bound so to interpret the Act as to make it include the Savoy Hotel; it is true that that establishment is not an ordinary public-house, but it has a public-house licence attached to it, and licensed public-houses of any kind are within the operation of the Act. It is entirely within the mischief of the Act, and I think that the learned chief magistrate was right in the conclusion at which he arrived.

On the second point, as to whether the boy was wholly employed as a domestic servant, the learned magistrate found that he was not; I think that there was evidence on which he could so find, and that his decision cannot be disturbed. In saying this I do not desire to intimate a doubt as to the correctness of his conclusion; indeed, I think that his decision upon this point also was right, and that, if the case comes (as I have already held it does) within the Act, it does not come within the exclusion.

BUCKNILL, J.—I agree upon both points, and will only add, as regards the first point, that the proper way to read section 9 is to read it as applying to licensed public-houses of any and every kind; we have no right to say that the Savoy Hotel, which is a public-house of a kind, is not within the Act.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Fladgate & Co.

Solicitor for the respondents, Blaxland.

Court of Appeal.

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — Feb. 17.

MASON v. A. R. DEAN (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employment—Accident—Building being constructed by means of a scaffolding—Painting ceiling of theatre—Undertakers—Persons undertaking construction of part of building—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-sections 1, 2.

In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act it appeared that a firm of builders had undertaken to build a theatre, and that the building owners, under powers reserved to them in the contract, had placed a substantial portion of the work, including the fixing of a ceiling and the erection of a proscenium, in the hands of a firm of decorators. A workman in the employment of the decorators, while working on a scaffolding erected by the builders, and while engaged in painting the ceiling of the theatre (the building being over thirty feet in height), accidentally fell to the floor and was killed. In proceedings against the decorators,

Held, that the employment of the deceased was an employment to which the Act applied, and that the respondents were undertakers within the Act.

Wood v. Walsh & Sons, 47 W. R. 504, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1009, considered.

Appeal from a decision of the judge of the Salford County Court on questions of law submitted to him by an arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant was the widow of a painter, who met with his death by an accident while in the employment of the respondents, a firm of decorators.

A contract had been entered into by Moore & Sons, a firm of builders, for the construction of a theatre at Eccles, and for the erection of a scaffolding to be used in the construction. Under a power reserved in the contract the building owners let off the decorative work to the respondents. This decorative work included the providing and fixing of a moulded circular ceiling, a proscenium, and other substantial portions of the building.

The deceased was engaged in painting the ceiling, and was working on the scaffolding erected by the builders, when one of the planks gave way and he fell to the floor and was killed. The building exceeded thirty feet in height.

The arbitrator to whom the matter was referred held that the respondents were undertakers within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, being engaged in the construction of a building exceeding thirty feet in height by means of a scaffolding, and that the action arose out of and in the course of an employment to which the Act applied, and he made an award in favour of the applicant for £300.

At the request of the respondents the arbitrator submitted the following questions of law for the decision of the county court judge: (1) Whether the respondents were undertakers in the construction of a building within the meaning of the Act; (2) whether the employment in the course of which the said personal injuries were caused to the deceased workman was employment to which the Act applies.

The county court judge reversed the decision of the arbitrator, on the ground that, though the respondents were undertakers engaged in the construction of a building within the Act, yet the employment of the deceased in painting the ceiling of the theatre was not an employment to which the Act applied.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The applicant appealed.

R. W. Harper, for the applicant.—The learned county court judge thought he was bound by the decision of this court in Wood v. Walsh & Sons, 47 W. R. 504, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1009, to hold that painting the ceiling of the theatre was not an employment to which the Act applied. The decision in that case was that the mere painting of the outside of a house was neither construction nor repair. The present case is clearly a case of the construction of a building. The work which was undertaken by the respondents, and on which the applicant was engaged, was an essential part of the construction of a theatre.

C. A. Russell, Q.C., and T. F. Byrne, for the respondents.—The real question in the case is, whether the respondents were undertakers within the meaning of the Act; and this question was not properly considered either by the arbitrator or by the county court judge. The Act says, in section 7, sub-section 2, that "undertakers" in the case of a building means the persons undertaking the construction, repair, or demolition. Here Moore & Sons were the persons who undertook the construction of the building. The respondents only undertook something subsidiary to the construction of the building.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In my opinion the respondents are liable in this case. The county court judge held that they were not, thinking himself bound by Wood v. Walsh & Sons. But that case, in which we held that painting the outside of a house is not an employment to which the Act applies, has nothing to do with this case. Here Moore & Sons, a firm of builders, undertook the building of a theatre. By the terms of the contract it was open to the building owners to give part of the work to other persons, and they put part of it in the hands of the respondents. While the respondents were doing this part of the work, the deceased, who was in their employment, met with his death. The question is, whether this employment was an employment to which the Act applies. It is important to observe that the building was not completed. The respondents were put on to do certain work which would help to bring it to completion. The contract of the respondents with the building owners shows that a work of construction had to be done by the respondents. The specified work includes the putting up of a ceiling, the erection of a proscenium, and the fixing the private boxes with columns. It is true that a good deal of the work specified in the contract is decoration pure and simple. But there is ample to show that the respondents had also to perform structural work. Section 7 of the Act says that the Act is to apply to "employment by the undertakers as hereinafter defined on, in, or about any building which exceeds thirty feet in height, and is either being constructed or repaired by means of a scaffolding, or being demolished." This building was over thirty feet in height, and it was being constructed by means of a scaffolding. In my opinion the employment of the deceased was an employment to which the Act applies. Then was he employed by undertakers as defined in the Act? Sub-section 2 of section 7 says that "undertakers" in the case of a building means the persons undertaking the construction, repair, or demolition. Ought that to be construed as meaning only the persons undertaking the construction of the whole of a building, or does it also include the persons undertaking the construction of a substantial part of a building? In my opinion a person who undertakes the construction of a substantial part of a building is an undertaker within the meaning of the Act. I think that on the other point the county court judge was wrong, and that the applicant is entitled to the compensation which has been awarded to her by the arbitrator.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the county court judge was under a misapprehension in considering himself bound by Wood v. Walsh & Sons. The arbitrator found that the work on which the respondents were engaged was a work of construction. I agree with that. The specification embraces work which must be described as construction rather than decoration. On that ground the decision of the county court judge cannot be supported.

But counsel for the respondents contend, as they are perfectly entitled to do, although there is no cross-appeal, that the county court judge was wrong on the other point—viz., in holding that the respondents were undertakers within the meaning of the Act. They argue that the Legislature meant by undertakers only persons who undertake the construction of a whole building, and not persons who undertake the construction of part of a building. Here the deceased man was engaged in painting. But in my opinion it is immaterial what particular work the man was doing. The question is whether his employers were undertakers. I do not wish to lay great stress on the fact that the word "persons" in the plural is used in the definition of "undertakers" in the case of a building, though not in the case of an engineering work. But in my opinion, on the natural construction of the words of the section, it is intended to include the case where more persons than one are engaged under separate contracts with the building owner in bringing about the construction of a building; and I think that the respondents in this case were undertakers within the Act.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. I think that, where a building is being constructed by several undertakers, not jointly, but each doing a separate and substantial part of the construction, each and all of them fall within the definition of undertakers in section 7, sub-section 2. But then under section 1, only that undertaker is liable to pay compensation in whose employment the injured workman was at the time of the accident. That seems to me the only sensible construction of the Act.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the applicant, Arkcoll, Cockell, & Chadwick, for Alfred Bates, Morecambe.

Solicitors for the respondents, Lawson, Coppock, & Hart, Manchester, for Hargreave & Heaton, Birmingham.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Feb. 15.

STEWART v. RHODES. (a.)

Practice—Leave to issue execution under R. S. C., ord. 42, r. 23—Charging order under R. S. C., ord. 46, r. 1—Death of judgment debtor—Liability of estate.

The effect of obtaining leave to issue execution against an executor under ord. 42, r. 23, is to dispense with the necessity of obtaining a judgment against the executor, but is not equivalent to obtaining a judgment against him. A charging order under ord. 46, r. 1, has only such effect as is provided by the Acts 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14, 15, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1. Under these Acts a charging order can only be made against a person against whom a judgment has been obtained.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It follows, therefore, that a creditor who has obtained judgment against a debtor cannot, after the death of the debtor, obtain a charging order nisi against the executor of the deceased judgment debtor without first obtaining judgment against the executor.

Finney v. Hinde, 27 W. R. 413, 4 Q. B. D. 102, and Haly v. Barry, 16 W. R. 654, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 452, discussed.

Decision of Stirling, J., ante, p. 233, affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Stirling, J. (reported ante, p. 233).

The question involved was whether a charging order nisi made under ord. 42, r. 23, against a deceased judgment debtor was valid as against his executor. The facts may be shortly stated as follows:

The action was commenced in the Queen's Bench Division to recover a sum of £959 11s. 9d. due to the plaintiffs from the defendant Rhodes in respect of certain shares in the Lands Trust Co. (Limited) standing in his name. The defendant appeared, and on the 30th of January, 1899, an order was obtained giving leave to sign judgment under order 14.

On the 27th of March the defendant died.

On the 9th of June his will was proved by his executor, one Wilford.

On the 16th of June an action in Chancery for administration was commenced by a secured creditor of Rhodes. On the same day an order was made in Lunacy (Rhodes having been a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition) to the effect that enough of a fund in court of £743 8s. 7d. New Consols standing to the credit of the defendant in connection with certain lunacy proceedings against him in his lifetime should be realized to pay the costs when taxed, the residue to be transferred to Wilford.

On the 17th of June a charging order nisi was made at chambers, to the effect that the plaintiffs should be at liberty to issue execution against Wilford, the executor of the deceased judgment debtor, under ord. 42, r. 23, and that unless sufficient cause were shown to the contrary on the 28th of June, the defendant's interest in the said sum of New Consols should, and that it in the meantime did, stand charged with the payment of the sum due on the judgment.

On the 22nd of June judgment for the administration of Rhodes's estate was pronounced in the Chancery action.

On the 26th of June the present action was transferred from the Queen's Bench Division to Stirling, J.

A preliminary objection was taken that there was no power under the statutes to make an order after the death of a debtor charging his interest in property with the judgment debt.

Stirling, J., allowed the objection.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Jenkins, Q.C., and Whinney, for the appeal.—Under the old procedure a creditor who had obtained judgment could proceed against the executor of the deceased debtor by entering a suggestion or by scire facias. Now the proper course is to obtain leave to issue execution under ord. 42, r. 23. Leave has been obtained under this order, and the effect is to make the executor a defendant. Haly v. Barry, 16 W. R. 654, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 452, is in favour of this contention. There it was never suggested that because a judgment debtor was dead by no process could the judgment be put into execution. Finney v. Hinde, 27 W. R. 413, 4 Q. B. D. 102, seems to suggest that the remedies given to the creditor under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 were not meant to go further than the old remedy of arrest, but there is nothing in the language of the Act to bear out this contention.

They also referred to Watts v. Jefferyes, 3 Mac. & G. 422, and to Brereton v. Edwards, 37 W. R. 47, 21 Q. B. D. 226, 488.

Harman, for the executor.—The form of the order shows that this appeal must fail. The appellants are in fact seeking to amend their order in spite of the administration action. Ord. 46 provides that a charging order shall only operate under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14, 15, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1. But under these statutes the appellants must fail, as the person to give the charge is the judgment debtor, who is dead.

He referred to Dixon v. Wrench, 17 W. R. 591, L. R. 4 Ex. 154; Gill v. Continental Union Gas Co., 21 W. R. 111, L. R. 7 Ex. 332; Wallace v. M'Cann, 4 Ir. Eq. 522.

E. S. Ford (Upjohn, Q.C., with him), for the liquidator of the Lands Trust Co. (Limited).—Haly v. Barry is distinguishable from the present case, while Finney v. Hinde is a clear authority against the appellants. The plaintiffs ought to have made the executor a defendant under ord. 17. s. 4.

He referred to In re Cave, W. N. (1892), p. 142.

Jenkins, Q.C., in reply, referred to In re Shephard, Atkins v. Shephard, 38 W. R. 133, 43 Ch. D. 131.

LINDLEY, M.R.—This is a small point of practice, but a very important one. In the first place it struck us all that no one had ever heard of a charging order of this sort before. These charging orders have been in operation ever since the beginning of the present reign, and nobody, except in one case to which I will refer presently, has ever obtained or, so far as I am aware, discussed the possibility of obtaining a charging order against an executor for a debt due from the deceased. I do not say that it cannot be done, but the right to a charging order is statutory, and we must look to the statutes that relate to it. Ord. 46, r. 1, makes that unmistakeable. It does not substitute any new method of getting a charging order, and it does not increase the number of cases in which a charging order can be got. It says: "An order charging stock or shares may be made by any Divisional Court or by a judge, and the proceedings for obtaining such order shall be such as are directed, and the effect shall be such as is provided by the Acts 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 14, 15, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1." Therefore we are referred by the order to those statutes, both for the proceedings for obtaining a charging order and the effect of it when obtained. Now let us look at those statutes. The important one is 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14. [His lordship read the section, and continued:] Therefore it is a condition of the application of this Act and of obtaining a charging order, that you must have a person against whom a judgment has been entered, and the procedure shows that that person is the judgment debtor, who must be in a position to show cause why the charging order should not be made. In other words, he must be alive, and it was settled so long ago as Finney v. Hinde that if you had a charging order nisi against a dead man it was useless, and that you could not convert it into an order absolute. That is all that Finney v. Hinde really decided. That led to this possible state of things: that if a person, who had got a judgment against a deceased man, wanted to get a charging order against the executor he must get judgment against the executor and make him judgment debtor, which could be done under the old practice. Then the executor being a judgment debtor the procedure under the Acts becomes applicable. Now, of course there are difficulties about that, and the real objection to this experiment is that an attempt has been made to obtain a charging order against an executor without making him a judgment debtor. The plaintiff says that he had done that which under the modern practice is equivalent to obtaining a judgment. Let us look at what has been done. The order relied on by the appellant as making this modern procedure equivalent to obtaining a judgment, is ord. 42, r. 23. If you have judgment against a deceased man you need not enter another judgment against his executors, but you can under that order obtain leave to issue execution. There are two views of the effect of that order. One view is that contended for by the appellants—that an order giving leave to issue execution is equivalent to a judgment. The other view is that ord. 42, r. 23, which gives leave to issue execution, dispenses with the judgment, and in my opinion the latter is the true view. The order does not say and does not mean that you are to be treated as if you had got a judgment, but that although you have no judgment you need not obtain one because you may issue execution without it. Now let us look at the difference. It is plain that leave to issue execution under ord. 42, r. 23, does not operate by way of merger against any cause of action; it does not convert the creditor into a specialty creditor; it has not the effect of a judgment. The true explanation of the rule is that you need not obtain a judgment because in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred there is no necessity for it and you may issue execution without. But if that in the true view this charging order is altogether wrong, because the person getting the order has not complied with the conditions imposed by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110 and obtained judgment against the executor. But then it is said that the plaintiff having got judgment against the deceased man cannot get another judgment de bonis testatoris against the executor. Let us see what that comes to. If he cannot do that, it follows that he cannot get a charging order at all. But if so, why cannot he? The reason is that there used to be proceedings for reviving judgments against executors, scire facias, and so on, and there was no difficulty about it. If all that practice is abolished (we have not had time to look into that) what follows? It follows, not that the creditor has no remedy, but that he must bring an administration action. That is the modern practice, and that explains why, from the passing of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, nobody has ever heard of a charging order being obtained against an executor upon a judgment made against the testator.

The only case that throws any doubt on that, and which is to a certain extent inconsistent with it, is the case of Haly v. Barry. In that case a charging order had been obtained against the testator. The usual practice was followed and the executor was made a party, and Wood and Selwyn, L.JJ., said that was equivalent to obtaining a charging order. Whether that was equivalent to it under the old practice or not it is not necessary to consider, but be that as it may, the decision was that they would make the order absolute for what it was worth. They held that if a man had an advantage he was to have the benefit of it. There was no ground for it, except that put forward by the appellant, that you must stop a race between creditors. That is no ground, because you cannot do it simply because you are asked. I recognize that there are observations in the judgment or Wood, L.J., which make me doubt whether I am quite right in saying that you cannot do it even now if there is any method of getting judgment against the executor. I doubt whether there is now. I am not quite sure that you could when that practice about "suggestions" was in vogue.

However, the result is that this charging order is altogether wrong. Nobody ever saw such a thing before; it is an experiment which I hope will not be repeated. As to our general jurisdiction, we should not think of exercising it if we have it. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of same opinion. Whether or not judgment can be obtained against an executor, it appears to me that it must be obtained before a charging order can be made against the estate in his hands. If it is possible that such a judgment may be obtained under the present practice, then a charging order may also be obtained. As it stands, I agree with Stirling, J., that on the construction of this order a charging order is obtained on the interest of the only person who can be pointed out as a judgment debtor, and therefore it is no use at all as against the executor.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. It is quite clear that under the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, you must have a judgment debtor who can show cause against the making of the charging order. It is suggested here that you have got a judgment debtor, but that suggestion cannot be maintained because the person against whom the judgment was obtained is dead, and so far as his personal representative was concerned no judgment has been obtained against him at all.

Then it is said that although that is true, something has been obtained in this case which is so equivalent to a judgment against the executor that we ought to hold the requirements of the statute have been complied with, and it is said that that something consists in this order, which has been obtained under ord. 42, r. 23. I cannot agree that that is equivalent to a judgment against the executor. It is not a judgment against the executor in fact, and I cannot consider that the statute is satisfied by the obtaining of such an order. In fact I very much doubt whether, if you could proceed at all under the statute after the death of the judgment debtor without obtaining a judgment against the executor, this order under ord. 42, r. 23, would be necessary or useful. But all we have to deal with to-day is to say whether or not such an order under ord. 42, r. 23, does so satisfy the statute as to enable the judgment creditor to get a charging order. I am of opinion that it does not.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Markby, Stewart, & Co.; May, Sykes, & Co.

---

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Collins, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) Jan. 22.

LANCASHIRE ASYLUMS BOARD v. MAYOR, &c., OF MANCHESTER. (a.)

Local government—Expenses—Rates—Asylums board—Contributions from county and county boroughs—Apportionment—Rateable values—Assessable values—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 33, sub-section 2—Agricultural Rates Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 16), ss. 1, 2, 3, 5, 9.

By a local Act passed in 1891 it was enacted that the Lancashire Asylums Board, which was thereby constituted, should, for the purpose of raising the annual sum required for payment of the expenses incurred by them, obtain contributions from the county and the county boroughs in proportion to the respective rateable values, as ascertained under section 33 of the Local Government Act, 1888, of the county and the county boroughs.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that, on the passing of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, the provisions of that Act did not make it the duty of the asylums board to divide the sum required by them in proportion to the assessable values of the county and the county boroughs as ascertained under that Act, but that it was still their duty to divide it in proportion to the rateable values as ascertained under section 33 of the Local Government Act.

Judgment of Bruce and Ridley, JJ. (47 W. R. 361, [1899] 1 Q. B. 759), reversed.

Appeal, from the judgment of a Divisional Court (Bruce and Ridley, JJ.) upon a special case: reported 47 W. R. 361, [1899] 1 Q. B. 759.

The question was whether, during the continuance of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, the Lancashire Asylums Board ought to divide the amount yearly required to be raised for their purposes in proportion to the rateable values of the county and the county boroughs as ascertained by the Local Government Act, 1888, s. 33, or in proportion to the assessable values of the same as ascertained by the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, and the regulations of the Local Government Board issued under that Act.

By the Lancashire County (Lunatic Asylums and others Powers) Act, 1891 (54 Vict. c. xx.), a board was constituted called the Lancashire Asylums Board, to which were transferred the lunatic asylums of that county and of certain county boroughs, including Manchester, and it was provided by section 23 that all expenses incurred by them in the execution of their duties should be paid out of a fund to be called "The Asylums Fund."

Section 24 dealt with the raising of this fund, and was as follows: "The board shall before the first day of March in every year estimate the total amount required to be raised by contributions for the ensuing year, and shall divide that amount between the county and the county boroughs in proportion to the respective rateable values (as ascertained under section 33 of the Local Government Act, 1888) of the county and the county boroughs, and shall add to the amount apportioned to the county boroughs the sum of £4,000, or such other sum as may from time to time be fixed by agreement or by arbitration in manner provided by this Act (in this Act referred to as 'the added sum'). The amount so apportioned, together with the added sum, shall be the aggregate amount required to be contributed by the county boroughs and shall be contributed by them respectively in proportion to their respective rateable values ascertained as aforesaid. The balance of the amount required to be raised by the board shall be contributed by the county council."

Section 33, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1888, enacts: "Where for the purpose of calculating any contribution or payment to be made under this Act it is necessary to ascertain the rateable value of both a county and a county borough, such rateable value shall be ascertained and fixed by a joint committee composed of representatives of all the councils concerned, and such committee shall for that purpose have all the powers and jurisdiction of quarter sessions, and of a committee of justices appointed under the County Rate Act, 1852, and the Acts amending the same."

From 1891 to the passing of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, the amounts required to be contributed were calculated upon the respective values of the county and county boroughs as ascertained in the manner prescribed by section 33, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1888, and according to the provisions of section 24 of the local Act; and the Lancashire Asylums Board, under section 26 of their Act, sent precepts to the county council and the borough councils for payment of the amount to be raised by each of them respectively.

Section 1 of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, enacts that "during the continuance of this Act the occupier of agricultural land in England shall be liable, in the case of every rate to which this Act applies, to pay one-half only of the rate in the pound payable in respect of buildings and other hereditaments."

The contributions of the county and county boroughs respectively were payable out of the county fund and borough funds respectively; and, in so far as they were payable out of rates, were payable out of the county rate and borough rates respectively, and the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, applied to these rates.

Section 2 enacts that, in order to make up the deficiency due to the provisions of section 1 in the amount raised by the spending authorities, an annual grant shall be made from the local taxation account to each of such authorities. "Spending authorities" are defined by section 9 and the schedule to the Act, but they do not include the Lunatic Asylums Board.

In calculating the amount of the annual grant to be made under the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, to the county council and to the councils of each of the county boroughs, who were respectively "spending authorities" within that Act, the deficiencies which would arise owing to the provisions of section 1 in the amount recoverable by each of such spending authorities by means of rates levied to meet precepts of the asylums board, were ascertained in the manner prescribed by that Act and the rules made by the Local Government Board thereunder, and the amounts of such deficiencies were included in calculating such annual grants, and the Corporation of Manchester received and was to receive annually during the continuance of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, a grant from the local taxation account in respect of the deficiency in the amount levied by rates in respect of the precepts of the asylums board.

By section 3 any spending authority requiring to raise from two or more parishes a sum by rate is, in determining the amount to be raised, to deduct the sum issuable to them in respect of the rate on account of their share in the annual grant, and to raise the net amount, after making such deduction, in proportion to the assessable value of those parishes, and such assessable value is to be the rateable value of each of the parishes reduced by an amount equal to one-half of the rateable value of the agricultural land in the parish.

Section 4 deals with the amount of the annual grant issuable as stated above, which amount is to be ascertained under section 4 and section 6 by returns made to the Local Government Board by the spending authorities of the sums received by them in the year next before the passing of the Act.

Section 5 deals with the preparation of valuation lists and the basis or standard for any county rate or borough rate, and provides that the value of agricultural land shall in each case be stated separately from that of other hereditaments, and that the total rateable value of the agricultural land shall be stated separately from the total rateable value of the other hereditaments in each parish.

By section 6, sub-section 3, the Local Government Board has power to make regulations for carrying out the Act.

By section 9, "rate" means a rate made during the continuance of this Act, the proceeds of which are applicable to public local purposes and which is leviable on the basis of an assessment in respect to the yearly value of property, and includes any sum which, though obtained in the first instance by a precept, certificate, or other instrument requiring payment from some authority or officer, is or can be ultimately raised out of a rate as before defined.

By regulations issued by the Local Government Board under the Act it was ordered, by way of carrying into effect the provisions contained in section 5 of the Act, that the valuation list was to be made in a particular form shown in the schedule, with a separate column showing the rateable value of the agricultural land, if any, contained in any hereditament, and that the lists were to be in this form instead of in the form provided by the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, for every rate to be made thereafter. As to the county rates, it was ordered by article 17 that county councils and other councils whose duty it was to make for the purposes of any rate a basis or standard of valuation which would not contain particulars of separately-rated hereditaments, but only the total rateable value of each parish should cause a basis or standard of valuation to be prepared in the form set out in Schedule Z. It was further ordered that, notwithstanding anything contained in the County Rates Act, 1852, or in any other Act, from the 31st of March, 1897, the values of the several parishes as shown in column 5 of such basis, or standard, or valuation, "shall during the continuance of the Act be the basis, standard, or valuation for the levying of the county rate or any other rate leviable by the council according to the assessable value of the several parishes on which the same is levied, unless or until the council shall make a new basis, standard, or valuation in manner provided by law." The heading of column 5 of Schedule Z was "Assessable value of the township, being one-half the amount in column 3 added to the amount in column 4." The heading of column 3 was "Net annual value of agricultural land in the township"; that of column 4 was "Net value of the buildings and other hereditaments not being agricultural land in the township."

Upon the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, coming into operation a joint committee of the county of Lancaster, formed as required by section 33, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1888, prepared a basis or standard for county rates in accordance with article 17 and Schedule Z of the regulations under the Act.

The amounts required by the precepts sent by the asylums board to the county council and to the councils of each of the county boroughs had since the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, came into operation been calculated upon the values ascertained as regards agricultural land upon its assessable value, being one-half of its rateable value, and upon other land and buildings at their rateable value as calculated at the time when the Act of 1896 came into operation.

The asylums board estimated the amount to be raised by contributions for the ensuing year, and divided that amount between the county council and the county boroughs in proportion to the respective values thereof as above stated with the addition of the sum required by section 24 of the local Act.

The council of the city of Manchester paid to the treasurer of the asylums board the amount which the council would have had to pay if the total amount had been divided between the county council and the county boroughs in proportion to the respective rateable values thereof as calculated at the time when the Act of 1896 came into operation.

The asylums board brought an action to recover the balance—£357 9s. 5d.—alleged to be due.

The questions for the opinion of the court were whether the asylums board, in dividing the total amount required by it to be raised by contributions during the continuance of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, was to divide that amount between the county and county boroughs in proportion (1) to their respective assessable values under the Act of 1896, or (2) according to their rateable values as calculated before the Act.

The Divisional Court were of opinion that the asylums board ought to divide the estimated amount between the county and the county boroughs in proportion to their respective assessable values as ascertained under the Agricultural Rates Act.

The Corporation of Manchester appealed.

Macmorran, Q.C., and Ryde, for the appellants.

Cripps, Q.C., and R. Cunningham Glen, for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 22.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment of the court: The question which has arisen between the Lancashire Asylums Board and the Corporation of Manchester is whether the asylums board, under section 24 of a local Act called the Lancashire County (Lunatic Asylums and Other Powers) Act, 1891, is to divide between the county of Lancaster and the county boroughs of that county, the contributions which the asylums board annually requires in order to defray the expenses of the county lunatics, in proportion to the "rateable values" of the county and county boroughs, as was the case prior to the passing of the Agricultural Rates Act of 1896, or in proportion to the "assessable values" of the county and county boroughs to be found in the later Act. The Corporation of Manchester asserts that the question of the division of the contributions to be made between the county and the county boroughs is not touched by the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, though the method of rating the county and county boroughs is thereby altered. The asylums board on the other hand asserts that what was once "rateable value" is now no more, and that, as regards the division which the board is to make, "assessable value" has taken the place of "rateable value," so long as the Agricultural Rates Act of 1896 is in existence. The point is one which makes a considerable difference to the Corporation of Manchester—and indeed to the other county boroughs in Lancashire—as regards the amount it can be annually called upon to contribute towards the expenses necessary for maintaining the county lunatics. Prior to the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, matters stood thus. By the County Rate Act, 1852, ss. 2, 6, and 21, justices in counties were to prepare a basis or standard for fair and equal county rates, rateably and equally according to the full and fair annual value of the property within their respective limits, and were to order and direct a fair and equal county rate according to such basis or standard. By section 33, sub-section 2, of the Local Government Act, 1888—which is the Act which created certain boroughs county boroughs (of which Manchester is one), and which established county councils and joint committees of counties and county boroughs—it was enacted, "Where, for the purpose of calculating any contribution or payment to be made under this Act, it is necessary to ascertain the rateable value of both a county and a county borough, such rateable value shall be ascertained and fixed by a joint committee composed of representatives of all the councils concerned, and such committee shall for that purpose have all the powers and jurisdiction of quarter sessions and of a committee of justices appointed under the County Rate Act, 1852, and the Acts amending the same." The object, I apprehend, of appointing this joint committee was that it might see that the rateable values of the county and county boroughs were fairly adjusted. In the year 1891 the county of Lancashire obtained special legislation by means of a local Act, entitled the Lancashire County (Lunatic Asylums and Other Powers) Act, 1891, whereby a Lunatic Asylums Board for the County Palatine of Lancaster was created, which board was to provide asylum accommodation and to carry out other matters as a local authority under the Lunacy Act, 1890. By section 34 of the local Act it is enacted that, for the purposes of that Act, the rateable value of the county and of the county boroughs shall be their rateable value as ascertained and fixed for the time being by the joint committee appointed by section 33 of the Act of 1888. By section 23 of the local Act all expenses incurred by the asylums board in the execution of its duties are to be paid out of a fund called the Asylums Fund, and any deficiency in that fund is to be raised by contributions to be made by the county and county boroughs in accordance with the provisions of the Act. By section 24 of the local Act it is enacted that the board shall before the first day of March in every year estimate the total amount required to be raised by contributions for the ensuing year, and shall divide that amount between the county and county boroughs in proportion to the respective rateable values as ascertained under section 33 of the Local Government Act, 1888. By section 26 of the local Act it is enacted that, for the purpose of obtaining payment of the sums to be contributed by the county and the county boroughs respectively, the chairman of the board shall before the 1st day of March in every year send to the county council and and the council of each county borough a precept for payment of the amount to be contributed by the county or county borough as the case may be. Although I have had to refer to many sections in different Acts, down to this point it is perfectly plain that the division which the asylums board has to make of the contributions which it requires from the county and county boroughs was to be in proportion to their respective rateable values. This division and the sending of the precepts was the only thing the asylums board had to do as regards the money to be obtained from the county and county boroughs under the local Act of 1891. The board was in no way concerned in rating or levying a rate either upon the county or county borough. Has, then, this division been altered by the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, which was an Act to last for five years from the 31st of March, 1897, from which date the Act was to come into operation? This Act is an Act by which the occupiers of agricultural land are for five years to be exempted from the payment of half the rates which they would otherwise have had to pay upon such lands, and it is the rating of agricultural land, in my opinion, which is dealt with by this Act. If the division of the contributions by the asylums board between the county and county boroughs is to be made in proportion to the "assessable values" mentioned in the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, and not in proportion to the "rateable values" as prescribed by section 24 of the local Act of 1891, this would operate much to the detriment of the county boroughs.

The question, therefore, is, What is the division the asylums board has now to make between the county and the county boroughs? Is it the same as under the local Act of 1891, and before the passing of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896—i.e., in proportion to the "rateable values" of county and county boroughs; or in proportion to the "assessable values" as found in the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, so that the words "rateable values" in section 24 of the local Act of 1891 are now to be read differently from what they would have been undoubtedly read when the Act of 1891 was passed and for five years afterwards? It will be observed, when considering the scope of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, which is a general Act, that nowhere in it can be found any express repeal of any part in the local Act of 1891, and, what is more, nowhere in the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, is the local Act of 1891 so much as mentioned. The local Act is left precisely where it was at the time it was passed, and for the best of all reasons, as it appears to me; for the local Act of 1891 in no way embraces either the rating or levying of rates either in a county or county boroughs by the asylums board, with which the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, irrespective of the asylums board, now deals. The learned judges in the Queen's Bench Division felt this difficulty in their way, for they say: "It is true the precise position and duties of the Lancashire Asylums Board are not dealt with by the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896"—I say not so much as mentioned or dealt with at all—"but we cannot, therefore, exclude it from an Act of so general intention." The general intention of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, is to take off from occupiers of agricultural lands one-half of their rates for a period of five years; but how does this alter the division the asylums board is to make, when the division by the asylums board is not dealt with by the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, from first to last? The Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, is intituled as being an Act to amend the law with respect to the rating of the occupiers of agricultural land in England and for other purposes connected therewith. By section 1 it exempts the occupier of agricultural land from paying the whole rate, as he theretofore had done, and limits his liability to half of the rate, and it enacts that the deficiency thereby created is for five years to be made up by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. It is clear, and indeed it is admitted by counsel for the asylums board, that section 3 of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, has no reference to this case, and I might pass it by; but I think I should point out that the section only deals with the levying of the rate by persons entitled to do so, that is, by the spending authority, which the asylums board is not, and it has nothing to do with the division of contributions required by the asylums board. Sub-section 2 of section 3 is only for the purposes of section 3, and therefore admittedly does not apply. But this is how it is argued for the asylums board. It is said that section 5 of the Agricultural Rates Act, 1896, enacts that in every valuation list and the basis and standard of any county rate the value of agricultural land shall be stated separately from that of any building or other hereditament, and that the total rateable value of agricultural land in each parish shall be stated separately from the total rateable value of the buildings and other hereditaments, and that, by section 6, sub-section 3, of this Act, the Local Government Board, for the purpose of ascertaining the deficiency and for the separation of value of agricultural land from buildings and other hereditaments, and generally for carrying into effect this Act, is to make regulations, and that these regulations, coupled with section 5, alter the division of contributions which the asylums board is to still make under section 24 of the local Act of 1891, and that the division by the asylums board is now to be made upon the "assessable value," and not upon the "rateable value" under that section. How section 5, which applies to the rating of agricultual lands separately from buildings and other hereditaments, can be held to touch the division the asylums board is to make I do not see, and the regulations are for the levying of the rates and not for the division of contributions. Article 17 of the regulations and the form in Schedule Z when read show this to be so. Column 2 in Schedule Z deals with the net annual value of each parish according to the basis, standard, or valuation in force at the passing of the Act of 1896—i.e., rateable value beyond a doubt—and columns 3 and 4 deal with net rateable value divided between agricultural land and buildings and other hereditaments not being agricultural land. And by column 5 "assessable value" of a parish is one-half of the amount of agricultural land added to the amount of the other hereditaments other than land. These provisions were necessary to carry out the scheme of exonerating the occupier of agricultural land from paying the whole of the rate based upon the rateable value of his land, which before the Agricultural Rates Act of 1896 he had to pay, that being the object of the Act; and in my judgment neither section 5 nor the regulations under the Act of 1896 have anything to do with the division the asylums board has to make under section 24 of the local Act of 1891. There is a well-known rule which has application to this case, which is that a subsequent general Act does not affect a prior special Act by implication. That this is the law cannot be doubted, and the cases upon the subject will be found collected in the third edition of Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, at pp. 242-3, and I need not refer to them. Applying this rule to the present case, how does the general Act of 1896 affect the special legislation of 1891? Surely, it does not do so at all. For the reasons above, I am of opinion that the "rateable values" upon which the asylums board were to make the division for contributions under section 24 of the local Act of 1891 have not been touched by the general Act of 1896, and that the first question put to us must be answered in the negative, and the second in the affirmative, and that this appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Ridsdale & Son, for F. C. Hulton, Preston.

Solicitors for the defendants, Austin & Austin, for W. H. Talbot, Manchester.

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. } Feb. 20; March 6, 7, 8, 20.

DALY v. EDWARDES.
WARR & CO. v. EDWARDES. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Lease of theatre—Covenant not to assign—Grant of right to supply refreshments—Breach—Forfeiture.

A lessee of a theatre covenanted not to assign or part with the premises, or any estate or interest therein, for all or any part of the term thereby granted. The lessee subsequently granted to a third person the free and exclusive licence and right to use the refreshment rooms and bars in the said theatre.

Held, that the lessee had not assigned or parted with the premises or any estate or interest therein, and that consequently there was no forfeiture.

Action for declaration that re-entry by the defendant under the lease was unauthorized.

On the 8th of February, 1894, the defendant George Edwardes granted a lease of certain premises in Cranbourn-street, now known as Daly's Theatre, to the plaintiff Augustin Daly for a term of twenty years from the 25th of December, 1893, at a yearly rent of £5,500, and the said Daly covenanted with Edwardes not at any time during the term thereby granted to assign, demise, or otherwise part with the indenture or any estate or interest therein for all or any part of the said term without the license of the lessor, it being the intention that the lessee should be at liberty at all times to produce and perform by himself and company or his licensees any first-class comedy, drama, or opera without the necessity of applying to the lessor for his consent in that behalf, but that such licensees should not be at liberty to assign, underlet, demise, or otherwise part with their term without the license of the lessor first had and obtained. There was also a proviso for re-entry on breach of any of the covenants by the underlessee therein contained.

By an indenture dated the 15th of April, 1898, the plaintiff Daly, in consideration of £1,400 and a weekly rent of £15, granted to Frank Warr & Co. (Limited) "the free and exclusive license and right to the use of all the refreshment rooms, bars, smoke rooms, wine cellars, and offices" in the said theatre, together with free right of access thereto and the sole and exclusive privilege of advertising therein, "to hold the premises" for the term of fifteen and three-quarter years. And the said indenture contained a power for "the landlord" to determine the term on non-payment of rent, and also power to discharge any servants of the said "tenants" for misconduct. And the landlord covenanted that the tenants should peaceably and quietly "hold, occupy, and enjoy the hereditaments and premises without any lawful let, suit, trouble, eviction, or disturbance by the landlord or any other person." No license or consent was ever obtained from the said Edwardes prior to the granting of such last mentioned indenture.

By an agreement dated the 15th of May, 1894, between Daly of the one part and Edwardes of the other part, it was agreed that Edwardes should produce and mount the plays, and provide the back of the house at his own expense, and that Daly should provide the theatre, pay rent and taxes, and be generally responsible for the front of the house. The said Daly was to pay 65 per cent. of the gross takings to the said Edwardes, and the remaining 35 per cent. was to be retained by Daly. The staff and officials supplied by each of them to be under his sole control; and each of them was to bear in certain shares the expenses of advertising and of the orchestra.

On the 4th of September, 1898, Edwardes re-entered and took possession of the theatre and premises on the ground that the contract with Warr & Co. was a breach of the covenant not to assign as aforesaid.

On the 6th of September, 1898, the plaintiff Daly issued his writ in this action, and claimed a declaration that the re-entry by the defendant Edwardes was not authorized by the underlease, that a partnership was subsisting between the plaintiff Daly and the defendant Edwardes, and that if such re-entry was authorized it was inconsistent with Edwardes' duty as a partner.

On the 14th of September, 1898, Frank Warr & Co. also brought an action against Daly and Edwardes claiming against Edwardes a declaration that they were entitled to the exclusive right of supplying refreshments in the said theatre, or in the alternative damages against Daly. This last action, however, stood over pending an appeal in the former action.

On the 7th of June, 1899, the plaintiff Daly died, and the two actions were revived in the name of his administrator

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Warrington, Q.C., Eldon Bankes, L. S. Bristowe, and Newton Crane, for the plaintiff Daly, referred to Taylor v. Caldwell, 11 W. R. 726, 3 B. & S. 826; London and North-Western Railway v. Buckmaster, 24 W. R. 16, L. R. 10 Q. B. 70, 444; Rendell v. Roman, 9 Times L. R. 192; Peebles v. Crosthwaite, 13 Times L. R. 198; Hill v. Tupper, 11 W. R. 784, 2 H. & C. 121; Kerrison v. Smith, [1897] 2 Q. B. 445, 46 W. R. Dig. 36; Wells v. Kingston-upon-Hull, 23 W. R. 562, L. R. 10 C. P. 402; Smith v. Lambeth, &c., 31 W. R. 31, 10 Q. B. D. 327; Reg. v. Morrish, 11 W. R. 960, 32 L. J. M. C. 245.

Warmington, Q.C., P. O. Lawrence, Q.C., G. Cave, and Herman Cohen, for defendant Edwardes, referred to Lyon v. Knowles, 11 W. R. 266, 3 B. & S. 556; Dingley v. Sales, 1 M. & Sel. 297; Greenslade v. Tapscott, C. M. & R. 55; Selby v. Greaves, 16 W. R. 1127, L. R. 3 C. P. 594; Duxbury v. Sandiford, 80 L. T. Rep. 552, 47 W. R. Dig. 97; Varly v. Coppard, 20 W. R. 972, L. R. 7 C. P. 505; Webber v. Lee, 30 W. R. 866, 9 Q. B. D. 315; Reg. v. St. Martin-in-the-Fields, 3 Q. B. 204; Lancashire and Cheshire Telephone Co. v. Manchester Overseers, 33 W. R. 203, 14 Q. B. D. 267; Holywell Union v. Halkyn, [1895] A. C. 117, 43 W. R. Dig. 131; Taylor v. Pendleton Overseers, 35 W. R. 762, 19 Q. B. D. 288.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and J. R. Brooke, for Warr & Co.

KEKEWICH, J.—There is no substantial question about the facts, and the difficulties arise on the construction of the two instruments of the 8th of February, 1894, and the 15th of April, 1898. Clause 10 of the former bristles with difficulties. It falls naturally into two sections, and though it is necessary to consider both in order to construe the first, on which the main question turns, it is convenient to treat them separately, as the second is in form a proviso or limitation on the first, which runs as follows: "Not at any time during the term hereby granted to assign, demise, or otherwise part with this indenture or any estate or interest therein for all or any part of the said term to any person or persons whomsoever without the license of the lessor first had and obtained." The question is whether this covenant has been broken so as to bring into operation the proviso for re-entry. In order to construe such a covenant regard must be had to the circumstances, and the one thing to bear in mind is that it was the lease of a theatre and intended to be used for no other purpose. It is conceded that the phrase "this indenture" means the demised premises. And, reading the covenant thus, the lessee is distinctly prohibited from assigning or demising the premises as a whole, neither of which he has done. But it is argued that he has parted with some estate or interest therein. I take it that a man who parts with premises does not retain them. If, therefore, the effect of the agreement with Warr & Co. is that Daly, while retaining possession of the theatre as a whole, yielded to them possession as against himself of the part used by them so that he could not be said to have retained it, it would, I think, follow that he parted with an interest in the premises. But if he retained possession of the whole theatre, including the parts used by Warr & Co., then in my judgment he has not parted with an interest in the theatre, though he has given some rights over a portion of it. In this connection many authorities have been referred to, some dealing with "exclusive possession," and some with "rateable occupation." But I shrink from authorities which turn on the use of the word "exclusive," and the authorities on "rateable occupation" are of doubtful application to any other subject. Of these, however, I may mention in passing Reg. v. St. Martin-in-the-Fields, since it has special interest here, as being concerned with a private box in a theatre, but the decision turned upon the construction of a rating Act of Parliament. Taking, therefore, so much of clause 10 as has already been quoted, I have to determine, without the assistance of any particular decision, whether Daly has parted with any interest in the theatre. But clause 10 has a second sub-division or section, which runs thus: "It being the intention that the lessee shall be at liberty at all times to produce and perform by himself and company, or by his licensees, any first-class comedy, drama, or opera, without the necessity of applying to the lessor or his assigns for his consent in that behalf, but that such licensees shall not be at liberty to assign, &c." The gist of this section was in the provision that he shall be at liberty to produce and perform by his licensees, who, however, were not to assign, &c. It would seem from this that it was intended that the theatre should be used for the production of first-class plays, and that so long as that was done the lessor cared not whether it was done by Daly or by others claiming under him in the first degree. If he had demised or licensed to others for this purpose, he would not thereby have broken his covenant, even though he had parted with the theatre for the whole term. This is, to my mind, the clear effect of the proviso, whether standing alone or construed with the preceding section. The second section is useful as indicating the intention of the parties that the theatre was to be used for the performance of first-class plays, and that so long as that was secured Daly was to be under no personal obligation to do it.

Before passing to the consideration of the other instrument, it is convenient here to notice the agreement between Edwardes and Daly of the 15th of May, 1894. Some argument turned on the partnership thereby constituted. I probably misunderstood Mr. Warrington's argument on this point, for I deemed him to be contending for a partnership in the theatre which seemed to me inconsistent with the facts. If he was contending, as I suppose he was, for a partnership in the particular business of producing a play, I have, as at present advised, nothing to say against it. By the agreement of the 15th of April, 1898, Daly granted to Warr & Co. an exclusive license to supply refreshments. I am not disposed to attribute importance to the phrase "exclusive license." The force of the word "exclusive" lies in the assurance to Warr & Co. that they and no other persons should have the right of supplying refreshments. It does not in any way control the relation between Daly and Warr & Co. The former granted to the latter a license, and that is, I think, the substance of the instrument. A man may grant to another the right to do such and such things, in which case the grant may operate by way of covenant or licence. Here Daly does not grant the theatre or any part of it, but grants the free and exclusive license and right to use certain rooms together with certain privileges which are obviously all intended to enable Warr & Co. to exercise their trade of refreshment contractors. The legal phrase "to hold the premises" is not technically apt to such a grant, but it is often used, and one must not attach too much weight to it. Nor does the use of the words "landlord" and "tenants" make the instrument a demise if otherwise it ought not to be so construed. In many other respects the language of the agreement contemplates a tenancy, and there is even a covenant for quiet enjoyment in a form appropriate to a lease of land. Nevertheless, I cannot think that this was the intention of the parties. This agreement merely enables refreshments to be supplied without the lessee undertaking the obligation to supply them. It is in substance a contract by Daly that Warr & Co. shall have the privilege of supplying refreshments; and I note as an illustration of this the provision which gives Daly full power to discharge any servant of the tenants for misconduct. It is necessary now shortly to advert to the proved facts. The construction of the written instrument cannot be varied by the usage of the parties, but such usage may have operated as a breach of the covenant apart from the written instrument, and it was argued that it had in fact done this. Subject to one remark the proved facts seem to show that Daly did not part with any portion of the theatre or any interest therein. It may be that he could not have gone behind the bars when the theatre was open, or in any other way have interfered with Warr & Co. But except that they were at liberty to carry on their business of refreshment contractors, I think that Daly retained possession of the whole theatre, and full control over it. Those who came to the bars during the performance owed their privilege of admission to payment to Daly, and were under no obligation to Warr & Co., who, on the other hand, could not exclude them. But it is said that when the theatre was closed the bars were locked, and Daly's servants could not enter. I have no doubt that this, to some extent, was true. But this was done to prevent pilfering—that is, to protect Warr & Co., and not to exclude Daly; and I think it would be going too far to say that this made Daly part with any interest in the premises. Except for that and the privilege granted to Warr & Co., I think Daly retained possession of the whole theatre throughout; and I will make a declaration adverse to forfeiture conformable to my judgment, and add any consequential relief, including an inquiry as to damages.

Solicitors, John C. Button & Co.; Slark, Edwards, & Co.; W. H. Herbert.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } March 24.

In re Day and Night Advertising Co.
Upward v. Day and Night Advertising Co. (a.)

Practice—Sales by the court—Debenture-holders' action—Property forming debenture-holders' security in jeopardy—Motion for judgment on admissions in pleadings—R.S.C., ord. 51, r. 1b.

The court—on motion for judgment on admissions in the pleadings in a debenture-holders' action, in which the plaintiff sued on behalf of himself and all other debenture-holders, and the debenture-holders were entitled to a charge on the property of the company—directed a sale of the property of the company under ord. 51, r. 1b, upon proof of the insolvency of the company and the jeopardy of the property comprising the debenture-holders' security, although the principal moneys secured by the debentures were not due, no interest thereon being in arrear for six months, and no resolution having been passed, or order made, for the winding up of the company.

In such a case the admitted allegations of the statement of claim should be verified by affidavit.

This was a motion for judgment on admissions in pleadings in a debenture-holders' action (in which the plaintiff sued on behalf of himself and all other debenture-holders) asking, with the consent of the company, for the usual judgment and sale.

The company had been formed to develop certain patents.

The principal moneys were not due according to the tenour of the debentures, which provided therefor, in the event of interest being in arrear for six months, or a resolution passed, or an order made, for winding up; none of which events were alleged to have happened.

A receiver had been appointed in the action on the 2nd of January, 1900, on evidence that the property charged by the debentures was in jeopardy, the company being threatened with distress for rent, and being unable to meet its liabilities.

The claim stated that all the shares had been issued and fully paid, and that the receiver had realized all the moneys available and thereout discharged the arrears of rent and other liabilities, and had only £2 left in his hands to meet rent due in a few days' time and instalments of fees for keeping the patents on foot.

The company by their defence admitted the allegations in the statement of claim.

Hon. E. C. Macnaghten, Q.C., and H. T. Methold appeared for all parties.

Cozens-Hardy, J.—I feel no difficulty as to giving you judgment, but can I direct a sale? The statement of claim is not strictly evidence. If an affidavit is filed verifying the allegations material for showing the necessity for a sale—namely, the insolvency of the company and the jeopardy to the property from inability to keep up the patents, I will direct a sale, and let the minutes be prefaced with a statement of my approval in the words of ord. 51, r. 1*b*.

Solicitors, Withers & Withers.

---

Chan. Div.
Buckley, J. } Feb. 8-10, 12, 15.

Welsbach Incandescent Gas Light Co. v. Incandescent (Sunlight Patent) Gas Lighting Co. (a.)

Patent—Utility—What sufficient to support patent.

Utility in patent law does not mean either abstract utility, or comparative or competitive utility, or commercial utility, but an invention better in some respect, but not necessarily in every respect, than the preceding knowledge of the trade as to a particular fabric.

An invention is patentable which offers the public a useful choice.

A very small amount of utility is sufficient to support a patent.

Action.

This was an action for an injunction, damages, and other relief in respect of infringement by the defendants of the plaintiff's patent, granted in 1886, for an improvement in an illuminant appliance for gas-burners.

In 1885 Welsbach took out his original patent for incandescent lighting, by which he claimed the manufacture of an illuminant appliance for gas and other burners, consisting of a cap or hood made of fabric impregnated with the soluble salts of what are called rare earths, such as zirconium, lanthanum, and yttrium. In 1886 application was made in his behalf for a further patent, upon which the above action was brought. This patent was for certain substances other than those mentioned in the patent of 1885 which could be advantageously employed in producing the illuminant appliances the subject of the patent of 1885. The claim made was substantially for the use of thorium oxide alone, or in admixture with the oxides of certain other rare earths as the means of obtaining hoods which had a particular character—such as rigidity, flexibility, or durability.

(a.) Reported by R. A. Daniell, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by J. F. Waley, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendants denied that there was any utility in the invention so claimed, and in support of their contention alleged the inferior illuminating power of a mantle prepared according to prescription No. 1 of 1886 to a mantle treated according to the specification of 1885. On the other hand, it was pointed out that the patent of 1886 did not claim to be an improvement on the patent of 1885, but to give a useful choice, and that it offered more advantages other than brilliancy—namely, rigidity, flexibility, or durability.

The case is only reported so far as it deals with the above-mentioned defence — viz., non-utility of the invention sought to be protected by the plaintiffs.

Moulton, Q.C., T. Terrell, Q.C., Roger Wallace, Q.C., and Walter, for the plaintiffs.

Bousfield, Q.C., and W. Neill, for the defendants.

BUCKLEY, J., after stating the nature of the relief sought, and considering the subject-matter of the above patents, and the construction of the specifications, continued as follows: Now, utility in patent law does not, as I understand it, mean either abstract utility, or comparative or competitive utility, or commercial utility. It was described by Grove, J., in Young v. Rosenthal, 1 Rep. Pat. Cas. 34, as meaning an invention better than the preceding knowledge of the trade as to a particular fabric. I adopt this definition if the word "better" be understood as meaning better in some respects, and not necessarily better in every respect; so that, for instance, an article which is good, though not so good as that previously known, but which can be produced more cheaply by another process, is better in that it is better in point of cost, although not so good in point of quality. So here I conceive that a mantle constructed according to prescription No. 1 of thorium pure, according to the knowledge of 1886, and which gave only three candles, or pure in fact according to the knowledge of to-day, and which gives only 1·3 candles, although it is worse as an illuminating appliance than the mantle of 1885, which gave 4 or 4·5 candles, was nevertheless better, if it possessed in a greater degree the qualities of rigidity, durability, or stability. I may illustrate this by saying that in point of fact subsequent knowledge has shown that it was useful, because by the subsequent discovery that a small percentage of cerium will increase its luminosity, this step which was taken in 1886 has led to the possibility of making subsequently in 1893 a mantle which is not only durable and stable, but possesses also high illuminating power. Again, I may take another test of utility—namely, that an invention is useful for the purposes of the patent law when the public are thereby enabled to do something which they could not do before, or to do in a more advantageous manner something which they could do before, or, to express it in another way, that an invention is patentable which offers the public a useful choice. Now, the patent of 1886 offers the public an opportunity of making with thorium an appliance which, up to that date, it had been suggested could be made only with zeroonium, lanthanum, or yttrium, and whether the thoria mantle gave a higher or lower illuminating light, it may well have been, as we now know that it was, useful to give the public the choice of using that rare earth instead of some of the rare earths mentioned in the specification of 1885. The amount of these rare earths which is to be found on the surface of the globe is in respect of some of them limited to but small quantities. Until the importance of thoria was known, I believe that it was supposed to exist only in extraordinarily small quantities, and that it is only recently that, after explorations all over the world, there has been found at last a large bed of monosite sand which contains thorium. A very small amount of utility is sufficient to support a patent, and a suggestion to the public of this other rare earth as a means to an end gives, I think, utility to the patent for the purposes of the patent law. Further, the question is not to my mind a question of improvement upon the patent of 1885. At the date when application was made for the patent of 1886, the public knew nothing of the patent of 1885, and the question is not whether the patent of 1886 enables the public to make an illuminating appliance better than that which they could make under the patent of 1885, but whether it gives to the public a useful choice of another substance to be used in making an illuminating appliance. The defence of non-utility, in my opinion, therefore fails.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Faithfull & Owen.

Solicitors for the defendants, Michael Abrahams, Sons, & Co.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Feb. 8.

VARLEY v. WHIPP. (a.)

Sale of goods—Contract for sale by description—Implied condition—Acceptance—Passing of property—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 13, 17, 35.

Where a specific article is sold by description without having been seen by the buyer, there is an implied condition, under section 13 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, that the goods shall correspond with the description, and the vendor cannot make the property pass by delivering something which does not correspond with the description.

Appeal by the defendant from a decision of his Honour Judge Cadman, sitting at Huddersfield.

In the action the plaintiff sued to recover £21, the price of a machine sold by him to the defendant. The contract was made in June, 1899, in the course of a conversation between the parties. The plaintiff stated that he had a self-binder reaping machine, which had been used one season and had only cut fifty or sixty acres. The defendant agreed to purchase the machine on the plaintiff's word for £21, saying that if the plaintiff's description was correct the machine was practically new. It was arranged that the machine, which was at Upton, and which the defendant had not seen, should be sent to him at Beverley, he paying the carriage, and it was consigned "carriage forward" from Huddersfield to him. The plaintiff's statement as to the amount which the machine had been used was in fact untrue, but there was no suggestion of fraud on his part.

The machine arrived at Beverley about the 2nd of July, and on the same day the defendant wrote to the plaintiff a letter in the following terms: "I have had a look at the 'self-binder' you sent me, but it is not what I expected. It is a very old one and has been mended, and you told me that it had only cut fifty acres and was practically new. I think you must never have seen it. It will be no use to me as I don't care about old things, especially machinery; but I shall be at Huddersfield this week on Thursday and Friday night, if not before, and shall be staying at Carlton House, New North-road, where I shall be pleased to see you."

(a.) Reported by P. B. DURNFORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant subsequently returned the machine to the plaintiff on the 14th of August.

The county court judge gave judgment for the plaintiff on the ground that the letter of the 2nd of July was not a rejection of the machine, and that the defendant had retained it an unreasonable time before returning it.

W. O. Danckwerts, Q.C., for the defendant (appellant).—The 13th section of the Sale of Goods Act provides that on a contract for sale by description there is an implied condition that the goods should correspond with the description. By the 34th and two following sections the buyer is to have a reasonable opportunity of inspecting the goods, and is deemed to have accepted them when he intimates to the seller that he has done so, or when, after the lapse of a reasonable time, he retains the goods without intimating that he has rejected them, and where the goods are delivered to the buyer and he refuses to accept them, having the right to do so, he is not bound to return them to the seller. There was no acceptance of the goods in the present case, as they did not correspond to the description, and the defendant, having intimated that he would not accept the machine, was under no obligation to return it.

He referred to Azemar v. Casella, 15 W. R. 998, L. R. 2 C. P. 677, and Grimoldby v. Wells, 23 W. R. 524, L. R. 10 C. P. 391.

C. C. Scott, for the respondent.—This was a sale of a specific machine; the property passed and the defendant's only remedy was for breach of warranty. The letter of the 2nd of July was not a rejection, and under section 35 of the Sale of Goods Act the defendant must be held to have accepted the goods because he retained the machine an unreasonable time. This was a sale of specific goods under the definition in section 62, and it makes no difference whether the buyer saw them or not. The machine was identified and agreed upon, and the property passed when it was put on the train; therefore, under section 11 (c), the only remedy is for breach of warranty. Section 13 does not apply to this case, as the thing is specific, and the section can only apply to cases of unascertained goods.

CHANNELL, J., said: I am of opinion that this appeal must be allowed. I think the case turns on rather a fine point—viz., whether certain words that were used were a part of the description of the thing sold or whether they were a mere collateral warranty. If the property in this machine had passed at any time prior to the date of the first letter, then nothing that the purchaser could do would divert the property from him; he would only have his cause of action for breach of warranty because it was not a new machine and had cut more than it was asserted to have cut. If you can decide whether or not the property had finally passed to the buyer, you will get a solution of the question. Did it pass or not? The thing in question had never been seen by the buyer, it was described to him by the seller. It was not the property of the seller at the time it was described by him to the buyer, and he described where it was, at Upton, and he said that it was a self-binder, that it was nearly new, and had cut about fifty or sixty acres. How much of that was a description and identification of the thing sold and how much was a mere collateral warranty? We have had the illustration of the sale of a horse in a stall in a stable which had not been seen, and it is agreed that if a man said "I will sell you the horse in the end stall in my stable," and there was no horse in the stall, there would be no contract, and if there was a cow in the stall it would not pass the property in the cow. If a man says "I will sell you a four-year-old horse in the end stall in my stable," and there is not one there, but there is another horse, does the property pass more than if it had been a cow? I do not think it does. The question is rather a fine one as to whether or not the description is part of the identification or merely a collateral warranty. Would the 13th section of the Sale of Goods Act, which is only a correct statement of the previous law as to passing of property, apply to such a case, and what is the meaning of a sale of goods by description? I cannot help thinking that the section must apply to all cases where the purchaser has not seen the goods, and must rely upon the description given to him by the vendor, and although the usual application would be to wholly unascertained goods it does not follow that it does not apply to cases where, in some sense, you may say that the goods are specific. I think it applies to such a case as the present where the purchaser buys by reason of the description given to him by the vendor, and that there is an implied condition—not a warranty, which is a different thing—that the goods shall correspond with the description. If that is so, and if that is the nature of the contract which was made when the parties met at Huddersfield, the property in the machine at Upton has not passed. The rules about property passing are extremely vague. The 17th section says: "When there is a contract for the sale of specific or ascertained goods the property in them is transferred to the buyer at such time as the parties to the contract intend it to be transferred."

(2) "For the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties regard should be had to the terms of the contract, the conduct of the parties, and the circumstances of the case."

It is difficult to imagine a code more vague than that, but I believe it correctly represents the state of the authorities and the law at the time of the passing of the Act; but that does not give us a very great deal of light as to whether the property in this thing passed. Nor does any part of the 18th section apply. The only part which could apply would be clause 1, which has to do with an unconditional contract for the sale of specific goods, which leaves us in the same difficulty as before. That being so, the property not having passed at the time of the contract, when did it pass, if at all? It is suggested that it passed at the time of putting it on the rail. The vendor cannot make the property pass by putting on the rail something which does not correspond with the description and does not fulfil the conditions. So that if it was a sale by description and there was an implied condition that the thing should be equal to the description, then the property would not pass by putting something not equal to the description on the rail. The earliest time at which it could pass was when it was accepted by the buyer. In this case it is clear on the letters that it was never accepted at all. The buyer told the vendor that he did not accept the machine, but he did not say he finally rejected it, he let the matter stand over. I think the property in these circumstances never passed, and, it having been held as a fact that the machine did not correspond with the description given of it, the appeal must be allowed and judgment given for the defendant.

BUCKNILL, J.—The county court judge found that this was a sale by description. I think that was right. The contract made between the parties was that the vendor would sell a certain second-hand reaping machine, which was stated to be nearly new, and to have cut only fifty or sixty acres. Was that statement made by the vendor to the buyer a mere collateral warranty or was it such a description that it became the essence of the bargain without which the buyer would not have purchased? It was, in my opinion, a sale by description under the 13th section of the Sale of Goods Act. Having bought these goods by description the buyer had an opportunity of accepting or rejecting them, and by a letter of the 2nd of July he expressed a decided intention of not accepting the machine. I should be prepared to say that the proper construction of that letter was that he rejected it, but it is not important to decide that. The county court judge has found that for an unreasonable time he omitted to reject. I think that is wrong, and that this being a sale by description, and the machine not corresponding with the description, the appeal must be allowed.

Judgment for the defendant.

Solicitors for the appellent, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Ramsden, Sykes, & Ramsden, Huddersfield.

Solicitors for the respondent, Van Sandau, for C. H. Marshall, Huddersfield.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Feb. 2.

LOGSDON (Appellant) v. TROTTER (Respondent). (a.)

Common lodging-house—Charitable institution—House containing cubicles—Persons congregated together—Danger of spread of disease—Necessity for registration and inspection—Common Lodging Houses Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 28), s. 7.

The respondent kept a house (containing, inter alia, 128 single-bedded cubicles) for the reception of male lodgers of the poorer class, each inmate being accommodated with the use of a single-bedded cubicle to sleep in and the use of certain common rooms, at a charge of from 6*d.* to 8*d. a night. Drunken or disorderly persons, or persons suspected to be of the criminal class or verminous, were excluded; but, with these exceptions, the house was open to any male who paid the above charge. The house was not carried on by the respondent for profit, and efforts were made by him to find situations for any inmates and to befriend them in sickness. The majority of the usual inmates were of the class that frequented common lodging-houses, but some were of a better class.*

Held, that the house was a common lodging-house within the meaning of the Common Lodging Houses Acts, 1851 and 1853, and that the respondent had been guilty of the offence of keeping a common lodging-house without having his name registered as the keeper thereof.

Logsdon v. Booth, ante, p. 266, [1900] 1 Q. B. 401, discussed.

Appeal by case stated from decision of a Metropolitan police magistrate.

An information was laid by the appellant on behalf of the London County Council against the respondent charging him with keeping a house as a common lodging-house which had not been inspected and approved by the local authority and registered under the Common Lodging Houses Act, 1851.

The house in question was known as the Victoria Home, Whitechapel-road, and was one of three homes, the property of a body of trustees, one of whom was the respondent. A considerable part of the sum required for the erection of the building and the purchase of the site was subscribed by friends of the institution as a gift. The house was intended to afford lodging accommodation for respectable men of the poorer class, and a charge of 6d. to 8d. a night was made, for which each inmate was allowed the use of a single-bedded cubicle to sleep in. The house contained 128 single-bedded cubicles or bedrooms, and there were other rooms used by the inmates in common. Men only were admitted, but drunken or disorderly persons, or persons suspected to be of the criminal class or verminous subjects, were excluded. The majority of the usual inmates were of the class that frequented common lodging-houses.

The magistrate (whose decision was given before the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in Logsdon v. Booth, ante, p. 266, [1900] 1 Q. B. 401) dismissed the information on the ground that as Victoria Home was an institution not carried on for the purpose of making a profit, but solely for the object of assisting the poor, and as the facts were in his judgment indistinguishable from the case of Booth v. Ferret, 38 W. R. 718, 25 Q. B. D. 87, the home was not a common lodging-house within the meaning of the Common Lodging Houses Acts, 1851 and 1853.

The informant on behalf of the county council appealed, and the question was whether the character of the institution distinguished it from a Salvation Army shelter, which, in the case of Logsdon v. Booth, was held to be a common lodging-house.

Jelf, Q.C., and Ryde, for the appellant, submitted that the case was governed by Logsdon v. Booth.

Daldy, for the respondent, submitted that the object with which the Victoria Home was started being to provide accommodation for a better class of the very poor than the Salvation Army shelters gather in, rendered it a different class to that of the common lodging or "doss"-house, with which by the decision of the court in Logsdon v. Booth, the Salvation Army shelters were now to be included for the purposes of the Common Lodging Houses Acts. At the Victoria Home a somewhat higher charge was made than was charged at the Salvation shelters; the inmates had not the use of a common kitchen, food being supplied to them, and thus the risk and danger arising from the introduction of unsound food was avoided. Moreover, in Langdon v. Broadbent, 37 L. T. Rep. 434, a common lodging-house was defined as a house where the inmates inhabited—i.e., slept in—one common room, whereas, although some of the rooms in the home were used in common yet each inmate had separate sleeping accommodation.

Cur. adv. vult.

CHANNELL, J.—I confess this is to me a case of some difficulty; but in deciding it we have the advantage of the opinion recently expressed on the question by a specially-constituted Divisional Court who were called upon to decide in the case of Logsdon v. Booth whether one of the Salvation Army shelters was, within the meaning of the Act, a common lodging-house. I was at first struck by the similarity between that case and the present, and we might have decided this appeal offhand by saying that it was covered by Logsdon v. Booth, and nothing more. But I felt that if the court were merely to say that the facts in this case were so like those in the other that no distinction could be drawn, it would be starting upon a process which might ultimately result in a decision being given that some thing was a common lodging-house which no one, using ordinary language, would so describe. No doubt the facts of this case bring it very near the line which the court indicated in Logsdon v. Booth, and it is necessary, therefore, to carefully examine Logsdon v.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Booth to see whether the present case—which certainly goes one step beyond the facts there found—crosses that line or not. Four things have been mentioned in the cases cited as tests to decide what is a common lodging-house. The first of these was the object for which the house was being carried on. That test was applied in the case of Booth v. Ferret, where it was held that the term did not include a house not carried on for profit, but solely for assisting the poorer classes of the population. That test was disposed of once and for all by the decision of the Divisional Court in Logsdon v. Booth, and we need not discuss that test further. Another of the tests was whether the house was intended for the use of a low class of persons—of persons who were likely to be dirty and diseased. No doubt that is an element which must be taken into consideration when deciding if a lodging-house is a common lodging-house within the meaning of the Acts passed to insure proper sanitary precautions being enforced. But the cases show that although it is an important element in the question it is not a conclusive test. It is an element that exists in the case we are considering. The special case states that efforts are made by the respondents to raise the inmates out of that class and that some of those who frequented this home were drawn from a better status of society. Nevertheless, the case states as a fact that though a certain number of the lodgers were of a better class than the ordinary "dosser class," yet the majority were of that class which usually frequented common lodging-houses. It is so found in the case and we must therefore accept it, that those who frequented the Victoria Home were men of what is known as the "dosser class." But a third test suggested was whether or not the house was open to all comers. That was the point which was mainly discussed in Langdon v. Broadbent, 37 L. T. Rep. 434, and was referred to by the Lord Chief Justice in Logsdon v. Booth. If the decision of the court in Langdon v. Broadbent went the length of saying that every lodging-house that was open to all comers was thereby rendered a common lodging-house—unless for some reason it ought not to be included in that class—then that decision was merely negatived by the decision given in Logsdon v. Booth, since the Lord Chief Justice said that the keeper of a common lodging-house might refuse to receive persons on various grounds. But if the decision was interpreted to mean, in a wider sense, that a common lodging-house was a house open to all comers, so that no one could be refused, however dirty, diseased, or verminous he might be, then the fact that the house was so open to all comers would no doubt be an essential element in deciding whether a particular house escaped from the mischief of the Act. I do not think the wider view can be maintained; and therefore it seems clear that the present case comes within the definition, for although men who were drunk and disorderly or suspected of being criminals or verminous were refused admittance, yet, with such exceptions, all men were admitted who were able to pay the price asked. The fourth and last test which was suggested by the authorities cited was whether those who frequented the house could be said to "inhabit a common room"; and it was said—I suppose rightly—that in this sense "inhabited" must be taken as equivalent to "slept in one common room." It was said that a common lodging-house could be defined as a "place where persons not previously known to each other inhabited a common room," in the sense that they slept there; and the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, given shortly after the Act was passed, was referred to. The law officers did, in fact, describe a common lodging-house as a house where for short periods persons, strangers to one another, were allowed to inhabit a common room, and I suppose we must take that as being a proper description. Whether to "inhabit" a common room must necessarily be restricted to sleeping in a common bedroom is not necessary here to decide, and if it were I do not think that the mere fact that the common room was divided off by curtains or match-board partitions for the sake of decency rather than with the object of preventing infection would affect the decision one way or the other. Suffice it to say that for a house to be a common lodging-house within the purview of the Act it must be a house where persons of the poorer class are so congregated together as thereby to create a risk of the spread of disease. In the present case it is found that the living-rooms were used in common, and that the sleeping accommodation was not entirely separate, and, therefore, as those who used it were substantially of the class who frequent common "doss-houses," this home comes, in my judgment, under the provisions of the Act. The difficulty in the case arose because this institution was designed to help a superior class of the very poor, and there is nothing to show that the regulations for cleanliness were not enforced, and the home as well managed, as if the Act had been enforced with regard to it.

BUCKNILL, J., gave judgment to the same effect.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, W. A. Blaxland.

Solicitors for the respondent, Fowler Perks & Co.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 30.

LLANDUDNO URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HUGHES. (a.)

Markets—Tolls—Selling potatoes in the street—Penalty—Licensed hawker—Exemption—Hawkers Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 33), s. 3 (3)—Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847 (10 Vict. c. 14), s. 13.

By section 3, sub-section 3, of the Hawkers Act, 1888, a person is not required to take out a hawker's licence to sell in the street fish, fruit, victuals, or coals.

By section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, a penalty is imposed on "every person other than a licensed hawker" who exposes for sale in the street any produce in respect of which a toll is leviable by the market authority of that district.

Held, that, if such a vendor has taken out a hawker's licence, he is to be deemed a licensed hawker, and comes within the benefit given to that class by section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847.

Case stated by justices sitting in petty sessions at Llandudno in the county of Carnarvon.

An information was preferred by the appellants against the respondent under section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Act, 1847, for having within the limits of the appellants' district, and after a market place was there opened for public use, unlawfully exposed for sale in a street, and not in his own dwelling-place or shop, certain articles—to wit, potatoes—in respect of which tolls were and are authorized to be taken in the market.

It appeared from the case that the respondent was a person who had followed the trade of selling and hawking potatoes, vegetables, and fruits within the appellants' district for many years without holding a hawker's licence; but in consequence of a notice published by the appellants in July, 1899, and before the alleged offence, he took out a hawker's licence, and had paid tolls on the potatoes at the market place before he proceeded to expose them for sale elsewhere.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The justices dismissed the information.

Section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Act, 1847, enacts that "after the market place is open for public use every person other than a licensed hawker who shall sell or expose for sale in any place within the prescribed limits, except in his own dwelling-place or shop, any articles in respect of which tolls are by special Act authorized to be taken in the market, shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings."

By section 3 (3) of the Hawkers Act, 1888, a hawker's licence is not required to be taken out by a person selling fish, fruit, vegetables, or coals.

H. E. Lloyd, for the appellants.—Potatoes are vegetables, in respect of the sale of which the Llandudno Urban District Council are authorized to take toll at the market-place, which they opened for public use, and inasmuch as by section 3 (3) of the Hawkers Act, 1888, it was unnecessary for the respondent to first obtain a hawker's licence before selling potatoes or any victuals, he could not make himself one by taking out a licence, and therefore he is not a person exempted from the penalty imposed on sellers other than hawkers outside the market by section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Act, 1847. Moreover, since he was not trading as a hawker at the time of the sale, for he was offering for sale articles (potatoes) which could be hawked without a hawker's licence, the payment of tolls did not bring him within the exemption he claimed to come under. Woolwich Local Board v. Gardiner, 44 W. R. 46, [1895] 2 Q. B. 497, and Openshaw v. Oakeley, 60 L. T. Rep. 929, 37 W. R. Dig. 83, are authorities upon which the justices should have convicted the respondent.

A. E. Griffith, for the respondent.—The respondent having obtained a hawker's licence has brought himself within the exemption in section 13 of the Act of 1847, and the general provisions of that Act do not apply to him.

CHANNELL, J.—The justices held in this case that the respondent having in fact a hawker's licence was within the exemption in favour of licensed hawkers expressly reserved to that class of traders by section 13 of the Markets and Fairs Act, 1847, under which the present proceedings were instituted. It was contended by the appellants that he was not a hawker although he had taken out a hawker's licence, because, by section 3 (3) of the Hawkers Act, 1888, no licence was needed to sell either potatoes or other vegetables or fruit. I think, however, that a man who applies for and has granted to him a hawker's licence must be regarded as a licensed hawker, and as such within the exemption given to that class of traders by any statute, unless it is clearly shewn that for some reason or other that is not so. We were pressed with the case of Woolwich Local Board v. Gardiner, but in that case Gardiner was a person holding a pedlar's licence, who by virtue of the Pedlars Act, 1871, was deemed to be a licensed hawker, but who was in fact found to be acting not as a pedlar, but as a hawker, and, quite rightly, the court held that he did not come within the exemption. But that case is distinguishable from this, for there the man was actually doing something that was a breach of his licence, whereas in the case we are considering Hughes did what it was lawful for him to do under the Act. Having a hawker's licence, and trading within it, he was, in my judgment, entitled to the benefit given to hawkers by the 13th section of the Markets and Fairs Act.

BUCKNILL, J.—I concur.

Solicitors for the appellants, Belfrage & Co., for Chamberlain & Johnson, Llandudno.

Solicitors for the respondents, Hughes & Co., for W. J. Corbett, Llandudno.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Bigham and Darling, JJ.) — Dec. 21.

ARMSTRONG v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. (a.)

*Metropolis—Street—Laying out new street—Carriage-drive for blocks of flats forming a quadrangle with garden in centre—*Cul de sac for carriage traffic—Requisite sanction of county council—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 7.

The appellant was summoned upon an information charging him with having commenced to form and lay out a street for carriage traffic or foot traffic without having first obtained the sanction of the local authority pursuant to the 7th section of the London Building Act, 1894.

The appellant began to form the road in part straight, intending to build blocks of residential flats on each side of that straight part and facing into it, and the other part of the road ran into and formed the boundary of a square, round which again it was intended to build a continuous line of houses facing into the square. The length of the entire road would be 600ft., and about 40ft. in width. The road was to be formed and sewered as an ordinary street, although gullies used for draining a courtyard would also be required. The road was to be entered by gates, and no part of it was to be dedicated to the public, but was intended to be used only as a private road.

Held, that the road in question was a "street" within the meaning of section 7 of the London Building Act, 1894, and that the justices were right in convicting the appellant.

Held, also, that the question whether a place was a "street" within the meaning of the section was one largely of fact, and the decision in each case must depend on its particular circumstances.

Wood (Appellant) v. The London County Council (Respondents), 44 W. R. 144, 64 L. J. M. C. 276, overruled.

Appeal by case stated from the decision of magistrates convicting the appellant upon an information charging him with having commenced to form and lay out a street for carriage traffic without the sanction of the London County Council pursuant to section 7 of the London Building Act, 1894.

The material facts stated in the case are referred to at length in the judgment of the court.

Macmorran, Q.C., and R. Cunningham Glen, for the appellant.—The magistrates were wrong, because that part of the courtyard and the straight piece leading into it, which appears as a road for carriage and foot traffic on the plan, is not a "street" within the meaning of that term in the 7th section of the London Building Act, 1894. It is a private roadway merely for the use of those persons who are tenants of the houses intended to be erected. The roadway was not a street laid out for foot or carriage traffic, and the Act not applying to the laying out of this private drive, the appellant was not required to obtain the sanction of the London County Council. We rely on Wood v. London County Council, 44 W. R.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

144, 64 L. J. M. C. 276, and London County Council v. Davis, 43 W. R. 574, 64 L. J. M. C. 212. As for the case of Reg. v. Fulford, 12 W. R. 715, 33 L. J. M. C. 122 relied on by the respondents, it is really not an authority in this case. The question of what was a "street" for the purposes of a building line was raised there on indictment, and the point was reserved for the Court of Crown Cases.

Horace Avory and Daldy, for the respondents.—The question whether a carriage-drive running round a courtyard is a street is mainly a question of fact. [Lord RUSSELL, C.J.—Would you say that if the plans for New-court, Carey-street, were plans for a proposed new building, the council could refuse to sanction the laying out of the drive round the courtyard on the ground that the builder was intending to form and lay out a new street? Is it not a question of degree in each case?] The question whether the proposed carriage-drive is a street must depend on the character of the buildings adjoining, the neighbourhood, and the particular circumstances in each case. It is a question of fact for the magistrates to decide. Here they have found this was a "street," and unless it can be shown there is no reasonable ground upon which their finding of fact can be upheld, the appeal must fail. The case indeed is covered by the decision in Daw v. London County Council, 62 L. T. Rep. 937, 38 W. R. Dig. 130. We rely also on the judgments of Erle, C.J., and Blackburn, J., in Reg. v. Fullford as showing that the carriage-drive which the appellant proposed to form clearly comes within the wide definition of a "street."

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 21.—Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.—This appeal raises the question whether the carriage-way proposed to be formed by the appellant would, when formed, be a street within the meaning of section 7 of the London Building Act, 1894, and the magistrate found that it would. The facts are as follows: The appellant owns some 3a. 3r. 39p. of land adjoining a public carriage-way called the Grove. The Grove communicates by a carriage-way 15ft. wide with the Highgate-road. No public right of way exists over the land of the appellant, and the only access from any public way is from the Grove. There is a private right of way for foot passengers through a gateway 3ft. in width in the boundary fence at the back of the land on to a public footpath in Parliament-hill. The appellant had originally applied to the respondents for their sanction to form and lay out a street for carriage traffic on the site in question. It was intended that the street should run from the Grove through the site to, and to communicate with, the footway referred to upon Parliament-hill. As a carriage-way it would have been a cul de sac. It was intended to be open and without gate or barrier at the Grove end. The respondents refused their sanction because the proposed street would not afford direct communication between two streets formed and laid out for carriage traffic. Section 9 (4) of the Act of 1894 gave to the respondents the right to refuse their sanction in such a case. The appellants then proceeded with the plan now in question without seeking the sanction of the respondents. That plan is described as follows in the case stated by the magistrates, paragraphs 3, 4, and 5: "(3) It is proposed by the appellant to remove certain old buildings shown on the plan, and to lay out the said piece of land and erect new buildings thereon in the manner shown upon the plan annexed to this case marked A—that is to say, the appellant proposes to erect twenty new buildings or blocks of flats, each block containing eight flats, of which sixteen blocks will be erected in a quadrangular form with an ornamental garden in the centre of the quadrangle formed by such blocks. The approach to the said buildings will be by means of a carriage-way from the Grove running round the said garden, and upon each side of such carriage-way between the Grove and the said garden will be erected two or more of the said blocks. Each of the said blocks will have a separate entrance from the said carriage-way. The said approach from the Grove and also the carriage-way around the said ornamental garden will be 40ft. in width, and such approach and carriage-way will be of a total length of 600ft. (4) The drainage plans for the said buildings had been submitted by the appellant to the said vestry of St. Pancras, upon which were shown the levels of a sewer it was proposed to construct running along and round the said carriage-way with the intended levels of the connecting drains from each of the said buildings. The said plan also showed the position of the manholes and gullies, similar to street gullies, which it was intended to construct in connection with the sewer, and the mode in which it was intended to connect the said sewer with the sewer belonging to the said vestry in the Highgate-road; and also showed that the said carriage-way would be formed and sewered in all respects in the way in which a carriage-way of an ordinary street would be formed and sewered. It was admitted, however, that gullies similar to those shown on the said plan would be required for draining a stable-yard or any other yard. (5) The appellant does not propose to dedicate any right of way to the use of the public over the said piece of land, but intends to erect gates at the entrance to the said approach and to keep a porter at such entrance to open such gates when necessary to allow persons going to or from any of the said flats to pass, so that the public will not be entitled to enter the said approach. There will be no entrance or exit to or from the said flats into the said public park called Parliament-hill, and the said carriage-way will be for the use only of the tenants of the flats in the said proposed new buildings and the tradesmen and others visiting them on business or pleasure with or without carriages; but the appellant is not under any covenant to maintain the said gates or the said porter." It is to be noted that it is not stated that the appellant is under any legal obligation to erect or to maintain the gates, or to keep the porter mentioned in paragraph 5. It is to be further noted that, if, without the respondents' sanction, the appellant can now do what is proposed, the objects intended to be secured by section 9 will be defeated. Where sanction, as in this case, has been withheld under section 9 all the owner would have to do, if the appellant is right, would be to resort to such a plan as the present, and thus reach practically the same end by a different route.

It seems desirable before considering the sections of the Act which apply to this particular case to notice the general scope of the Act. It involves a large measure of interference with the rights of private owners; they cannot do what they like with their property. They cannot make or even widen streets except in conformity with the provisions of the Act. They must observe certain lines of building frontage. They must have a certain specified space at the rear of the domestic buildings they erect. The buildings constructed must be built in conformity with certain detailed requirements as to height, thickness of walls, openings, &c. It is clear that this legislation materially interferes with the action of owners in the use and disposition of their property, and it must be assumed that this has been permitted by the Legislature for reasons of public policy affecting the health, safety, and convenience of the public. The question in this case turns upon the true construction of section 7, which provides that before any person can commence to form or lay out any street, whether for carriage traffic or for foot traffic, he must obtain the sanction of the respondents. Would the way which the appellant has commenced to lay out and form be, when formed, a "street" within the meaning of that section? Unless the context otherwise requires, the interpretation section (section 5) shows the wide meaning to be given to the word "street." It means and includes highway, road, bridge, lane, mews, footway, square, court, alley, passage whether a thoroughfare or not, and also a part of any of these. No description can be wider. Why, then, is the contemplated way not a street? It is not the less a street because, after proceeding straight for a certain distance, it is continued inside or around the proposed square, for "square" is expressly mentioned in the interpretation section. It was admitted in argument, and it seems clear, that it is not less a street because it is intended to be used as a private way, for the interpretation section in no way so limits street. If so, it is not less a street because the traffic for which it is intended is limited to what may be called private traffic to and from the houses to be built along its course. Indeed, it is clear from the wording of the interpretation section (section 5; 3, 5) that the traffic there mentioned includes both public and private traffic, for there is no trace of any intended limitation to the former of these. No doubt the controlling word in the 5th section is "street." It does not follow that everything enumerated in the interpretation clause is a street for all purposes and in all circumstances within the meaning of the Act. For example, the drive to a private house is not a street, nor an approach by a courtyard to one or two blocks of buildings or houses: see section 8. Nor is a bridge a street unless it is, or may be, a link in or continuation of a street. There is involved in the idea of street the presence of houses or buildings more or less continuous and in greater or less proximity to one another along it: see Reg. v. Fullford. But this description is not complete or exhaustive for the purposes of the Act in question. Section 8 (which it is not easy to construe) would seem to treat as the commencement of a street, amongst other things, the mere forming of the foundations of a house in such a manner and position that it might become one of three or more houses abutting on or erected beside land on which a street might thereafter be laid out. But the facts of this case present no difficulty. Taking the broad description of what a street is as expressed in the judgment in Reg. v. Fullford we think that what the appellant here began to lay out was a street even within that description. I have already dealt with the contention that because it was intended for private and not for general public traffic the way or road in question was not a street. What remains? The appellant began to lay out and form a road, in part straight, intending to build houses or blocks of buildings on each side of that straight part and facing into it, which road ran into a square and formed a boundary of such square, round which again it was intended to build a continuous line of houses facing into the square, the length of the entire road being 600ft. We are clearly of opinion that, in these circumstances, the appellant had commenced to form and lay out a street within the meaning of section 7, and as he did so without having obtained the sanction of the respondents he committed the offence of which he has been convicted. We think that the magistrates would have decided wrongly had they decided differently. The appeal will, therefore, be dismissed with costs. We have examined, but do not think it necessary to refer to, the cases cited during the argument. Each case depends on its particular circumstances. It is, indeed, worth noting that the question of street or no street is uniformly treated in these cases as largely a question of fact. The decisions, except in the case of Wood v. London County Council, upheld the views taken by the magistrates, and, in our opinion, that case was wrongly decided.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Newman, Paynter, & Co.

Solicitor for the respondents, W. A. Blaxland.

Court of Appeal.

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) March 10.

FENN v. MILLER. (a.)

Master and servant—Compensation for injury by accident —"On or in or about" a factory—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.

A workman was employed to fetch water in a water-cart from a brook to a steam-engine in a shed connected with a mortar mill for mixing mortar for use in the construction of a building. While he was conducting the horse and cart along a public road from the brook to the engine, the horse ran away and the cart went over him. The place where the accident happened was at least 110 yards distant from the engine.

Held, that, though the engine was a "factory" within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, there was no evidence that the workman was, at the time of the accident, employed "about" a factory within the meaning of sub-section 1 of that section, and that, therefore, compensation was not payable.

Appeal from an award of compensation by the judge of the Bow County Court under the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897.

The appellant was a builder who was building houses at Chingford.

The respondent was a builder's labourer in the employment of the appellant, and he claimed compensation under the Act for personal injury sustained by him.

The appellant had two steam-engines in sheds used for mixing mortar in two mortar mills for the purposes of the buildings.

The respondent was employed to drive or conduct a water-cart and horse to a brook to fetch water from there to the engines and mortar mills.

On the day of the accident the respondent was returning from the brook along a public road with the horse and cart, when the horse ran away and knocked him down, and the cart went over him, thus occasioning the injuries for which he claimed compensation. The place where the accident happened was stated to be from 110 to 160 yards distant from the nearest engine.

The county court judge held that at the time of the accident the respondent was employed "about" the engine, which was itself a factory within section 7 of the Act of 1897, and he made an award in his favour for 15s. a week.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Rawlinson, Q.C., and P. Rose-Innes, for the appellant.—It is admitted that the steam-engines were factories within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897: McNicholas v. Dawson, 47 W. R. 500, [1899] 1 Q. B. 773. The respondent, however, was not employed at the time of the accident "on or in or about" a factory. The county court judge held that he was employed "about" the factory. There was no evidence to support that finding. "About" means in close propinquity or in physical contiguity to the factory: Powell v. Brown, 47 W. R. 145, [1899] 1 Q. B. 157. In that case the accident happened in a street next the factory while the workman was engaged in loading timber on to a cart at the usual loading place. That was clearly an employment about the factory. In Lowth v. Ibbotson, 47 W. R. 506, [1899] 1 Q. B. 1003, the accident happened a mile and a-half from the factory, and it was held not to be "about" the factory. A distance of 110 yards from the factory cannot be said to be in close propinquity to the factory. There was a distinction between employment about the business of the factory and employment about the factory itself. The county court judge was therefore wrong.

Holness v. Mackay, 47 W. R. 531, [1899] 2 Q. B. 319, was also referred to.

Ruegg, Q.C., and W. M. Thompson, for the respondent.—It is a question of fact in each case whether the employment at the time of the accident is "about" a factory. Where can the court say that, as a matter of law, the line is to be drawn? Is 100 yards, or fifty yards, or ten yards the limit? The court cannot lay down any limit as a matter of law. The question must be one of fact in each case, and the court cannot interfere with the finding of the county court judge in such a case. The court has never yet done so in any case. [A. L. SMITH, L.J., referred to Chambers v. Whitehaven Harbour Commissioners, 47 W. R. 533, [1899] 2 Q. B. 133.]

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I must say that in this case I do not think that the county court judge arrived at a right conclusion of fact. That, however, is not the question we have to determine, and I feel a difficulty which I will state presently in dealing with this case. There were two steam-engines in sheds connected with mortar mills for mixing mortar for use on certain buildings which were being erected. The respondent was employed to take a water-cart to and from a brook for the purpose of bringing water to the engines and mortar mills. While on his way back from the brook with water, the horse attached to the water-cart ran away and knocked him down, thus occasioning the injuries for which compensation is claimed. The spot where the accident occurred was at least 110 yards away from the nearest of the two engines. The question we have to determine is whether there is evidence upon which the county court judge was justified in coming to the conclusion that, at the time when the accident occurred, the respondent was employed "on or in or about a factory" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. In the first place it is quite clear, upon the authority of McNicholas v. Dawson, that the engine is a "factory" within the Act. Therefore the only question is whether there was evidence that the respondent at the time of the accident was employed on or in or about the engine. If I h d myself been the judge of fact in the case I should have come to a different conclusion from that arrived at by the county court judge. He held, as I understand, that the word "about" was an elastic word, and that he was entitled to say that a spot 110 yards distant from the engine was "about" the engine—that is to say, in close propinquity thereto, as I expressed its meaning in Powell v. Brown, or physically contiguous thereto, as my brother Collins expressed it in the same case. However, the county court judge has so found, and the difficulty I feel is in saying that there is no evidence to justify his finding. In Powell v. Brown a cart belonging to the owners of a factory was standing in a street close to the factory entrance, where carts were usually loaded from the factory. A workman was employed on the cart loading timber on it when he was injured. We undoubtedly held that the word "about" in section 7 is an enlarging word, covering more than is included in the preceding words "on or in," and we held that it means a close propinquity or physically contiguous to the factory. In Chambers v. Whitehaven Harbour Commissioners I said that the meaning of employment on or in or about a railway, factory, &c., is that "at the time of the accident the workman must be employed about one of those specified localities; the locality of the accident must be within the purview of the section." In the case of Lowth v. Ibbotson a carter in the employment of a miller, whose mill was a factory within the Act, met with an accident while delivering sacks of flour from his employer's cart a mile and a-half from the mill. The county court judge found as a fact that the employment at the time of the accident was not "about" the factory, and we came to the conclusion that he was right and declined to interfere with his finding. In both Powell v. Brown and Lowth v. Ibbotson I said, and I think my brethren agreed with me, that the question whether the employment in any particular case is "about" a factory is a question of fact to be determined by the tribunal before which the claim comes. I see no reason to depart from what I then said. In neither of those cases did this court interfere with the finding of the county court judge. The difficulty, as I have already said, is in saying that there was no evidence upon which the county court judge could say that 110 yards from the factory was "about" the factory. However, though I feel considerable difficulty, as my brethren have come to the conclusion that there was no evidence to justify the finding of the county court judge, I will not differ from the conclusion at which they have arrived.

COLLINS, L.J.—I agree with my lord that in each case it is a question of fact for the county court judge whether the employment at the time of the accident was "on or in or about" a factory, and this court cannot interfere with his finding of fact where there is evidence to support it. But under the Workmen's Compensation Act, just as under any other Act, a county court judge cannot find a fact without any evidence to support his finding or without a proper direction to himself upon the question. If the case were one that could be tried with a jury, the judge would have to give them a direction as to what does or does not constitute employment "about" a factory. He could not simply tell them that it was a question of fact for them to determine, and then leave it to them to say whether in the particular case the employment was about a factory without giving them some direction as to the meaning of the word. Under the Act of 1897, the question of fact being for the judge, he must direct himself upon the point. It is not easy, and I shall certainly not attempt, to define exactly what is the meaning of the word "about" as used in section 7, sub-section 1, of the Act. Still, I think that a judge can give some assistance to a jury by giving some illustrations of what would or would not be employment about a factory, or by giving extreme cases which would obviously fall on one side or the other of a line which has to be drawn. It is quite possible to point out limits on the one side or the other which ought to be observed and avoided. In my opinion the word "about" is a geographical expression, and denotes physical contiguity. It is not enough to establish that the workman is at the time of the accident about the business of his employers. There is the broad distinction to be observed between a man being about the factory and about the business of the factory. A factory presumably involves the carrying on of some business. Take the case of a factory where some article of commerce is produced. The article has to be manufactured and then distributed over the country. The factory owner would presumably have to get coals for the purposes of the manufacture. I do not think that the man who was engaged in distributing his master's goods or the carter who was engaged in carting the coals to his master's factory from the railway station, though employed about the business of the factory, could be said to be employed in physical contiguity to the factory. The jury would have to disabuse their minds of the idea that, because the workman was employed about the business, he was therefore employed about the factory. On the other hand, a case obviously within the line is where a factory involves the use, for the main purposes of the factory, of an area of land outside the physical factory itself. I should say that in such a case the piece of land would properly be described as about the factory. It not difficult to give illustrations. Take the case of Powell v. Brown. The cart upon which the workman was employed was outside the physical limits of the factory, but he was receiving timber from the factory, and we held that the county court judge was right in deciding that the employment was about the factory. It is easy to put cases which fall inside or outside of the line, and with a proper direction upon the point it would be for the jury, assuming a jury was the tribunal to decide these claims, to say in each case on which side of the line the case fell. As I have already said, I draw a clear distinction between employment about the business, which involves no physical contiguity with the factory, and such a physical contiguity with the factory as a jury may say is necessary for the purposes of the business carried on in the factory.

Applying these considerations to the present case, I do not think that the facts bring it within the rule above-mentioned as to physical contiguity. It may therefore well be said that there was no evidence upon which any jury could reasonably find that the employment of the respondent at the time of the accident was "about" the factory. Consequently there was no evidence upon which the county court judge could so find. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It seems to me to be clear that when the Act speaks of employment "on or in or about" a factory, it is speaking of a place. It is not necessary, or indeed advisable, to attempt to lay down general rules and propositions as to when a workman can or cannot be properly said to be on or in or about a factory, or a building, or whatever it may be. I will not attempt to do so. I will, however, go as far as this: I think that a workman, who at the time of the accident is only employed in driving or conducting a cart carrying materials necessary for the business of the factory to or from the factory, and who is not in obvious proximity to the factory, is not employed on or in or about the factory. Upon the facts in this present case it is clear that the respondent was in no true sense at the time of the accident employed on or in or about his master's factory. I agree with my brother Collins that there is no evidence that the respondent was so employed. If there had been a jury here, assuming, of course, such a mode of trial possible, I think that the judge ought to have ruled that there was no evidence to go to them that the respondent was so employed. That being so, there was no evidence upon which the county court judge could so find.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Ponsford & Devenish.

Solicitors for the respondent, Buchanan & Hurd.

---

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) — Jan. 25, 26.

MOHAN v. BROUGHTON. (a.)

Letters of administration — Proceedings to revoke — Previous administration action — Res judicata — Acquiescence.

In 1892 letters of administration to an estate were granted to the defendant in the present action as the cousin and one of the next-of-kin of the intestate, and on the 27th of December, 1892, the defendant commenced Chancery proceedings for the administration of the estate. The present plaintiff made a claim in these proceedings to be entitled as one of the next-of-kin to a share in the distribution of the estate. This claim was disallowed by the chief clerk, and the plaintiff took no further steps in the proceedings. On the 21st of April, 1896, a final order for distribution of the estate was made in the Chancery action, and all further proceedings therein were stayed. On the 7th of June, 1898, the plaintiff commenced the present action to revoke the letters of administration granted in 1892 and to obtain a grant in her own favour.

Held, that, as the only object of the present action was to recover the property which had been distributed, the court would not assist the plaintiff in her attempt to obtain a grant which would be useless to her, seeing that she could institute proceedings in Chancery even though the letters of administration had not been revoked.

Held, also, that, though the matter was not res judicata against the plaintiff by reason of the Chancery proceedings, she had been guilty of such delay and acquiescence as to disentitle her to maintain an action against those who had received the estate by virtue of those proceedings.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff from a decision of Barnes, J., dismissing an action brought by her to obtain the revocation of letters of administration granted to the defendant.

The facts were as follow:

One H. T. Coghlan died on the 24th of November, 1892, a widower without issue and intestate, leaving a considerable estate. On the 24th of December, 1892, letters of administration were granted to Sir H. D. Broughton as cousin of the deceased and one of his next-of-kin.

On the 27th of December, 1892, an originating summons was taken out by the said Sir H. D. Broughton in the Chancery Division against A. D. Broughton, Laura Maule, and Fanny Maria Hardresse Lawson, for the purpose of administering the estate of the deceased.

On the 23rd of January, 1893, inquiries and accounts in the said Chancery action were directed, one of such inquiries being as to who were the next-of-kin of the said deceased. Advertisements for the next-of-kin were ordered, and were duly advertised.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 10th of March, 1893, a claim was made by Sir A. C. Weldon to be one of the next-of-kin, and to exclude the plaintiffs and defendants in the said Chancery action on the ground that one Emma Broughton, who was the mother of the deceased, and whom they claimed to be their aunt, was illegitimate, having, as was alleged, been born prior to the marriage of her parents, Sir Thos. Broughton and Mary Wickes.

Various other claims were put forward, but all, including Sir A. C. Weldon's, were disallowed, and on the 30th of November, 1893, the chief clerk certified that the said plaintiff and defendants were the only next-of-kin of the deceased living at his death.

On the 21st of December, 1893, the chief clerk gave his certificate as to the estate and debts of the deceased's estate.

On the 18th of May, 1894, the plaintiff in the present action took out a summons in the said Chancery action for liberty to prefer a claim in the action as the first cousin of the intestate.

In an affidavit sworn in support of this application she set out certain facts which she alleged showed that she was a first cousin once removed of the deceased, and stated that her attention was first called to the matter by certain correspondence which appeared in the Dublin papers in March and April, 1893; and that, although at that time she was not aware whether or not she was of kin to the deceased, about a month before making her affidavit she discovered she was of kin to him and that she had since then vigorously prosecuted and was continuing inquiries and searches.

This summons came on before the chief clerk on the 1st of June, 1894, when the same was adjourned for a week to enable the applicant to bring in complete evidence, and on the 8th of June, 1894, at the adjourned hearing the chief clerk pointed out that the affidavit filed in support of the application only made out the applicant to be a first cousin once removed, and that, as first cousins had proved their relationship, the applicant could not, even if she established her pedigree, rank in the distribution of the estate; and he made no order, but allowed the applicant six days in which to decide whether she should take her application to the judge.

The applicant did not proceed further with the matter and took no further steps in connection with the deceased's estate until the present action.

Previously to the said application, under an order of the 26th of February, 1894, in the Chancery action three-fourths of the deceased's estate had been distributed among the plaintiff and defendants to that action, and under a further order of the 11th of December, 1894, the remaining one-fourth was dealt with in the same way.

On the 21st of April, 1896, a final order was made in the Chancery action directing payment of a small balance in court to the plaintiff in the action, and all further proceedings were stayed.

On the 7th of June, 1898, the plaintiff issued the writ in the present action. She claimed a grant of letters of administration to the deceased's estate to herself as a first cousin once removed of the deceased, and revocation of the grant of letters of administration to Sir H. D. Broughton on the ground that Emma Broughton, through whom he claimed relationship, was illegitimate.

On the 30th of June, 1898, Sir H. D. Broughton took out a summons to show cause why the action should not be dismissed on the ground, first, that the issue had already been adjudicated upon in the Chancery Division, and, secondly, that the action was vexatious.

On the hearing of this summons it was ordered, by consent, that all questions between the parties (other than the question of the relationship of the plaintiff and Sir H. D. Broughton to the deceased) should be tried before Barnes, J.

The case was accordingly tried on the 26th of February, 1899, and on the 15th of May Barnes, J., delivered judgment. He held that the matter was not res judicata, but dismissed the action on the ground that the plaintiff had practically acquiesced in the Chancery proceedings and had been guilty of such laches as to disentitle her to maintain an action against those who had received the estate; and that as the only object of the present action was to assist the plaintiff to recover funds which had been distributed by order of the Chancery Division, the court would not assist her to obtain a grant which would be useless to her.

The plaintiff appealed.

Sir H. D. Broughton died after the hearing, and the action was continued against his executors, who were respondents to the appeal.

Bosanquet, Q.C., Bennett Calvert, and Lister Drummond, for the appellant, referred to David v. Frowd, 1 Myl. & K. 200; Sawyer v. Birchmore, 1 Keen 391, 825, 2 Myl. & Cr. 611.

Bargrave Deane, Q.C., and Barnard, for the respondents, were not called on.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I do not think the appellant has made out any sufficient ground for our interference. This is an application to revoke letters of administration granted to one of the next-of-kin, or a person who called himself one of the next-of-kin, of a person who died some years ago. The court does not revoke letters of administration as a matter of course. Grounds must be shown for it. The application or the citation by this lady was met by a summons summarily to stay the proceedings on the ground of res judicata and vexation. By consent that was modified, and every question of substance was agreed to be tried on the assumption that she was what she was—one of the nearest of kin; and upon that assumption Barnes, J., has investigated all the facts and has found that it is not a proper case in which to revoke the letters of administration. Now, what is it that this lady is driving at? She does not want to revoke the letters of administration for nothing. Of course she has an object. She says that under an administration action which was commenced some few years ago the estate of the intestate has been distributed amongst the wrong persons. She does not quarrel, of course, with the ordinary routine work done by the administrator—I mean the payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses. Her object is not to overhaul all that; but after administration had been granted there was an administration order made, and under that order the estate has been distributed, debts have been paid, and so on, and the net residue or surplus has been distributed and has been distributed to somebody who, she says, is not entitled. Therefore, she wants this for the purpose of asserting her right. In other words, she wants to what is commonly called "follow the assets" into the hands of the persons who have got them. I do not myself see any difficulty in her doing that by instituting an action in the Chancery Division. I hope that I shall not be supposed to advise her to do so. It appears to me that her case there would be almost if not utterly hopeless; but still theoretically she could do that, although the letters of administration had not been revoked. Now, if that is so—and that is the view which Barnes, J., has taken, because he says in substance, having looked into the matter, "You cannot succeed in getting what you want, and inasmuch as you will not succeed in getting what you want we will not revoke the letters of administration"—I think that he was perfectly justified. I do not say that this action is frivolous or vexatious. Still less do I think that technically there is anything like res judicata. What has been determined against her is that she is not a cousin. That is all. What relation the parties in the administration action have has not been finally adjudicated upon in such a way as to bind her. That I can see. That is Barnes, J.'s, view. He says in substance, "I do not think it is res judicata, but you knew perfectly well what difficulty there was, and you allowed the estate to be administered taking no proper steps to prevent it, and I cannot upset that." I think that he was quite right, and that the appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, W. W. Gabriel; Witham, Roskell, Munster, & Weld.

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. } July 13; Jan. 17; Feb. 8.

In re PRICE.
TOMLIN v. LATTER. (a.)

Will—International law—Construction—Power of appointment in English will—Execution of power by will of French domiciled alien—Domicil—Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), ss. 9, 10, 27—Lord Kingsdown's Act (Domicil) (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114)—Naturalization Act, 1870 (33 Vict. c. 14).

M. F., the wife of a French subject domiciled in France, was the donee under an English will of a power of appointment of a fund of £2,000. By her holograph French will she declared that she bequeathed to her husband everything which she possessed or might possess, and declared that the will should be considered in England the same as in France. She had no other property but the fund in question. The will had been admitted to probate and letters of administration had been granted with the will annexed.

Held, that it was competent for her to exercise the power of appointment by such a will as was recognized by the Probate Division; that, as the law of France did not recognize the mode of disposition by appointment, and a French court would consider and apply the English rules of law applicable to the construction of such a will for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the testatrix, such rules were to be applied here, with the result that there was a valid execution of the power.

D'Huart v. Harkness, 13 W. R. 513, 34 Beav. 324, followed.

In re Kirwan's Trusts, 32 W. R. 581, 25 Ch. D. 373, and Hummel v. Hummel, 46 W. R. 507, [1898] 1 Ch. 642, considered.

Dame Elizabeth Price by her will dated the 28th of March, 1876, bequeathed a sum of £2,000 to trustees upon trusts for investment and payment of the income to a lady described as "Maria (the daughter of my late cousin, Mary Ann Draper, deceased), now the wife of M. Adolphe Gay," during her life for her separate use without power of anticipation. The will then proceeded: "And from and after her decease to pay and transfer the last-mentioned sum of £2,000 in such manner as she the said Maria Gay shall by her last will appoint, and in default of such appointment then to such person or persons as would at the time of her decease be the next-of-kin of the said Maria Gay in case she had died intestate and without being married."

The testatrix died on the 18th of March, 1878. At the date of the will Maria Gay was the wife of Adolphe Gay, a French subject domiciled in France.

M. Gay died on the 12th of October, 1882; and on the 8th of October, 1886, Madame Gay married M. Forfillier, also a French subject domiciled in France.

Madame Forfillier on the 2nd of June, 1887, made a holograph will in the French language, of which the following is a translation: "I, the undersigned, declare that I bequeath to my dear husband A. D. Forfillier everything which I possess at the present moment and which I hereafter may possess. I appoint him guardian of my dear daughter Marie A. O. Gay, being well persuaded that I confide her to the heart and to the enlightened tenderness of a father, and I am equally certain that she will continue to bear towards him the affection, gratitude, and devotedness of a daughter. And I thank and bless my dear husband for all the happiness which he has given to us and for all the good which he has never ceased to do us. And I declare that this will annuls all the others, as I have informed Mr. A. Willett, Solicitor, Bromley, Kent, and that it shall thus be considered in England the same as in France (il sera ainsi consideré en Angleterre comme en France). And I repeat that I leave everything which I possess at the present moment and which I may come to possess afterwards to my dear husband because I know his great disinterestedness and am convinced that he is more capable than anyone else to safeguard the interests of my dear daughter."

She also made a holograph codicil to this will on the 21st of September, 1893, but it is unnecessary to state its terms.

Madame F. died on the 16th of February, 1898, and on the 3rd of October, 1898, letters of administration with the will and codicil annexed were granted by the Probate Division to the defendant Latter as the attorney of M. Forfillier. The present summons was taken out by the trustees of Lady Price's will to have it determined who was entitled to the fund of £2,000, and came before the court on the 13th of July, when, after some argument, it was adjourned in order that the French law bearing on the subject might be examined. On the 17th of January it again came before the court.

A. à B. Terrell, for the trustees of the will of Lady Price, stated the facts.

J. F. Waggett, for M. Forfillier as appointee, and for Madame C., the daughter of Madame F., on whose behalf M. Forfillier claimed the fund.—The will was a good one in French law and is a valid execution of the power of appointment, Madame F. having no other property other than the fund in question. It is clear that the Wills Act only applies to a British subject: Bremer v. Freeman, 5 W. R. 618, 10 Moo. P. C. C. 306; In re Baroness von Buseck, 30 W. R. 140, 6 P. D. 211; Bloxam v. Favre, 31 W. R. 610, 8 P. D. 101, and 32 W. R. 673, 9 P. D. 130. Where a will of a domiciled alien purports to exercise a power, the court has granted probate for the purposes of the Chancery Division In re Hallyburton, L. R.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

1 P. & D. 90, 14 W. R. P. Dig. 24; In re Huber, [1896] P. 209, 45 W. R. Dig. 128; and D'Huart v. Harkness, 13 W. R. 513, 34 Beav. 324. Lady Price said "by will," in her will, and I submit Madame F. made a good will, which was the natural one for her to make. Cases independent of the Wills Act show that where a married woman has no other property to which a general disposition in her will could refer, then such a disposition is construed as an execution of a power: Shelford v. Acland, 5 W. R. 170, 23 Beav. 10, distinguishable from Evans v. Evans, 5 W. R. 169, 23 Beav. 1. Other cases where there is no special or other power, and where there is no other property, are Attorney-General v. Williamson, 14 W. R. 910, L. R. 2 Eq. 816, and In re Milner, 47 W. R. 369, [1899] 1 Ch. 563; and (with respect to real estate) Curteis v. Kenrick, 9 Sim. 443, and Churchill v. Dibben, 9 Sim. 447*n*. Lady Price knew that Madame Gay (later Madame F.) was married and had a child, and she restricted the fund to her as against any husband; "without being married" only excludes the husband, and means "not having a husband," so that even if the French will is no execution of the power, Madame C. will take the fund as next-of-kin. This is a case of a will, not one of settlement like Stoddart v. Saville, 42 W. R. 361, [1894] 1 Ch. 480.

C. E. Bovill, for certain of the next-of-kin.—The French will of Madame F. does not execute the power of appointment. I rely on section 10 of the Wills Act. [Waggett.—If you take aid of section 10, you must let me call section 27 in aid.] Where a person, being a British subject, takes the benefit of Lord Kingsdown's Act, and makes a will in accordance with his domicil for the time being, that will is not a good exercise of a power of appointment unless it complies with section 10 of the Wills Act. If, as the appointee must contend, section 10 is confined to English wills, then, the will here being a foreign one, Hummel v. Hummel, 46 W. R. 507, [1898] 1 Ch. 642, is wrongly decided. [In re Kirwan's Trusts, 32 W. R. 581, 25 Ch. D. 373, referred to.] "Without being married" must mean "never having been married": Dalrymple v. Hall, 29 W. R. 421, 16 Ch. D. 715; In re Sergeant, 32 W. R. 987, 26 Ch. D. 575.

Waggett in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, said: Madame Forfillier was at the time of her death a French subject by virtue of the Naturalization Act, 1870, s. 10, sub-section 1. She was also domiciled in France. Under the will of Lady Price the fund is to be paid and transferred in such manner as Madame F. "shall by her last will appoint." The first question arises as to the meaning of the word "will" which there occurs, whether it means any testamentary instrument recognized by the law of England as a will or a will executed in accordance with the law of England. Now, there are three authorities which I am asked to consider. In D'Huart v. Harkness, 34 Beav. 324, the precise point arose for decision. [His lordship having read from the facts in that case and the judgment at pp. 327-8, continued:] In that case, which comes as near to the present case as one case can come to another, Lord Romilly held that there was a valid execution of the power. In the case of In re Kirwan's Trusts, it appears to have been decided by Kay, J., that a testamentary instrument which had been executed in a manner not allowed by English law by a person domiciled in France, but which had been admitted to probate under Lord Kingsdown's Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114), was not a valid exercise of a power of appointment by will, because section 10 of the Wills Act provides "no appointment by will in exercise of any power shall be valid unless the same be executed in manner hereinbefore required." [His lordship read from the facts in that case, and pointed out that they were totally different from those in the present case, because the power there was of a different kind, and because there probate was given by virtue of Lord Kingsdown's Act to the will and codicil, though the latter was unattested.] Unfortunately D'Huart v. Harkness was not cited in In re Kirwan's Trusts, but both decisions were considered by Kekewich, J., in Hummel v. Hummel, 46 W. R. 507, [1898] 1 Ch. 642. [His lordship read the head-note.] There the will was not admitted to probate, so that the question was not the same as here, but Kekewich, J., did consider whether or no, supposing the will could be proved, it would be a good execution of the power, and it appears from his judgment that he was of opinion that those two cases were not inconsistent, inasmuch as the will dealt with in In re Kirwan's Trusts was only valid by reason of the Act 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114, while in D'Huart v. Harkness it was good according to the law of the testator's domicil. Now, Lord Kingsdown's Act applies only to the wills of British subjects, and inasmuch as Madame F. was a French subject, that statute can have no application to the present case. Therefore I have to consider the authorities, and according to the view taken by Kekewich J., it seems to me that I ought to follow D'Huart v. Harkness in the present case. But I go further than that, for I also think that on principle D'Huart v. Harkness was well decided. The general rule is that, as stated by Mr. Dicey (Conflict of Laws, p. 685), "any will of moveables which is valid according to the law of the testator's domicil at the time of his death is valid" in England. It follows that the provisions of an English statute prescribing formalities with reference to wills do not apply to the wills of persons not domiciled in England. In Bremer v. Freeman (10 Moo. P. C. 306) it appears to have been contended that the provisions of section 20 of the Wills Act as to the revocation of wills applied to the wills of persons domiciled abroad. Lord Wensleydale in delivering the judgment of the court said (at p. 359) that for reasons referred to by him it was unnecessary to consider the point, but added, "their lordships, however, do not wish to intimate any doubt that the law of the domicil at the time of the death is the governing law (Story's Conflict of Laws, s. 473), nor any that the statute cited" (i.e., the Wills Act) "applies only to wills of those persons who continue to have an English domicil and are consequently regulated by English law." Section 9 of the Wills Act prescribes that "no will shall be valid unless it shall be in writing and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned." Notwithstanding this language it is the practice of the Probate Division, on the principle just stated, to admit to probate the wills of persons domiciled abroad although executed otherwise than is prescribed by the Act. The present case affords an instance of this being done. I fail to see why the provisions of section 10 of the Wills Act should apply to the will of Madame F. any more than those of section 9. There is indeed a series of cases which seem to establish an exception to the rule which I have stated—viz., that a will purporting to be made in execution of a power is valid if it satisfies the requirements of the instrument creating the power, although it would be invalid according to the law of the domicil of the testator at the time of his death: cf. In the Goods of Alexander, 8 W. R. 451, 29 L. J. P. & M. 93; In the Goods of Hallyburton; In the Goods of Huber. These cases, however, do not lay down that a power to appoint by will (without any special formalities) conferred on a person domiciled abroad cannot be executed by a will valid by the law of the domicil of the donee of the power at the time of his death, and consequently do not appear to me to affect the decision of the present case. I am not prepared to deal with In re Kirwan's Trusts, in which the facts were very different, but it seems to me that it was reconcilable with the principles on which I arrive at my present decision. If the provisions of the Wills Act did not apply, then section 10 did not apply, so that the will was not valid by reason of that section. The instrument, however, was valid under Lord Kingsdown's Act, but that statute does not deal with powers at all. I am not sure that Kay, J., there meant to decide anything not in accordance with the basis of my decision here. In my opinion, therefore, it was competent for Madame F. to exercise the power conferred on her by Lady Price's will by such a will as has been recognized by the Probate Division; it remains to be considered whether she has done so, and this question is one of construction. In general a will is to be construed according to the law of the domicil of the testator; but this is "a canon of interpretation which should not be adhered to where there is any reason from the nature of the will or otherwise to suppose that the testator wrote it with reference to the law of some other country" (Dicey's Conflict of Laws, p. 695). The law of France is stated in the evidence to be that this will is a complete testamentary disposition of the whole of the property which the testatrix might have at her death, or which she might by law dispose of; that the mode of disposition by appointment is not practised in France; and that if a French court had to consider the effect of the will in this respect, it would inquire into and apply the English law bearing on the point, and would also take cognizance of and give effect to the fact (which is established) that the testatrix had no interest in any property in England except that which was subject to the power of appointment. It is said that the law of England applicable to the case is the law as it existed before the Wills Act, and that as there is no reference to the power or the property the will is not a good execution of the power. I do not think that on this particular will I am called upon to take this view, for I can decide the case on another ground. The testatrix says, "I declare that this will annuls all others . . . and that it shall thus be considered in England as well as in France." I think that amounts to a declaration by the testatrix that she meant the will to operate as her last will in England as well as in France, and to have full operation as an English will as well as a French; she has indicated on the face of the will that she wrote it with reference to the law of England as well as of France. To give effect to that intention I think that I am entitled to apply the rules of construction which would, by English law, be applied to a will expressed in the same terms and of the same date as that annexed to the letters of administration, including the rule of construction introduced by section 27 of the Wills Act. In my opinion, therefore, M. Forfillier is entitled to the fund.

Solicitors, J. L. Tomlin & Son; Van Sandau & Co., for Willett & Latter, Bromley.

---

Chan. Div. }
Kekewich, J. } March 23.

In re WELLBORNE. (a.)

Solicitor—Costs of trustee—Taxation—Application by cestui que trust*—Twelve months after payment—Solicitors Act*, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), ss. 39, 41.

The power of the court to make an order for taxation of a trustee's bill of costs under section 39 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, is purely discretionary, and is not controlled by section 41. Such a bill may therefore be ordered to be taxed though paid more than twelve calendar months before the application by the cestui que trust.

This was a motion on behalf of Messrs. Wellborne & Son, solicitors, to discharge an order for taxation.

An application was made in chambers under section 39 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, by one of two beneficiaries under a will for an order for taxation of a bill of costs which had been paid by the trustees of the will to their solicitors more than twelve calendar months before the application. His lordship in chambers looked into the bill, and deeming some of the items to be extravagant, in the exercise of his discretion, made an order for taxation as against the solicitors.

A motion was now made to the court on behalf of the solicitors to discharge the order on the ground that after the lapse of twelve months it was not competent for the court to make an order for taxation under section 39 at the instance of the cestui que trust.

F. Stallard, for the motion, argued that the application was out of time, and ought to have been made within twelve calendar months after payment of the bill.

He referred to Cordery on Solicitors (3rd ed.), p. 328; In re Chowne, 52 L. T. Rep. 75, 33 W. R. Dig. 63; In re Downes, 5 Beav. 425; In re Jackson, 37 W. R. 282, 40 Ch. D. 495; In re Massey, 8 Beav. 458; In re Boycott, 34 W. R. 26, 29 Ch. D. 571; In re Neate, 10 Beav. 181; In re Sutton & Elliott, 11 Q. B. D. 377.

Warrington, Q.C., and Clare, for the cestui que trust, argued that section 41 applied only to taxations under sections 37 and 38, and that section 39 gave the court an absolute discretion and was not controlled by section 41 as to the time within which the application was to be made.

They referred to In re Drake, 22 Beav. 438.

Stallard replied.

KEKEWICH, J.—This is not the case of a client coming to the court after payment for taxation of the bill. It is the case of a cestui que trust coming to tax a bill which the trustees have passed and paid, and the question is whether the cestui que trust ought to be charged with the full amount which the trustees have paid to the solicitors; and it is obvious that any question as to the power of the court to order taxation may be a matter of great importance, and one affecting a great number of other cases. A solicitor who is acting for trustees acts wisely if he never accepts payment without taxation. Section 39 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, provides expressly for taxation at the instance of a cestui que trust, and on reading that section independently of section 41, it is to be observed that there is a large discretion vested in the court—large by reason of the wording of the Act itself, and also by reason of the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Chowne. The court is not to inquire whether there are gross overcharges amounting to fraud, but has to consider, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, whether it should submit the bill to taxation. Words occur in that section which occur nowhere else in the Act—namely, that the bill may be referred on the application of a person interested in the property out of which the trustee "may have paid or be entitled to pay such bill." According to the section standing alone it is immaterial that the bill has been paid; the court has a discretion, and that, on the face of it, is right. Trusts may extend over many years, and great injustice might be done if a solicitor, by simply obtaining payment of his bill from the trustee, could avoid liability to taxation by the cestui que trust, out of whose fund the bill was paid, and who may have known nothing about the matter, or through disability or otherwise may not have been in a position to call for an account. Solicitors might in that case charge far too much, without any opportunity being given to those interested to tax their bills. The purport and intent of section 39 is that bills of costs which have been paid by trustees and executors are liable to taxation at the absolute discretion of the court. That seems to me to obviate what would be a great evil, and to offer an inducement to solicitors to get their bills taxed, which is very desirable both for their own sake and that of their client. Now, the question is whether that section is applicable in the present case. The bill was paid more than twelve months before the application for taxation was made, and, therefore, if section 41 applies, the bill has gone beyond taxation. Now, is section 39 controlled by section 41? Does section 41 apply to such a case? The 41st section refers to the payment of "any such bill as aforesaid," and provides that the application to tax must be made within twelve calendar months after payment. It has been decided that "any such bill as aforesaid" means any bill referred to in the Act, particularly bills referred to in the 37th section. But the proviso in section 41 as to the application being made within twelve months is in direct contradiction to section 39, which uses the word "paid" without any limitation and contains no suggestion that the application is to be made within twelve months after payment. If, therefore, section 41 is to be connected with section 39, it must be read as a proviso to the latter section. But to my mind it is an easier and more correct way of reading the Act to treat sections 37 and 38 as the substantial and governing part of the Act, to read sections 39 and 40 as being parenthetical, and to read section 41 as referring to sections 37 and 38, and to read "any such bills as aforesaid" as bills taxable under those sections, and not to the exceptional taxation provided by section 39. That is the only way of treating the Act as a whole and of avoiding the contradiction or inconsistency of the proviso in section 41 with the large discretion given by section 39. Before turning to the authorities I will refer to Mr. Cordery's valuable work on the Law relating to Solicitors. At p. 328 of the third edition the learned author states: "But it has frequently been held that no taxation can be ordered under section 39 more than twelve months after payment, which is a provision imported from section 41; and the sounder view seems to be that special circumstances must be shown even where the application is made within twelve months after payment." With all respect to a gentleman whose book has been of great assistance to me, I cannot agree with Mr. Cordery's proposition that section 41 should be imported into section 39. That does not seem to me a reasonable construction of the Act. Then as to the authorities, Mr. Stallard relied on the case of In re Downes, 5 Beav. 425. In that case Lord Langdale, M.R., at p. 429, says: "I think that in this court the bill cannot be ordered to be taxed as against the solicitor himself if twelve months have elapsed after payment." If that is correct as to sections 39 and 41, I should be bound; but the contrast between sections 39 and 41 was not present to the mind of the judge in that case, and it is not, therefore, an authority on the particular point. On the other hand there is the decision of Lord Romilly, M.R., in In re Drake, 22 Beav. 438, in which at p. 442 he says: "By the 41st section the court is precluded from ordering taxation after payment except under 'special circumstances'; but that exception does not apply to cases under the 39th section, called the third party clause, in which no mention is made of special circumstances." He implies therefore that the twelve months' limit has nothing to do with the case. He then says at p. 443: "I think that taxation is almost a matter of course, assuming that items of overcharge are proved, and it is not necessary that the overcharges should be such as to amount to fraud." The case of In re Chowne points to the same conclusion. There the question was left open because it was not necessary to decide it, but Fry, L.J., says: "I think that rule does not apply, for section 39 applies whether the executor 'may have paid or be entitled to pay the bill,'" and he says that in contrast to section 41 in such a manner that I must conclude that he meant that non-payment was of no great importance. There is another case not exactly in point, In re Sutton & Elliott, 11 Q. B. D. 377, in which, at p. 379, Fry, L.J., says: "It appears to me that the words 'any such bill' in section 41 refer back to that part of section 37, where the subject of a bill of costs at all is first introduced, and that the expression any such bill in section 41 means any 'bill of such fees, charges, and disbursements,' that is to say, that where it comes within section 37, the rule of twelve months after payment applies. That case does not decide the question here raised, but points out the close connection of sections 41 and 37, and assists me largely in coming to the conclusion that the intervening sections, or some of them, are parenthetical. The only case against that conclusion is In re Downes, which I have already commented on. The point is novel, and not covered by authority, and I am of opinion, therefore, that section 39 is not overruled by section 41. In the exercise of my discretion I think this is a proper case for taxation, notwithstanding payment more than twelve months before the application, and therefore the motion must be refused, with costs.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Wellborne & Son; Chester & Co.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) } Jan. 20; Feb. 15.

Farnham Flint, Gravel, and Sand Co. (Appellants) v. Farnham Union (Respondents). (a.)

Rating—Appeal from quarter sessions—Gravel pit—Method of rating when partially exhausted.

A company were, at the time of the making of a rate, in rateable occupation of three and a-half acres of land for the purpose of extracting gravel therefrom, which they worked at the rate of two acres per annum. At the date of the rate the gravel from two and a-half acres had been extracted, and the land was used for storage purposes only. The gravel in the remaining acre was in process of being extracted when the rate was made.

(a.) Reported by P. B. Durnford, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On appeal to quarter sessions, it was held that the annual value of the land in the company's occupation at the time of the making of the rate ought to be taken at the amount of rent or royalty at which the same could then be reasonably expected to be let to a tenant for one year, regard being had to the value of the gravel in the unexhausted acre of land, added to the value of the exhausted two and a-half acres for storage purposes.

Held (per Channell, J.), that, though at the time when the rate was made the company was only working gravel in one acre, they must be rated for three and a-half acres on the gravel pit value of at least two acres, inasmuch as they were working—both during the preceding year and up to and at the date of the rate—at the rate of two acres per annum. If the two and a-half acres were to be treated separately and rated at storage value only, the remaining acre should be rated at double the rate imposed, because the company was working it at the date of the rate at the rate of getting two acres of gravel per annum.

Bucknill, J., dissentiente, held that, as the two and a-half acres were valueless at the time of making the rate for the purpose for which they were acquired, they could only be assessed at the actual value of their occupation at the time of making the rate in question.

Special case stated by the quarter sessions for the county of Surrey upon an appeal against the decision of special sessions confirming a rate, in which rate the appellants were rated as the occupiers of a certain gravel pit.

The appellants carried on business as gravel and sand merchants, and for the purposes of their business they from time to time entered into agreements with the owners of land for the purchase of gravel therein. By these agreements full right of entry upon such land was given for the purpose of digging for and carrying the gravel away. Having dug and removed the gravel the appellants level the ground, replace the top sod, and restore the land to the owner.

For some time prior to the making of the rate appealed against the appellants had been in the habit of entering into such agreements with the Rev. John Martyr Ward in respect of certain portions of a field or enclosure of land belonging to him, and known as Ward's Pit, each plot of land containing gravel being the subject of a separate agreement. Upon an agreement being entered into between the parties the extent of land to which such agreement related was marked out by stumps, and the exclusive occupation of the land so marked out was handed over to the appellants. The land from which the gravel was actually being extracted was constantly shifting as the work progressed, and when the gravel in any portion of the land was exhausted such portion of the land was used as a store for gravel not yet sold and removed. Upon the expiration of the period allowed by any agreement the portion of the land from which gravel had been dug was levelled with the rest of the land and restored to the owner.

The appellants purchased gravel from John Martyr Ward on the following dates and in the following quantities—viz.: On the 14th of May, 1897, one acre; on the 24th of June, 1897, one acre and a-half; on the 15th of April, 1898, one acre; on the 14th of November, 1898, one acre; on the 21st of March, 1899, one acre. At the date of the rate the appellants were in rateable occupation of three and a-half acres of land. In two and a-half of these (being the lands referred to in the agreements of the 24th of June, 1897, and the 15th of April, 1898) the gravel was exhausted. The two and a-half acres, however, continued to be in the occupation of the appellants, and were used by them for the purpose of storing gravel already dug. In the remaining acre (being the land comprised in the agreement of the 14th of November, 1898) the gravel was in process of being got.

The appellants were rated in respect of the land at £420 gross estimated rental and £400 rateable value.

The appellants contended that they were rateable in respect of the land in their occupation at the date of the rate appealed against. That the value of such occupation, so far as the unexhausted land was concerned, was to be ascertained from the consideration paid by the appellants for the occupation of such land under the agreement relating thereto in force at the date of the rate, including as part of such consideration the cost of making good the land occupied thereunder on the expiration of the term. That the value of such occupation, so far as the exhausted land was concerned, was to be ascertained upon the basis of what such land would let for occupation as storing ground in connection with the other lands occupied by the appellants. That if the value of the appellants' occupation was not to be so ascertained, it was to be ascertained from the value of the gravel in the unexhausted land then in their occupation, added to the values of so much of the exhausted lands as was used by them for storage purposes.

The respondents contended that the proper way to ascertain the rateable value of the land was to ascertain the output of gravel dug during the year immediately preceding the making of the rate appealed against, from so much of Ward's Pit as had been in their occupation at any time during such year and to assess the rateable value of the gravel-pit at a sum based upon the total royalty which (having regard to the market value of gravel during the year in the neighbourhood) the appellants would have paid to the owners of the land if, instead of buying the gravel, they had agreed to dig and work the gravel on payment of a royalty on each yard of gravel dug, which method of payment was admittedly frequently adopted in the neighbourhood, and that this method of calculating the rateable value was correct in law.

Alternatively, the respondents contended that the appellants were in occupation of more than two acres of land; that having regard to the burden of the covenant to level the surface of the ground and replace the surface soil after removing the gravel (which work it was found would cost about £40 an acre), the appellants had paid or agreed to pay about £220 per acre for the right to occupy the land for one year with liberty to dig the gravel therein; that the sum of £220 was equivalent to an annual rent for the land paid by a tenant who had liberty to dig gravel therein; that the appellants as occupiers of the land must be rated at the full annual value thereof during the whole period of their occupation, although during a part of that period a portion of the land was available only for the purpose of storing gravel; that the decision of the Queen's Bench in Reg. v. Whaddon, 23 W. R. 653, L. R. 10 Q. B. 230, showed that the appellants should be rated during the whole of their occupation of the land under the written agreements at the value thereof as enhanced by the right to dig gravel thereon, and that if the principle of valuation here stated was correct in law the assessment appealed against was supported in fact.

The quarter sessions held that the first contention of the respondents was wrong in law, but that if it were permissible to adopt that method of calculation, the assessment appealed against would be correct. They further held that the second contention of the respondents was wrong in law, and that the annual value of the land in the appellants' occ[illegible] date of the making of the rate ought t[illegible] the amount of rent or royalty at [illegible] could then be reasonably expected to be let to a tenant for one year, regard being had to the value of the gravel in the unexhausted acre of land added to the value of the exhausted two and a-half acres of land for storage purposes, and on this principle they found as a fact that the amount at which the land could reasonably be expected to be so let was £252, and they accordingly fixed the gross estimated rental of the said lands at £252, and the rateable value thereof at £240, and allowed the appeal, and ordered the assessment of the appellants' land on the rate to be reduced accordingly. The question for the opinion of the court was whether or not the quarter sessions were right in their determination.

Marshall, Q.C. (Ryde with him), for the Farnham Union, referred to the cases of Reg. v. Whaddon; Reg. v. Everist, 10 Q. B. 178; Reg. v. Abney Park Cemetery Co., 21 W. R. 847, L. R. 8 Q. B. 515; Hoyle v. Oldham Union, [1894] 2 Q. B. 372.

Cunningham Glen, for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 15.—THE COURT differed, and the following judgment was read by BUCKNILL, J.—The question for our decision is whether the court of quarter sessions for the county of Surrey has rated the Farnham Flint, Gravel, and Sand Co. in a rate for the relief of the poor on a principle which can be upheld in law. The material facts may be shortly stated: The Farnham Flint, &c., Co., whose business is that of gravel and sand merchants, entered into three agreements, amongst others, with the owner of a bed of gravel, which were dated the 24th of June, 1897, the 15th of April and the 14th of November, 1898, respectively, by which they bought of him the gravel in these separate plots of ground, which were marked out for the purpose. The purchasers had a certain time in which to remove the gravel, level the ground, replace the top soil, and restore the plots to their owners.

There is, in my opinion, no statement in the case to justify this court treating the land comprised in these three agreements as forming one continuous area.

By the agreement of the 24th of June, 1897, the gravel in one acre and a-half was sold to the company, the price being £150, and the period of possession one year and a-half, but in the other two agreements the plots of land were one acre each, and the price for each £150, the period of possession being one year from the date of the respective agreements.

The poor rate, which is the subject of this appeal, was made on the 8th of December, 1898.

At that time the company was in rateable occupation of the three plots, but in November they had exhausted all the gravel from the acre and a-half which they bought on the 24th of June, 1897, and on the 1st of September they had exhausted all the gravel which they bought on the 15th of April, 1898. Those two and a-half acres were at the time of making the rate used as storage places for gravel in connection with other lands occupied by the company. The gravel bought by the company on the 14th of November, 1898, was being worked by them on the 8th of December, 1898. On these facts, the court of quarter sessions held that the annual value of the three and a-half acres at the time of the making of the rate ought to be taken at the amount of rent or royalty at which the same could then be reasonably expected to be let on a yearly tenancy, regard being had to the value of the gravel in the unexhausted acre added to the value of the two and a-half acres which were exhausted of gravel, but were used for storage purposes only, and on that principle the court found that the amount at which the three and a-half acres would in fact be so let was £252, at which sum they fixed the gross estimated rental, and assessed the rateable value at £240. On the part of the guardians of the Farnham Union it was argued that the rateable value should be assessed either on the output of gravel during the year preceding the making of the rate from so much of the respective plots of land as was in the occupation of the company at any time during that year, based upon a royalty measured by the market value of the gravel; or, secondly, that as at the time of making the rate the company were and had been working gravel at the rate of at least two acres a year, they must be rated at the full annual value of such two acres.

In support of the first contention Reg. v. Abney Park Cemetery Co. was cited, and of the second Reg. v. Whaddon. It is necessary, therefore, to look at the facts of those cases. The head-note to the report in the Law Reports expressed very concisely the material facts of the first of these cases thus: "The appellants were a company that purchased lands and laid them out as a cemetery. They received fees for interments and conveyed plots of ground to be used as graves. In one year (1869) £2,333 was received by the company as purchase-money for such plots of ground. Each plot was conveyed by indenture purporting to grant it in fee simple upon trust that the grantee might use it as a place of burial, subject to the regulations of the company, and, subject to such trusts, in trust for the company as part of their property. The defendants were rated as the occupiers of the lands, and upon the principle that the sum of £2,333 was to be treated as part of the annual value of the occupation of the lands by the appellants in that year."

The Court of Queen's Bench held that the rate was rightly made, and that in that particular case as the sale by the cemetery company of plots of ground for burial purposes was the mode, or one of the modes, in which they earned their annual income from year to year, the receipts by them in the year preceding the making of the rate was the best basis for ascertaining the rateable value of the next. The court pointed out that the case was anomalous. I think that an alleged dictum of Blackburn, J., when delivering his judgment has been misunderstood, if, indeed, it has not been misreported in the report of the case in the Law Reports, where he appears to have expressed himself thus: "The Parish Assessment Act has enacted that the basis for ascertaining the rateable value shall be the rent at which the property might reasonably be expected to let from year to year. It might be more equitable if the statute had provided that the basis should be the rent which a tenant for a term of years would pay for the property to be rated, but the Legislature has decided otherwise, and has taken as a basis the rent which a tenant from year to year would give during the year preceding the time of making the rate." I have looked at the report of this case in the Law Journal and in the Law Times, but in neither do I find the expression that "the Legislature has taken as a basis the rent which a tenant from year to year would give during the year preceding the time of making the rate"; nor do I think that learned judge intended to lay down any such general rule, but that all he meant to say was that in that particular case, which was anomalous, and perhaps in other exceptional cases, the rent which a tenant would give during the preceding year might be the only proper basis for ascertaining the existing annual value for rating purposes, and more particularly so if by that means valuable property can be prevented escaping being rated at all, though it by no means follows that there may not be cases "which the existing law cannot reach without being strained in a manner in which we ought not to strain it": see per Cockburn, C.J., in Reg. v. Whaddon, L. R. 10 Q. B., at p. 241. In order to arrive at the rateable value of a hereditament, that which is legitimate and necessary in one case may be neither legitimate or necessary in another.

In Reg. v. Abney Park Cemetery Co. it must be taken, I think, that the cemetery company was still in occupation of sufficient ground to be able to sell during the year for which the rate was made as many grave spaces as would produce an amount equal to the sales of the year preceding it, but in the case before us the whole of the two plots consisting of two and a-half acres had been at the time of making the rate entirely exhausted of gravel-producing power and were useless to the occupiers except as storage places for gravel produced from other land occupied by them. I think, therefore, that the first of these contentions fails. I now pass to the case of Reg. v. Whaddon, known as the coprolite case, and I think that the facts of that case are very unlike the present. There the occupier was in possession of ten acres of coprolite-producing land at least during each year, but he used no more during any one quarter for the purpose of getting coprolites than three and a-half acres, the other six and a-half acres lying unproductive, having been exhausted of coprolites. The rate in that case was made quarterly, and it was contended that the rateable value ought to be taken on the value only of the then profitable portion of the ten acres, notwithstanding that owing to the occupation continually shifting a complete ten acres would be profitably worked during the concurrent year. But the majority of the court held that the proper measure was the net annual value of the hereditament—that is, of ten acres, and not only of the three and a-half, and that the case could not be distinguished "from an ordinary agricultural farm in which the net annual value is the same, although one part of the farm may lie fallow or be a source of expense at one period and of profit at another, notwithstanding which the rate must be made upon the farm in respect of its net annual value": per Mellor, J., at p. 244. But between the case of an ordinary agricultural farm and the present there is surely a great difference, for whilst the farmer pays rent for the user of the land which he occupies, in this case the occupier of the land paid for the right to dispose of the corpus, being the gravel in the ground which he had purchased from the owner out and out, and which he had entirely removed from two of the three plots at the time of the making of the rate. So long as there was any gravel in these three plots of land it may be that the rateable value would be unaffected; I offer no opinion on that point, but so soon as any one or more of them were exhausted of the gravel that had been in them, and they were incapable of beneficial occupation except as storage places for gravel, I am of opinion that they could only be rated upon their actual existing value at the time when the rate was made—in other words, it is not the past, nor the prospective, but the actual value of the hereditament that is to be taken as the basis of assessment; or, as Blackburn, J., said in Staley v. Overseers of Castleton, 12 W. R. 911, 33 L. J. M. C. 178, "The Legislature intended the rate should be made upon the rent which might reasonably be expected from a tenant who took the property from year to year, rebus sic stantibus." Here it is stated in the case as a fact that at the date of the rate being made, in two and a-half of the said three and a-half acres, being the plots of land referred to in the agreements of the 24th of June, 1897, and the 15th of April, 1898, the gravel was exhausted, and the land was used for the purpose of storing gravel already dug, and it is not denied that for such user they have been properly assessed, nor, as I understood the argument, is it contended that if it was only a question of the assessment on the remaining one acre, the quarter sessions has proceeded on a wrong principle.

In my judgment the present case is more like a brickfield or a mine, both of which are, whilst being worked, approaching the period of final exhaustion. So long as they are being worked as brickfields or mines and there is nothing to show that the profits of the coming year may not be as good as the profits of the past year, then that year may be taken as the basis of the next, if no better can be found; but where the brickfield or the mine has been worked out and exhausted, as in the case of these two and a-half acres, and can therefore be no longer worked for the sole purpose for which they were acquired, I cannot agree to the proposition that their rateable value remains unaffected simply because they are still occupied under the terms of the respective contracts made with the owner of the land. In this connection Rex v. Bedworth, 8 East, 387, seems an authority in point. There a colliery was rated at an annual value of £200. By lease the tenant paid a rent of £200 a year at least, and in all events, whatsoever the state of the mine might be and whether any coal was gotten or not. Before the lease expired all the coal was exhausted and the mine ceased to be worked, and it was held that although the rent was still payable, yet, with respect to the parish, the occupier was only rateable for the concurrent annual value during the period for which the rate was made, and that when the thing occupied ceased to afford any such concurrent value, the subject-matter of the rating was gone: see per Ellenborough, C.J., at p. 388. I think the court of quarter sessions has proceeded in this case on the same principle—that is to say, that the two and a-half acres were valueless for the purpose for which they were acquired, and that they could only be assessed at the actual value of their occupation at the time of the making of the rate in question.

For these reasons I am of opinion, although I say so with much misgiving, being in disagreement with my brother Channell, that this appeal should be dismissed.

CHANNELL, J.—This was a special case stated by the quarter sessions for Surrey on an appeal to them against a rate made on the appellants in respect of their occupation of a gravel-pit. The appellants were rated at £420 gross and £400 rateable value, and they appealed to quarter sessions on the ground mainly that they were over-assessed. The quarter sessions allowed the appeal, and reduced the rate to £252 gross and £240 rateable value subject to this special case. The question for us is whether the quarter sessions proceeded on the right principle. The appellants were, at the date when the rate was made, in actual occupation of three and a-half acres of land, but the gravel in two and a-half acres had, prior to the making of the rate (but within a year before), been exhausted by the appellants' working, and there was gravel remaining only under one acre out of the three and a-half which they occupied. The quarter sessions have treated the properties in the appellants' occupation separately, and have rated the one acre at what may be called gravel-pit value, and the two and a-half acres at its value only for purposes of storing gravel already dug, for which purpose it was in fact being used at the date of the rate. We have to consider whether the quarter sessions were right to take the plots separately, and also whether if that is right, they proceeded on the right principle in arriving at the gravel-pit value for rating purposes of the one acre. The appellants take the land from the landowner from time to time in small plots, usually of one acre at a time. They buy the gravel under the plot, or rather so much of the gravel under it as they can get in a limited time (usually a year), pay a lump sum (usually £175) for the gravel, and also pay for levelling the land at the end of the year or other period for which they take the plot, which levelling costs about £40 per acre. They also pay some sums for costs. Under one agreement, that of June, 1897, they paid less than under the other agreements, apparently because the bed of gravel in that plot was either less deep, or not so good in quality, as the gravel under the other plots. They have no contract with the landowner whereby he is bound to sell them gravel under other land when the plots they hold are exhausted, but in fact he has other land adjoining under which there is gravel, and he had, prior to the rate in question, been in the habit of making successive agreements with them, and he has continued to do so since the rate. Now, as a general rule, property is rated at its existing value at the time of the making of the rate. You have to find what the hypothetical tenant from year to year might be expected to give for the hereditament in its state at that time. If therefore the gravel had, prior to this rate, been taken from the two and a-half acres in some way other than by the user of the land in respect of which the rate has to be imposed, I think the quarter sessions here would have been right in rating the two and a-half acres at storage value only; the case would then be the same as that of buildings on a property being burnt down shortly before the rate, and the rate then would be on the value of the land without the buildings. But I am of opinion that where the rateable user itself carries the diminution of value the rule is not quite so simple. The rule then is, I think, that any partial exhaustion of the subject-matter, so long as the special user continues, in no way affects the rateable value, and that it is only when the special user ceases, by reason of the complete exhaustion of the subject-matter, or otherwise, that the rateable value is affected. It then, of course, ceases altogether. The cases which throw most light on the mode of rating such properties are Reg. v. Westbrook and Reg. v. Everist, reported together in 10 Q. B. 178, and Reg. v. Abney Park Cemetery Co. and Reg. v. Whaddon. The rating of such properties without allowing for a renewal fund is somewhat anomalous, but it is clearly established by Reg. v. Westbrook that they are to be so rated, and indeed it is obvious that any allowance to keep the property in a state to command the rent would in these cases absorb the whole rateable value arising from the special use of the property. If the exhaustion of the material by the working in respect of which the rate is imposed is to be taken into account in the same way as an alteration in the value of the property caused in another way, the rateable value of the hereditament must vary from day to day and be continually diminishing. That I think cannot be. The value of the hereditament for rating purposes depends, not on the quantity of the material, in this case gravel, remaining on the property to be worked, but on the amount of the profitable working which is going on at the time of the rate. In these cases it is all-important to remember that the value for rating purposes depends on the value of the occupation and not on the value of the corpus of the property occupied. The latter in these cases is constantly diminishing but the former is or may be constant, until at last it ceases altogether by the exhaustion of the corpus. To rate such properties you first have to find the amount or rate of working, and then find how much a hypothetical tenant from year to year would give by the year for the right to work at that rate. It may be that there is not enough gravel remaining for anyone to work for a whole year, but that is quite immaterial. The problem is to find the value for a year of that enjoyment of the property which the occupier is in fact having at the date of the rate, irrespective of the question whether that enjoyment by the occupier can or cannot continue for a year. The case nearest to this (and I think completely in point) is Reg. v. Whaddon, a case as to coprolites. There the appellants were in occupation of ten acres of land, of which three and a-half were at the date of the rate being actually worked for coprolites, and six and a-half acres, though still in their occupation, had been exhausted. So far the facts are the same as in the present case, but in that case the occupier had a contract with the landowner, whereby he was entitled to have other land as required from time to time in substitution for that he had worked out, so that he was continuously in the occupation of ten acres, though of a different ten acres, and in each year he worked out ten acres, though he had only three and a-half acres in working at one time. He also contracted to pay the landowner a dead rent of £1,000 per annum, which was a little less in fact than his average payment for royalties on the ten acres worked. It was there held by the majority of the court that the appellants were rateable for the whole ten acres at coprolite value, and not merely for three and a-half acres at coprolite value and for the remainder at storage value. The argument of counsel for the appellants there was precisely that of the appellants' counsel here, and their view was adopted and developed by the dissenting judge, Cockburn, C.J., but it was not adopted by Mellor, Lush, and Archibald, JJ., who formed the majority. I think this case is an authority in point in the present, and that it is not distinguishable by reason of the two points of difference in the facts which I have mentioned. The dead rent cannot, I think, affect the question. It goes only to assist in arriving at the figures of the annual value, but it cannot affect the principle. In the judgment of the majority the fact that the appellants' occupation was a continuous one was of course referred to, but the judges did not rely on the fact that the appellants had a contract for the future digging, nor would that fact really be an element in the value of the occupation for rating purposes. The value for rating purposes of a hereditament does not depend upon the length of tenure of the actual occupying tenant. A man is rated the same whether his lease has many years or only a few days to run. The hypothetical tenant is not to be assumed to take for the next year after the rate the rights which the actual tenant has for that next year, but he is assumed to take as tenant from year to year the occupation (together, of course, with the rights of user of the land which the occupation carries with it) which the actual tenant has at the date of the rate, whether that occupation or those rights are to continue for a year or for more or less than a year. If any particular year is to be taken for the hypothetical tenancy, it is, in cases of this class, the year preceding the rate and not the year after. In Reg. v. Abney Park Cemetery Co., L. R. 8 Q. B., at p. 519, Blackburn, J., is reported as saying, "The Legislature has taken as a basis the rent which a tenant from year to year would give during the year preceding the time of making the rate." If that dictum is correct, it is conclusive of the present case. In the same Abney Park case, Blackburn, J., at p. 520 of the Law Reports, repeats almost the same proposition: "No injustice will be done if the company are rated in every year according to the value which a hypothetical tenant would give for the occupation in the preceding year, and according to this rule the company's receipts in one year will govern the rateable value of the cemetery in the next." My brother Bucknill has drawn my attention to the fact that these two passages are omitted in the report of the Abney Park case in the Law Journal, 42 L. J. M. C. 125, and also in a report in the Law Times. The reports throughout vary very much in language. They are obviously condensed reports, and each reporter has purposely omitted some of the actual language used by the learned judge, and each has reported some part of that which was omitted by the other, but in substance the reports agree, and the reasoning of the judges appears the same in each report. Of course it may be said that the principle of taking the value in a past year was only applied in the cemetery case because there was no reason why the receipts from burials in the next year should not be as large as in the preceding year. But would not the same rule be applied to the last year before the cemetery became full—that is, when it is not quite full, but when it was known that it would be full before the next year was ended? I think it would. The cemetery would still be rated at its former annual value until it was full, and then it would cease to be rated at all. It would not be rated at half the annual value in the last year because there was room for only six months' burials any more than a man would be rated at half the annual value of his house because he had only a six months' term remaining of his lease. It seems to me that where the overseers or assessment committee have to rate a property in respect of a beneficial use which is being made of it, which use is self-destructive, what they have to do is this: They must ascertain what amount of use the actual tenant has been making, and continues to make, of the property, and then ascertain what a tenant would give for liberty to make that amount of use of the property from year to year, independently of the question whether there is or is not enough of the property remaining for the tenant to be able to go on making that use for a whole year. Thus in the case of a gravel-pit they must find at what rate per annum the tenant is digging, and then find the annual value of his right to dig at that rate. The reason why it is necessary in cases of this class of property to look at the past user rather than at the capabilities for the future seems to be this: In all ordinary properties anything which happens to the property to destroy its value in the future, such as the burning down of a house, will, as soon as it happens, also destroy the value of the user in the present. Therefore we can take the future value as a measure of the present. But in the case of the class of property under consideration the destruction of future value is caused by the present user itself—that is, by the very thing of which we have to find the value, and consequently, to find that present value we cannot look to the future, when the destruction caused by it will have taken place. Applying this in the present case, and going back as far as the facts stated in the special case enable us to do, we find that on the 24th of June, 1897, the appellants acquired the right to dig, and, as I understand them, began to dig gravel under an acre and a-half, which they completely dug out in March, 1898. On the 15th of April, 1898, they acquired the like right under one acre, which they completely dug out by the 1st of September. On the 14th of November, 1898, they acquired another acre, which they were digging on the 8th of December, 1898, when the rate was made. When they completely dug out that acre does not appear (nor, of course, could it be known when the rate was made), but as they took another plot on the 21st of March, 1899, it was probably shortly before that.

The subsequent taking is only material to show now that which might at the time have been shown by direct evidence—viz., that at the date of the rate, the 8th of December, the appellants were digging as before and had not begun to dig slower than the average rate at which they had been digging. That average rate appears to me to be about the rate of two acres per annum, rather more if anything, as they exhausted the acre taken the 15th of April, 1898, in four months and a-half. I think, therefore, that just as in Reg. v. Whaddon the appellants were rated at coprolite value on ten acres (though at the date of the rate six and a-half acres had already been exhausted and only three and a-half of the ten acres then in their occupation still contained coprolites), because they were working out the three and a-half acres at the rate of ten acres per annum, so here the appellants, though at the date of the rate they were only working gravel in one acre, must be rated for three and a-half acres on the gravel-pit value of at least two acres, inasmuch as they were working both during the preceding year, and up to and at the date of the rate, so far as appears, at the rate of two acres per annum. In this case there seems no reason for not taking the sums paid by the appellants as a measure of what the hypothetical tenant would be likely to pay, and in fact the quarter sessions did so, as I understand they assessed the gravel-pit value at £220 per acre, being the £175, the £40 costs of restoring, and the £5 costs. If, therefore, the appellants ought to have been rated for their occupation on the footing that they were working at the date of the rate as they had been previously, at the rate of two acres of gravel per annum, the original rating at £420 gross was not excessive, and although the calculations which I have made from the figures in the special case are probably not quite accurate, and the data in the special case are probably not sufficient to enable us, if we had to do so, to fix exactly the proper amount at which the appellants should be rated, it is enough for me to say that the facts stated in the special case show no ground for reducing the rate. I have dealt with the case so far as I think it ought to be dealt with, as one occupation of the three and a-half acres. But I think that even if the exhausted two and a-half acres in the two earlier lettings are to be treated separately and rated at storage value only, the remaining acre should be rated at approximately double the sum at which the quarter sessions have rated it, because I think the appellants were working it at the date of the rate at the rate of getting two acres of gravel per annum, and I do not think we are excluded from considering that question by reason of the quarter sessions having found the value in part. They only so found subject to the case, and that states the facts with a view to our deciding it. I put the case thus: If a man pays £100 for the privilege of taking all the gravel out of a plot of land in a year, and he digs uniformly throughout the year, I should say that the gross value of his occupation during the year is £100, and that it is so all through the year, though he exhausts the land by digging the last load of gravel on the last day of the year. I think that must be admitted. I think also that if he does not dig uniformly, but digs out all the gravel in the first six months, continuing to occupy during the second six months, the gross annual value, during the second six months, as well as during the first, is still £100, but if not, and if, as the quarter sessions have held, the value during the second six months is nil (or storage value only, which, for the purposes of the argument, is the same thing), then it follows that the value of the first six months' occupation is the whole £100 which he pays—that is to say, that the annual valu[illegible] t six months is £200 per annum. In either way, therefore, the quarter sessions seem to me wrong. They appear to me to have given the appellants the benefit of the exhaustion of the three and a-half acres by reason of their speed in working, and not to have given the parish in the rating of the one acre the corresponding benefit arising from the same speed of working. The parish is by their mode of rating robbed of half the rateable value of the occupation. I think the passage in the judgment of Mellor, J., in Reg. v. Whaddon at the bottom of p. 244 is applicable here: "The appellants cannot by an ingenious arrangement of the mode of working deprive the parish of the benefit of rating them in respect of a whole year's occupation." I base my judgment on the authority of Reg. v. Whaddon, which I think in point and binding on us, but I entirely agree with the reasoning of the majority of the court in that case and have endeavoured somewhat to amplify and explain it.

I think, therefore, that the proper order to be made is to allow with costs the appeal to us, quash the order of the quarter sessions, and, making the order which the quarter sessions should have made, dismiss with costs the appeal to quarter sessions against the rate, but as the court is equally divided I am of opinion that the appeal fails, and consequently the order which has to be made is that the appeal be dismissed—under the circumstances it will be dismissed without costs, and leave to appeal if necessary is given.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Johnson, Weatherall, & Sons, for Potter & Crundwell, Farnham; Jackson, Farnham.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 19.

ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE OF NEWPORT UNION v. YSTRADYFODWG AND PONTYPRIDD SEWERAGE BOARD. (a.)

Poor law — Rating—Sewage carrier — Sewage carrier partly above, partly below ground—Liability to be rated.

The respondents were the governing body of a united drainage district, and they constructed a sewage carrier for conveying the sewage of the district to the sea. The total length of the sewage carrier was about 17¼ miles, of which some 2½ miles passed through or over land situated in the parish of R., which land was previous to the construction of the sewage carrier, and still remained so, rated for the relief of the poor.

The appellants were the assessment committee of the said parish of R., and they assessed the respondents in respect of the whole of that portion of the sewage carrier which passed through or over land in the parish of R.

The quarter sessions court held that such portion only of the sewage carrier in the parish of R. as was carried on concrete arches was rateable, but that those parts of it which were laid either below the natural surface of the land or on an embankment covered and grassed over were ordinary underground sewers, and came within the exception of rating applicable thereto.

Held, on appeal, that as there had been some interference with the surface of the ground, and as it was impossible to dissever those parts of the sewage carrier which were above from those parts below the natural surface of the ground, the whole of the carrier that passed through or over the land of the appellants was a rateable subject, and liable to be rated accordingly.

Case stated by the quarter sessions of Monmouth on an appeal by the sewerage board (the respondents in this court) against an assessment to a poor rate made for the parish of Rumney in the appellants' union.

The facts were as follows: The respondents were the governing body of a united drainage district consisting of part of the urban district of Ystradyfodwg and the urban district of Pontypridd constituted by a provisional order of the Local Government Board, confirmed by the Local Government Board's Provisional Orders Confirmation (No. 7) Act, 1885, for the purpose of carrying into effect a system of drainage for the above-mentioned urban districts. Pursuant to the powers vested in them by the provisional order, the respondents designed and constructed and have since always maintained a sewage carrier for the use of the two districts, and have erected, made, maintained, and worked such works, machinery, and plant as were required for conveying the sewage of the districts to the sea. The total length of the sewage carrier was about 17¼ miles, whereof nearly 2½ miles passed through or over land in the parish of Rumney, which land (excepting such part as formed part of the foreshore of the Bristol Channel) was, previously to the construction of the sewage carrier, and still continued to be, rated to the poor rate. The construction of the sewage carrier within the parish of Rumney was as follows: 182 yards of iron pipes carried on concrete arches above the surface of the ground, 1,021 yards of pipes laid below the surface and ordinary level of the ground, 1,890 yards carried below the surface of the ground but covered by an artificial embankment of varying height which rises above the level of the adjacent lands, and 1,246 yards of pipes (hereinafter called the outfall) passing partly over and partly beneath the surface of the foreshore of the Bristol Channel. In connection with the outfall, certain works have been erected by the respondents. The respondents were assessed to the rate appealed against in respect of that portion of the sewage carrier, with the outfall and appurtenances thereof, which is situate in the parish of Rumney, at £800 gross estimated rental and £700 rateable value. It was proved before the quarter sessions that, as far as the parish of Rumney is concerned, the sewage carrier conveys the sewage from distant towns, places, or houses through the parish, and that there is no connection to or with the sewage carrier from any lands, houses or buildings in the parish. It was also proved that the embankment varied in height from 18in. to 6ft. above the ground through which it passed; that it was covered throughout by a mound of earth which was grassed over except where a footpath runs over the top of the mound and where manholes are placed; that it was not separated by any fence from the adjoining land, and that cattle had full access upon and across it throughout its entire length. It was also proved that the land upon which the embankment lies was previously to the formation of such embankment assessed to the poor rate, and that the land remained so assessed, no change having been made by reason of the making of the embankment in such assessment.

The quarter sessions held that such portions of the sewage carrier as lay under the surface of the ground or in the embankment were not liable to be rated, but that the gross estimated rental of the other portions of the carrier in the parish of Rumney was £145 (of which £40 was the gross estimated rental of the outfall and works in connection therewith), and that the rateable value was £105. The quarter sessions accordingly allowed the appeal subject to the present case.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Bosanquet, Q.C., and Morton Brown, for the assessment committee.—The quarter sessions were wrong in reducing the rate, because this sewage carrier and the works form one entire and extensive drainage system. They are totally distinct in character from an ordinary underground sewer, and as such do not come within the exemption from rateability: Leicester Corporation v. Barrow-on-Soar Union, 63 L. J. M. C. 176.

Cripps, Q.C., Boyle, Q.C., and Ram, Q.C., for the respondents.—The court of quarter sessions were right in amending the rate: London County Council v. West Ham Overseers, 42 W. R. 330, [1893] A. C. 562.

CHANNELL, J.—On the whole I think this appeal should be allowed. The subject is one of some difficulty, and the facts are not altogether clear. The judgment of Lord Herschell in the London County Council v. West Ham Overseers, [1893] A. C. 579, et seq., however, helps us to decide the question, and shows that the exception with regard to sewers is quite anomalous. Here all we have to decide is whether or not the construction in this case comes within that exception. It is necessary therefore first to consider the nature of the exception, and secondly to ascertain whether the facts of this case bring it within it. In Leicester Corporation v. Barrow-on-Soar Union, Wright, J., spoke of this exception as one made by the Legislature in favour of "ordinary underground sewers" or "simple sewers" and it seems to me, so far as one can gather from the language of Lord Herschell in the case before referred to, that where the surface remained rateable just as it was before the sewer was constructed, and the value of the surface for occupation was not thereby affected, it might very well be that such a sewer might be one that was not rateable. Here there is no finding of fact that the structure did not interfere with the former occupation of the surface of the land and from the nature of the thing, it could not be that the structure, though grassed over, did not interfere at all with its occupation, and did not at all lower its rateable value, though there might be various reasons why the rating had not been altered. It must therefore be taken that there had been some interference with the surface; and that is one of the tests in the authorities cited as to whether a particular construction comes within or without the exception. I am not prepared to hold on the facts before me that this is an "ordinary underground sewer" which comes within the exception. Further, the construction was one continuous structure; at one part of its course it consisted of iron pipes on concrete arches, at other parts it consisted of a mound grassed over. That part of it on concrete arches was so similar to the structure in the West Ham case that the quarter sessions found themselves obliged on that authority to hold it rateable. In Leicester Corporation v. Barrow-on-Soar Union, Collins, J., said: "It is impossible to dissever a special part and say that as to that part alone it is to be taken as an independent sewer." So here, as this structure is above ground in some places and under the surface of the soil at other, I cannot bring myself to hold that in one man's field it is rateable and in another's not. It does not therefore, as a whole, certainly come within the exception in favour of ordinary underground sewers or simple sewers or whatever the anomalous exception may most exactly be described as being, and therefore, for the reason I have just stated, the whole must be regarded as rateable.

The order of quarter sessions will therefore be quashed and the rate directed to stand.

BUCKNILL, J.—I entirely concur.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Warriner & Co., for Davis, Lloyd, & Wilson, Newport.

Solicitors for the respondents, Wrentmore & Son, for Walter Morgan, Bruce, & Nicholas, Pontypridd.

---

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). Feb. 15.

EARL GREY v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL. (a.)

Inland revenue—Estate duty—Settlement—Reservation of interest—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (c).

Any gift inter vivos of property not involving the entire cessation of any interest therein by the grantor, and excluding his possession and enjoyment thereof, is insufficient to avoid the payment of estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894. The property so granted or assigned and existing at the death of the grantor will be deemed to have passed on his death, and therefore liable to estate duty.

A transfer of property reserving a rent-charge to the grantor and providing for the payment of grantor's debts by the grantee, to the full exhaustion of the grantor's estate, is, therefore, ineffectual for the purpose of avoiding the said duty under section 2, sub-section 1 (c), of the Finance Act, 1894.

Decision of the Court of Appeal affirmed.

Appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, Rigby, and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.), 47 W. R. 37, [1898] 2 Q. B. 534, affirming a decision of the Queen's Bench Division (Grantham and Channell, JJ.).

The documents and sections of the statutes are set out at length in the report below.

The substance of the documents is as follows:

By a deed dated the 19th of October, 1885, and made between the late Henry, third Earl Grey, of the one part, and the appellant, the fourth Earl Grey, then Albert Henry George Grey, Esq., of the other part, the third Earl Grey conveyed to the appellant all his real and leasehold estates in the county of Northumberland and elsewhere, subject to the payment of certain life annuities and mortgages affecting the same to the use that the third Earl Grey should thenceforth during his life receive an annual rent-charge of £4,000, to be issuing out of the said hereditaments (other than such part as the third Earl Grey was to occupy and enjoy under the trusts thereinafter declared), and subject thereto to the use of the appellant in fee simple, but as to the mansion-house at Howick and the premises to be enjoyed therewith subject to the trusts thereinafter contained. And the third Earl Grey assigned to the appellant all rents, arrears of rents . . . owing in respect of the said real estates, and all furniture and effects in or about the said mansion-house and premises at Howick, and all stock, crops, and effects, and other personal property belonging to him (with certain exceptions), to hold the same to the appellant absolutely for his own use and benefit. And it was further declared that the mansion-house at Howick, together with the pleasure gardens, &c., as then occupied and enjoyed by the third Earl Grey, and all the furniture, &c., should be held upon trust to permit the said third Earl Grey to use and enjoy the same as theretofore during his life. And the appellant covenanted with the third Earl Grey to (1) Pay certain annuities mentioned in the schedule to the deed and all other annuities (if any) charged on any part of the property or payable by the third Earl Grey so long as the same should be payable; (2) pay a mortgage debt of £200,000 and interest and all other mortgage debts and charges affecting any part of the property, also a bond for £1,000 payable to the Honourable George Grey with interest, and discharge all liabilities of the third Earl Grey in respect of the property; (3) pay the said annual rentcharge of £4,000 to the third Earl Grey; (4) keep the mansion-house and buildings at Howick insured at the appellant's cost; and sundry other covenants, including one upon the death of the third Earl Grey to pay all his funeral and testamentary expenses, including all stamp and other duties, and also all his debts to the full exhaustion of all the property, real and personal, of the said third Earl. And there was a provision that, in the event of the appellant dying in the lifetime of the third Earl (or of any breach of covenant by the appellant and failure to remedy the same within thirty days after notice), it should be lawful for the third Earl Grey to revoke the deed, either wholly or in part, but without prejudice to the title under any sale or mortgage prior to such revocation.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By an indenture dated the 26th of September, 1894, the third Earl Grey, in consideration of £5,000 stated to be paid to him by the appellant, released to him the said rentcharge of £4,000 and also released the power of revocation contained in the deed of the 19th of October, 1885, and the covenant by the appellant to retain unsold and to farm certain lands near Howick.

The third earl died on the 9th of October, 1894, and whereupon the appellant succeeded to the earldom. The average net annual income of the said estates exceeded £4,000. Estate duty was claimed from the appellant on the principal value (less incumbrances subsisting thereon) of the whole of the property comprised in the said deed of the 19th of October, 1885, as property passing on the death of the said third Earl Grey within the meaning of sections 1 and 2, sub-section 1 (c), of the said Act (which incorporates the provisions of section 38 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1881, as amended by section 11, sub-section 1, of the Customs Act, 1889), and the Court of Appeal held that the Crown was entitled to a declaration to that effect.

Haldane, Q.C., and Bremner, for the appellant.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the respondent, were not heard.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—There are some cases so extremely plain that it is difficult to give any better exposition of the question than that which the statute itself provides. In the present case I did not at first quite understand the argument presented to your lordships, and I am not absolutely certain that I have got much further now; but, at all events, forming my own judgment upon the statute, nothing appears to me much more plain than this—that what the Act of Parliament intended to prevent was that what has been described as a gift inter vivos should nevertheless reserve to the settlor some benefit, or some part of that which purported to be given inter vivos. In this case can anybody doubt that something has been reserved to the settlor? The settlement itself has reserved £4,000 a year, and has reserved a right also on the part of the settlor that all his debts up to the period of his death should be paid and the payment secured by the estate. It seems to me that it is burning daylight to say that that is not within the express language of the statute, and I am really wholly unable to understand why these words are not as plain in the statute itself as any explanatory exposition could make them. That is really all I have to say upon the subject. It seems to me it is a particularly plain case, and I move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lords MACNAGHTEN, MORRIS, SHAND, JAMES OF HEREFORD, and BRAMPTON concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, E. Flux & Leadbitter.

Solicitor for the respondent, Solicitor to the Treasury.

---

From C. A. (England). Feb. 13.

LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY v. WALKER. (a.)

Arbitration — Railway — Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 35—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 78.

Upon an application to compel a railway company to take up an award properly made under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act of 1845, the question as to whether compensation should be paid under that or other Acts cannot be entertained.

Objections of this character should be made in the action to enforce the award.

Appeal from decision of Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith and Romer, L.JJ., Collins, L.J., dissenting) reported as Reg. v. London and North-Western Railway, [1899] 1 Q. B. 921, 47 W. R. Dig. 170, where the main contention was as to the effect of the special Act in substituting certain clauses relating to minerals. This was not dealt with by the House of Lords, but merely the point indicated in the headnote.

The Divisional Court (Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) had made absolute a rule nisi for a mandamus calling upon the London and North-Western Railway Co. to take up an award, which the Court of Appeal affirmed.

Sir E. Clarke, Q.C., Page, Q.C., and Arthur Underhill, for the appellant.

Cohen, Q.C., Dugdale, Q.C., W. J. Noble, and Pease, for the respondents, were not heard.

---

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—It seems to me that the course pursued by the railway company has been misconceived. The duty is a plain duty under the Act of Parliament if it was an arbitration under the Lands Clauses Act. The question of whether or not the subject-matter of discussion at the arbitration was properly entered into, and whether or not the rights of the parties are regulated by the earlier or by the later statute, seems to me to be irrelevant to the question now before your lordships. The question here is whether there was an arbitration properly constituted under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act. If there was, the Act specially enacts that under such circumstances the railway company shall take up the award. It does not conclude the rights of the parties. When the award has been taken up, any objection to the award which can by law be made can then be made in an action upon the award; but at this preliminary stage how are your lordships to say that the Act of Parliament does not apply? Of course, if it could be made out that this was a proceeding coram non judici it might well be that your lordships would not enforce the duty which is by the statute cast presumably only upon those who have engaged in a proceeding which is, primâ facie at all events, a valid one. Here it has been admitted in the frankest possible manner, and I think quite rightly admitted, that the umpire appointed by the Board of Trade was rightly appointed, and that, he being rightly appointed, the proceedings before him were perfectly regular.

The effect of having made a protest, whatever that effect is, may, for aught I know to the contrary, be available hereafter to the parties; but it is impossible not to see that the very reason why they agreed to appoint (although under circumstances which appear to me to have been only calculated to create further expense) was this: They said, "If we do not appoint, the question will arise in this acute form, that they will proceed against us ex parte, and, of course, their own arbitrator is very likely to give them very large damages." That is what moved them to do it, and for the express purpose, therefore, of preventing the other side from proceeding ex parte they did that the very doing of which assumes its validity because it assumes the effectual bar to the proceeding ex parte. They cannot have it both ways. Either it was a valid appointment so as to prevent the ex parte proceedings, or it was not a valid appointment. They did prevent the ex parte proceedings, and I think, at present at all events, whatever may hereafter happen, we must assume it was validly done. Indeed, as I have said, it has been admitted by the learned counsel with great candour and propriety that it was a valid appointment and a valid arbitration. Why are your lordships now to interfere to prevent that which the statute says shall be the consequence of such an arbitration, and of an award made under that statute? I am really unable to give any answer to that question.

With all respect to Collins, L.J., he appears to me not to have really dealt with the point at all. I do not know whether he had the same candid admission before him as your lordships have had to-day, but he appears to have treated it (and at one time there was some reason to suppose some of your lordships took that view) as if it was entirely without jurisdiction, and, if so, of course a different question would arise; but it cannot be assumed now that it was without jurisdiction, and if there was jurisdiction there is the award and there is the statutable duty to take it up. Now, whatever may be the rights of the parties hereafter, your lordships are entertaining the comparatively immaterial question whether or not the fees of the arbitrator should be paid in order to decide important rights between these two parties. But that has no relation, at all events, to the plain duty created by the Act of Parliament under the circumstances with which your lordships are dealing.

I therefore move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed with costs, and the judgment affirmed.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am entirely of the same opinion.

When once it is admitted that, notwithstanding the curious and cumbrous form in which the railway company appointed their arbitrator, they did really intend to join in an arbitration under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, it seems to me that the statutory consequence must necessarily follow, and that they must take up this award. It would not prejudice their rights hereafter when they come to litigate the question after they know what the award is, and if they desire to raise any question it will be perfectly open to them to raise it hereafter. Whether they might at an earlier stage have applied for an injunction to stay the proceedings it is not necessary to consider.

Lords MORRIS, SHAND, JAMES OF HEREFORD, and BRAMPTON concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, C. H. Mason.

Solicitors for the respondent, Whitfield & Harrison.

---

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — March 13.

HICKMAN v. MAISEY. (a.)

Highway—Trespass—User of highway.

The plaintiff was the owner and occupier of land crossed by a public highway, the soil of which was vested in him. The plaintiff had granted to a trainer of racehorses a licence for valuable consideration to exercise and train his horses upon the land. The defendant, who was the owner of a sporting newspaper, went upon the highway each morning for a considerable time and walked up and down it between two points about fifteen yards apart, not for the purpose of using it as a highway, but for the purpose of watching the performances and trial gallops of the racehorses on the adjoining land and taking notes thereof. The information thus obtained he published in his newspaper. The plaintiff brought an action of trespass, alleging that the acts of the defendant caused annoyance and detriment to himself and to his licensee.

Held, that, as the defendant was not using the highway for the purposes for which it was dedicated as a highway, but for the purpose of carrying on his business there, he was a trespasser.

Application for judgment or a new trial in an action tried before Day, J., and a jury.

The action was brought to recover damages for trespass and for an injunction.

The plaintiff was the owner and occupier of certain land in Wiltshire, largely consisting of down land, through which ran a public highway. The soil of the highway was vested in the plaintiff. The plaintiff had granted a licence for valuable consideration to one Robinson, a trainer of racehorses, to exercise and train his horses on part of the down land.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant was one of the proprietors of a sporting newspaper in which the performances and trials of racehorses were recorded. He used to go each morning on the highway in question, near to the place where the racehorses were being exercised, and used to walk up and down the highway between two points fifteen yards apart for about an hour and a-half, watching with glasses the performances and trial gallops of the horses, and taking notes thereof. The information thus obtained he published in his newspaper. Robinson complained to the plaintiff of the acts of the defendant as being injurious to his business, and the plaintiff thereupon gave the defendant notice to discontinue the acts complained of. The defendant refused to do so, and the plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for trespass by the defendant to the soil of the highway and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from any repetition of the acts complained of, alleging that the acts were an annoyance and caused damage to him and to Robinson, his licensee.

At the trial the learned judge directed the jury that if the defendant had frequented the highway, not for the purpose of passing and repassing along it as an ordinary wayfarer, but for the purpose of carrying on his business there by watching racehorses, it was a trespass; but that if the defendant had only used the highway for the purpose for which it was dedicated to the public, that is, as a wayfarer, to pass and repass along it, it was not a trespass.

The jury found that the defendant did not use the highway as an ordinary wayfarer, and assessed the damages at 1s. Judgment was accordingly entered for the plaintiff, and an injunction was granted.

Duke, Q.C. (J. W. McCarthy with him), for the defendant.—The defendant was not committing an act of trespass on the highway. He was only passing and repassing up and down between two points on the highway watching, as he was entitled to do, what could be seen from the highway. A person is entitled to look about him when walking along a road, and cannot be prevented from taking notes of what he sees. Persons often stand about on highways to view processions passing, or to look at the scenery, and yet no one would say that in doing so they are trespassing on the highway. There must be some act of trespass on the highway subsequent to the entry on the highway. The wrongful act must be itself a trespass: Shorland v. Govett, 5 B. & C. 485. The intention with which a person goes on to a highway is immaterial unless there is a subsequent trespass to the soil of the highway. As Lord Cairns said in Rangeley v. Midland Railway Co., 16 W. R. 547, at p. 549, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 306, at p. 311, a public highway is not an easement; it is a dedication to the public of the occupation of the surface of the land for the purpose of passing and repassing. The defendant did no act here which was a trespass to the highway. Harrison v. Duke of Rutland, 41 W. R. 322, [1893] 1 Q. B. 142, was a very different case. There the acts of the plaintiff consisted in placing himself on the road over which the grouse were being driven, and in waving his pocket-handkerchief and opening and shutting his umbrella so as to prevent the grouse from coming in the direction of the butts. Those were acts of interference with the duke's right of sporting over his own land. It was an active obstruction of the duke's legal user of his land. That was clearly a trespass.

He also referred to Dovaston v. Payne, 2 H. Bl. 527; Reg. v. Pratt, 3 W. R. 372, 4 E. & B. 860. [COLLINS, L.J., referred to The Six Carpenters' case, 8 Co. 146a; 1 Smith L. C. (10th ed.), p. 127.]

J. A. Foote, Q.C., and F. R. Y. Radcliffe, for the plaintiff, were not called upon.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This is an action of trespass by the owner and occupier of certain land, over part of which he had granted a licence to a trainer of racehorses to exercise and train his horses. The alleged trespass complained of was committed on a highway, the soil of which was vested in the plaintiff. The defendant is what is commonly called a racing tout, and he had for a period of time used the highway for the purpose of watching the trial gallops of the racehorses on the downs, notwithstanding a notice to him not to continue to do so. He then published the information thus obtained, the result being that the land was depreciated in value as a training-ground for racehorses, and both the plaintiff and his licensee were damnified. The plaintiff thereupon brought this action of trespass. He alleges that the defendant has broken and entered his close. The defendant justifies on the ground that the locus in quo is a public highway, and that he was lawfully using it. Accordingly the question is whether it is made out that the defendant upon the occasion in question was using the highway for the purpose for which it was dedicated to the public—that is to say, for the purpose of passing and repassing along it. The evidence shows that the defendant walked up and down the highway between two points about fifteen yards apart at the time when the horses were having their morning gallops, and remained there each morning for about an hour and a-half watching the performances of the horses through glasses. It is said that that is not a trespass. It seems to me that unless the defendant shows that he was lawfully using the highway he does not prove his plea. The law as to what is a lawful user of a highway within the purpose for which it was dedicated to the public has been laid down in several cases. In Dovaston v. Payne, which is one of the leading authorities upon the point, it was said that the lawful user of a highway is for the purpose of passing and repassing along it. I agree with what Lord Esher, M.R., said in Harrison v. Duke of Rutland, that highways are, no doubt, dedicated primâ facie for the purpose of passage, but that things are done upon them by everybody which are recognized as being rightly done, and as constituting a reasonable and usual mode of using a highway as such. It seems to me that that is a necessary development of the law as to the lawful user of a highway in the present day. A user of a highway by sleeping all night upon it can hardly be said to be a reasonable user of it. On the other hand, no reasonable person would be likely to complain of a person sketching on the side of a highway. I do not think that the acts of the defendant, who used the highway, not for the purpose of passing and repassing, but for the purpose of carrying on his business there to the detriment of the owner of the soil of the highway, can be said to be a reasonable user of the highway. For myself it is sufficient to say that this case is covered by the decision in Harrison v. Duke of Rutland. In that case the plaintiff used the highway, the soil of which was vested in the defendant, solely for the purpose of interfering with the rights which the defendant was lawfully exercising on another part of his land. With regard to the direction of the learned judge to the jury, I can see no misdirection. Nor can I agree with the argument that the intention and purpose with which the defendant went on the highway are not to be taken into account in deciding the question whether or not the user is a lawful user of the highway. For these reasons I think that the appeal should be dismissed.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It is not easy to give an exact definition where the line should be drawn between the user of a highway as a highway and a user beyond that conferred by the dedication of the highway. It is not difficult, however, to put cases which are well on one side or other of the line. In the present case the user of the highway went well beyond the line which marked the proper user of the highway as a highway. It was argued for the defendant that when a person enters on a highway under a public right, if the question is going to be raised that the entry was not in the exercise of that public right, some act subsequent thereto must be found which is itself a trespass, so as to enable the court to say that the original entry was a trespass. Accepting that proposition, in my opinion there is evidence here to show a trespass by the defendant after his entry on the highway, because in the last resort the question must be whether what he did when on the highway was a reasonable user of the highway as such. Primarily a highway is dedicated to the public for passing and repassing along it. In modern times a legitimate extension of the doctrine as to the user of a highway for the mere purpose of passing and repassing along it has been recognized. For instance, if it were true that the cattle in Dovaston v. Payne casually eat some grass as they went along the highway, I do not think that they would be considered as committing a trespass on the highway. That is only an illustration of the principle that the right of passing and repassing along the highway is subject to all reasonable and legitimate extensions recognized as customary or necessary, owing to the requirements of the public becoming more extended as districts become more thickly populated. The larger user, however, to which a highway is thus rendered liable must always be such as is not inconsistent with the paramount right of transit over it. That is the kind of user to which Lord Esher referred in Harrison v. Duke of Rutland, when he said that "highways are, no doubt, dedicated primâ facie for the purpose of passage; but things are done upon them by everybody which are recognized as being rightly done, and as constituting a reasonable and usual mode of using a highway as such. If a person on a highway does not transgress such reasonable and usual mode of using it, I do not think that he will be a trespasser." It was then argued for the defendant that the court cannot inquire into the motive with which the defendant went on the highway. That contention seems to me to be contrary to all the old authorities. If we find a person using the highway outside the purpose for which it was dedicated to the public, that throws us back on the intent with which he entered. It is said that there is nothing here amounting to a trespass to show the intent with which the defendant entered on the highway, and in support of that proposition Shorland v. Govett was cited. That case, however, does not support the contention. It was a demurrer to a replication. The action was for trespass to the plaintiff's dwelling-house, and the defendant, who was the plaintiff's bailiff, justified under a fi. fa. The replication alleged that the defendant, shortly after he entered the plaintiff's dwelling-house and before the writ was fully executed, under colour and pretence of the writ unlawfully demanded, exacted, and received a larger sum of money than he was entitled to levy upon the plaintiff's goods, and that the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the defendant the whole sum demanded. It was pointed out by the judges that the demand and receipt of more than was due did not constitute a trespass, and that the replication did not show that the defendant held the goods longer than he was entitled to. If the defendant had done so, then the law would have adjudged by the subsequent trespass with what intent he had entered. Here the acts of the defendant on the highway can be looked at, on the authority of the Six Carpenters' case, to see quo animo, or with what intent he entered, namely, not for the proper user of the highway as such, but for the purpose of carrying on his business there as a tout.

ROMER, L. J.—I am of the same opinion. I cannot distinguish this case from Harrison v. Duke of Rutland. The defendant did an act on the highway which interfered with the use by the plaintiff of his land as a training ground for horses. He interfered with the plaintiff's undoubted right of user of his own land adjoining the highway. If the soil of the highway were not vested in the plaintiff, the acts of the defendant would not have been a trespass of which the plaintiff could have complained. But, as the soil of the highway belonged to the plaintiff, the question is whether the defendant came on the highway for the lawful user of the highway as such, or for the purpose of interfering with the lawful user by the plaintiff of his own land. We know that it was for the latter purpose that the defendant came on the highway. That brings the case clearly within the decision in Harrison v. Duke of Rutland. In that case Lord Esher, M.R., said: "But the plaintiff in this case, it should be observed, was doing that which comes within what Lord Campbell, C.J., said in Reg. v. Pratt—he was using this part of the highway, solely for the purpose of interfering with the rights which the owner of the land was exercising on another part of his land"; and Lopes, L.J., put it in the same way. I cannot see any distinction between that case and the present.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Goodale & Hobson, for Butterworth, Rose, & Morrison, Swindon.

Solicitors for the defendant, Prior, Church, & Adams, for A. E. Withy, New Swindon.

---

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) March 3.

MILNER v. GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Employment—Accident—Railway—Barmaid in refreshment room—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7—Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 48), s. 3.

A barmaid in the employment of a railway company while attending to her duties in a refreshment room at one of their stations, sustained accidental injury in consequence of a framed advertisement falling from the wall.

Held, that she was not employed on or in or about a railway within the meaning of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and that, therefore, her employment was not an employment to which the Act applied.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Peterborough County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant for compensation was a barmaid who was employed by the Great Northern Railway Co. in their refreshment room at Peterborough Station. While she was attending to her duties in the refreshment room, a framed advertisement fell from the wall and caused her injury.

The question was whether the applicant's employment was an employment to which the Workmen's Compensation Act applied.

By section 7, sub-section 1, the Act applies to employment on or in or about a railway.

By sub-section 2 "railway" has the same meaning as in the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873.

By section 3 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, "railway" includes "every station, siding, wharf, or dock of or belonging to such railway and used for the purposes of public traffic."

The refreshment room in question formed part of the railway company's station buildings, the only entrance to it being from the station platform. It was directly managed by the railway company.

The county court judge was of opinion that, the refreshment room being part of a station used for purposes of public traffic, the applicant was at the time of the accident employed on or in or about a railway within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1, of the Act, and he made an award in her favour.

The employers appealed.

Montague Lush (A. Clutton Brock with him), for the employers.—The applicant was not employed in the business of the company in their capacity as a railway company. The definition of "railway" includes every station belonging to a railway and used for the purposes of public traffic. The effect of incorporating this definition into the Workmen's Compensation Act is that the employment to which the Act applies must be limited to that business of the company which is concerned with public traffic. A refreshment room is not used for purposes of public traffic, and employment in a refreshment room is not concerned with public traffic. Parts of most stations are used for purposes which are only ancillary to the business of the company as carriers of public traffic, as, for instance, hotels, refreshment rooms, bookstalls, and lavatories. A refreshment room is used merely for accommodating passengers. Mere local proximity does not give a right within the Act. The words "or about" have the effect of extending the locality where the employment is within the Act. Probably a railway guard or porter, whose employment is within the Act, would be entitled to claim compensation if an accident happened to him in the refreshment room. He would carry his right with him into the room. But the mere fact of being employed in the refreshment room does not give a right within the Act.

T. H. Walker, for the applicant.—This case comes within the express words of the Act. The applicant was employed on a railway. For she was employed in this refreshment room, which is a part of Peterborough Station, that station being as a whole used for purposes of public traffic. And by the definition clause "railway" includes a station used for the purposes of public traffic. It is not necessary that each particular part of a station should be shown to be used for purposes of public traffic in the strict sense of that expression before it can be brought within the Act. [COLLINS, L.J.—Can a refreshment room be said in any sense to be used for the purposes of public traffic? Is not South-Eastern Railway Co. v. Railway Commissioners, 6 Q. B. D. 586, 29 W. R. Dig. 108, an authority to show that a refreshment room cannot be considered one of the reasonable facilities which a railway company are bound to provide for the receiving, forwarding, or delivering of traffic?] It is not necessary to consider what a railway company are bound to provide, or what it is reasonable for them to provide. It is sufficient that they do provide refreshment rooms, and they ought not to be allowed to escape liability on the ground that they are not bound to provide them.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I have come to the conclusion that this appeal ought to be allowed. In my opinion a refreshment room does not come within the meaning of a "railway" in the Workmen's Compensation Act coupled with the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873. By section 3 of the last mentioned Act "railway" is defined as including every station used for the purposes of public traffic. The question is whether a refreshment room can be said to be used for the purposes of public traffic; for in my opinion the definition is not meant to include every part of a station, where the station is used for the purposes of public traffic, but only includes that part of the station which is used for the purposes of public traffic. I think that an hotel, which is attached to a station and forms part of the same building, cannot be said to be used for the purposes of public traffic, neither can a bookstall. The learned county court judge has held that this refreshment room was used for the purposes of public traffic. There seems to me, however, good authority for saying that such a holding cannot be correct. In the case of South-Eastern Railway Co. v. Railway Commissioners, one of the questions was whether the Railway Commissioners had jurisdiction to order the railway company to reserve part of the station buildings at Hastings for refreshment purposes. The commissioners had assumed such jurisdiction, and ordered refreshment rooms to be provided. But the Court of Appeal held that they were wrong in doing so, and the ground of their decision was that refreshment rooms did not come within the meaning of "reasonable facilities for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering traffic," however desirable they might be for the comfort or convenience of passengers. That case shows clearly in which way the point now before us ought to be decided. Following that authority, I hold that a station refreshment room is not used for the purposes of public traffic, but is only for the convenience of passengers.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Primâ facie, no one would suppose that a barmaid employed in a refreshment room at a railway station came within the purview of an Act for the protection of railway employees against accidental injuries. And, when I look at the matter critically, as I am bound to do, I do not think that that part of a station building which is used as a refreshment room comes within the definition of "railway" contained in section 3 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873. It says that "railway" shall include every station used for the purposes of public traffic. This definition clearly lets in the Hastings case. The precise point there was whether refreshment accommodation was a reasonable facility for receiving, forwarding, and delivering traffic. If it was, the Railway Commissioners had jurisdiction to make the order which they had made. The Court of Appeal held that it was not.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. I think that this refreshment room, though it is a portion of the station building, ought to be considered as something apart from the station, in the sense that it is not included in a "station used for the purposes of public traffic" within the meaning of section 3 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the employers, R. Hill Dawe.

Solicitors for the applicant, Bescoby & Williamson, Retford.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. — Feb. 10.

In re ASHTON'S TRADE-MARK. (a.)

Trade-mark—Registration—Non-user—Non-appearance of proprietor—Removal from register—Service abroad of notice of motion.

A word was registered as a trade-mark in 1891 upon the instructions and in the name of an American giving Chicago as his address, with the name and address of an English firm of patent agents as his address for service. In 1899 an American company applied for the registration of the same word as their trade-mark, they having used it for a long time in America and also more recently in England. This application was objected to by the comptroller, in view of the previous registration. Thereupon inquiries were instituted by the company, the result of such inquiries being that the registered proprietor could not be found to have ever used the mark, or done any business either in America or in England; that he could not be traced in Chicago or elsewhere; that letters addressed to him at Chicago were returned through the Dead Letter Office; and that the patent agents named as the address for service could give no information with respect to him. The company then gave notice of motion to rectify the register by expunging the mark, and left a copy of this notice at the address for service and sent another copy of it in a registered packet to Chicago, accompanied by a letter as directed in In re Compagnie Générale d'Eaux Minérales et de Bains de Mer, 40 W. R. 89, [1891] 3 Ch. 451.

On proof of these facts, and the registered proprietor not appearing, though more than twenty-eight days had elapsed since the dispatch of the packet and letter to Chicago,

Held, that the mark should be expunged.

This was a motion by the Hillside Chemical Co., an American company of New York, by which they applied to have the register of trade-marks rectified by the removal therefrom of the trade-mark consisting of the word "Terraline" standing in the name of William Henry Ashton.

The applicants had done an extensive business in a medicated oil called "Terraline" in America since 1886, and in England since 1898.

In 1899 they applied for the registration of this word in England as their trade-mark, but met with the objection that the identical word was standing on the register for the same class of goods in the name of Ashton, whose address was given as Chicago, with the name and address of an English firm of patent agents as his address for service. Upon inquiries being made by the company, it appeared that these patent agents had been instructed in 1891 by a patent agent of Ottawa, in Canada, to obtain, and had then obtained, the registration of the mark on behalf of Ashton, but that they had never seen him and could give no information with respect to him. No indication could be discovered that he had ever used the mark or done any business either in America or in England; he could not be traced in Chicago or elsewhere, and letters addressed to him at Chicago were returned through the Dead Letter Office. The company thereupon gave notice of motion to rectify the register by expunging the mark, and on the 10th of January, 1900, a copy of this notice of motion was sent in a registered packet to Ashton at Chicago; a copy was also left at the address for service, but the patent agents were not willing to accept service. The Comptroller of the Patent Office was also served, but did not appear in the proceedings.

L. B. Sebastian, for the applicants.—Upon the evidence it must be taken that Ashton has never done any business in this country, and that he never used or had any bonâ fide intention of using the mark he registered. This being so, the mark is an unused mark obstructing a bonâ fide applicant, and should be expunged, as was done in In re Batt's Trade-Marks, [1898] 2 Ch. 432, [1899] A. C. 428. The registered packet containing the notice o motion and letter was sent in accordance with the direction given in In re Compagnie Générale d'Eaux Minérales et de Bains de Mer, 40 W. R. 89, [1891] 3 Ch. 451, and thirty-one days have elapsed since the date of it being posted to Chicago, whereas twenty-eight days after service is the time for appearance for a party at New York (see Annual Practice, 1900, p. 1043).

STIRLING, J., was satisfied that every proper attempt had been made to serve Ashton, and, upon the evidence produced, ordered that the mark should be expunged from the register.

Solicitor, C. Urquhart Fisher.

Chan. Div. Cozens-Hardy, J. — Jan. 16.

WEST v. DIPROSE. (a.)

Bill of sale—Payment by instalments—Authority to sell mortgaged property—Sale before instalments were due—Interest subsequent to sale.

Where repayment under a bill of sale was to be made by monthly instalments extending over a certain period, and where before the expiration of that period the mortgagee by agreement with the mortgagor sold the security, and deducted from the purchase-money the principal and interest due to him up to the end of the period,

Held, that the mortgagee could only claim the principal and the interest up to the date the security was realized.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By a bill of sale dated the 17th of September, 1898, made between the plaintiff Helena West, as the mortgagor, and the defendant Henry Diprose, as the mortgagee, the mortgagor, in consideration of the sum of £500 then paid to the mortgagor by the mortgagee, assigned to the mortgagee all and singular the several chattels and things specifically described in the schedule thereto annexed then in and about the premises known as 17, Ovington-gardens, South Kensington, by way of security for the payment of the said sum of £500 and interest thereon at the rate of 60 per cent. per annum; and it was further agreed that the mortgagor should pay to the mortgagee the principal sum aforesaid, together with the interest thereon, by monthly instalments of £50 each, until the whole debt, including principal and interest had been liquidated, the first payment to be made on the 17th of October, 1898.

A further clause was inserted that the chattels assigned should not be liable to seizure or to be taken possession of by the mortgagee for any cause other than those specified in section 7 of the Bills of Sale (1878) Amendment Act, 1882.

The first instalment was paid, and shortly afterwards the plaintiff arranged with the defendant that the defendant should take possession of the house and furniture and sell the same, and after repaying himself what was owing to him on the security of the bill of sale should pay the balance to the plaintiff.

The defendant sold the house and furniture on the 3rd of January, 1899, for the sum of £750, and submitted a statement of account showing a balance in the plaintiff's favour of £6 7s. 2d.

In this account one item was as follows: "Loan, interest, stamps, registration, inventories, £650."

The defendant subsequently allowed the sum of £12 10s. in respect of stamps, registration, and interest. The plaintiff claimed that the defendant was only entitled to the sum of £550 for principal and interest, being the amount due up to the date of the realization of the plaintiff's property on the 3rd of January, 1899.

The question turned on the issue whether the defendant could charge interest at the rate of 60 per cent. for the whole time during which the security was intended to continue.

A. R. Ingpen, for the plaintiff, claimed that the defendant could only charge interest for the four months during which the bill of sale continued: Weardale Coal and Iron Co. v. Hodson, 42 W. R. 424, [1894] 1 Q. B. 598.

Cababé, for the defendant, argued that the defendant was acting as agent for the plaintiff in the matter of the sale, and the defendant could deduct the amount for which the plaintiff was liable under the bill of sale: Ex parte Ellis, 46 W. R. 531, [1898] 2 Q. B. 79; Forster v. Clowser, [1897] 2 Q. B. 362, 46 W. R. Dig. 123.

A. R. Ingpen replied.

COZENS-HARDY, J., stated the facts, and continued: Under the bill of sale, if nothing more had happened, I think the mortgagor could not have compelled the mortgagee to receive the money except by instalments. But if the mortgagee took steps to realize his security, I think the court would only have held due to him the principal and interest up to the date when the principal sum was paid off, for the reason that the mortgagee had taken steps to show that he was not insisting upon his strict bargain. But the Court of Appeal has decided in the case of Forster v. Clowser that where under the interpleader rule, ord. 57, r. 12, goods or chattels have been seized or taken in execution by a sheriff, and the judge has thought fit to direct a sale and the application of the proceeds of the sale in such manner and upon such terms as may be just, it is not just under such circumstances as these that the bill of sale holder should get more than his interest up to the date when he received the actual cash. The principle is that the mortgagee cannot be compelled to take his mortgage money except under the terms of his own contract, but if he takes steps to get the money back either by his own act or by the order of the court under the interpleader rules then interest is only to be paid up to the time of realization.

The present case turns upon a sale which took place in virtue of an authority given to the mortgagee by the grantor. The owner of the bill of sale elected to sell the property, to receive the money and to deduct his due. I do not think there is any rule of the court which hinders me from doing what is clearly just—namely, that the interest at the rate of 60 per cent. must stop from the moment when the principal money was received by the mortgagee. In saying this I intend to follow the rule as laid down in Forster v. Clowser.

Solicitors, Apps & Son; John Westcott.

---

Chan. Div.
Buckley, J. } March 2, 5, 6, 7.

J. C. & J. FIELD (LIMITED) v. THE WAGEL SYNDICATE (LIMITED).
In re J. C. & J. FIELD'S TRADE-MARK. (a.)

Trade-mark—Registered five years—"Savonol"—Invented word—Foreign word with meaningless affix—Action for infringement heard together with cross-motion to rectify—Certificate of right to exclusive use—Patents, &c., Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 77a.

The word "Savonol," being meaningless, is an "invented word," and as such is capable of being registered as a trade-mark for soaps, notwithstanding that the French word "savon" had been used for many years in the soap trade. Even if "Savonol" does suggest "savon" and "soap," it is only a covert or skilful allusion to the character or quality of the goods, and may still be an "invented word."

A meaningless affix like "ol" is distinguishable from such terminations as "ette" and "ine," which indicate resemblance.

Eastman's Photographic Materials Co. (Limited) v. Comptroller-General of Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks, 47 W. R. 152, [1898] A. C. 571, 15 Rep. Pat. Cas. 476, commented on.

Where a motion to rectify the register by the removal of a trade mark more than five years old is heard together with an action for infringement of the trade-mark as one matter, the court has power under section 77a of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, to grant a certificate that the right to the exclusive use has come in question.

Action and motion.

In March, 1890, the plaintiffs and respondents, J. C. & J. Field (Limited) registered the word "Savonol" as a trade-mark for common soaps, detergents, and soft soaps, as No. 96,997. The defendants and applicants, the Wagel Syndicate (Limited), were incorporated in 1899, and had been trading in soft soap under the name of "Savoline." The plaintiffs in the action asked for an injunction to restrain the defendants from passing off their goods as the plaintiffs' goods, and to restrain the infringement of the plaintiffs' trade-mark. The defendants brought a cross-motion for an order that the trade-mark register might be rectified by the removal of the trade-mark No. 96,997. The judge before whom the matters were pending made an order that the motion was to be heard with the action, and on the same oral evidence. Accordingly, upon the trial of the action and hearing of the motion, this course was followed, and the action and motion were treated as one matter. The case, however, is reported upon the questions that arise in respect of the motion to rectify. It was admittted at the trial that the word "savon" had been for many years used in the soap trade, as in the case of the toilet soaps, "Savon de luxe," "Savon regina," "Savon velours."

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

John Cutler, Q.C., and A. J. Walter, for the applicants, the Wagel Syndicate (Limited).—The comptroller does not appear, as we have undertaken to give him notice if we ask for anything except simple removal of the mark. The application to rectify must be by motion, as the mark is five years old: Apollinaris Co. v. Herrfeldt, 4 Rep. Pat. Cas. 478. We are "parties aggrieved": Batt (John) & Co. v. Dunnett, [1899] A. C. 428, 15 Rep. Pat. Cas. 534. "Savonol" is not an invented word. It is composed of "savon," which is French for soap, and is commonly used in the soap trade, and of the affix "ol." It therefore only slightly differs from a word indicating character or quality. You could not register, e.g., "Win-ol" for a kind of wine, just as you cannot register "Satinine" for starch to produce a satin appearance: see remarks of Lord Herschell in Eastman Photographic Materials Co. (Limited) v. Comptroller-General of Patents, &c.

H. Terrell, Q.C., and Sebastian, for the respondents, J. C. & J. Field (Limited), were not called on on the motion.

BUCKLEY, J.—The defendant company, incorporated in 1890, say that they are "persons aggrieved" by the word "Savonol" being upon the register because, being traders in soft soap, the area of their trade is affected by that fact. I have then to consider whether "Savonol" is an invented word. By section 10 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1888, substituted for section 64 of the former Act, a trade-mark may be (sub-section (d)) "an invented word" or "invented words," and (sub-section (e)) a word or words having no "reference to the character or quality of the goods, and not being a geographical name." The case of The Eastman Photographic Materials Co. (Limited) v. The Comptroller-General of Patents, &c., decides that an invented word can be registered, although it has reference to the character or quality of the goods, that is to say, that sub-section (d) has to be read by itself, and not in conjunction with sub-section (e). [His lordship then read passages from the judgments of the learned law lords in Eastman, &c., Co. (Limited) v. The Comptroller of Patents, &c., on pages 47 W. R. 152–154, [1898] A. C. 577, 581.] The termination "ine" in "Satinine," referred to by Lord Herschell, and in such words as "crystalline" and "maltine" indicates a resemblance to the principal word. The word "Savonol" has to me no meaning. I am not acquainted with "ol" as an affix to express a sub-meaning of the principal word. It means nothing as far as I know. Mr. Cutler puts to witnesses words like "savonette," which is to me a totally different thing, "ette" is a form of diminutive in French, and "savon" is soap, but "savonal" has no meaning. Lord Macnaghten says, page 47 W. R. 155, [1898] A. C. 583, "If it is an invented word, if it is 'new and freshly coined' (to adopt an old and familiar quotation), it seems to me that it is no objection that it may be traced to a foreign source, or that it may contain a covert or skilful allusion to the character or quality of the goods." If "Savonol" does suggest to the hearer "savon," and if he happens to know French—I take it many of the people who buy soft soap do not know French—he might think that it was "a covert or skilful allusion to the character or quality of the goods." But Lord Macnaghten says that this is no objection. It is true Lord Shand says (47 W. R. 155, [1898] A. C. 585), "The employment of a word in such" (i.e., ordinary or common) "use with a diminutive or a short and meaningless syllable added to it, or a mere combination of two known words, would not be an invented word, and a word would not be invented which with some trifling addition or some trifling variation still leaves the word one which is well known or in ordinary use. . . . It is on these words that the applicants principally rely. . . ." I do not think Lord Shand intended anything different from what was said by the other learned lords. The applicants rely on the fact that for many years people who in the trade have spoken of soap by the French instead of by the English word. I do not think that that makes "Savonol" any more or less an invented word. The motion to rectify the register fails.

[In the action for infringement his lordship held that the infringement was proved, and gave judgment for the plaintiffs.]

Terrell, Q.C., asked for a certificate under section 77*a* of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, that the right to the exclusive use of the mark had come in question. Cutler, Q.C., pointed out that there was a difficulty in the court doing this, as the section only applied to cases where the right to the exclusive use had come into question in an action for infringement, and that here it had come in the motion, and could only come on in a motion, as it was a five-years' mark.

Terrell, Q.C., and Sebastian, for the respondents.—The motion and action came on as one matter, and therefore the right to the exclusive use may be said to have come into question in the action.

They cited the following cases where certificates had been granted: Barlow & Jones (Limited) v. Jabez Johnson & Co., 7 Rep. Pat. Cas. 395; Apollinaris Co. (Limited) v. Snook, 7 Rep. Pat. Cas. 474, at p. 478; and Pinto v. Badman, 8 Rep. Pat. Cas. 181, but these were cases where the trade-mark was not five years old, or where the question had not been raised. They also referred to Benjamin Edginton (Limited) v. John Edginton (Limited), 6 Rep. Pat. Cas. 513, 38 W. R. Dig. 197.

BUCKLEY, J.—Where there is an action for infringement and a motion to rectify the register, the question as to the right to the exclusive use of the trade-mark may come in question upon the motion and not in the action if you are going to divide the two. I have to determine whether in this case the right came in question in the action, if "action" in section 77*a* means action as distinguished from motion. The mark in this case has been registered more than five years, with the result that under section 76 of the Act the registration is conclusive evidence of the right to the exclusive use subject to the provisions of the Act, one of which (section 90) enables the court on a motion to rectify, to remove the mark. In a sense, then, the right to the exclusive use of this mark cannot come in question in the action, but only on the motion, the jurisdiction of the court being a statutory one. But if I could not in this case give the certificate, it seems to me that the owner of a trade-mark registered for more than five years could in no case get a certificate under section 77*a*. This result is so inconsistent with the spirit of the Act that I do not think I ought to come to such a conclusion. I think that under the circumstances of this case I can, and I do therefore, decide that the right has come in question in the action; and I shall give the certificate asked for.

I wish to add that the order I am making is in some sense ex parte, as the defendants and applicants are not interested in the question. If hereafter a defendant in some future action is sought to be charged with solicitor and client costs upon the strength of this certificate it will be perfectly competent for him to argue that the court had no jurisdiction to make it, and the question can then be decided after both sides have been heard.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, Edward Chester.

Solicitors for the defendants, Lemprière & Co.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 19.

FENNER v. BLAKE. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Tenancy from year to year not in writing—Parol agreement to give up possession of premises at a particular date—Surrender by operation of law—Estoppel by conduct—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 3.

Under a three years' agreement in writing the defendant B. became tenant of certain premises belonging to the plaintiff F., and after the expiration of his tenancy in March, 1898, B. remained on in possession as tenant from year to year.

In December, 1898, B. asked F. to release him from his tenancy, and it was verbally agreed that B. should go out on the 24th of June following. F. placed a notice board on the premises that the same were "to be let," and subsequently sold the premises to a third party, who bought with possession at Midsummer, 1899.

On the 24th of June, 1899, the defendant refused to give up possession.

In an action of ejectment brought by F. against B.,

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment on two grounds: (1) Because the agreement of December, although bad as an agreement to surrender by reason of it not being in writing, was neveertheless an acceptance of a new tenancy by B., which was to end at Midsummer, 1899, and that acceptance worked a surrender of the old tenancy by operation of law; and (2) because the defendant, by his conduct in standing by and permitting the plaintiff to contract an obligation with the purchaser, was estopped from denying that his tenancy was other than that upon the footing of which he allowed his landlord to sell the property to the purchaser.

Appeal by the defendant from the judgment of the judge of the county court of Norfolk, holden at Yarmouth, who had entered judgment for the plaintiff in an action for possession of a tan-office, shop and premises. The appeal was brought on the ground that the defendant was tenant from year to year from March, 1898, and that no sufficient notice to determine the tenancy had been given or proved; and that an alleged agreement to quit or surrender the premises being verbal only, it was, if proved insufficient at law, to determine the tenacy or entitle the plaintiff to possession by reason of section 3 of the Statute of Frauds.

The premises were originally let by the plaintiff to the defendant on the 25th of March, 1895, for three years at a rental of £40 per annum, and after the expiration of the three years the defendant remained on, and continued to pay rent as before as tenant of the premises from year to year. The plaintiff at the trial gave evidence to the effect that in December, 1898, the defendant asked to be released from his tenancy, and that an arrangement was then come to whereby the defendant was to give up possession on the 24th of June, 1899. A board was put up stating that the premises were "To be let." On the 8th of February the defendant made an offer of £30 a year for the premises, which was refused. The plaintiff subsequently found a purchaser to whom he agreed to sell the premises with possession on the 24th of June. He informed the defendant that he had sold the premises, and told him he could leave on the 25th of March if he chose. This the defendant refused to do unless he had a quarter's rent, £10, allowed him, saying that otherwise he should stay on until the 24th of June. In cross-examination the plaintiff said: "The agreement was mutual and came to this—that if the defendant found a tenant, the tenancy should be given up. I did not refuse to release him. I did not refuse to accept a tenant in his place. Six months' notice was understood from the date of our interview in December. He might have gone out in March if he had wished, but he wanted £10 for doing so. In the ordinary course of events the tenancy would have terminated in March, 1900. The agreement between us was that the defendant should remain till June, unless in the meantime another tenant was found.

On the 24th of June the defendant refused to give up possession. The plaintiff brought ejectment. At the hearing the defendant pleaded that the agreement to surrender the premises in June, not being in writing was void, and that his tenancy had therefore not been terminated.

The learned county court judge gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

T. Willes Chitty, for the defendant.—The agreement of December, 1898, was clearly bad as a surrender, for the surrender of a tenancy by section 3 of the Statute of Frauds must be in writing, whether the existing tenancy from year to year was created by parol or by implication: Taylor v. Chapman Peake N. P. Ad. Cas. 19; Mollett v. Brayne, 2 Camp. 103. The plaintiff's acceptance of the defendant's offer to quit did not operate as a surrender by operation of law: Johnstone v. Hudlestone, 4 B. & C. 922. [CHANNELL, J., referred to Lyon v. Reed, 13 M. & W. 285, where it was held that a surrender by deed is unnecessary where the former lessee is the party who takes the new lease, as the fact of his so doing is evidence that the new lease has been accepted by him and such acceptance operates as a surrender in law; but it is not enough that the lessee agrees to an act done by the reversioner.] In Phené v. Popplewell, 10 W. R. 523, 12 C. B. N. S. 334, it was held that a parol agreement by a tenant from year to year to surrender followed by a lease or sale to a third person with the tenant's consent and the tenant gave up possession, operated as a surrender, but here the tenant never did give up possession.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

See also Wallis v. Hands, 41 W. R. 471, [1893] 2 Ch. 75.

H. Dobb, for the plaintiff.—The landlord sold the premises to a third party acting in good faith on an agreement under which the defendant agreed to give up possession before the termination of his tenancy. In Phené v. Popplewell, it was held that there had been a surrender of the premises by operation of law, by agreement of the parties followed by a taking possession on the part of the landlord. Here the landlord having altered his position on the faith of the agreement to surrender, the defendant is estopped from disputing that his tenancy was not terminated in June, and when there has been a dealing with the property by the landlord with the tenant's consent, the latter, who stands by, cannot afterwards set up the Statute of Frauds.

T. Willes Chitty, in reply.—In Phené v. Popplewell the landlord entered, but here there has been no possession by the plaintiff inconsistent with the continuance of the defendant's term: Oastler v. Henderson, 2 Q. B. D. 575, 25 W. R. Dig. 198. For the same reason this case differs from Lyon v. Reed and is within the principle laid down in Baring v. Abington (1892), 2 Ch. 374.

CHANNELL, J.—This case becomes of some importance owing to the number of cases that have been cited during the argument. I think myself that the judgment of the county court judge must be affirmed, because it appears to me that there are two grounds upon either of which the plaintiff is entitled to succeed. The defendant was a tenant who had an ordinary tenancy from year to year terminable by notice in March. The parties met in December, 1898; the defendant said he wanted to get rid of his tenancy, and not having given notice to quit in the folowing March, they agreed that the tenancy should end in the following June. The question is, What is the effect of that parol agreement? It is by no means uncommon for a landlord and tenant to meet and agree verbally to an alteration as to the rent to be paid in future, and at all events in cases where the tenancy was such that the contract creating it was not required by law to be in writing, as in the case of a tenancy from year to year, a parol variation of the terms as to rent would be perfectly good and sufficient in point of law. Then why may not equally an agreement as to the alteration of the date when the tenancy shall be determinable be a binding agreement though not in writing? Here the defendant agreed to accept a new tenancy for six months terminable in June in the place of the existing tenancy, and on the authorities the acceptance of a new tenancy works a surrender of the old tenancy by operation of law, and therefore on that ground the action is maintainable.

But there is also another ground why the plaintiff should succeed since the facts raise an ordinary case of estoppel, which is not displaced by the case of Lyon v. Reed relied on by Mr. Chitty. The defendant was in possession of the premises and he wanted to go away. He consented to his landlord selling the premises with a right to a purchaser to possession on a certain day in June—namely, the day in June that he said he would go out. The landlord sells with possession at that date, and thereby rendered himself liable to an action at the suit of the purchaser if it turned out he was unable to give him possession at that date. All this having been done by the landlord with the tenant's consent, it seems to me clear that the tenant is estopped from saying that his tenancy, whatever it was in fact, did not run out until after June.

It is an invariable practice when a reversion is put up to auction for the vendor to state what the terms of the tenancy are and when it expires, and if the tenant is communicated with before the sale and agrees that his tenancy is of such and such a character and thereupon the vendor so describes it and the property is sold on that footing, it is impossible to contend that the tenant is not estopped from saying that the tenancy is other than that upon the footing of which the property was sold. On this ground of estoppel also, in my opinion, the county court judge was right.

BUCKNILL, J.—I am of the same opinion. There seems to me to be ample evidence from the judge's notes that the parties here agreed that there should be a new tenancy for six months terminating in June and the acceptance of such a new tenancy amounts to a surrender by operation of law of the then existing tenancy. I also entirely agree with what my brother Channell has said upon the point of estoppel. Upon both grounds I think the judgment appealed from should be supported.

Appeal dismissed; leave to appeal refused.

Solicitors for the appellant, Torr, Gribble, Oddie, & Co., for Danby, Palmer, & Blake, Great Yarmouth.

Solicitors for the respondent, Howard & Fenner.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Ridley and Darling, JJ.) Nov. 3.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (Appellants) v. READ (Respondent). (a.)

Bread—Sale of, otherwise than by weight—3 Geo. 4, c. 106, s. 4.

An inspector employed by the London County Council sent a man to purchase a loaf of bread at the respondent's shop. The man entered the shop and asked for a twopenny loaf, and was accordingly served by the respondent with a loaf for which he paid twopence. The loaf, before being handed to him, was not weighed by anyone in the shop in his presence, nor was any statement made to him as to its weight. On being weighed by the inspector, it was found to be 2¾oz. short of a 2lb. loaf. The loaf was similar in shape and appearance to loaves which are usually sold as 2lb. loaves.

Held, on a summons being taken out against the respondent under section 4 of the Bread Act of 1822, for selling bread otherwise than by weight, that it was no answer to the charge that the purchaser asked for a loaf of a specified value, and did not ask for a loaf of any particular weight.

Case stated.

This was a case stated by the justices of the peace for the County of London.

Upon the hearing before the justices at the Town Hall, Kensington, on the 21st of March, 1899, of a summons upon complaint made by Harry Christopher Strugnell, an inspector in the employment of the London County Council (hereinafter called the appellants), against William Read (hereinafter called the respondent), that the respondent on the 15th of March, 1899, did sell, or caused to be sold, bread in other manner than by weight, contrary to the statute 3 Geo. 4, c. 106, s. 4, the following facts were proved.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The respondent is a grocer and general dealer carrying on business at a shop No. 202, North End-road, Fulham.

On the 15th of March H. C. Strugnell, in the course of his duties as an inspector appointed by the appellants, sent one Alfred Bond to purchase a loaf of bread at that shop.

Alfred Bond thereupon entered the shop and asked for a twopenny loaf. He was accordingly served by the respondent with a loaf for which he paid twopence. The loaf before being handed to him was not weighed by anybody in the shop in his presence, nor was any statement made to him as to its weight. There was no evidence given that it ever had been weighed, but the respondent stated (not on oath) that all the bread he sold at twopence was weighed beforehand. It was subsequently weighed by H. C. Strugnell and found to be 29¼ozs.—i.e., 2¾ozs. short of a 2lb. loaf.

The loaf was an ordinary cottage loaf, similar in shape and appearance to loaves which are usually sold as 2lb. loaves.

It was contended for the appellants that the loaf so sold was, under the circumstances, sold otherwise than by weight, and that the respondent had been guilty of an offence against section 4 of 3 Geo. 4, c. 106.

On behalf of the respondent it was contended that he was not asked for bread by weight, but was asked for a twopenny loaf, and supplied one accordingly of that value. It was further contended that he was not a baker, but a seller of bread. That he bought this particular bread knowng it to be under 2lb., it having been made at 1¾lb. each loaf on purpose for sale at twopence a loaf, that he could not afford to sell 2lb. in weight at twopence; and that his price for 2lb. loaves was twopence halfpenny for "Chibnall's" and twopence three-farthings for "V. V." bread.

The magistrates were of opinion that if the purchaser had asked for a 2lb. loaf they should, of course, have convicted the respondent, but as he asked for a twopenny loaf they were of opinion that the vendor was under no obligation to sell him 2lb. of bread or any particular weight. They were further of opinion, having regard to the statement of the defendant, that the bread had been weighed at some time before the sale, although not by the respondent, to ascertain that it was under 2lb., so as to enable the vendor to sell it at twopence.

The justices therefore dismissed the summons.

The question for the decision of the court was whether their decision was right in law.

By the Bread Act, 1822 (3 Geo. 4, c. 106) s. 4 (which is the same as section 4 of the Bread Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 37), it is provided as follows: "From and after the commencement of this Act all bread sold beyond the limits aforesaid shall be sold by the several bakers or sellers of bread respectively beyond the said limits by weight; and in case any baker or seller of bread beyond the limits aforesaid shall sell or cause to be sold bread in any other manner than by weight, then and in such case every such baker or seller of bread shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding forty shillings, which the magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices, before whom such offender or offenders shall be convicted shall order and direct; provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prevent or hinder any such baker or seller of bread from selling bread usually sold under the denomination of French or fancy bread or rolls without previously weighing the same."

Horace Avory, for the appellants.—The decision of the magistrates was wrong; the justices thought that the fact of purchasers asking for bread of no particular weight relieved the vendor from the obligation of selling by weight. That is not so. The policy of the enactment is that all bread other than French or fancy should be sold by weight, and in no other manner. In the case of Hill v. Browning, 19 W. R. 21, L. R. 5 Q. B. 453, which was decided under section 4 of the Bread Act of 1836, which section is similar to the section under which the respondent in the present case was proceeded against, it was held that the bread must be weighed as bread before being sold, and that it is not sufficient that it be weighed in the raw state as dough.

No counsel appeared on behalf of the respondent.

Ridley, J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the justices in this case was wrong, and that they ought to have convicted the respondent. It is unfortunate that no one appears for the respondent to put before us something that might be argued on his behalf, and in the absence of anyone doing so we are unable to find such argument. We think the case must be remitted to the magistrates with the intimation that in our opinion they ought to have convicted.

Darling, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellants, W. A. Blaxland.

---

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). March 1.

Cartwright v. Soulcoates Union. (a.)

Poor law — Rating — Assessment — Rateable value — Licensed premises—Trade profits.

When assessing licensed premises for the poor rate, the existence of the licence and the amount of business done thereon is proper matter of inquiry and consideration. Evidence of the actual profits made by the occupier are also admissable, but is to be avoided where possible.

Dodds v. South Shields Assessment Committee, 43 W. R. 532, [1895] 2 Q. B. 133, commented on.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1899] 1 Q. B. 667, 47 W. R. Dig. 148) affirmed.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal (Earl of Halsbury, L.C., and A. L. Smith and Collins, L.JJ.), affirming that of the Divisional Court.

The appellant was tenant and occupier of the "Star and Garter" public-house, which was fully licensed, situate at the corner of two streets in the city and county of Kingston-upon-Hull.

By the rate for the relief of the poor, now appealed against, the appellant was rated on an assessment in respect of the said premises of £850 gross estimated rental, and £680 net rateable value.

The appellant gave notice of appeal to the general quarter sessions of the peace for the city and county of Kingston-upon-Hull against the rate and assessment, on the ground that he was over-rated.

(a.) Reported by C. H. Grafton, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By an agreement and by an order of Day, J., the matters of the said appeal were by consent ordered to be referred to the arbitration of a barrister-at-law. The arbitrator, after hearing the parties and the evidence adduced by them, made his award in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division.

On the hearing before the arbitrator, cross-examination of the appellant took place as to his weekly takings and payments; and evidence was given as to the actual number of persons observed to enter the appellant's premises during a certain period of fourteen days (during which they were under observation by the respondents), and a deduction therefrom of the amount of the annual trade done upon the premises by the appellant; and valuations of the premises on the basis that such an annual trade is done upon them, and including therein the value of such trade.

The arbitrator rejected the evidence of and disallowed the cross-examination of the appellant as to his weekly takings and payments, and found as a fact that—first, the goodwill attached to the premises, so far as it consisted of the personal connection between the appellant and his customers, was non-existent, or, if existent, of inappreciable value; secondly, that the personal qualities and capacity for business or management possessed by the appellant had no effect on the trade done or the profits made in the premises.

The arbitrator also held that, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the assessment of the appellant's premises, it was lawful to take into account—(a) the value of the trade already done there; (b) the value of the goodwill attached to the premises so far as it consists of the probability that the customers now resorting to the premises will continue to do so, whether the appellant continues to occupy the premises or not.

This was affirmed by the Divisional Court and the Court of Appeal.

Balfour Browne, Q.C., and H. S. Cautley, for the appellant.

Bray, Q.C., and R. Cunningham Glen, for the respondents.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—Notwithstanding the able argument on the part of the appellants, I think this is a very simple case. To my mind it is a question of common sense and not a question of law. It is a question of common sense, having regard to the plain language of the Act of Parliament. What your lordships have to consider is whether the learned arbitrator proceeded on the lines on which the Act of Parliament directs or fairly indicates that he ought to proceed.

Now, what has the learned arbitrator done? He has found that in this particular case there does not exist the ordinary basis of computation, and he has excluded any inquiry into profits. In that I think he was perfectly right; not that the profits if they could be ascertained would not be an element in arriving at the rent which a tenant might reasonably be expected to pay, but that any further inquiry into profits should be avoided, because it would be oppressive. There is nothing that a tradesman so much dislikes as any inquiry into his profits. In some cases possibly it cannot be avoided, and then, according to the decided cases, it may be done; but in this case there has been no inquiry into profits. What the learned arbitrator has done is—he has taken into consideration the amount of business which this public-house was doing. Was he wrong in that? Surely the very first thing that a tenant who was going to make an offer for a house of this sort would do would be to consider (roughly, if he could not do it accurately) what amount of business he was likely to do there. It appears to me that the volume of business done in a public-house as apparent to the man in the street, if I may use such an expression, is the very first thing that a tenant proposing to make an offer for such a house would take into consideration. That really is all that the arbitrator has done. That, according to the case to which Mr. Bray referred us, which came before Lord Denman, is clearly one of the circumstances which would guide a person valuing the rent of such a house as this.

I think that the judgment of the Court of Appeal is perfectly right, and I do not think it is necessary to say anything more, because it is very inexpedient to multiply decisions, or to paraphrase the language of an Act of Parliament, or to lay down anything which in another case could be treated as a rule. All we have to consider is whether, in the particular circumstances of this case the arbitrator is right or wrong. I think he is perfectly right. Therefore I move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord MORRIS.—I concur, and I especially concur in the opinion that this is a very plain case.

The Act of Parliament states very concisely that the question to be solved is, what would it be reasonably expected that the premises would let for to a tenant? That has been paraphrased (and personally I do not object to it) into, what would a hypothetical tenant pay? Now, there does not appear to me to be any law at all in that question. I am told that two great divisions have been made by those who have built a superstructure of law upon that rather simple line in the Act of Parliament—into what are called "exceptional cases" and "ordinary cases," but I can find no such distinction in the Act of Parliament. The Act of Parliament leaves it general. The tribunal that has to assess is to decide what the premises would be reasonably expected to be let for. That may in certain cases like railways, gas companies, docks, &c., be most difficult to ascertain, because there is no probability—I might almost say no possibility—of considering that there a tenant would ever arise to take it. Therefore, in that case the tribunal is obliged to resort to a discussion as to the amount of profits that have been made, and to deduce some sort of estimate in a rough way from that to solve the problem of what the hypothetical tenant would pay.

The present case relates to a public-house, which is at a corner—they generally are, so as to capture two streets—and it is said that it was not competent for the arbitrator as a matter of law to take into consideration the amount of profits or to weigh that in his mind largely or lightly. I am sure I do not know which, because this case has been rather dealt with as if appeals could be made to the Court of Queen's Bench, the Appeal Court, and this House as to whether the arbitrator came to a right conclusion, not in point of law, but in point of fact. What error did he make in point of law? He asked himself almost the very first question that the hypothetical tenant would ask—namely, is this a house doing a good business or a bad business? Is it a house with what is properly called a roaring business, or is it a house that is going down for some reason or other, such as there being other houses in its neighbourhood? That is the very first question that a hypothetical tenant would put to himself. What have been the profits that have been made in it?—because that is the best proof as to whether it is doing a good business or not. True it is said A. B. might make good profits, but C. D. might lose. All that, it is to be presumed, the arbitrator would consider; he would not value it on the principle that it was always to have superlatively good occupiers, or the worst of occupiers. I suppose he would as a sensible man take a sort of average between them. The contention, as I understand it, is that the arbitrator in deciding that question as to what a hypothetical tenant would pay is to be precluded as a matter of law from entering upon the very question which, as I have said, in my opinion, is almost the first question that the hypothetical tenant would put. It is true that the best way of ascertaining what the trade was which was going on would be the production of the books of the then tenant; but that was objected to. It is suggested that the case of Dodd v. South Shields Assessment Committee 43 W. R. 532, [1895] 2 Q. B. 133, decided that that is improper evidence. If it did so decide, I can only say that I entirely disagree with it; and not being bound by it here, as the Lord Chancellor was when sitting in the Court of Appeal—if it goes that length—I have not had the opportunity of looking into it. I am entirely of an opposite opinion.

It is said that this would be an inquisitorial inquiry, a mischievous one, and several other adjectives are applied to it. I do not see how it is inquisitorial if the parties themselves are ready to bring the evidence forward. There is no force put on a publican to produce his books; he is not in this inquisition threatened with the screw, and if he chooses not to bring forward his books he need not do so; and the arbitrator is then obliged to forage about for the purpose of ascertaining in the best way he can, under those circumstances, what the profits would be. As I have said, that question, in my opinion, is one of the most important factors in arriving at a conclusion as to what a sensible man would pay as rent for the premises.

On these grounds I am clearly of opinion that the decision of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed.

Lord SHAND.—I am of the same opinion. The simple question which had to be answered by the arbitrator, and which this House has now to consider in dealing with his award, is—At what rent would the premises be reasonably expected to let from year to year? I am of opinion with your lordships that the arbitrator has taken the proper elements into view in deciding that question.

It may be that in a case of this class it is not competent to prove, as the courts have held in Dodds' case, the amount of the actual detailed profits made by the tenant in the particular house in bygone years. The true ground for so holding is, I think, that such proof is or might be of an inquisitorial character. I can very well understand that on the part of the tenants it may be a very reasonable objection for them to make to evidence of that kind, that it would rip up affairs which they are not bound to disclose to the public in questions of this kind. If it were not so, it seems to me that such evidence would be admitted as an important element in ascertaining what trade has been done in the house; for really it appears to me that this would be the element of all others which a tenant might be expected to take into view in fixing the rent he ought to give for the premises. In this case the arbitrator made the trade actually done the main element in ascertaining the trade which might be expected to be done, and in reaching the rent which might reasonably be expected. In doing this I am of opinion that he was right, and I therefore concur with your lordships that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

Lord DAVEY.—I am of the same opinion, and I am so entirely satisfied with the judgments which were delivered in the Court of Appeal that I should not trouble your lordships with any observations were it not for the use which has been made in the argument addressed to your lordships of Dodds v. South Shields Assessment Committee. That case has been presented to us by counsel for the appellant as if it laid down some great principles of law. They elevated the distinction which is drawn in the judgments in that case between what they call exceptional cases and cases which are not exceptional into a principle of law, and they have gravely argued before your lordships that evidence which is admissible in the one case is not admissible in the other case. I say at once that I do not understand Dodds' case to have laid down any rule of the law of evidence; in my opinion, the learned judges merely intended to sanction the practice which had obtained in dealing with these cases of rating. I do not understand them to have laid down any new principle nor any old principle in the law of evidence, and if I thought that they had intended to lay it down that evidence which would be admissible in what the learned counsel is pleased to call exceptional cases would not be admissible in point of law in other cases, all I can say is I should hesitate very long before I accepted Dodds' case as correctly laying down the law.

The question whether evidence of a particular class is or is not admissible in prosecuting the inquiry which the statute prescribes to us—namely, what rent a tenant from year to year might reasonably be expected to give for the premises—must be the same question whatever the form of the inquiry be—whether the inquiry be of an easy character or whether it be of a complex character; whether it be in a case which occurs frequently in ordinary life or whether it be one that occurs only occasionally. It appears to me that all that Dodds' case purported to do was to lay down a very convenient rule of practice. It may be shortly stated, paraphrasing the language—for I am not intending to use the language that was used by the learned judges, but giving my own interpretation of it—that where the premises in question are premises of a character which have what may be described as a market price, where a valuer acquainted with that class of property can come and say, "Property of the class to which these premises belong lets for so much a year; I can readily procure a tenant for the premises for so much, and I cannot procure a tenant for more"—then you do not want to go into the trade done on the premises. You have there what the statute prescribes to you; and if you have evidence of that kind, if you have the market price and what Blackburn, J.—not using, I take the liberty to say, his own language, but the language of Adam Smith—calls the result of "the higgling of the market," you do not want to go into evidence of the particular character of the trade done on the premises; and in that case it is an exceedingly convenient rule of practice that you should not allow questions of an inquisitorial character which may be vexatious and mischievous to be addressed to the occupier of the premises unnecessarily.

Now, what is the true principle upon which this inquiry is to be conducted? I conceive it is that which is stated by Lord Blackburn in the Mersey Docks case, 22 W. R. 184, L. R. 9 Q. B. 84. It is quoted in the judgment of Collins, L.J., but I will take the liberty of beginning to read a little earlier: "If the hereditaments," he says, "are such as to afford peculiar facilities for carrying on any kind of business, that facility does, beyond all question, enhance the value of the occupation; but though the profits which may be reasonably expected to arise from such a business no doubt form an element in estimating the enhanced value of the occupation of the premises, the actual profits made do not form any element, except in so far as they afford evidence of what might be reasonably expected to be made from the occupation of premises affording facility for carrying on such a business." I say, in answer to a suggestion that was made from the bar, that, in my opinion, Lord Blackburn was there laying down a general principle applicable to all such cases, and not merely one that applied only to exceptional cases where there is no market value or price or letting rent to which you can refer. I venture to think that that is founded upon common sense. I repudiate this distinction which has been made so much of, between exceptional and ordinary cases. You have in each case to find out in the best way you can what is the rent which a tenant may reasonably be expected to give, and if the best way under the particular circumstances is to ascertain the use which is made of the premises and the use which a tenant might expect to be able to make of the premises and the trade which he might reasonably expect to be able to carry on there; or, in other words, the facilities afforded by the premises for the carrying on of a large trade, that appears to me to be a most primary and elementary consideration in each case. If you are to take into account the fact that the premises command a trade, you must surely ask, what trade? Is it a large trade or is it a small trade? And I do not know myself any better test of what trade they may be expected to command than the trade which they actually do command. It is not that you rate the profits—it is not that you rate the man's skill and judgment and discretion in the mode of carrying on the business; but you have to ascertain what sort of a trade the hypothetical tenant, as he is called, may reasonably expect to be able to carry on on those premises.

I entirely agree in a passage in the Lord Chancellor's judgment, which I will take the liberty of quoting and adopting as an expression of my own mind. His lordship says: "It would be to my mind one of the most extraordinary things in the world if you could give expert evidence that such and such a house would be likely to command such and such a business, and yet not be able to verify that à priori opinion by proof of the fact that it did command such a business." A. L. Smith, L.J., says: "You may call it goodwill, or you may call it anything else you like, but it is legitimate evidence to show not only that it is a house capable of carrying on a good trade according to the matters which have to be taken into consideration by the hypothetical tenant; and he fortifies that evidence by saying it is carrying on a good trade because I see such and such things going on every day to my own knowledge."

That appears to me to sum up the whole of this case.

Lord BRAMPTON.—I am of the same opinion. It appears to me that, according to the dictates of good sense, the arbitrator has taken a very proper and correct view of this matter. The purport of the inquiry was, what would a tenant, who desired to carry on the business for which the house is adapted, in that house, give as the rent to a landlord who was willing to let the premises to him? It is said you must look at the value of the surrounding property, or, at all events, you are not to take into consideration the actual amount of the profit that was capable of being made in that house which is the subject of the inquiry.

In the first place, the proposition which is put forward by the arbitrator in the award which I have before me is this. He says: "I find as a fact that any person desiring to become a tenant of the appellant's premises in order to occupy them as a public-house would endeavour to ascertain the trade actually done thereon, by reference to the weekly or yearly takings, or otherwise, before deciding what rent he would pay." Undoubtedly it is obvious that is the course that any prudent intending tenant would take, and the question is, how is he to be satisfied with regard to what profits he could make if he did become a tenant and carried on the business in the house for which it was adapted? The house itself stands at the corner of the street—a very eligible position for a public-house to stand in. It is admirably adapted for the purpose of doing a large business, and it has a licence. The business that was carried on therein undoubtedly has yielded, as is admitted on all hands, a very considerable profit, and that profit in that position in that part of the town can only be made while the house stands there unapproached by any other of the same character. It can only be made by using that house, which has a licence already attached to it, in the way in which it has been used by the tenant for the last nineteen years. There is every reason to suppose that the customers who have been going there, spending their money and consuming liquor there, will continue to do in the future just as they have done in the past.

It is said that the trade is not to be taken into consideration. How would the landlord himself look at the matter apart from the tenant altogether? He would say: I have a house; it is a house capable of enabling a man to earn by diligence and the application of his own personal abilities £1,000 a year in that house. He wants to hire it from me. I am not going to let it to him for a mere percentage representing the interest upon what I have laid out in bricks and mortar upon the house; that would not represent what I think the value of the house is. It is upon a spot where custom is attracted to it. If he can make a thousand a year, as I think he can, I must have a suitable proportion—at all events a larger rent than I should have if the house were only capable of yielding him a profit of £100. I will put the case in this way: Supposing in a street which runs at right angles to another street so as to form in point of fact two streets two ordinary houses are built both alike in all their materials and in the accommodation which is provided. They are each licensed. The one house is let at £200 a year, but in that house there is very little custom done, but yet there is enough custom there to support a man who pays his £200 a year rent, and he is quite satisfied to pay that in that house. The house on the opposite side at the opposite corner of the street is capable of enabling a man to earn £1,000 a year. Is it right or reasonable or good sense to suppose that the landlord would let the one house for £200 a year to a man who could earn by diligence £1,000 a year in that house simply because the two houses were like each other? He must take into consideration the capability of the house, the position it is in, and the power it gives to a tenant who properly occupies it to make a very large sum of money for his own profit. It seems to me that common sense would dictate the course I have suggested to the landlord.

Now, what has the arbitrator done according to the finding?—for I rather prefer to take the language of the arbitrator himself. What has he found? He says: "I hold that although the profits of trade (as such) cannot be rated" (nobody contends they can), "yet in estimating the rateable value of a public-house, if the ability to carry on a gainful trade therein adds to the value of such public-house, that value cannot be excluded merely because it is referable to the trade." I think he has very properly found that, although the profits in this house cannot themselves report at all; but, as I say, the clue to the judgment is what I have already pointed out; and therefore, to my mind, that decision presents no difficulty at all in arriving at the conclusion I have indicated—namely, that this judgment ought to be affirmed; and I therefore move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I am of the same opinion. I think this case comes well within the principle of the decision in The Greta Holme, and on that I do not propose to add a single word. But, as I happen to have taken part in the decision of The City of Peking case in the Privy Council, I will say a few words about that case. I do not pretend to have a very accurate recollection of it; but I have endeavoured to refresh my memory, and, as far as my recollection goes, the question at issue in this case was not raised there. Certainly it was not raised directly, and I do not think it was presented to the court at all. In that case both the parties accepted up to a certain point the ruling of Dr. Lushington in the case of The Black Prince, Lush. 568. The only question was whether Dr. Lushington's ruling upon the particular facts of that case was applicable to the case of The City of Peking. In that case substituted service was provided, but the provision of substituted service was not a benefit at all to the persons injured by the collision, but to a different shipping company. In the case of The City of Peking, the parties admitted that the substituted service was provided at the expense of the wrongdoers, the Peninsular and Oriental Co., and that there had been no loss of profit whatever. Under those circumstances they claimed this extravagant amount or money in respect of the demurrage simply upon the authority of The Black Prince. They asked for nothing less. They asked for the whole sum as demurrage upon a vessel of that tonnage on the strength of the judgment of Dr. Lushington in The Black Prince. Their lordships had no hesitation in rejecting that claim, because, as my noble and learned friend said, that would have been paying them twice over. I really do not think the point now at issue was raised in that case, and I observe that that case was not cited in the Court of Appeal on either side or mentioned in the judgment.

Lord MORRIS.—I am of the same opinion. I am clearly of opinion that this case comes within the principle asserted by this House in the case of The Greta Holme, which I am equally clearly of opinion overruled the decision of the previous cases as regards the mode of the assessment of damages.

Lord SHAND.—I will only add a few words in expressing my entire concurrence in the decision about to be pronounced by this House.

There is no question of amount here involved, because the parties are agreed by the case that if any amount of damages is to be given the sum to be awarded is £300.

On the principle to be applied to the case, I think it important to notice what is observed by A. L. Smith, L.J., that there was a finding in the case by the registrar that this sixth lightship was kept at an expense of about £1,000 a year. The ship Orion was kept therefore, as it appears from the report, expressly for the purpose of meeting such an emergency as this, and it appears from the report itself that on no less than eleven occasions in twenty-five years a substitute has been called for and used in the case of a lightship being run down. In those circumstances, it appears to me that if the commissioners had hired a ship for the purpose of doing duty as a sixth lightship, finding that necessary in the course of their administration, there could have been no answer to their claim for the cost of hiring that ship. But if so, it appears to me that if there could have been no answer in that case, as little is there any answer here. In the case of that particular board, instead of waiting for an emergency suddenly occurring, they have thought fit to have a ship ready. It costs them £1,000 a year to have it ready. It appears to me that the expense of having this ship ready, instead of having to look for a ship when the emergency occurs, must properly fall upon the person who has been guilty of running down the lightship.

I am therefore of opinion that the judgment ought to be affirmed.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—I entirely concur in the judgment moved by the Lord Chancellor, and I will only add that I think there is a distinction between the case now at the bar and the case determined in the Privy Council, arising from the fact that in this case there has been expense incurred in providing the very remedy supplied in order to get rid of the effect of the act of the wrongdoer, whereas in The City of Peking case there was no expense incurred in order to remedy the injury. All that was done was to use a particular vessel that was already in existence without adding to the cost of the existence of that vessel. I think that is an additional ground for distinguishing the case in the Privy Council from the present case.

Lord BRAMPTON.—I am of the same opinion. I concur entirely in the judgment which has been pronounced by the Lord Chancellor in, I think, much better language than that in which I could have expressed it myself. One word, however, I desire to say with regard to The Orion, which was the substituted vessel in this case. She had been built by the respondents, and was maintained by them at great expense in order that, as between themselves and the public, they might have ready means at their command to obviate the great danger and inconvenience which might arise from such a misfortune as befel The Comet by the negligence of the appellants; but as between themselves and the wrongdoer causing the damage to The Comet they were under no obligation whatsoever to use The Orion at all. They might have used a hired vessel had they so pleased, in which case the liability for the hire would have been clear. But the respondents prudently, having a vessel suited for the purpose lying idle, thought it right in their discretion to use her instead of hiring perhaps a less efficient substitute for The Comet. The services of The Orion, however, were valuable; and why should the appellants claim to have them gratuitously, including the wages of the men who might have been employed on board her? They might equally claim gratuitously to have the services of skilled workmen—engineers hired by the year and paid by the respondents—who happened at the time to be idle, or to have no particular work in hand. That cannot be, and, in my judgment, is not, the law. In my opinion the value of the services ought to be paid as a compensation for the damage which accrued to the respondents by reason of the detention of their vessel under the circumstances. I concur, therefore, in thinking that this judgment ought to be affirmed, with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Thomas Cooper & Co., for Hill, Dickinson, & Co., Liverpool.

Solicitors for the respondents, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Squarey, Liverpool.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) } Feb. 22, 23, 26, 27 March 20.

ST. MARY, ISLINGTON, VESTRY v. HORNSEY URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

*Metropolis—Management—Sewer—Agreement to receive sewage of outside district—Ultra vires—Estoppel—Jurisdiction of court to grant injunction which will result in public nuisance—Metropolis Management Act,* 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 135, 138, 140, 250—Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 61—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55).

There is no provision in the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, or the Public Health Act, 1875, which authorizes a parish outside the metropolitan area to send its sewage into any sewer of any parish within that area, without the consent of such latter parish.

The vestry of a parish inside the metropolitan area has no higher power to grant its consent to a district outside the metropolitan area to send its sewage into the drains of such vestry than the Metropolitan Board of Works had to grant a similar consent under the provision of section 61 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862, as read in connection with sections 135, 138, 140, and 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. The Metropolitan Board of Works had power under the above sections to grant such consent as above mentioned only in the form of a revocable leave and licence, but no power to grant an irrevocable licence of the kind in perpetuity, or even for a definite period.

A public body with limited powers, which has purported to permit the doing of a certain act, the permission of which is ultra vires its powers, is not subsequently estopped by such permission from asserting its right to prevent what it has hitherto purported to permit, and even encouraged and agreed to allow.

The fact that, if an injunction be granted, a public nuisance will be a necessary consequence unless the persons against whom the injunction is granted take steps to prevent it, affords the latter no defence to an action for such an injunction, even if it be true that they cannot take steps to prevent the nuisance without obtaining statutory powers.

At the same time, the difficulty in which such an injunction would place the defendants will in many cases induce the court to use its discretion, and not to exert its jurisdiction to the utmost when it is not absolutely essential to do so.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (80 L. T. Rep. 746, 47 W. R. Dig. 128), reversed.

Appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J. (80 L. T. Rep. 746, 47 W. R. Dig. 128), given on the 9th of May, 1899, refusing to grant an injunction to restrain the defendants from permitting their sewage to flow into the Stroud Green sewer, the property of the plaintiffs.

The Stroud Green sewer was constructed by the Tottenham and Hampstead Junction Railway Co. in 1865 under the provisions of their special Act; and at the present time was vested in the plaintiffs under section 68 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and under section 59 of the special Act above mentioned. The whole of the said sewer was situated in the parish of St. Mary, Islington, which parish was within the metropolitan area. In 1868, or thereabouts, certain owners of land in the parish of Hornsey, which was wholly outside the metropolitan area, began to develop their property as building estates, and were allowed by the plaintiffs to make certain comparatively small openings (mostly 12in. pipes) into the Stroud Green sewer on certain conditions and on making certain payments. At the present time these openings were vested in the defendants under section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and the right (if any) of the said landowners to drain into the Stroud Green sewer had been transferred to the defendants.

In 1883 the defendants were permitted by the plaintiffs, for a certain consideration, to enlarge two of the above-mentioned openings by inserting two 18in. pipes instead of a 12in. and a 15in. pipe respectively. Subsequently to this last-mentioned period considerable further building operations had taken place in Hornsey; and a large number of extra houses now drained, by means of the aforesaid openings, into the Stroud Green sewer, with the result that in storm time so much sewage and surface water was now sent down from the Hornsey district through the before-mentioned openings that the Stroud Green sewer was unable to accommodate it; the sewage was forced up through the gullies and manholes; and there resulted an intolerable nuisance.

The plaintiffs accordingly sought an injunction to restrain the defendants from any longer permitting their sewage to flow into the plaintiffs' sewer.

Kekewich, J., however, refused to grant the injunction sought for on the ground (inter alia) that the result of compelling the defendants to disconnect their drains from the Stroud Green sewer would be the immediate creation of another public nuisance; and that even supposing that it were competent for the court to grant so disastrous an injunction, it ought not in its discretion to be guilty of such a proceeding.

From this decision the plaintiffs now appealed.

Danckwerts, Q.C., and Micklem, Q.C., for the appellants.—(1) The defendants possess no statutory or other justification (unless they succeed in showing that we granted them a valid, irrevocable licence) for sending down their sewage into our sewers: Metropolitan Board of Works v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 29 W. R. 693, 17 Ch. D. 246; Attorney-General v. Acton Local Board, 31 W. R. 153, 22 Ch. D. 221; Attorney-General v. Clerkenwell Vestry, 40 W. R. 185, [1891] 3 Ch. 527; Brown v. Mayor, &c., of Dunstable, 47 W. R. 538, [1899] 2 Ch. 378. (2) The permission granted by us to the defendants in and after the year 1865 had application only to a limited number of houses. (3) Even this permission was of the nature of a revocable licence, and has now been duly revoked. (4) If such limited permission purported to be more than a revocable licence, then we say that, on our part it was ultra vires, and cannot, accordingly, be of any validity: Haywood v. Lowndes, 7 W. R. 279, 4 Drew. 454; Ashbury Railway, &c., Co. v. Riche, 24 W. R. 794, L. R. 7 H. L. 653, per Lord Cairns at p. 672; Mulliner v. Midland Railway Co., 27 W. R. 330, 11 Ch. D. 611; Metropolitan Board of Works v. London and North-Western Railway Co.; Hobbs v. Midland Railway Co., 30 W. R. 516, 20 Ch. D. 418; Ayr Harbour Trustees v. Oswald, 8 App. Cas. 623, at p. 634, 32 W. R. Dig. 112. (5) The practical inconvenience that would result from granting the injunction asked for, is no ground for refusing it: Goldsmid v. Tunbridge Wells Improvement Commissioners, 14 W. R. 562, L. R. 1 Ch. App. 349; Attorney-General v. London and North-Western Railway Co., [1900] 1 Q. B. 78.

Macmorran, Q.C., and F. Low, for the respondents.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

—(1) We had no power to prevent the builders of new houses in the Hornsey district from draining into these openings, although, when made, these drains came under our control under section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875. All we could do was to see that the drains at the time of their making duly complied with our bye-laws: Reg. v. Tynemouth Rural District Council, 44 W. R. 646, [1896] 2 Q. B. 451. (2) The licence given us was not ultra vires, for section 61 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, does not prohibit those who have the control of sewers in the metropolitan area from granting licence to those outside to drain into their system (Metropolitan Board of Works v. London and North-Western Railway Co.); and although licences are generally revocable, they become irrevocable when the grantees have incurred expense on the strength of them. (3) But even suppose that this licence was ultra vires—no one can take advantage of his own ultra vires as plaintiff, whatever he can do as defendant. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., referred to Burkinshaw v. Nicolls, 26 W. R. 819, 3 App. Cas. 1004.]

Cur. adv. vult.

March 20.—LINDLEY, M.R., delivered the judgment of the court: The appeal in this case raises two important questions—viz., whether the defendants are entitled to have the sewage from part of the parish of Hornsey pass down a sewer called Stroud Green sewer, which is in the parish of Islington, and is vested in the plaintiffs; and secondly, whether, if this question is decided against the defendants, the plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction to prevent such passage, seeing that, if it were prevented, a very serious public nuisance would be the consequence. The learned judge has dismissed the plaintiffs' action and they are the appellants; and the first question for our determination is—what rights, if any, the defendants have to send the contents of their sewers into the Stroud Green sewer, which is vested in the plaintiffs. These rights, if any, must be conferred by statute or be based on some agreement. A careful examination of the statutes leads to the negative conclusion that there is nothing in them which confers any such right apart from agreement. The statutes which have to be considered are the Public Health Act, 1875, and the Metropolis Management Acts, 1855 and 1862. These contain sections under which drains from private houses can be made into sewers, and under which arrangements can be made with the consent of the Metropolitan Board of Works for connecting sewers in the metropolis with the main sewers, and under which arrangements can be made between several parishes all within the metropolitan area for connecting the sewers of such parishes. But we have looked in vain for any enactment which provides for or authorizes a parish beyond the metropolitan area to send its sewage into any sewer of any parish within those limits without the consent of such parish. If, then, the plaintiffs are bound to receive the sewage from Hornsey it must be by virtue of some agreement or consent which they cannot recall; and it is upon such an agreement or consent that the defendants mainly rely. It is necessary, therefore, to ascertain what agreement or consent has been entered into, and its legal effect. There is no formal agreement under seal, nor any formal agreement to which the Metropolitan Board of Works were parties. But there is abundant evidence of arrangements between the plaintiffs and the defendants and persons in Hornsey by which the passage of some Hornsey sewage through the plaintiffs' Stroud Green sewer has been permitted for many years. These arrangements and the conduct of the plaintiffs are strongly relied upon by the defendants as disentitling the plaintiffs from any relief in this action, and Kekewich, J., has decided against them mainly on this ground. The appellants' counsel did not deny the facts relied upon by the defendants, but they contended that, although the plaintiffs had permitted Hornsey sewage to pass down their sewer for many years, they had done nothing to preclude them from recalling their permission if and when the Hornsey sewage so increased in bulk as to create a nuisance in Islington. They also contended that the plaintiffs could not in point of law bind themselves and the parish of Islington to receive Hornsey sewage for ever, or, indeed, for any definite period; and that in effect all that the plaintiffs had done, and all that they legally could do, was to grant revocable licences to various persons now represented by the defendants to empty their sewers into the Stroud Green sewer. The inability of the plaintiffs to do more than this is said to be established by the statutory enactments and by the decision of Hall, V.C., in Metropolitan Board of Works v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 14 Ch. D. 521, 28 W. R. Dig. 143, and affirmed on appeal, 29 W. R. 693, 17 Ch. D. 246. The Vice-Chancellor certainly expressed a strong opinion that even the Metropolitan Board of Works could not make a valid contract to admit buildings outside the metropolitan area into their drainage system. The Court of Appeal expressed no opinion on this point, but affirmed the Vice-Chancellor's decision on the ground that no such contract had in fact been entered into. The point turns mainly on section 61 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, which, however, has to be read in connection with sections 135, 138, 140, and 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. Having carefully studied these sections, we have come to the conclusion that the construction put upon them by Hall, V.C., is correct, and we adopt his reasoning on pp. 527-9 in the report. What the Metropolitan Board of Works could not do, the plaintiffs clearly cannot do. It follows that Mr. Danckwerts has, in our opinion, made good his contention that, whatever the plaintiffs may have permitted or even agreed to do, the legal effect of their conduct cannot be put higher than leave and licence to several persons to empty their sewers into the Stroud Green sewer. A grant of an easement or an enforceable agreement to grant an easement cannot be established in law even if proved in fact. A temporary permission is very different from a binding agreement or grant. This conclusion renders it necessary to examine very minutely what the plaintiffs have hitherto really assented to. [His lordship shortly reviewed the facts.] These are the main facts relied upon by the defendants as precluding the plaintiffs from obtaining relief in this action. Now this is not a question affecting the plaintiffs as private individuals. They are a public body, with public duties, and with rights and powers conferred upon them for the purpose of enabling them to discharge those duties. This must be borne in mind in considering the effect of their past conduct, when that is relied upon as estopping them from asserting a right to put an end to what they have permitted, and even encouraged and agreed to allow. If this were an information by the Attorney-General, instead of an action by the Islington Vestry, the defendants would, in our opinion, have no defence whatever to the claim for an injunction. Considering who the plaintiffs are, we cannot think that they are estopped at law or in equity from obtaining the relief they seek. In Fairtitle v. Gilbert, 2 T. R. 169, some turnpike trustees, who had power to mortgage their tolls, but not toll houses, mortgaged both by deed. They were, nevertheless, held entitled to recover the toll houses from their mortgagees; and the doctrine of estoppel was held inapplicable to the case, on the ground that the plaintiffs were a public body, with limited powers conferred by statute, and could not exceed those powers. Many other decisions to the same effect are to be found in the books, the most recent being The Great North-West Central Railway Co. v. Charlebois, [1899] A. C. 114, in the Privy Council, where a public company, who had entered into an agreement beyond its powers, and had consented to a judgment against it in an action brought on that agreement, was nevertheless held entitled to impeach both the agreement and the judgment, and both were set aside. For similar reasons the plaintiffs cannot, in our opinion, be treated as precluded from obtaining relief on the ground of laches and acquiescence. This is not a case in which the court can properly leave the plaintiffs to their legal remedies, for there are none which would be of any use to them. But, in considering the terms of the order which ought to be made, it is only right and proper to have regard to the fact that the plaintiffs have to some extent themselves brought about the present state of things. The fact that if an injunction were granted a nuisance would be a necessary consequence unless the defendants take steps to prevent it, affords them no defence to the action, even if it be true that they cannot prevent it without obtaining further statutory powers. It is the defendants' duty to keep the Hornsey sewage out of the plaintiffs' sewer, and the defendants cannot effectually urge their inability to perform their duty as a reason for the court doing nothing. Upon this point Attorney-General v. Council, &c., of Birmingham, 6 W. R. 811, 4 K. & J. 528, and Attorney-General v. Colney Hatch Lunatic Asylum, 17 W. R. 240, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 146, are well-known authorities. At the same time, the difficulty in which an injunction may place public bodies if compelled to close sewers under their control, but in daily use, has induced the court in many cases not to exert its jurisdiction to the utmost where it is not absolutely essential to do so. Attorney-General v. Acton Local Board, and other cases following it and cited in the argument, are illustrations of this reluctance. Having regard to these decisions and to the conduct of the plaintiffs we think that all that the court ought to do in this case at the present moment is to make a declaration establishing the plaintiffs' right to relief, and to give the defendants reasonable time to do what is necessary to prevent the flow of the Hornsey sewage down the Stroud Green sewer to the injury of the plaintiffs, and to give the plaintiffs liberty to apply for an injunction at the end of that time. This will give the defendants time to make other arrangements, and we trust will induce the plaintiffs to assist them in their endeavours to do what is necessary to drain their own district without invading the plaintiffs' rights. Such an order will, we think, be more just than an injunction now with a stay of execution. Such an injunction, however carefully worded, might prove unnecessarily oppressive. The order of the court, therefore, will be as follows: Allow the appeal and reverse the judgment of the court below, and order the defendants to pay the costs of the action and of the appeal. Declare that the defendants are not entitled to send sewage from any sewers in the parish of Hornsey into the Stroud Green sewer without the consent of the plaintiffs. And let the plaintiffs be at liberty to apply to the judge to whose court this action is attached at the end of twelve months from the date of this order for an injunction to enforce their rights as above declared.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Bramall, White, & Sanders; Tatham & Hardy.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Feb. 6, 8, 9, 12, 13; March 6.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL (ON THE RELATION OF THE POWELL DUFFRYN STEAM COAL CO.) v. GUARDIANS OF MERTHYR TYDFIL UNION. (a.)

Poor law — Relief — Improper relief—Strike—Wilful refusal to work—"Sudden and urgent necessity"—Poor Law Act, 1601 (43 Eliz. c. 2), ss, 1, 2—Poor Law Act, 1834 (4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76), ss. 15, 42, 52, 54, 105—Poor Law Audit Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 91), s. 4—Vagrants Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 3.

The payment by poor law guardians out of the poor rates of any money for setting to work or for the relief of able-bodied men, who are at the time able to obtain and perform work at wages sufficient to support themselves (and their wives and families, if any), is unlawful, and ought to be disallowed by the auditor on auditing the guardians' accounts. But this statement of the law does not include relief given to or for the wives and children of such men; and it is also without prejudice to, and is in no way to affect, the power of the Local Government Board to remit such disallowed payments, even although unlawfully made, under the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 91, s. 4, or any other statute enabling them so to do.

Decision of Romer, J. (80 L. T. Rep. 618, 47 W. R. Dig. 149), reversed.

It is not, however, lawful for guardians to refuse relief to those who are in immediate physical need of it, and are at the time unable to obtain and perform work, on the ground that such persons have reduced themselves to their present incapacity to obtain and perform work by their own wilful neglect and refusal to work in the past.

Appeal from a decision of Romer, L.J. — then Romer, J.—(80 L. T. Rep. 618, 47 W. R. Dig. 149), given on the 27th of March, 1899, to the effect that it was lawful for the Merthyr Tydfil Guardians to grant out-door relief to able-bodied strikers during the continuance of a coal strike in South Wales.

On the 31st of March, 1898, owing to the discontent of the colliers with the sliding scale of wages then in use in connection with the collieries in the neighbourhood of Merthyr Tydfil in South Wales, the colliers decided to stop work, and the collieries were accordingly closed. As a result of this strike a number of iron and steel workers in the locality were involuntarily thrown out of work. On the 11th of April the colliery owners, in order to induce the men to return to work, caused notices to be posted at the pit tops and other places offering them a substantial advance on their former rate of wages. These notices remained posted up at the collieries until the 18th of July, up to which date it was competent, as alleged by the plaintiff, for any single workman, or number of workmen, had he, or they, so desired, to resume work in the collieries on the advertised terms. The strikers, however, declined for many months to avail themselves of the opportunity thus offered. The notices thus posted had no application to labourers at the steel and iron works who were then out of occupation.

Towards the end of April, 1898, a large body of colliers and iron and steel workers, who were out of work by reason of the strike, applied for relief to the poor law guardians of the Merthyr Tydfil Union. On the 23rd of April the guardians resolved to form themselves into a committee to discuss the necessary arrangements; and on the 26th of April they resolved, on the recommendation of their poor law inspector, to open stoneyards, where required, throughout the union. Such yards were accordingly opened on the 10th of May, and on an average some 4,360 able-bodied strikers were daily employed at the yards, till the same were closed by another resolution of the board on the 6th of August. About 1,300 of those thus daily employed were labourers in the steel and iron works. The men employed in the yards were relieved, as to one-third, in money, and as to two-thirds, in kind; the amount being regulated in the case of each striker by the number of persons constituting his family. In order to raise the sums of money necessitated by the opening of the stoneyards, the board of guardians resolved on the 2nd of July that a call of £20,000 should be made on the parishes composing the union; and on the 9th of July orders were issued to the overseers of the different parishes for the levying of their respective assessments. On the 3rd of August, 1898, the writ was issued in the present action, which was instituted by the Attorney-General on the relation of the Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co. (Limited) on behalf of themselves and all others the ratepayers of the Merthyr Tydfil Union. The plaintiff sought (1) an injunction to restrain the board of guardians from defraying out of the common fund of the union the expenses of maintaining the before-mentioned stoneyards, and from defraying out of the said fund the expenses of relieving at such yards any able-bodied persons otherwise than in accordance with the statutes in relation to, and the orders of the Local Government Board regulating, the relief of the poor in the said union; (2) an injunction to restrain the board from issuing or enforcing or receiving payments in respect of any of the parishes in the said union towards the relief of the able-bodied persons in the said union otherwise than in accordance with the said statutes and orders; (3) a declaration that "the establishment and maintenance by the defendants of labour yards or relief works for the purpose of providing out-door relief for able-bodied persons, to the knowledge of the defendants otherwise able to maintain themselves and their families, and the expenditure by the defendants of part of the common fund of the union for the purpose of relieving such able-bodied persons and their families constituted a breach of the statutory duties of the defendants; (4) repayment to the common fund of the said union by the defendants of all moneys paid by them out of such fund to or for the able-bodied workmen already mentioned.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The power of the Merthyr Tydfil Union to grant relief to able-bodied paupers was regulated by two orders, dated respectively the 1st and the 29th of October, 1870, and made by the Local Government Board in pursuance of the authority for that purpose vested in them by section 52 of the Poor Law Act, 1834. The nature and contents of these orders, so far as is material to the present issue, are sufficiently set out in the judgment of Lindley, M.R., below.

It appeared from the evidence given at the trial of the action before Romer, J., on the 21st and 22nd of February, 1899, that in a large number of instances in which relief had been given to able-bodied strikers between the 10th of May and the 6th of August, 1898, no report had been made to the Local Government Board within the period of fifteen days provided for such report by section 152 of the Poor Law Act, 1834. In other cases, however, the requisite report had been duly made. Evidence was also called to prove (1) the reality of the distress; (2) that the workhouse was full; and (3) that no other practical method existed for granting relief except by means of the stoneyards.

Romer, J., declined to make any of the orders, or to grant the declaration asked for.

From this decision the plaintiff now appealed.

Neville, Q.C., Upjohn, Q.C., and S. G. Lushington, for the appellant.—(1) The relief given in this case was clearly unlawful, and, as such, cannot be covered by any subsequent sanction, even in those cases in which sanction has been duly applied for and granted. Sanction under section 52 of the Act of 1834 can cover only cases of irregularity, not of initial unlawfulness. (2) That the relief given was unlawful is clearly shown by the whole tenor of the Poor Law statutes from Hen. 8 down to the Act of 1834. All these statutes are collected in a learned note to Rex. v. Collett, 2 B. & C., 324, at p. 326. None of these statutes contemplated giving relief to those who were able, but unwilling, to work; Lambard's Eirenarcha, bk. 2, ch. 7, p. 207; Blackstone's Commentaries, vol. 1, p. 360 (11th ed.); Rex. v. Hyghworth, 1 Stra. 9; Rex. v. North Riding of Yorkshire Justices, 3 Dow. & Ry. 510, 2 B. & C., 286; Rex. v. Collett. (3) As to wives and children under sixteen years of age, who were, no doubt, innocent victims, relief granted to them is equivalent under section 56 of 4 & 5 Vict. c. 76 to relief granted to the husbands and fathers. A wife is entitled to no separate relief when living with her husband. The case of children, moreover, is duly provided for by sections 1 and 5, sub-section 4, of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41). [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., directed attention to Rex. v. St. Mary, Islington, 6 L. T. Rep. 606, 10 W. R. C. L. Dig. 64.] (4) As to the form of the present action (i.) the alternative remedy before the auditor provided by sections 32–36 of the Act of 1834 is an inconvenient one, because (a) the auditor has no proper power to investigate the accounts; (b) the appeal provided to the Local Government Board is an appeal to a non-judicial body; (c) the alternative appeal to the Queen's Bench is possible only by the cumbersome method of a certiorari. One of the objects of the Judicature Act was to render possible such a course as the one now taken. Moreover, we allege a breach of trust, which is entirely a matter for the Chancery Division. We do not now press for the injunctions, unless the court is unable to make the declaration in their absence. (ii.) It is perfectly competent for the Chancery Division to interfere with the discretion of overseers: Attorney-General v. Wilkinson, 7 W. R. 301, 28 L. J. Ch. 392, at p. 395; Attorney-General v. Southampton, 17 Sim. 6; Attorney-General v. Compton, 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 417, at p. 426, 427, and 429; Attorney-General v. West Hartlepool Improvement Commissioners, 18 W. R. 695, L. R. 10 Eq. 152, per James, V.C., at 158.

Sir Edward Clarke, Q.C., Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and Alexander Glen, for the respondents.—(1) The policy of the whole series of Poor Law statutes from Hen. 8 to the Act of 1834 was that relief must be given in every case of immediate physical necessity, quite apart from the question of the character of the recipient. If the recipient come on the rates through his own wilful act, he is subsequently punishable under section 3 of the Vagrants Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83). But at the moment of necessity relief must be given him. If the relieving officer refused to grant relief he would be criminally liable: Clark v. Joslin, 21 W. R. 294. Even under the Vagrants Act, 1824, the question would arise, Did these men wilfully refuse or neglect to work? And in answering this question one would have to consider whether, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, they were justified in so refusing. Further, we deny that any single individual could have gone back and got work for himself. As to the phrase in statute 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, "having no means to maintain them," that does not mean "not being able to go and get the means." It means, on the contrary, the actual, present non-possession, in money or money's worth, of the means of living: Reg. v. Chandler, 3 W. R. 404, 6 Cox C. C. 519; Reg. v. Mabbett, 5 Cox C. C. 339. (2) As to the form of the action, (i.) certiorari is a perfectly convenient remedy; (ii.) Attorney-General v. Wilkinson, Attorney-General v. Southampton, and Attorney-General v. Compton, were all of them cases of extraneous expenditure; whilst Attorney-General v. West Hartlepool Commissioners was not a Poor Law case at all. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., called attention to Rex. v. Bartholomew Winship, 5 Burr. 2677.] (3) A declaration of the kind now asked for ought not to be lightly made: Barraclough v. Brown, [1897] A. C. 615, per Lord Davey, at p. 623, 46 W. R. Dig. 64; Grand Junction Water Co. v. Hampton Urban District Council, 46 W. R. 644, [1898] 2 Ch. 331, per Stirling, J., at p. 344.

Neville, Q.C., in reply.—The fact that the guardians' powers are limited is shown by section 105 of the Act of 1834: Reg. v. Stewart, 12 A. & E. 773, at p. 777.

Cur. adv. vult.

LINDLEY, M.R.—Under the Poor Law statutes passed before 1834 the only persons entitled to relief out of the poor rates were those described in the 43 Eliz. c. 2, under three heads—namely (1) the children of parents unable to keep and maintain them; (2) such persons who, having no means to maintain themselves, used no ordinary and daily trade of life to get their living by; (3) the lame, impotent, old, blind, and such others as were poor and not able to work. The first two of these classes were to be relieved by being set to work; the third alone were to be relieved without work. Omitting children, and speaking only of adults, the older statutes drew a broad distinction between, first, the impotent poor, that is, poor unable to work and who were to be relieved without work; and secondly, the able-bodied poor, that is, poor able to work but unable to maintain themselves. These were to be relieved, but only by being set to work. If a poor person able to work, and for whom work was found by the parish authorities, would not work, he became liable to imprisonment under section 2 of the statute of Elizabeth and the subsequent Vagrants Acts; but I can find nothing in the statutes before 1834 which entitled an able-bodied person having the means of supporting himself to obtain relief from the parish authorities by being set to work or otherwise. On the other hand, orders for the relief of poor persons were constantly quashed on the ground that they were not stated to be impotent. A poor person able to work and able to procure work might become chargeable to the parish by refusing to work so long as to become physically unable to work or by reducing his wife and children to such a state as to render them chargeable to the parish. If he did this he would force himself and them on the rates and be punishable under the Vagrants Acts. This is the true explanation of the language used in the Vagrants Act of 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 3. It says: "Every person being able wholly or in part to maintain himself or herself or his or her family by work or by other means and wilfully neglecting or refusing so to do, by which refusal or neglect he or she, or any of his or her family whom he or she may be legally bound to maintain, shall have become chargeable to any parish," &c., shall be deemed to be an idle and disorderly person and be liable to imprisonment. The penalty here inflicted is for a wrong done by the person imprisoned; and the wrong done is by becoming chargeable or by rendering others whom he ought to support chargeable on the rates when he had no justification for so doing. It would be an entire perversion of this statute to construe it as entitling an able-bodied man who could support himself if he would to relief of any kind by the parish authorities. He could demand no relief in food or work from them if he could obtain work and could support himself and family without their assistance. This conclusion as to the effect of the older Poor Laws is based upon a careful perusal of them, and upon what is to be found in digests and treatises, and, in particular, upon the resolutions of the judges in Lambard's Eirenarcha 8, 9, and 10, which I regard as an extremely valuable exposition of the law by persons thoroughly well acquainted with it and its working in and shortly after the reign of Elizabeth. I have not succeeded in finding any judicial interpretation of the words "Such persons, married or unmarried, having no means to maintain them, as use no ordinary and daily trade of life to get their living by." These are the words used in section 1 of the statute of Elizabeth to describe the class of able-bodied poor able to procure work. It must be borne in mind that the Poor Laws have nothing to do with the regulation of labour. That was provided for by other statutes relating to labourers and artificers. The Poor Laws impose on the comparatively well-to-do the duty of supporting those who by reason of their poverty cannot maintain themselves. This being so, the inability to maintain himself which justifies an able-bodied man in requiring relief from the Poor Law authorities must, I apprehend, be a real actual inability to support himself on any terms which he can in fact comply with, and which, as between him and the ratepayers, do not justify him in refusing to support himself. He cannot, in my opinion, lawfully justify such refusal on the ground that he cannot obtain work on terms which, as between him and his employer, he does not consider reasonable. What is a reasonable agreement for a man to enter into is one thing; what is a reasonable justification for a man compelling others to support him is quite another thing. But it is the latter alone which the Poor Law authorities ought to consider. This is a matter of the utmost importance in the present case, and, indeed, in all cases in which work can be got on terms which will enable a man to support himself and family, but which he will not accept because he prefers to stand out in the hope of obtaining better terms than those offered him. The short effect of the Poor Laws before 1834 I understand to have been as follows: (1) No one who was starving could be lawfully refused relief, whether he was in that state by his own fault or not; (2) poor persons physically unable to work were entitled to relief out of the rates without being set to work; (3) poor persons physically able to work, but who could not obtain work, were entitled to relief by having work found for them at the expense of the ratepayers if no other work could be found; (4) poor persons physically able to work were not entitled to relief in any other way; (5) but poor persons able to work and able to procure it might, by refusing to work, become so weak as to be no longer able to work, in which case they became entitled to relief out of the rates and at the same time liable to imprisonment. This was an anomaly, for it enabled a person to obtain a legal advantage by his own wrongdoing. The anomaly was justified on grounds of humanity. The penalty for refusing to work was imprisonment, not death by starvation. Under various statutes passed in the reign of George III.—viz., 22 Geo. 3, c. 83, ss. 29-35 (Gilbert's Act); 36 Geo. 3, c. 23, s. 1; 55 Geo. 3, c. 137, s. 3; 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 2, outdoor relief was authorized to be given to able-bodied poor who could not support themselves and families. But even when these Acts were in force, and abused as they were, I do not find that they, or any decisions upon them, authorized relief to able-bodied poor who could support themselves and their families if they chose to do so. Rex. v. Hyworth shows that before these Acts no relief could be lawfully given to such persons, and Rex. v. Collett, decided in 1823, proceeded on the supposition that the law in this respect remained unaltered, though the mode of relieving able-bodied poor who could not obtain work was left undecided. In 1834 the Poor Law was very greatly improved. Boards of guardians were formed and a Central Poor Law Board was created with very large powers of administration (see 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76). But large as those powers are, I cannot find anything in the Act of 1834 or in any later Act which has enlarged the class of persons entitled to relief under the former statutes. I can find no section which entitles able-bodied persons to support out of the rates if they can obtain work and support themselves and their families, if they choose to do so. Section 54 of the Act of 1834 authorizes overseers to give temporary relief, but not money, in cases of sudden and urgent necessity. The object of this section is to enable overseers to act without reference to the guardians in cases which admit of no delay. The same section authorizes justices to order medical relief in case of sudden and dangerous illness. This section has no immediate bearing on the question which has to be decided on this appeal; and would not require further notice, except for the contention that the case before us was one of urgent necessity. I will examine this contention presently. Having ascertained the classes of persons entitled to relief under the Poor Law statutes, it is necessary to discover whether the Local Government Board can authorize relief to be given to persons not entitled to demand it, and to what extent this power, if it exists, can be exercised. The powers of the Local Government Board (who now represent the Poor Law Commissioners) are very large and must be carefully examined. The enactments which confer special powers upon them relating to this subject are 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, ss. 15, 42, 52, and 105, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 91, s. 4, amended by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 113, s. 5. Section 15 of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, clearly confers no power to grant relief to any person not entitled to relief under the Poor Law statutes. It is in express terms confined to the administration of relief according to those statutes, and there is a remarkable provision at the end of the section to guard against the supposition that anything in the Act itself should enable the commissioners to interfere in any individual case for the purpose of ordering relief. Section 42 of the same Act relates to regulations to be observed in workhouses, and has no direct bearing on this case. This section in no way authorizes relief to be given to persons not entitled to it by law. Section 52 is more important, for it relates to outdoor relief and gives the commissioners very wide powers. But here, again, they are restricted to making regulations declaring "to what extent and for what period the relief to be given to able-bodied persons or to their families in any particular parish or union may be administered out of the workhouse." This language assumes that the persons referred to are entitled to relief; and enables rules to be made for their relief out of the workhouse, instead of in it. But I cannot read this section as empowering the commissioners to order relief to be given to persons not entitled to relief at all under the statutes relating to the poor. Section 52, like the others already noticed, gives powers of administering those laws, but no power to alter them. That section enacts that relief given contrary to the regulations shall be deemed unlawful and shall be disallowed in the accounts, but the section contains a proviso enabling the local authorities to depart from the regulations of the commissioners in cases of emergency, and authorizes the commissioners to approve of such departure, and any relief so given and approved "if otherwise lawful" is not to be deemed unlawful or be disallowed. So that even in cases of emergency no relief can be lawfully given except to persons entitled to it under the Poor Law statutes. The recital at the commencement of section 52 of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, refers to the abuse of the powers to grant outdoor relief conferred by the statutes of Geo. 3, to which I have already referred. But, bearing them in mind and attending as we ought to the recital (which, I am sorry to say, is omitted from the last edition of the revised statutes), I cannot arrive at the conclusion that the commissioners appointed under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, to carry out the improvements made by it are empowered to extend the scope of the Poor Law statutes, and to extend their application to persons not entitled to relief under them. This general conclusion, arrived at from a study of the language of the sections referred to, is strengthened by section 105, which prohibits the removal of illegal rules by a certiorari into any court except the Queen's Bench. This shows that the commissioners have no legislative as distinguished from administrative power. If further authority for this proposition is wanted it is to be found in Waddington v. Guardians of the London Union, 6 W. R. 599, E. B. & E. 370, at pp. 399, 400, where a retrospective rate, alleged to have been authorized by regulations made by the commissioners, was held illegal. I pass now to another statute, which goes further than any I have yet referred to; I mean the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 91, s. 4, relating to the audit of poor law accounts. Under this Act an unlawful expenditure properly disallowed by the auditor may, nevertheless, be allowed by the commissioners on appeal from his decision. If the commissioners find the subject-matter of the disallowance was incurred "under such circumstances as to make it fair and equitable that such disallowance shall be remitted" they have the power to remit it—i.e., to authorize the allowance of the unlawful and properly disallowed expense. This is a very large power, which is now entrusted to the Local Government Board, and with the exercise of which, when it arises, this court cannot interfere. But the remission of the disallowance of an expense unlawfully incurred no more renders lawful the incurring of the expense than a pardon for a crime renders lawful the past criminal conduct of the person pardoned. The power of the commissioners to allow an unlawful expense does not arise until such expense has been incurred and been disallowed; and if the High Court has jurisdiction to prevent the improper expense, that jurisdiction is not taken away by the power given to the commissioners to allow the expense if it has been illegally made. So, if the illegal payment is a ground for indictment, its allowance by the commissioners will afford no legal answer to the indictment. At the same time, the existence of this power ought to make the court very careful in granting injunctions relating to Poor Law relief. Having now examined all the statutory enactments which have to be considered, I pass to those regulations made by the commissioners which are applicable to the Merthyr Tydfil Union. They are dated the 1st of October, 1870, and the 29th of October, 1870. As might be expected, they relate to the mode of administering relief to poor persons in the union. They are purely administrative orders; they in no way (inadvertently or otherwise) purport to authorize the granting of relief to persons not entitled to it. Article 1 of the order of the 1st of October, 1870, says that "every able-bodied person requiring relief" shall be relieved wholly in the workhouse, except in certain specified cases, the first of which is "where such persons shall require relief on account of sudden and urgent necessity." The expression "every person requiring relief" in the first article cannot mean every person asking for relief whether entitled to it or not. The regulations relate to the working of the Poor Laws, and the expression in question must in reason be confined to those persons who are entitled to relief under the Poor Laws, and require such relief. Again, the first exception refers only to such emergencies as require outdoor relief instead of indoor relief. It has reference to the necessities of those entitled to relief. It in no way enlarges the class of persons entitled to relief under the Poor Law statutes. If the workhouse is full, the exception justifies giving outdoor relief to poor persons entitled to relief who cannot be received into the workhouse; and if the workhouse is not full a poor person entitled to relief may need it so urgently as to entitle him to outdoor relief before he can reach the workhouse. But to construe the exception as justifying relief in any shape to persons, few or many, who are not entitled to any relief at all is entirely to mistake the object of the exception and to put upon its language a meaning which it will not bear. The order or regulation of the 29th of October, 1870, is again a merely administrative order directing how outdoor relief is to be given to the poor entitled to it. As I understand the order, outdoor relief is only to be given to the able-bodied poor who are entitled to relief and who will do a certain amount of work. But if they comply with that condition they are entitled to such relief for themselves and their families, partly in food, clothing, and articles of necessity, and partly in money, as stated in the order. I now proceed to consider what has been done in this case. There is no conflict of evidence; all the material facts are admitted. Relief has been given: (1) To wives and children reduced to destitution by the strike; (2) to able-bodied men thrown out of work by the strike and unable to obtain work and maintain themselves whilst it lasted. Both of these classes of persons were entitled to relief under the statute of Elizabeth, and there has been no unlawful expenditure of the poor rates in supporting them. It is true that the wives and children of the strikers were not themselves applicants for relief and were relieved indirectly through the strikers, but this only amounts to an impropriety in the mode of relieving them. This impropriety is not a matter for this court's interference. It is unimportant in considering whether the wives and children were entitled to relief or not. But the colliers who struck work were able-bodied men who might have obtained work and who might have maintained themselves and their families. These men when relieved were not so reduced by want as to be unable to keep themselves and their families off the rates, and it was their clear duty to do so if they could. In my opinion these persons had no right to be relieved when they applied for relief, and the authorities were not justified either by the Poor Law statutes or by any regulations made under them in affording such relief. The evidence does not show that the colliers were physically too weak and ill to work, nor that any of them were prevented by fear of violence from accepting work within their reach. They are described as destitute, and in one sense they were so; they had neither food nor money. But they were able-bodied men physically well and able to work; and the answer to the fourth interrogatory shows that they might, if they had chosen, have obtained work at wages sufficient to support themselves and families. It was contended that this was only true if they all went to work in a body; and that it was not true of them individually. I cannot read the answer to the fourth interrogatory as open to this construction. No one of the colliers was willing to accept work unless the others did the same; and no one could have worked the colliery without others. But the admissions show, in my opinion, that each and every collier could, if he had chosen, have kept himself and his family off the rates. I draw no distinction between strikers and other able-bodied men who can support themselves, but who will not. There is no difference, so far as the Poor Law is concerned, either for better or for worse between men on strike and other men who can, but will not, support themselves. To use the rates to support strikers or any other persons able to support themselves is, in my opinion, illegal; although rather than let even such persons starve, relief may be given to them when physically unable to work. This anomaly I have already alluded to. As I understand Romer, J.'s, judgment, we do not differ in holding that, speaking generally, it is wrong to grant relief to able-bodied persons who can obtain work and support themselves and families. But he has treated this case as one of urgent necessity, and as consequently justifying the guardians in granting relief as they did. Here I am unable to follow him. I have already pointed out that the guardians were justified in relieving the wives and children even of the colliers and in granting relief to non-strikers thrown out of employment by the strike. These persons were all entitled to relief without reference to any question of sudden emergency. The numbers of them might, and very likely did, create a sudden emergency entitling them to outdoor as distinguished from indoor relief. But that is a comparatively immaterial matter, and one which the court ought not to concern itself about. But if a poor person physically able to work can obtain work and so support himself and family there is no urgent necessity, nor any necessity at all, for granting him relief. Moreover, numbers do not give a right to relief to persons not individually entitled to relief. The sense in which the colliers were destitute I have explained already. They were not so weak as to be unable to work, and they were not relieved on the ground that they were physically in that condition. They were relieved before they were entitled by law to relief, and, I suppose, from fear of a disturbance and of violence. I quite agree with Romer, J., that it is not the province of the High Court to administer the Poor Laws, nor to interfere with guardians in the performance of their very difficult duties, the performance of which demands great judgment, sympathy, and discretion. Still less can the High Court interfere with the exercise by the Local Government Board of their powers to make regulations for the relief of persons entitled thereto by the Poor Law Acts. Moreover, the allowance by the board of expenses unlawfully incurred cannot be controlled by the court. This prevents the court from ordering the guardians to make good any expense which has been incurred, and which the Local Government Board may, in their judgment, think it right to allow. But this information was filed to restrain the guardians from misapplying the rates by granting relief at a great expense to persons not entitled thereto. Certiorari is no adequate remedy in such a case, nor is there any other. The jurisdiction of the High Court to grant an injunction to restrain an unlawful application of rates cannot be doubted, and the observations in the Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. The Hampton District Council are not applicable to such a case as the present. The guardians, taking, in my opinion, an erroneous view of their power and duty to grant relief in such a case as this, contended that it was competent for them, and indeed their duty, to grant relief on the ground of emergency. In my opinion they were wrong so far as the colliers themselves were concerned, and, as the defendants from first to last have maintained that they were in the right throughout, I think the court ought to make a declaration to show that the information was properly filed and to prevent any misconception as to the illegality of the conduct of the guardians. Such a declaration is not open to the objection against making abstract declarations on matters not within the court's jurisdiction as in Barraclough v. Brown, which objection was forcibly pointed out by Lord Davey at p. 623. The declarations asked by the information are much too wide and might be misunderstood. Labour yards may well have been wanted for persons entitled to relief, because, although able to work, they were unable to obtain work and could not have been taken into the workhouse. The proper order will be as follows: Allow the appeal and discharge the judgment appealed from. Declare that the payment by the defendants out of the poor rates of any money for setting to work or for the relief of able-bodied men who were at the time able to obtain and perform work at wages sufficient to support themselves (and their wives and families, if any) was unlawful, and ought to be disallowed by the auditor on auditing the defendants' accounts. But this declaration does not include relief given to or for the wives and children of such men, and the said declaration is without prejudice to and is in no way to affect the power of the Local Government Board to remit such disallowed payments, although unlawfully made, under the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 91, s. 4, or any other statute enabling them so to do. The defendants must pay the costs of the appeal, but the relief claimed by the information and action was so much too wide that each party must bear his own costs of the information and action.

RIGBY, L.J.—I have had an opportunity of reading the judgment of the Master of the Rolls, and agree with what he has said.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for Linton & C. & W. Kenshole, Aberdare; Wrentmore & Son, for Frank James & Sons, Merthyr Tydfil.

---

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) March 5.

LYSONS v. ANDREW KNOWLES & SONS (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employment—Accident—Compensation—Average weekly earnings—Workman in employment for less than two weeks—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I. (1).

No workman is entitled to the benefit of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, who has not, at the time of the accident, been for at least two weeks in the service of his employer.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Salford County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant for compensation was a pitman. The employers were the owners of a colliery. The applicant was engaged as a piece-worker at wages of six shillings a day, and he commenced to work on Tuesday, the 18th of July, 1899, when he went into the pit and did a day's work. The next day, Wednesday, was a holiday, and the pit was closed. On Thursday, the 20th of July, he again went into the pit to do a day's work, and while he was working he was injured by the fall of a piece of coal. On Friday, the 21st of July, he was paid six shillings for his first day's work, and on Friday, the 28th, he was paid six shillings for his second day's work. The colliery week ended on Tuesday evening.

The county court judge held that, as the applicant had earned twelve shillings within a period of seven days, that sum must be taken to be his "average weekly earnings" within the meaning of section 1 (b) of the first schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, and he made an award for a weekly payment of half that sum—viz., 6s.

F. H. Mellor, for the employers.—The Act does not provide any machinery for awarding compensation in such a case as this; and therefore the case does not come within the Act at all. By section 1 (b) of the first schedule, the amount of compensation under the Act shall be—"Where total or partial incapacity for work results from the injury, a weekly payment during the incapacity after the second week not exceeding fifty per cent. of his average weekly earnings during the previous twelve months, if he has been so long employed, but if not, then for any less period during which he has been in the employment of the same employer, such weekly payment not to exceed one pound." The basis of compensation is average weekly earnings, and average implies plurality. The Act contemplates that, before any compensation can be awarded, the relation of master and servant must have existed for a period of at least two weeks.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and W. T. Postlethwaite, for the applicant.—The applicant's employment is an employment to which the Act applies, and there is nothing in the Act which shows that its operation is confined to workmen who have been in employment for two weeks. Section 1, sub-section 1, of the Act gives the right to compensation, which is to be in accordance with the first schedule. Then the first schedule says that, in a case like the present, the amount of compensation is to be a weekly payment not exceeding fifty per cent. of the workman's weekly earnings for the period during which he has been in the employment of the same employer. The words "not exceeding fifty per cent." and all the words that follow put a limit on the amount of the weekly payment. The maximum which is not to be exceeded is half the man's average weekly earnings during the time of his employment. The intention of the Legislature is that, in cases where a man has been in employment for less than twelve months, the basis of compensation shall be arrived at by taking the total sum of money earned during the actual period of employment and reducing that total sum to the terms of a weekly payment. The word "average" only applies when there is more than one weekly payment to average. In cases where a man has been in employment less than a full week, the maximum which is not to be exceeded is half of what he actually earned during the time of his employment.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The question in this case is one of importance, and is simply this—whether a workman, who has been accidently injured a day or two after he has entered into his employment, comes within the purview of the Workmen's Compensation Act? The applicant went into his employment on Tuesday, the 18th of July, and did a day's work. At the end of the day he was entitled to go away, and, if he chose, not to come back again or do any more work for his employers. The only arrangement between him and his employers was that, so long as he worked for them, he was to receive wages at the rate of 6s. a day. On the next day, Wednesday, the pit was not at work, and the applicant did not go there at all. On Thursday he went to do a day's work and while he was down in the pit he was injured by an accident. Is he entitled to compensation under the Act? It is asked on his behalf, why should he not be within the Act? I cannot answer that question; but what we have to ask ourselves is whether, on the true construction of the words used by the Legislature, he is within the Act. By section 1, sub-section 1, "If in any employment to which this Act applies" — it is admitted that this employment is one to which the Act applies—"personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment is caused to a workman"—all that was so here—"his employer shall, subject as hereinafter mentioned, be liable to pay compensation in accordance with the first schedule to this Act." That brings us to the first schedule, which is headed, "Scale and conditions of compensation." Section 1 begins with the words, "The amount of compensation under this Act shall be —." Then sub-section (a) says that where death results from the injury, and if the workman leaves dependants, it shall be "a sum equal to his earnings in the employment of the same employer during the three years next preceding the injury, . . . and if the period of the workman's employment by the said employer has been less than the said three years, then the amount of his earnings during the said three years shall be deemed to be 156 times his average weekly earnings during the period of his actual employment under the said employer." If this workman had been killed, to what compensation would he have been entitled? How should we find out what was 156 times his average weekly earnings? In this case there would have been nothing to average. Then we come to sub-section (b), which says that, where incapacity for work results from the accident, the amount of compensation shall be "a weekly payment during the incapacity after the second week not exceeding 50 per cent. of his average weekly earnings during the previous twelve months, if he has been so long employed, but if not, then for any less period during which he has been in the employment of the same employer, such weekly payment not to exceed one pound." Then section 2 says: "In fixing the amount of the weekly payment, regard shall be had to the difference between the amount of the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident and the average amount which he is able to earn after the accident, and to any payment not being wages which he may receive from the employer in respect of his injury during the period of his incapacity." Now, do these sections of the schedule embrace the case of a man who has only been at work in his employment for a day or two, or do they contemplate that the man shall have been at work for such a time that his weekly earnings may be averaged? The argument on the part of the applicant cuts the word "average" out of the schedule. In my opinion the court is driven to say that a workman, in order to come within the Act, must have been, at the time of the accident, in his employment for at least two weeks. If he has not been in the employment in which he was injured for at least two weeks, it is impossible to give any signification to the words "average weekly earnings." I therefore think the appeal must be allowed.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It seems to me almost impossible to give any decision on this Act which shall be logical and free from anomalies. The Legislature have not brought every workman within the Act, and we cannot speculate on the reasons why certain classes of workmen have been left out. All that we can do is to judge in each particular case what the Legislature meant from a consideration of the words they have used. The Act itself gives a right to compensation to be ascertained in accordance with the schedule. I think the schedule primâ facie deals with the case of a man who has been in the service of his master for a considerable period of time. It is true that the accident causing the injury may be the same, and the loss the same, whether the man has been in his employment for a day, or a month, or three months. But I think that the fact that the schedule certainly excludes, in the calculation of compensation, any time spent in employment other than that of the master in whose service the workman has been injured, affords some indication as to how we should decide the question before us. I have come to the conclusion that the schedule, when read according to its natural meaning, contemplates that the relation of master and servant shall have existed for not less than two weeks. I think we should be straining the language of the schedule if we were to hold that a workman who at the time of the accident had been only two or three days in his employment was within the ambit of the Act.

ROMER, L.J.—I have felt great doubt as to this case, but I do not differ from my learned brethren.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the employers, Rowcliffes & Co., for Fullagar & Hulton, Bolton.

Solicitors for the applicant, Radford & Frankland, for Bowden & Widdowson, Manchester.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Byrne, J. — Dec. 14, 19; Jan. 17.

In re THOMAS.
WEATHERALL v. THOMAS. (a.)

Drainage expenses—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss 21, 25, and 26—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), ss. 13, 15—Improvement without scheme—Incidental expenses and outgoings—Income or capital.

A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees on trust for conversion and investment, then to pay the income in the manner therein directed to three persons as tenants for life, then to hold the estate for the children of one of them. The investment clause contained a power to invest on freehold ground-rents, and power was given to the trustees to postpone the sale of any part of the estate. Part of the estate retained by them unsold consisted of three leasehold houses held for the residue of long terms, and upon these large sums had to be expended by the trustees in putting in modern systems of drainage.

Held, that the drainage expenses were improvements

(a.) Reported by RALEGH B. PHILLPOTTS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Edmund Law, who had been tried before Bucknill, J., and a jury at the autumn assizes of 1899, holden at Cardiff, and acquitted at the direction of the learned judge, on an indictment preferred by a private prosecutor under the Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 70), charging him with "treating" at a municipal election, was entitled to recover from the prosecutor his costs sustained by him by reason of such indictment.

At the trial, counsel for the defendant, after the latter's acquittal, asked for an order giving him his costs, but the learned judge, if it was a matter within his discretion, declined to do so, but he reserved the question whether the defendant was entitled to his costs as a matter of right for further consideration as there was no opportunity at the time to consider the statutes relating to the subject.

B. F. Williams, Q.C. (Ivor Bowen and Bowen Davies with him), for the defendant.—Section 30 of Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884, provides that "the procedure for the prosecution of a corrupt or illegal practice, or any illegal payment, employment, or hiring committed in reference to a municipal election . . . and all other proceeding in relation thereto . . . shall be the same as if such offence had been committed in reference to a parliamentary election, and sections 45 and 46 and sections 50 to 57 (both inclusive), and sections 59 and 60 of the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1883, shall apply accordingly as if they were re-enacted in this Act." This Act of 1883, which applies to parliamentary elections, provides by section 53 that section 12, among other sections, of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854, which Act also applies to parliamentary elections, "shall extend to any prosecution on indictment for the offence of any corrupt practice within the meaning of this Act." Section 12 of the Act of 1854 provides as follows: "In any case of any indictment or information by a private prosecutor for any offence against the provisions of this Act, if judgment shall be given for the defendant, he shall be entitled to recover from the prosecutor the costs sustained by the defendant by reason of such indictment or information, such costs to be taxed by the proper officer of the court in which such judgment shall be given." The defendant in the present case is therefore clearly entitled under section 12 to have an order for the costs incurred by him.

S. T. Evans, for the prosecutor.—The defendant is not entitled to his costs. No doubt if this had been a parliamentary election he would have been entitled; but this was a municipal election, and the provisions of section 12 of the Act of 1854 are not by section 30 of the Act of 1884 made to apply to municipal elections, because section 30 of the Act of 1884 only applies the procedure of the Act of 1883 with regard to parliamentary elections to municipal elections; and section 53 of the Act of 1883 only provides the application of section 12 of the Act of 1854 to prosecutions for the offence of corrupt practices in relation to parliamentary elections.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 14.—BUCKNILL, J., read the following judgment: The question I have to decide is whether in this prosecution of Edmund Law, which was tried before me at the last assizes holden at Cardiff, the defendant, who was acquitted, is entitled to recover from the prosecutor his costs sustained by him by reason of such indictment. The indictment was preferred by a private prosecutor under the Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act (47 & 48 Vict. c. 70) for treating at a municipal election, and after the case for the prosecution was closed I directed the jury to find a verdict of acquittal. Application was then made to me by the learned counsel for the defendant that I should make an order giving him his costs, but, for reasons which I need not now repeat, I declined to exercise such a discretion if it was open to me to do so, but I reserved the question whether the defendant was entitled to his costs for further consideration as there was no opportunity at the time to consider the statutes relating to the subject. The matter has now been argued before me and my attention has been drawn to those Acts of Parliament which govern the question. They are three in number. I will first refer to the latest of them. It is the Municipal Elections (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 70). By section 30 it is enacted that "subject to the other provisions of this Act, the procedure for the prosecution of a corrupt or illegal practice or any illegal payment, employment, or hiring committed in reference to a municipal election, and the removal of any incapacity incurred by reason of a conviction or report relating to any such offence, and the duties of the Director of Public Prosecutions in relation to any such offence (including the grant to a witness of a certificate of indemnity) shall be the same as if such offence had been committed in reference to a parliamentary election, and sections 45 and 46 and sections 50 to 57 (both inclusive) and sections 59 and 60 of the Corrupt and Illegal Practices Prevention Act, 1893, shall apply accordingly as if they were re-enacted in this Act with the necessary modifications." Now one of these sections so applied to that Act is the 53rd, and that section is in the following terms: "Sections 10, 12, and 13 of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854, and section 6 of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1863 (which relate to prosecutions for bribery and other offences under those Acts), shall extend to any prosecution on indictment for the offence of any corrupt practice within the meaning of this Act, and to any action for any pecuniary forfeiture for an offence under this Act, in like manner as if such offence were bribery within the meaning of those Acts, and such indictment or action were the indictment or action in those sections mentioned, and an order under the said section 10 may be made on the defendant; but the Director of Public Prosecutions, or any person instituting any prosecution on his behalf or by the direction of an election court, shall not be deemed to be a private prosecutor, nor required under the said sections to give any security." It is therefore clear that section 12 of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854, is to be read into the Act of 1884, and that its provisions extend to any private prosecution on indictment for the offence of any corrupt practice within the meaning of that (the 1884) Act. The 12th section is as follows: "In case of any indictment or information by a private prosecutor for any offence against the provisions of this Act, if judgment shall be given for the defendant he shall be entitled to recover from the prosecutor the costs sustained by the defendant by reason of such indictment or information, such costs to be taxed by the proper officer of the court in which such judgment shall be given." Now, going back to the 30th section of the 1884 Act, we see by reference to the Acts of 1883 and 1854 that section 12 of the 1854 Act applies to the procedure for prosecutions under the 1884 Act, and all other proceedings in relation thereto with the necessary modifications. It was argued by counsel for the prosecution that section 30 of the Act of 1884 applies only to the procedure for the prosecution of a corrupt or illegal practice, and not to a question of costs, but that cannot be so for two reasons, the first of which is that the section provides that the incorporated sections of the Act of 1883 apply not only to the procedure for the prosecution in such cases, but to all other proceedings in relation thereto, and the second reason is that section 12 of the Act of 1854 deals only with costs, and the right of a defendant who has had judgment given in his favour to recover them from the private prosecutor. That section deals with nothing else. It is, therefore, clear to me that the defendant in this prosecution is entitled to recover from the private prosecutor the costs sustained by him by reason of the indictment which was preferred against him, such costs to be taxed by the proper officer of the court in which the judgment of acquittal was given.

Judgment for the defendant.

Solicitors for the prosecutor, T. J. Hughes, Bridgend.

Solicitors for the defendant, Riddell, Vaizey, & Co., for Viner, Leeder, & Morris, Swansea.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Channell, JJ.) Dec. 11.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. DOBREE AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Inland revenue—Life policy—Policy brought into settlement—Estate duty—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2 (1) (d).

By the Finance Act it is enacted that estate duty shall be payable upon property passing on the death of any person dying after the commencement of the Act, and by section 2 (1) (d) it is provided that property passing on the death of the deceased shall be deemed to include "any annuity or other interest purchased or provided by the deceased, either by himself alone or in concert or by arrangement with any other person, to the extent of the beneficial interest accruing or arising by survivorship or otherwise on the death of the deceased."

A. effected a policy of assurance on his own life, payable on his death to his wife, and in pursuance of an agreement on his marriage assigned the policy to the trustees of his marriage settlement upon trust to hold the proceeds thereof for the benefit of his wife for life, he, A., covenanting to keep up the policy and pay the premiums during his life.

Held, that on A.'s death estate duty was payable under section 2 (1) (d) on the proceeds of the policy.

This was an information by the Attorney-General against H. H. Dobree and J. L. Tomlin, the defendants.

In September, 1866, a marriage was duly solemnized between Falconer John Atlee and Mary Dobree MacCall. Shortly before the marriage Falconer John Atlee effected a policy of assurance in La Nationale Insurance Office of France on the 25th of September, 1866, for the sum of 37,537 francs (£1,501 10s.) on his own life, and payable on his death to Mary Dobree MacCall, subject to a yearly premium of £50 payable by him during his life.

By an indenture dated the 19th of September, 1867, Falconer John Atlee assigned the policy to four persons, of whom the defendants are the survivors, as trustees, for the purposes of an indenture of settlement of the 20th of September, 1867, made between Falconer John Atlee of the first part, Mary Dobree, his wife, of the second part, J. F. Atlee of the third part, George MacCall of the fourth part, and R. O. Maughan, E. S. Claremont (both since deceased), and the defendants of the fifth part, whereby, in pursuance of an agreement made previous to the said marriage, the said Falconer John Atlee assigned the policy of assurance to the parties thereto of the fifth part upon the trust thereinafter declared concerning the same.

By that settlement Falconer John Atlee covenanted with the trustees to keep up the policy and pay the premiums thereon during his life, and he did in fact duly keep up the same, and all premiums thereon were paid by him, and the moneys payable under the policy at his death were duly received by the defendants as the surviving trustees of the settlement of the 26th of September, 1867.

It was declared by the settlement that the money to be received under the policy should be held by the trustees upon trust for Mary Dobree Atlee for life; and the settlement contained a joint power of appointment by Falconer John Atlee and Mary Dobree Atlee in favour of their children over the trust funds, including the proceeds of the policy.

By a joint appointment dated the 30th of January, 1871, Falconer John Atlee and Mary Dobree Atlee appointed that part of the trust funds, including the proceeds of the policy, should be held in trust for their son George G. F. Atlee, subject to the life interest of Mary Dobree Atlee.

Falconer John Atlee died on the 2nd of October, 1894, leaving Mary Dobree Atlee him surviving.

Under these circumstances it was alleged by the Crown that estate duty became payable under section 2 (1) (d) (or if not then under the other provisions of sections 1 and 2) of the Finance Act, 1894, in respect of moneys received under the policy of assurance as property passing on the death of Falconer John Atlee, within the meaning of those sections.

Sir R. Webster, A.G. (Sir R. Finlay, S.G., and Vaughan Hawkins with him), appeared on behalf of the Crown.—The Crown is entitled to claim estate duty under section 2 (1) (d) of the Finance Act, 1894. If the policy had not been brought into settlement estate duty would clearly have been payable under section 2, sub-section (1) (a) as being property of which the deceased was competent at the time of his death to dispose. Section 15, which provides for certain exemptions from estate duty—such as annuities not exceeding £25—throws some light on the construction of section 2 (1) (d) if necessary, but the words of that part of this sub-section are quite clear.

Haldane, Q.C. (Danckwerts with him), for the defendants.—On the death of F. J. Atlee no beneficial interest passed. The property had already passed at the time of his death, the trustees acquiring the property at the date of the deed of settlement, so that the deceased had no property to pass. Section 3 of the Act shows that is so. That section deals with exceptions from payment of estate duty in the case of transactions for a money consideration: Earl Cowley v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 47 W. R. 525, [1899] A. C. 198. If you pay an insurance company a lump sum down in consideration of being paid a larger sum at death, no property passes and no duty is payable. Why should there then be duty payable in the case where you pay by means of premiums?

Counsel also cited Lord Advocate v. Fleming, 45 W. R. 674, [1897] A. C. 145.

Sir R. Webster, A.G., replied.

DARLING, J.—I think in this case our judgment must be for the Crown. The matter arises in this way: Upon a marriage in September, 1866, between a Mr. Atlee and a Miss MacCall, Mr. Atlee effected a policy of assurance, and he kept up that policy by means of paying a premium of £50 a year during his lifetime. In the next September, 1867, Mr. Atlee assigned that policy to four trustees, and they were the trustees for the purposes of an indenture of settlement dated September, 1867. He, by that assignment, covenanted to do what he had already been doing to keep up the premiums so as to keep the policy alive, and that he did during his lifetime. Owing to an appointment in 1871, the policy became a policy held in trust for a son of this marriage, a Mr. George Falconer Atlee, subject to a life interest which remained in Mrs. Atlee, who survived her husband who created the policy. Now, in those circumstances, the Crown say that estate duty is payable in respect of something which Mrs. Atlee has received in respect of this policy owing to the death of her husband, and it is said that the case comes within the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2, sub-section (1) (d). Section 2 says: "Property passing on the death of the deceased shall be deemed to include—"Any annuity or other interest purchased or provided by the deceased, either by himself alone or in concert or by arrangement with any other person to the extent of the beneficial interest accruing or arising by survivorship or otherwise on the death of the deceased." Now, omitting the words which cannot apply to this, what one has to consider is whether what Mrs. Atlee got, or what the trustees got, upon the death of Mr. Atlee can be described as "any interest purchased or provided by the deceased, to the extent of the beneficial interest accruing or arising by survivorship or otherwise on the death of the deceased." It is said by Mr. Haldane that no beneficial interest passes at all upon the death of Mr. Atlee, that all that he ever had was in the hands of trustees by virtue of the earlier settlement and that really he never had a "benefical interest," that something passed to Mrs. Atlee on his death, but it was not a beneficial interest; that what passed was, it is true, a benefit, an advantage; but then that is not taxed by the Act. Nothing is taxed unless it comes within the words "beneficial interest accruing or arising by survivorship or otherwise on the death of the deceased."

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Now, I think it is material, to see exactly what this means, to look at section 15 of the Act. In this sub-section (d) not only interests are dealt with but annuities are dealt with, and section 15 enacts this: "Estate duty shall not be payable in respect of a single annuity not exceeding £25 purchased or provided by the deceased either by himself alone or in concert or arrangement with any other person, for the life of himself and of some other person and the survivor of them, or to arise on his own death in favour of some other person." Now, this is not an "annuity," and all that is excepted there is an annuity, and not every annuity but only an annuity of the value of not more than £25. But supposing everything in this case had been the same, every circumstance the same, except that the amount payable by the insurance company upon the death of Mr. Atlee was not a lump sum. What would have been the difference? Everything would have been precisely what it is in section 15, except that the amount would probably, or possibly, have been more than £25. Then if section 2 (1) (d) applies, provided the annuity had been stipulated, what is there to show that that sub-section (d) does not apply if an annuity has not been stipulated for but a lump sum, all the other words being the same? I must say I can see nothing. It appears to me that section 15 does show that exactly what was done here results in a taxable beneficial interest arising upon the death of the person who has insured his life for the benefit of his widow in the circumstances in which Mr. Atlee has done it, and that section 2 (1) (d) would certainly have attached if the money paid by the insurance company had been secured to be paid in the way of an annuity, and that it will attach whenever that is done, provided the annuity is not taken out of the operation of the statute by virtue of section 15 because it amounts to not more than £25. I cannot see anything here which shows that this is not a beneficial interest arising on the death of Mr. Atlee simply because it was payable as a lump sum, whereas it apparently was considered by the Legislature that it would be a beneficial interest arising on the death of Mr. Atlee if it had been not a lump sum, but an annuity. But now, further, Mr. Haldane contends that however this might have been, even if it would have been within sub-section (d), upon the kind of reasoning that I have tried to use, it is taken out of sub-section (d), and, indeed, altogether excused from taxation by virtue of section 3 of the Finance Act, 1894. Now, that section says that "Estate duty shall not be payable in respect of property passing on the death of the deceased by reason only of a bonâ fide purchase from the person under whose disposition the property passes, nor in respect of the falling into possession of the reversion on any lease for lives, nor in respect of the determination of any annuity for lives, where such purchase was made or such lease or annuity granted for full consideration in money or money's worth paid to the vendor or grantor for his own use and benefit."

I do not think this case does come within that proviso. It seems to me that what was aimed at there was not the kind of thing that has happened here at all. What was aimed at was this: If a person, insurance office, or whatever it may be, has bought from another something and has paid for that a price—a "consideration in money or money's worth"—but has not got the immediate benefit of his purchase and is not to get the immediate benefit of his purchase, except upon the death of his vendor, then it is perfectly clear that he gets no benefit at all, but only gets that which he has bought and paid for, and the delivery of which to him has been postponed. But he has bought and paid for it a "full consideration in money or money's worth"; and there I think the Legislature has simply said that in such a case as that it would be very unjust to make a man pay duty upon that which he gets because the man of whom he has bought it has died, where he has paid the full value of it to that person it may be years and years ago. I do not think it is at all intended to include such a transaction as that. That is not "property passing on the death of the deceased by reason only of a bonâ fide purchase from the person under whose disposition the property passes." It seems to me really Mr. Haldane's way of reading this and applying it to this case would be to read the word "from" in that section precisely as though it were the word "by," to turn the section about and give it an operation which I cannot think it was ever intended to have; and for these reasons I think our judgment must be for the Crown.

CHANNELL, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think our judgment must be for the Crown on the ground that the duty which they claim is given by the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (d), and I think that it is not prevented becoming due under the facts of the particular case by section 3 of the same Act. Now I confess there is, to my mind, a little difficulty in fully following the exact literal words of Lord Macnaghten's judgment in the Cowley case as to cases falling within section 1 and section 2. It is quite true that if you can arrive at the conclusion that the case falls within section 1, then section 2 may be said to be exclusive; you do not want section 2. But one of the operations of section 2 seems to me clearly to be to sweep into section 1 some cases which might be doubtful upon the construction of section 1, but as to which section 2 includes clear words and therefore brings them in to be subject to the duty whether they were in section 1 upon the true interpretation of that section or not. The result of it is, if you take the trouble to decide in that case the academical question whether they were in section 1 or not, if you come to the conclusion that they were in section 1 you would not want section 2. I think that is what Lord Macnaghten must have meant. At any rate it was not necessary to express any opinion contrary to that in the case before him. In the present case the difficulty as to whether or not a policy of insurance at all (I am not dealing at all with any particular policy, but any policy) would come within section 1 of the Finance Act, is that upon the death the property which the deceased had becomes more or less changed. He has got a policy which no doubt carries with it a right for somebody to receive at his death a certain sum of money. When his death happens the sum of money is payable, and consequently that is a case in which two doubts may arise; firstly, whether it was within section 1 at all, and secondly, if it was, whether what was supposed to pass and be subject to the duty would be the value of the property which the deceased had—that is, the policy—which means, I suppose, the surrender value of the policy, or the principal value of the money. Upon those matters doubts might be entertained. Now, it seems to me that section 2 does contain by reference to the incorporated Acts a distinct provision in reference to policies of insurance, that is, by incorporating section 11 of the Customs Inland Revenue Act of 1889, which expressly deals with policies of insurance. The 11th section of the Act of 1889 was an amendment of the 38th section of the Act of 1881, and the 38th section of the Act of 1881 was one dealing with gifts. It contained provisions with respect to "property passing under Voluntary settlements," and so forth. A doubt must have arisen between 1881 and 1889 as to what was the effect of a person giving policy moneys accruing on his death to somebody by keeping up the policy for that person's benefit, and it was considered that that was a case which would come in and be liable to duty as a gift, and accordingly the 4th clause of section 11 (1) was passed, and it provides that where the policy of insurance is wholly kept up for the benefit of a donee it is to be liable to the account duty. Now, "donee" is a word which conveys a somewhat similar meaning to "volunteer," which is in the previous portion of the section, and that is how the legislation stood with reference to the account duty. Then there comes the Finance Act, 1894, which gives a different kind of duty, called the estate duty, but it gives it, at any rate, and it is intended to give it by sub-section (c), in respect of property as to which the account duty would be payable, and accordingly sections 38 of the Act of 1881 and 11 of the Act of 1889 are incorporated into section 2 so as to bring the property referred to in those sections into the category of property which is to be deemed to pass upon the death for the purposes of estate duty; and at the same time a further amendment is made in those sections, and a further amendment is by cutting out the word "voluntary," the word "volunteer," and the reference to a "voluntary settlement." Now, that being so, one would expect, when the Legislature was doing that, that they should also alter the word "donee" in the portion of section 11 of the Act of 1889 which specially dealt with policies of insurance, because there would be no reason why, when they were making duty payable in cases where the person receiving the benefit was not merely a volunteer, they should keep in the word "donee" in the other section. We find that they do not expressly enact that, but they do enact a new section or sub-section—namely, this sub-section (d) which deals with any annuity. An annuity, of course, was one of the things which had been to a certain extent defined in those other sections, and it had been dealt with in the case of joint annuities—namely, annuities passing by survivorship. And the Legislature goes on to bring in other interests, and it seems to me that sub-section (d) practically has the result—so far as regards policies of insurance—of taking away the effect of that word "donee" in the incorporated section. One would think that they might have done it, and I should think they would have done it, by express words if it had not been intended to sweep in not merely policies of insurance, but other interests besides; and accordingly you find apt words used for bringing in a policy of insurance which had been kept up for the benefit of the person who was not the donee because there was some kind of consideration—the thing had been kept up for his benefit—to bring in such a policy, as that and also something else. Accordingly it seems to me one would have no difficulty so far in saying that this sub-section (d) applied, and applied to such cases as the one before us; and of course section 15 of the same Act throws very great light on it, and greatly assists that construction. Then that brings us round to this: that in this particular case the policy moneys are made subject to duty by this section 2, sub-section (1) (d), provided only there is nothing else which exempts them. Then we have to consider the question of the true construction of section 3 which Mr. Haldane contends takes this particular policy out of the operation of the previous section. Now that reads: "Estate duty shall not be payable in respect of property passing on the death of the deceased by reason only of a bonâ fide purchase from the person under whose disposition the property passes." Now suppose you apply that to the case of the policy of insurance, then, if you look upon the word "property" as referring to the policy of insurance, undoubtedly the right to this policy of insurance did not pass on the death of the deceased at all, it passed on the settlement a good many years before. If, however, you read the word "property" as referring to the £1,500 payable under it, then that passed on the death of the deceased; because it then became payable, and in that sense it passed; and it passed also on the death of the deceased, partly, at any rate, by reason of a contract with the insurance company. Of course, if no contract had been made with the insurance company to insure the life of the deceased, and if the transaction had merely been a purchase, by the payment of premiums of £1,500 to be paid on the deceased's death, that transaction would have been one to which section 3 applied. Now, I am not sure that there may not be some policies of insurance and policy moneys which might come within this. If a person insured the life of somebody else (he must, of course, have an insurable interest) and paid his premiums, and that someone else died, that money might possibly be supposed to come within some of the other sections.

I do not know whether it would, I do not myself think it would, but if it did, I think that section 3 would prevent the duty being payable, and in that case one would have to read the words "the person under whose disposition the property passes" as covering the insurance company; but there it would pass only by reason of the policy of insurance; and in the case before us I think it is quite impossible to say it passed only by reason of the contract with the insurance company. It passes by reason of a considerable number of other circumstances. It seems to me that this is a general section which cannot be read so as to alter the effect of the specific sections which precede it, and which deal with policy moneys and policies of insurance, and, as I think, deal with them because they would have been of an ambiguous character if not specially dealt with. On these grounds it seems to me that we are bound to say that this duty is given by section 2, sub-section (1) (d), and that it is not prevented being given by section 3.

Judgment for the Crown.

Solicitor for the Crown, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the defendants, J. L. Tomlin & Son.

---

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } Admiralty. } Dec. 6.

"THE JOHN HOLLWAY." (a.)

Ship—Collision—Damage—Vessel turning in the Thames not a crossing vessel—Bye-laws for the Navigation of the River Thames, 1898, art. 48.

A steam vessel partly athwart the River Thames, and not in motion through the water or moving ahead or astern over the ground, but slowly swinging to her anchor in the act of turning round, is not a vessel crossing the river within the 48*th article of the Thames Bye-laws,* 1898, which provides that steam vessels and steam launches crossing from one side of the river towards the other side shall keep out of the way of vessels navigating up and down the river.

This was an action of damage in rem instituted on behalf of the owners of the steamship Dalmatia against the steam tug John Hollway and her owners intervening as defendants to recover the damages arising out of a collision which occurred between The Dalmatia and a barge in tow of The John Hollway on the River Thames, off the Surrey Commercial Dock entrance, on the afternoon of the 23rd of June last, in the circumstances stated in the judgment.

Dec. 4, 5.—On these days the suit was heard before Bucknill, J., assisted by two of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House.

Aspinall, Q.C., and Stubbs, for the plaintiffs.

Laing, Q.C., and Lauriston Batten, for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult

Dec. 6.—BUCKNILL, J.—The evidence in this case is conflicting. The story told by the witnesses for the plaintiffs is that The Dalmatia had been navigating up the Thames on the south side of the river withal, and when a little below the entrance to the Surrey Commercial Dock her helm was put to port in order to turn her round and take her into the dock, which is on the south side of the river; that when she had answered about ten points under her port helm, which means that her head would then be about two points more than right across the river, she was dead in the water, her anchor having previously been let go, partly for the purpose of checking her way, on account of a barge which was anchored ahead, and partly to help her to swing, the anchor having told of the ground, as I find as a fact, and not what is called dredging. When in this position, and with a water space between the stern of The Dalmatia and a Russian barque, according to the plaintiff's witnesses, too narrow for The John Hollway, with her four barges in tow, to pass through, the tug is said to have attempted to accomplish the impossible, and so to have caused the collision between the first barge on her starboard rope and the rudder of The Dalmatia. The case set up by the defendants, shortly stated, is that The Dalmatia, having blown a four-blast signal, had got into a position of about athwart the river, just as the tug and her barges were passing between her stern and the Russian barque, and that The Dalmatia came astern and so caused the collision, there being plenty of room for the tug and her barges to pass safely if The Dalmatia had not come astern. It is admitted that nothing was done by The Dalmatia to keep out of the way of the tug and her barges; but the charge made against the tug is that she might have avoided the collision by reasonable care. It is not proved to my satisfaction that any steps could, in the circumstances, have been successfully taken on board the tug, except easing her way and so allowing The Dalmatia to swing more up and down, and thus increase the waterway between herself and the Russian barque. On the question of fact whether The Dalmatia did, at the critical time, move astern, I am satisfied, after hearing the witnesses on both sides, that she did not, and I find as a fact that she was making no movement through the water at the time of the collision, but that her stern was swinging slowly round, so that if the collision had not occurred when it did she would safely swing round head on tide, when I suppose the anchor would have been lifted, and she would have proceeded into dock. On the question of law, whether a vessel turning in the Thames, as The Dalmatia was, on the same side as that on which she is being navigated, so far as that is possible having regard to her length, is a crossing ship within the meaning of article 48 of the Thames Bye-laws, the case of The River Derwent, 7 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 37, 39 W. R. Dig. 211, has been cited. That case turned on the construction to be placed on articles 24 and 25 of the old bye-laws corresponding with articles 48 and 53 of the bye-laws now in force, and which are to be read together. These bye-laws provide as follows: Article 48, "Steam vessels and steam launches crossing from one side of the river towards the other side shall keep out of the way of vessels navigating up and down the river"; and article 53, "Where, by the above bye-laws, one of two vessels is to keep out of the way, the other shall keep her course and speed."

The facts in the case of The River Derwent differ from those in the case now before me. In the case of The River Derwent, The Allendale was in the act of crossing the Thames from the south to the north side, and, whilst still performing that manœuvre, the collision happened. She was held to be a crossing vessel within the rule. The Lord Chancellor in his judgment pointed out that it was "undoubtedly a fact that The Allendale did cross from one side of the river to the other." He also said that when a vessel has left the south shore and is going towards the north shore she is in the act of crossing. In this case The Dalmatia did not leave the south side of mid-river, although by reason of her great length, when she was athwart the river, some part of her hull was on the north side of mid-stream; but she never, in fact, crossed the river, and it was never intended that she should do so. The manœuvre intended was simply that of turning round in the river, on the south side of mid-channel so far as that was possible.

It is true that she was not proceeding up or down the river, but was being turned round in it, and this is the only difficulty that I feel on the construction of the bye-law—that is, whether the rule applies to all such steam vessels as are not proceeding up or down river, but are crossing from one side to the other, or are turning round, as this vessel was. If such a construction is to be given to the bye-law, it applies to small and short vessels as well as to the largest and longest.

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I cannot construe the rule to mean more than it seems to me to state, and I think I should be doing so if I held that it applies to every steamer which is being turned round in the river, although I do not say that a vessel so turning might not at some time, whilst in progress of turning, be crossing towards the other side. It would depend upon the facts of each case, and it seems to me to be very hard as against steam vessels if such vessels, when athwart the tide, in the act of turning round for the purpose of getting into dock, were held in all cases when in such a position to be bound to keep out of the way of vessels navigating up and down the river. Such vessels, in obeying the rule, would necessarily have to put themselves sometimes in positions of extreme difficulty and danger.

On the facts of this case I find that The Dalmatia was, at the time of the collision, partly athwart the river, and not in motion through the water, or moving ahead or astern over the ground, but was slowly swinging to her anchor in the act of turning round, and was not a vessel crossing the river within the rule; but, even if she were, I find as a fact that her omission to keep out of the way of the tug in no way caused or contributed to the collision. Those in charge of the tug had heard the four-blast signal from the Dalmatia which, under article 40 of the bye-laws, indicated that she was turning round. The article in question states that "When a steam vessel (in circumstances other than those mentioned in bye-law 36) is turning round, or for any reason is not under command, and cannot get out of the way of an approaching vessel . . . she shall signify the same by four blasts of the steam whistle." It is admitted that that signal was sounded by The Dalmatia. The master of the tug thought that by the time he reached The Dalmatia she would have swung head to tide, but he miscalculated his speed and distance, and as he approached The Dalmatia he put on his engines full speed and made a dash for it, with the result, that although he passed through in safety so far as the tug was concerned, one of his barges collided with the rudder of The Dalmatia. If he had eased his engines sooner, and kept them eased longer, there would have been no collision, and in my judgment it was by his negligence alone that the casualty occurred. The view is confirmed by the advice I have received from the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House who are assisting me. The result of the evidence enables me to find that the actual distance between the stern of The Dalmatia and the Russian barque was not as great a distance as was alleged by the defendants. With regard to certain entries in the engine-room log of the steamship, believing as I do the evidence from The Dalmatia, that the engines had been stopped for a few minutes before the collision, I disregard the entry in the log as affording positive proof that the engines were moving astern at the time of the collision. I find as a fact that there was not a bad look-out on board The Dalmatia, and, in the circumstances of the case, I pronounce the defendants' tug The John Hollway alone to blame for the collision.

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Stokes & Stokes.

Solicitors for defendants, William Hurd & Son.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — March 27.

PAYNE v. HOGG. (a.)

Prohibition—Salford Hundred Court—Jurisdiction—"Cause of action"—Plea to the jurisdiction—Want of—Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. cxxx.), ss. 6, 7.

The expression "the cause of action" in section 6 of the Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868, means the whole cause of action.

Whitehead v. Butt, 7 Times L. R. 609, approved.

By section 7 of the Act, "Save and except as aforesaid, no defendant shall be permitted to object to the jurisdiction of the court otherwise than by special plea, and if the want of jurisdiction be not so pleaded, the court shall have jurisdiction for all purposes."

Held, that a defendant, against whom judgment had been signed in default of appearance in an action in the Salford Hundred Court, where the claim did not exceed £50, could not get a writ of prohibition on the ground that the cause of action did not arise within the jurisdiction of the court, as section 7 conferred jurisdiction on the court in such a case in the absence of a plea to the jurisdiction.

Chadwick v. Ball, 14 Q. B. D. 855, 33 W. R. Dig. 172, followed.

Appeal from an order of the Divisional Court, affirming the decision of the judge at chambers, directing a writ of prohibition to issue to the high steward and bailiff of the Court of Record for the Hundred of Salford, and to the plaintiff, restraining them from further proceeding on a judgment obtained in that court.

The action was brought in the Salford Hundred Court to recover £16 0s. 9d. principal and interest due on a promissory note signed by the defendant as the maker at Buxton, outside the jurisdiction of the court, and made payable to the plaintiff at Manchester, within the jurisdiction of the court. The writ of summons in the action on its face commanded the defendant, within eight days after service thereof, to cause an appearance to be entered, and it gave notice that in default of the defendant so doing the plaintiff might proceed therein and judgment might be given in her absence. The defendant did not enter an appearance, and judgment was accordingly signed against her, and execution was issued. The defendant thereupon applied for a writ of prohibition as above, on the ground that the Salford Hundred Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the action.

The Divisional Court held that, as the cause of action arose out of the jurisdiction of the court, the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the action, section 7 of the Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868,* only giving the court jurisdiction in such

* Section 6 of the Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868, gives the court authority to try (1) personal actions, if "the cause of action" arises within the Hundred, provided that the debt or damages sought to be recovered do not exceed £50, except by consent; (2) actions of ejectment between landlord and tenant where the land sought to be recovered is situate in the Hundred, and the annual rent or the annual value thereof does not exceed £50; (3) any action whatsoever, with certain exceptions, a case where the defendant has appeared, and, the time for pleading having come, has not pleaded the want of jurisdiction. They accordingly affirmed the order of the judge at chambers granting a writ of prohibition.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiff appealed.

C. A. Russell, Q.C., and Walter R. Warren, for the plaintiff.—The "cause of action" arose within the jurisdiction of the Salford court, and therefore a writ of prohibition cannot issue. This point was not argued in the Divisional Court, as that court were bound by the decision in Whitehead v. Butt, 7 Times L. R. 609, purporting to follow Cooke v. Gill, 21 W. R. 334, L. R. 8 C. P. 107, and Read v. Brown, 37 W. R. 131, 22 Q. B. D. 128. The decision in Whitehead v. Butt is wrong. "Cause of action" in section 6 of the Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868, does not mean the whole cause of action. At common law "cause of action" means every fact material to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed. But in a particular statute the meaning may be different. The words occurred in section 18 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, and they were held to mean the act on the part of the defendant which gives the plaintiff his cause of complaint: Jackson v. Spittall, 18 W. R. 1162, L. R. 5 C. P. 542; Vaughan v. Weldon, 23 W. R. 138, L. R. 10 C. P. 47. That is the meaning of the words in this Act. The act in the present case which gave the plaintiff his cause of complaint was the non-payment of the note at Manchester. That is sufficient to give the court jurisdiction. They also referred upon this point to section 50 of the Act of 1868. Secondly, if the "cause of action" means the whole cause of action, section 7 of the Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868, gave the court jurisdiction over the action as there was no plea to the jurisdiction. Section 7 does not apply to the cases mentioned in the proviso in section 6, and in those cases a writ of prohibition can be issued. But as the claim does not exceed £50 section 7 applies, and the effect is to give the court jurisdiction subject to be defeated by a special plea being put upon the record. In Chadwick v. Ball, 14 Q. B. D. 855, 33 W. R. Dig. 172, the Court of Appeal, overruling Oram v. Brearey, 25 W. R. 695, 2 Ex. D. 346, held that the words at the end of section 7, "and if the want of jurisdiction be not so pleaded the court shall have jurisdiction for all purposes," extended the jurisdiction of the court. As the defendant did not appear and plead the want of jurisdiction, the court had jurisdiction. The decision of the Divisional Court, that section 7 only applies where the time has arrived for pleading and no plea to the jurisdiction is put in, cannot be supported. As was pointed out by Baggallay, L.J., in Chadwick v. Ball, there is no distinction drawn in the section between a stranger and a party to the suit. A stranger could never put in a plea in the action. There is no difficulty in holding that the court has a defeasible jurisdiction between the issue of the writ and the time for putting in a defence. In Chapman v. Mattison, Andr. 191, at p. 198, it was said that where a County Palatine had jurisdiction and the action was brought in one of the superior courts at Westminster, the latter should hold plea thereof if there was no plea to the jurisdiction. That recognized a jurisdiction in the courts at Westminster defeasible by a plea being subsequently put on the record. The Divisional Court were therefore wrong. As the want of jurisdiction, if any, was not apparent on the face of the proceedings, the court in its discretion should refuse, in the circumstances, to grant a prohibition. They referred upon this point to Broad v. Perkins, 37 W. R. 44, 21 Q. B. D. 533; Farquharson v. Morgan, 42 W. R. 306, [1894], 1 Q. B. 552.

Pickford, Q.C., and Le Riche, for the defendant, were not called upon to argue the first point. The second question depends upon the true meaning of section 7 of the Act of 1868. That section means that in a case like this until the time for pleading comes the court has no jurisdiction. When the time for pleading has arrived the section makes the omission to plead the want of jurisdiction equivalent to a consent to give the court jurisdiction. The jurisdiction is thus extended by the omission to put in a special plea. If the contention of the plaintiff is correct, the court has an anomalous jurisdiction liable to be ousted by plea. Such a jurisdiction is unknown. In Chapman v. Mattison it was not said that the superior courts at Westminster had jurisdiction liable to be ousted by plea. There the superior courts had no jurisdiction at all, but as prohibition would not lie to a superior court, the only mode of taking the objection to the jurisdiction was by plea. The construction contended for by the plaintiff would have the effect of putting an end to objections to the jurisdiction, because defendants in these small cases will not care to go to the expense of pleading the want of jurisdiction when, if the plea is successful, they cannot get any costs. They will prefer to pay the claim, and the practical result will be the extension of the jurisdiction of the court. In Chadwick v. Ball the court merely held that section 7 meant that a defendant cannot take his chance of success in the inferior court, and then turn round and apply for a prohibition.

They also referred to Mayor of London v. Cox, 16 W. R. 44, L. R. 2 H. L. 239; Mayor's Court Procedure Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. clvii.), s. 15.

C. A. Russell, Q.C., was not called upon to reply.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Divisional Court affirming the order of the judge at chambers directing a writ of prohibition to issue. The plaintiff brought an action in the Salford Hundred Court to recover £16 0s. 9d. due upon a promissory note signed by the defendant at Buxton and made payable to the plaintiff at Manchester. The writ of summons which was served upon the defendant required her within eight days after the service thereof to enter an appearance, and gave her notice that in default of her doing so judgment might be given in her absence. That was a distinct intimation to the defendant that unless she entered an appearance to the action judgment might be given against her. She did not enter an appearance. It is not suggested that she does not owe the money. After the time limited for appearance the plaintiff signed judgment and execution was issued. I may observe that everything appeared to be regular on the face of the proceedings. The defendant then took out a summons for a writ of prohibition to restrain all further proceedings in the action, which the judge at chambers granted, his decision being affirmed by the Divisional Court.

The first point taken by the plaintiff in this court by consent: provided that if in the course of any action (except where a consent has been signed) it shall appear upon oath to the judge or registrar that the debt or damages sought to be recovered, or the annual rent or value of the land exceeds £50, &c., then the judge or registrar shall order all proceedings in the action to be stayed.

---

Section 7: "Save and except as aforesaid, no defendant shall be permitted to object to the jurisdiction of the court otherwise than by special plea, and if the want of jurisdiction be not so pleaded the court shall have jurisdiction for all purposes."

raises the question as to what is the meaning of the words "the cause of action" in section 6 of the Salford Hundred Court of Record Act, 1868. The law is well settled that, in the case of these courts of limited jurisdiction, "the cause of action" means all matters which together make up the cause of action. All those matters must take place within the area of the jurisdiction. The promissory note was signed by the defendant at Buxton, outside the area of the jurisdiction of the Salford court, and as that is a material ingredient in the cause of action, a fact necessary to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed, the Salford Hundred Court had, apart from section 7 of the Act of 1868, which I will next consider, no jurisdiction to entertain the action.

The next question is whether the defendant can now set up the objection to the jurisdiction of the Salford court. Section 6 of the Act of 1868 shows that the Salford court is a court of limited jurisdiction. It is admitted that if the judge of the Salford court were to try an action dealing with a matter beyond the pecuniary limits of his jurisdiction, a prohibition would lie to restrain him from doing so. Then comes section 7, which provides that "save and except as aforesaid, no defendant shall be permitted to object to the jurisdiction of the court otherwise than by special plea, and if the want of jurisdiction be not so pleaded the court shall have jurisdiction for all purposes." The Divisional Court have held that the section only requires the objection to the jurisdiction to be taken by special plea when the time for pleading has come. That seems to me to be adding to the section words which are not there, and for which there is no necessity. The defendant did not think fit to enter an appearance and put in a plea to the jurisdiction. If a defendant in such a case as this wishes to object to the jurisdiction he must appear and plead the want of jurisdiction. If he does not do that the court "shall have jurisdiction for all purposes." The very point was brought before this court in Chadwick v. Ball. The difference between section 7 of the present statute and section 15 of the Mayor's Court Procedure Act, 1857, was there pointed out. Baggallay, L.J., after pointing out that a provision was introduced into section 7 of the Salford Court Act which was not in section 15 of the Mayor's Court Act—namely, that if the want of jurisdiction be not so pleaded, the court shall have jurisdiction for all purposes—said that by reason of that provision the omission to plead to the jurisdiction conferred jurisdiction on the Salford Hundred Court for all purposes. In that case, no doubt, the defendant had put in a statement of defence, and had not pleaded to the jurisdiction. To my mind, however, that makes no difference. The section seems to me to set up, in cases to which it applies, an absolute prohibition against raising the objection to the want of jurisdiction except by plea. Lindley, L.J., took the same view, for he said that section 7 does not touch the question of the jurisdiction of the superior court to prohibit where there is no jurisdiction in the inferior court, because the words at the end of section 7 extend the jurisdiction of the inferior court. In my opinion that case covers the present, and I entirely agree with it. I do not feel the difficulty which Channell, J., felt as to the court having a defeasible jurisdiction between the issue of the writ and the time for putting in a plea. That difficulty seems to me to have been answered by the case of Chapman v. Mattison, cited to us in the argument. So here, until the defendant chooses to come in and set up by his plea that the cause of action arose out of the jurisdiction, everything being in order on the face of the record, I do not see why the court should not proceed with the action and give judgment in it. With regard to the question of the exercise of the discretion of the court in granting a writ of prohibition, if it were necessary to decide the case upon that ground, I should not be at all inclined to grant a prohibition in the circumstances of this case.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. With regard to the first question, it seems to me to be quite clear that the words "the cause of action" mean the whole cause of action as explained in Cooke v. Gill, and have not the same meaning as the court in Jackson v. Spittal placed on the special words, "a cause of action," in section 18 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852. I now come to the second question—namely, the construction of section 7 of the Salford Court Act of 1868. I must say that I have felt some misgiving upon this, but upon the whole I think that we are concluded by authority. Two alternative views were open. One was that section 7 was merely a rule of pleading in the Salford Hundred Court, and did not enlarge the jurisdiction of the court; merely, in fact, defining the mode in which the objection to the jurisdiction could be taken in the court itself. That was the view taken by the Divisional Court in Oram v. Brearey. The other view was that the section enlarged the jurisdiction of the court. This last view was that taken by this court in Chadwick v. Ball. Though I can see a possible middle view between those two, it is too fine to accept, and if we loyally accept the decision in Chadwick v. Ball, we must hold that in such a case as the present section 7 confers jurisdiction on the Salford Hundred Court. It was urged that this is a very curious kind of jurisdiction, which depends upon a contingency happening subsequently—namely, the contingency of the defendant not putting upon the record a special plea to the jurisdiction. For myself I see no difficulty in holding that the court has, in cases where the claim does not exceed £50, and in cases other than those specified in the proviso to section 6 of the Act of 1868, what has been called a defeasible jurisdiction, which can only be ousted by a special plea to the jurisdiction. Whether this court in Chadwick v. Ball had before their minds all the consequences of their decision, I do not know; but from what I know of those local courts I should have had some misgiving in holding that they had an unlimited territorial jurisdiction, leaving it to the defendant to oust the jurisdiction by a special plea. However that seems to me to be a matter for the Legislature to consider. This court has so decided, and that decision seems to me to be in accordance with the natural meaning of the words of the section. As pointed out by Baggallay, L.J., the section draws no distinction between a stranger and a party to the suit, which tends to show that the section does not merely lay down a rule of pleading in the court itself. I also agree with my lord upon the question of discretion.

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not see how to get over the plain words of section 7. That section provides that, except in the cases specified in the proviso at the end of section 6, no defendant shall be permitted to object to the jurisdiction of the court except by special plea, and if the want of jurisdiction be not so pleaded the court shall have jurisdiction for all purposes. The meaning of the section is that when the action comes on to be heard, if there is no plea to the jurisdiction upon the record, and if the case does not fall within the proviso to section 6, the court has jurisdiction to entertain the action and to deliver judgment. After judgment it is too late to raise the question of want of jurisdiction. To oust the jurisdiction of the court in such a case there must be a special plea to the jurisdiction. The defendant in this case did not choose to appear. Upon the expiration of the time limited for entering an appearance, the court was bound to give judgment for the plaintiff, as in the absence of a plea to the jurisdiction, it had by section 7 jurisdiction over the action. There is another ground upon which the appeal should succeed. The want of jurisdiction did not appear on the face of the record, and, therefore, the court had a discretion as to granting a prohibition. If ever there was a case in which the court in its discretion should refuse to grant a prohibition, it is this case. I also agree with what my brethren have said upon the point as to the meaning of "the cause of action."

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, W. T. Harvey, for J. E. Jones, Manchester.

Solicitors for the defendant, Sims & Syms, for W. Burton, Manchester.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Feb. 27, 28; March 5, 19.

STOCK v. MEAKIN. (a.)

Local government—Private street work—Charge of expenses on frontager's premises—Date from which charge takes effect—"Completion of works" or "final apportionment" — Vendor and purchaser — "Outgoings"—Implied covenant against incumbrances—Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 1, 12, 13.

The apportioned expenses of private street works executed under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, become a charge on the premises affected thereby as from the date of the completion of the works, and not merely as from the date of the final apportionment.

If, therefore, the premises are sold free from incumbrances after the completion of the works, but before the date of the final apportionment, the sum finally apportioned thereon is payable by the vendor.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 6), affirmed.

This was an appeal against a decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 6), and raised a question under the Private Street Works Act of 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57)—viz., whether the sum finally apportioned as payable by the owner of premises fronting a street, in respect of works (such as sewers) executed in the street by the local authority, becomes a charge upon the premises as from the date of the completion of the works, or only as from the date of the final apportionment of the expenses of the works among the various owners of premises abutting on the street.

The land to which the action related, which was situated at West Ham and abutted on Queen's-road, had changed hands between the date of the completion of works executed under the Act by the council of the county borough of West Ham, and the date of the final apportionment of the expenses among the property owners.

The works were commenced on the 4th of April, 1898, and were completed on the 26th of July, 1898.

On the 10th of October, 1898, the defendant Meakin, who was the then owner of the piece of land in question, entered into an agreement to sell it to the plaintiff Stock for £1,000. The purchase was to be completed on the 11th of November then next, and up to that day all "outgoings" were (if necessary) to be apportioned.

On the 22nd of November, 1898, the defendant "as beneficial owner," conveyed the land to the plaintiff.

On the 29th of November, 1898, the final apportionment of expenses was made by the council, and on the 29th of December, 1898, they gave notice to the plaintiff that his premises were liable to be charged with the sum of £130 14s. as his proportion of the expenses of the works, and that, unless this sum was paid within one month, interest at 4 per cent. would be charged.

The plaintiff called on the defendant to pay this amount, and on his declining to do so the plaintiff paid it himself, and this action was brought to enforce repayment by the defendant.

The questions also arose, whether this apportioned sum was an "outgoing" which the vendor was under his contract for sale bound to discharge; whether the amount was an "incumbrance" on the property, and, if so, whether it was an "incumbrance" which after conveyance came within the vendor's covenant against incumbrances, which, under the Conveyancing Act of 1881, is implied from the use of the words "as beneficial owner" in a conveyance.

Kekewich, J., held, upon the construction of the Private Street Works Act, 1892 (as distinguished from the Public Health Act, 1875), that the apportioned sum became a charge upon the land as from the date of the completion of the works, and that consequently it was an incumbrance existing at the date of the conveyance to the plaintiff, and that the defendant was, under his implied covenant against incumbrances, bound to discharge it.

The defendant appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the defendant.—The question arises under the Private Street Works Act, 1892. The charge in this case, which did not become a charge before final apportionment, was not an outgoing, though it might be an incumbrance: In re Boor, Boor v. Hopkins, 37 W. R. 349, 40 Ch. D. 572. It is not an incumbrance within section 7 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. The charge does not arise before final apportionment: Tubbs v. Wynne, [1897] 1 Q. B. 74, 45 W. R. Dig. 168. This does not come within the covenant against incumbrances. This is not suffered by a person conveying, which imports something over which the vendor has control: Hobson v. Middleton, 6 B. & C. 295; Vendors and Purchasers, by Lord St. Leonards (13th ed.), p. 491. There was no charge at all until the final apportionment was made. Sections 13 and 14 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, are substituted for section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Under section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the charge is a charge upon the "premises": Corporation of Birmingham v. Baker, 17 Ch. D. 782, 30 W. R. Dig. 121. This is not an incumbrance; if it is an incumbrance it is not one the vendor was bound to discharge. Until the date of final apportionment there was nothing to go out: Batchelor v. Bigger, 60 L. T. Rep. 416, 37 W. R. Dig. 99; Plumstead Board of Works v. Ingoldby, 21 W. R. 77, 817, L. R. 8 Ex. 63, 174. In In re Boor, Boor v. Hopkins, Kay, J., held it was not an outgoing. The plaintiff cannot recover: Barraud v. Archer (1831), 2 Sim. 433, 9 L. J. Ch. O. S. 173.

Ogden Lawrence, Q.C., and P. F. Wheeler, for the plaintiff, referred to Hornsey Local Board v. The Monarch Investment Building Society, 38 W. R. 85, 24 Q. B. D. 1; In re Betteswortb and Richer, 36 W. R.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

544, 37 Ch. D. 535; In re Furtado and Jeffries, 27 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 466; Egg v. Blayney, 36 W. R. 893, 21 Q. B. D. 107.

Warrington, Q.C., in reply, referred to Barraud v. Archer.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., delivered the judgment of the court as follows: The question in this case is whether the vendor of a piece of land at West Ham is liable to indemnify the purchaser against the sum of £130 14s. claimed by the urban sanitary authority as expenses of works executed by such authority under the Private Street Works Act, 1892. The agreement for sale and purchase was made on the 10th of October, 1898. The day fixed for the completion of the purchase was the 11th of November, 1898, and the purchase-money was paid by the plaintiff (the purchaser) and the conveyance completed on the 22nd of November, 1898. The works in question were completed on the 26th of July, 1898. The resolution authorizing the execution of the works was dated the 27th of July, 1897, which was prior to the acquisition of the property by the defendant, the vendor. The defendant conveyed as beneficial owner; the conveyance recited that the defendant had agreed to sell to the plaintiff free from incumbrances; and the conveyance was by a mortgagee, at the request and the direction of the defendant as beneficial owner, to hold the said land in fee simple freed and discharged from the claims of the said mortgagee. The notice of final apportionment was on the 29th of December, 1898.

If the charge had been a charge for expenses incurred by the local authority under the Public Health Act, 1875, there is no doubt but that such a charge would, having regard to the dates of the agreement to purchase and the conveyance on the one hand and the date of the execution of the works on the other, have been a charge against which the vendor would have had to indemnify the purchaser. The charge under the Public Health Act, 1875, however, is a charge which can only arise on failure of the owner of the land to comply with the notice of the urban authority and the execution by the urban authority of such works by reason of such default by the landowner, and is, moreover, a charge taking effect from the date of the completion of the works, whereas the charge under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, certainly is not a charge arising on default of the landowner, and it is argued is not a charge from the date of the completion of the works. It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider from what date the charge under the Act of 1892 takes effect, and whether the fact that the charge does not arise on default of the landowner makes any difference in the obligations of the vendor towards the purchaser; and this makes it necessary to consider the terms of the material sections of the Acts of 1875 and 1892. Under section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the expenses incurred by the local authority, for the repayment whereof the owner of the premises for or in respect of which the same are incurred is made liable by that Act (i.e., by section 150), may be recovered from any person who is the owner of such premises when the works are completed for which such expenses have been incurred, and until recovery such expenses are made a charge on the premises in respect of which they were incurred, and it was held in In re Betteworth and Richer that the expenses became a charge upon the completion of the works, and that this was so notwithstanding the fact that the owner could not be compelled to pay until the cost had been made out and apportioned. In other words, the charge was held to be subsisting although it could not be enforced until the provision in the last paragraph but one of section 257 had been worked out—i.e., until the apportionment of the expenses had become binding by the lapse of three months after notice of apportionment without any written notice of dispute being given by the owner. This decision turned entirely on the words of sections 150 and 257, which plainly gave a charge so soon as the works had been completed and the expenses incurred by the local authority on the failure of the owner of the land to execute the works in compliance with a notice served in pursuance of the powers given by section 150.

The charge which has to be considered in the present case is given by section 13 of the Private Street Act, 1892, and we have to determine if this charge, like the charge under the Public Health Act, 1875, takes effect from the time of the completion of the works. We think it does. The Act of 1892 is by section 1 to be read as one with the Public Health Acts, of which the Act of 1875 is the principal Act, and the charge created by section 13 of the Act of 1892 is to be a charge to the like extent and effect as under section 257 of the Act of 1875. It seems to us to follow, unless there is in section 13 or some other section of the Act of 1892 something clearly to the contrary, that the charge under section 13 will take effect, like a charge under the Act of 1875, from the time of the completion of the works the expenses of which are charged. But it is said that section 13 itself makes express provision to the contrary, because it says, "any premises included in the final apportionment, and all estates and interests from time to time therein, shall stand and remain charged . . . with the sum finally apportioned on them, or if objection has been made against the final apportionment with the sum determined to be due as from the date of the final apportionment, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum." It is said that the effect of these words is that there is no charge until the date of the final apportionment, and therefore not from the date of the completion of the works. We cannot agree with this contention. We think that the effect of these words is, first, to provide that the amount of the charge shall be that fixed by the final apportionment or in case of objection by the determination of the objection; and, secondly, interest is to run on the sum ultimately fixed from the date of the final apportionment. In other words that the owner of the land is not by his objection to the final apportionment to escape interest on the sum finally fixed between the date of the final apportionment and the date of the final determination of the objection. We think, therefore, that there is nothing in section 13 to prevent the charge taking effect from the completion of the works, and when the whole Act of 1892 is considered we find a great deal to lead to the conclusion that the Act means that the charge shall date from the completion of the works, and not from the final apportionment. In the first place, there is the general consideration that it is not likely that the Legislature should have intended the charge to date from the final apportionment, because the final apportionment is an event the date of which can be fixed quite arbitrarily by the officers of the local authority. Moreover, to make the charge commence with the completion of the works is to make the charge coincide with the benefit. In the next place, the whole scheme of the Act points to a charge being intended prior to the final apportionment. First, there is the provisional apportionment of the estimated expenses on the premises liable to be charged. This, subject to objections to be made within a month, fixes the premises to be charged and the proportions to be borne. All this has to be done before the works are raise the question of want of jurisdiction. To oust the jurisdiction of the court in such a case there must be a special plea to the jurisdiction. The defendant in this case did not choose to appear. Upon the expiration of the time limited for entering an appearance, the court was bound to give judgment for the plaintiff, as in the absence of a plea to the jurisdiction, it had by section 7 jurisdiction over the action. There is another ground upon which the appeal should succeed. The want of jurisdiction did not appear on the face of the record, and, therefore, the court had a discretion as to granting a prohibition. If ever there was a case in which the court in its discretion should refuse to grant a prohibition, it is this case. I also agree with what my brethren have said upon the point as to the meaning of "the cause of action."

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, W. T. Harvey, for J. E. Jones, Manchester.

Solicitors for the defendant, Sims & Syms, for W. Burton, Manchester.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Feb. 27, 28; March 5, 19.

STOCK v. MEAKIN. (a.)

Local government—Private street work—Charge of expenses on frontager's premises—Date from which charge takes effect—"Completion of works" or "final apportionment"—Vendor and purchaser—"Outgoings"—Implied covenant against incumbrances—Private Street Works Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57), ss. 1, 12, 13.

The apportioned expenses of private street works executed under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, become a charge on the premises affected thereby as from the date of the completion of the works, and not merely as from the date of the final apportionment.

If, therefore, the premises are sold free from incumbrances after the completion of the works, but before the date of the final apportionment, the sum finally apportioned thereon is payable by the vendor.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 6), affirmed.

This was an appeal against a decision of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 6), and raised a question under the Private Street Works Act of 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 57)—viz., whether the sum finally apportioned as payable by the owner of premises fronting a street, in respect of works (such as sewers) executed in the street by the local authority, becomes a charge upon the premises as from the date of the completion of the works, or only as from the date of the final apportionment of the expenses of the works among the various owners of premises abutting on the street.

The land to which the action related, which was situated at West Ham and abutted on Queen's-road, had changed hands between the date of the completion of works executed under the Act by the council of the county borough of West Ham, and the date of the final apportionment of the expenses among the property owners.

The works were commenced on the 4th of April, 1898, and were completed on the 26th of July, 1898.

On the 10th of October, 1898, the defendant Meakin, who was the then owner of the piece of land in question, entered into an agreement to sell it to the plaintiff Stock for £1,000. The purchase was to be completed on the 11th of November then next, and up to that day all "outgoings" were (if necessary) to be apportioned.

On the 22nd of November, 1898, the defendant "as beneficial owner," conveyed the land to the plaintiff.

On the 29th of November, 1898, the final apportionment of expenses was made by the council, and on the 29th of December, 1898, they gave notice to the plaintiff that his premises were liable to be charged with the sum of £130 14s. as his proportion of the expenses of the works, and that, unless this sum was paid within one month, interest at 4 per cent. would be charged.

The plaintiff called on the defendant to pay this amount, and on his declining to do so the plaintiff paid it himself, and this action was brought to enforce repayment by the defendant.

The questions also arose, whether this apportioned sum was an "outgoing" which the vendor was under his contract for sale bound to discharge; whether the amount was an "incumbrance" on the property, and, if so, whether it was an "incumbrance" which after conveyance came within the vendor's covenant against incumbrances, which, under the Conveyancing Act of 1881, is implied from the use of the words "as beneficial owner" in a conveyance.

Kekewich, J., held, upon the construction of the Private Street Works Act, 1892 (as distinguished from the Public Health Act, 1875), that the apportioned sum became a charge upon the land as from the date of the completion of the works, and that consequently it was an incumbrance existing at the date of the conveyance to the plaintiff, and that the defendant was, under his implied covenant against incumbrances, bound to discharge it.

The defendant appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the defendant.—The question arises under the Private Street Works Act, 1892. The charge in this case, which did not become a charge before final apportionment, was not an outgoing, though it might be an incumbrance: In re Boor, Boor v. Hopkins, 37 W. R. 349, 40 Ch. D. 572. It is not an incumbrance within section 7 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. The charge does not arise before final apportionment: Tubbs v. Wynne, [1897] 1 Q. B. 74, 45 W. R. Dig. 168. This does not come within the covenant against incumbrances. This is not suffered by a person conveying, which imports something over which the vendor has control: Hobson v. Middleton, 6 B. & C. 295; Vendors and Purchasers, by Lord St. Leonards (13th ed.), p. 491. There was no charge at all until the final apportionment was made. Sections 13 and 14 of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, are substituted for section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Under section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the charge is a charge upon the "premises": Corporation of Birmingham v. Baker, 17 Ch. D. 782, 30 W. R. Dig. 121. This is not an incumbrance; if it is an incumbrance it is not one the vendor was bound to discharge. Until the date of final apportionment there was nothing to go out: Batchelor v. Bigger, 60 L. T. Rep. 416, 37 W. R. Dig. 99; Plumstead Board of Works v. Ingoldby, 21 W. R. 77, 817, L. R. 8 Ex. 63, 174. In In re Boor, Boor v. Hopkins, Kay, J., held it was not an outgoing. The plaintiff cannot recover: Barraud v. Archer (1831), 2 Sim. 433, 9 L. J. Ch. O. S. 173.

Ogden Lawrence, Q.C., and P. F. Wheeler, for the plaintiff, referred to Hornsey Local Board v. The Monarch Investment Building Society, 38 W. R. 85, 24 Q. B. D. 1; In re Bettesworth and Richer, 36 W. R.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

544, 37 Ch. D. 535; In re Furtado and Jeffries, 27 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 466; Egg v. Blayney, 36 W. R. 893, 21 Q. B. D. 107.

Warrington, Q.C., in reply, referred to Barraud v. Archer.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., delivered the judgment of the court as follows: The question in this case is whether the vendor of a piece of land at West Ham is liable to indemnify the purchaser against the sum of £130 14s. claimed by the urban sanitary authority as expenses of works executed by such authority under the Private Street Works Act, 1892. The agreement for sale and purchase was made on the 10th of October, 1898. The day fixed for the completion of the purchase was the 11th of November, 1898, and the purchase-money was paid by the plaintiff (the purchaser) and the conveyance completed on the 22nd of November, 1898. The works in question were completed on the 26th of July, 1898. The resolution authorizing the execution of the works was dated the 27th of July, 1897, which was prior to the acquisition of the property by the defendant, the vendor. The defendant conveyed as beneficial owner; the conveyance recited that the defendant had agreed to sell to the plaintiff free from incumbrances; and the conveyance was by a mortgagee, at the request and the direction of the defendant as beneficial owner, to hold the said land in fee simple freed and discharged from the claims of the said mortgagee. The notice of final apportionment was on the 29th of December, 1898.

If the charge had been a charge for expenses incurred by the local authority under the Public Health Act, 1875, there is no doubt but that such a charge would, having regard to the dates of the agreement to purchase and the conveyance on the one hand and the date of the execution of the works on the other, have been a charge against which the vendor would have had to indemnify the purchaser. The charge under the Public Health Act, 1875, however, is a charge which can only arise on failure of the owner of the land to comply with the notice of the urban authority and the execution by the urban authority of such works by reason of such default by the landowner, and is, moreover, a charge taking effect from the date of the completion of the works, whereas the charge under the Private Street Works Act, 1892, certainly is not a charge arising on default of the landowner, and it is argued is not a charge from the date of the completion of the works. It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider from what date the charge under the Act of 1892 takes effect, and whether the fact that the charge does not arise on default of the landowner makes any difference in the obligations of the vendor towards the purchaser; and this makes it necessary to consider the terms of the material sections of the Acts of 1875 and 1892. Under section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the expenses incurred by the local authority, for the repayment whereof the owner of the premises for or in respect of which the same are incurred is made liable by that Act (i.e., by section 150), may be recovered from any person who is the owner of such premises when the works are completed for which such expenses have been incurred, and until recovery such expenses are made a charge on the premises in respect of which they were incurred, and it was held in In re Betteworth and Richer that the expenses became a charge upon the completion of the works, and that this was so notwithstanding the fact that the owner could not be compelled to pay until the cost had been made out and apportioned. In other words, the charge was held to be subsisting although it could not be enforced until the provision in the last paragraph but one of section 257 had been worked out—i.e., until the apportionment of the expenses had become binding by the lapse of three months after notice of apportionment without any written notice of dispute being given by the owner. This decision turned entirely on the words of sections 150 and 257, which plainly gave a charge so soon as the works had been completed and the expenses incurred by the local authority on the failure of the owner of the land to execute the works in compliance with a notice served in pursuance of the powers given by section 150.

The charge which has to be considered in the present case is given by section 13 of the Private Street Act, 1892, and we have to determine if this charge, like the charge under the Public Health Act, 1875, takes effect from the time of the completion of the works. We think it does. The Act of 1892 is by section 1 to be read as one with the Public Health Acts, of which the Act of 1875 is the principal Act, and the charge created by section 13 of the Act of 1892 is to be a charge to the like extent and effect as under section 257 of the Act of 1875. It seems to us to follow, unless there is in section 13 or some other section of the Act of 1892 something clearly to the contrary, that the charge under section 13 will take effect, like a charge under the Act of 1875, from the time of the completion of the works the expenses of which are charged. But it is said that section 13 itself makes express provision to the contrary, because it says, "any premises included in the final apportionment, and all estates and interests from time to time therein, shall stand and remain charged . . . with the sum finally apportioned on them, or if objection has been made against the final apportionment with the sum determined to be due as from the date of the final apportionment, with interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum." It is said that the effect of these words is that there is no charge until the date of the final apportionment, and therefore not from the date of the completion of the works. We cannot agree with this contention. We think that the effect of these words is, first, to provide that the amount of the charge shall be that fixed by the final apportionment or in case of objection by the determination of the objection; and, secondly, interest is to run on the sum ultimately fixed from the date of the final apportionment. In other words that the owner of the land is not by his objection to the final apportionment to escape interest on the sum finally fixed between the date of the final apportionment and the date of the final determination of the objection. We think, therefore, that there is nothing in section 13 to prevent the charge taking effect from the completion of the works, and when the whole Act of 1892 is considered we find a great deal to lead to the conclusion that the Act means that the charge shall date from the completion of the works, and not from the final apportionment. In the first place, there is the general consideration that it is not likely that the Legislature should have intended the charge to date from the final apportionment, because the final apportionment is an event the date of which can be fixed quite arbitrarily by the officers of the local authority. Moreover, to make the charge commence with the completion of the works is to make the charge coincide with the benefit. In the next place, the whole scheme of the Act points to a charge being intended prior to the final apportionment. First, there is the provisional apportionment of the estimated expenses on the premises liable to be charged. This, subject to objections to be made within a month, fixes the premises to be charged and the proportions to be borne. All this has to be done before the works are executed. Then section 12 provides: "When any private street works have been completed, and the expenses thereof ascertained, the surveyor shall make a final apportionment by dividing the expenses in the same proportions in which the estimated expenses were divided in the original or amended provisional apportionment (as the case may be)." These words are, in our judgment, strong to show that on the completion of the works the expenses become a charge on ascertained premises in ascertained proportions. There is no appeal against this, and the final apportionment is a mere arithmetical process for the purpose of dividing these expenses in these proportions. The final apportionment is not a condition precedent to the obligation to bear these expenses in these proportions. The obligation exists before the final apportionment is made. The final apportionment merely works out the division of these expenses in these proportions amongst the premises charged. The objections which, by clause 2 of section 12, can be taken after final apportionment are not objections to the proportions or to the inclusion or exclusion of particular premises amongst those charged (all those objections have to be made before the works are executed), but are either objections that the proportions have not been followed or are objections to the totals of the expenses to be divided. All this statutory machinery seems to us to point to the charge taking effect from the completion of the works. The charge takes effect under the Act of 1875 before the apportionment is made, and in our judgment it is intended that it shall be so under the Act of 1892. If this view is right, we have no doubt but that this charge is an outgoing which the vendor was bound by his contract to discharge. We also have no doubt but that the charge is an incumbrance, claim, or demand suffered by the vendor, notwithstanding the fact that the expenses were incurred without any default on his part, and that the time for payment had not arrived before the conveyance was executed; nor have we any doubt but that this charge is inconsistent with the express terms of the conveyance. We think, therefore, that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Farrer & Co.; George Brown, Son, & Vardy.

---

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — March 12.

BAGSHAW v. PIMM. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Probate action—Three wills—Severance in defence.

In a probate action the validity of the earliest of three wills was established. Of the four defendants in the action, who were all beneficiaries under the first will, the two who were executors of the first and second wills received the same benefits under the second will, while the other two were cut out under the second will. All four were cut out under the third will.

Held, that there was such a divergence of interests between the two pairs of defendants that the latter pair was justified in appearing separately, and was therefore entitled to have a separate taxation and payment of costs.

This was an appeal as to costs arising out of the decision by Barnes, J., of a probate action heard in the Probate Division in the following circumstances:

The testator Timothy Pimm, who died the 25th of April, 1898, had made three wills, dated respectively the 10th of August, 1895, the 17th of March, 1898, and the 2nd of April, 1898, which were the subject of the said probate action.

The result of that action, which was heard before the judge and a common jury in March, 1899, was that the first will was admitted to probate, it being found by the jury that the two wills of 1898 had been obtained without the knowledge of the testator of their contents and by the undue influence of Frederick Pimm, the testator's brother.

The two plaintiffs in the action were the executors of the two wills of 1898, one of them being a solicitor of many years' experience, who had taken an active part in their preparation and execution.

Of the four defendants, who were all beneficiaries under the will of 1895, two were James and George Pimm, brother and nephew of the testator, and executors under that will, and the remaining two, Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Furniss, were sisters, and children of another brother deceased.

The will of the 17th of March, 1898, cut out the two latter defendants, but made no substantial difference to the two former defendants.

The will of the 2nd of April, 1898, which revoked that of the 17th of March, cut out these two former defendants also, and practically gave the whole property to Frederick Pimm.

The defendants in the action having been successful in establishing the force and validity of the will of 1895, no special order was made as to costs, which followed the event.

The two defendant Pimms brought in their bill for taxation and it was taxed and had been paid.

The two other defendants, who had appeared separately, also brought in a bill for £167 16s. 4d. for fees and expenses incurred; the registrar declined to tax this on the ground that they raised no new point, and that their interests were fully protected by the other defendants.

Appeal from this decision of the registrar was made to the judge in chambers, but was dismissed on the ground that the rule was only to allow defendants one set of costs unless it could be shown that certain interests would suffer or that new points had been raised.

Mrs. Jackson and Mrs. Furniss now appealed from that decision.

W. G. Clay, for the appellants.—The rule is only to deprive successful defendants of costs where there is some special demerit on their part or some special merit on the part of the unsuccessful party; this is a long established practice in the Queen's Bench Division which should be followed in the Chancery or Probate Division. Here, if there had been only one will in dispute, the appellants could not have properly appeared separately from the executor defendants; but the appellants, who took no interest under either of the two 1898 wills, were the only parties injured by the former of the same, so that their interests were not necessarily protected by the other two defendants, who had only to upset the last will. The respondents should be made to pay the appellants' costs because their uncertainty arose out of the respondents' fault in having by undue influence procured the existence of the two wills.

F. A. Inderwick, Q.C., and W. B. Hextall, for the respondents.—The protection of the two executors was sufficient for the appellants, who ought not to have been made parties, and certainly not to have appeared separately: Stevenson v. Abington, 11 W. R.

---

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

936, 8 L. T. Rep. 719, and In re Isaac, Cronbach v. Isaac, 45 W. R. 262, [1897] 1 Ch. 251. This is not a case like Rayson and Wife v. Parton, 18 W. R. 232, L. R. 2 P. & D. 38, where there was a distinct advantage in confining the litigation to one occasion. This was a question of quantum and not of law: In re Gilbert, 33 W. R. 832, 28 Ch. D. 549.

LINDLEY, M.R.—This case is a little out of the ordinary. It is clear that the respondents by setting up, as they did, two bad wills, have brought all this controversy on themselves. At first I was inclined to think that the validity of the will of 1895 could and would have been properly fought out by the two executors without the two appellants appearing separately. But the result has not been conclusive as to this. The question is, were they justified in appearing separately to defend their own interests? I have come to the conclusion that they were. There was such a divergence of interests between the two Pimms and the two ladies, having regard to the March will, that if anything had gone wrong, the two Pimms might have consented to a compromise disadvantageous to the two ladies. That justified the latter in separately appearing by counsel. Their separate appearance was cautious and not oppressive, and, my sympathy not being with the respondents, Mr. Clay has convinced me that there was no sufficient cause for depriving his clients of their costs.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree. It might have suited the two Pimms to set up one will and not the other.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am not at all prepared here to say that the solicitor for the ladies did not exercise a very wise discretion in advising them to appear separately, and if that is so, how can we say that their separate appearance occasioned unnecessary litigation to these respondents?

The appeal was allowed with costs, and an order made for taxation of the bill.

Solicitors, M. L. B. Braund, for F. J. Walmsley, Derby; Few & Co., for J. & W. H. Sale & Son, Derby.

---

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — March 8.

ELLIS v. ROWBOTHAM. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Rent—Instalments payable in advance—Apportionment Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 35), s. 2.

The Apportionment Act, 1870 only applies to sums accruing due, and not to sums accrued due at the time of the event which necessitates the apportionment.

Appeal from a judgment of Kennedy, J., at the trial of an action without a jury.

The action was brought to recover rent.

By an agreement in writing the plaintiff let a house and premises to the defendant for a year, from the 10th of June, 1898, at a rent of 340 guineas, payable as follows:—viz., £189 5s. on taking possession; £55 18s. 4d. on the 10th of September, 1898; £55 18s. 4d. on the 10th of December, 1898, and £55 18s. 4d. on the 10th of March, 1899.

The agreement provided that if any rent reserved thereby should be in arrears for fourteen days, the landlord might, after giving one week's notice, retake possession of the premises; but this was to be without prejudice to any other remedies which the landlord might have.

The defendant went into possession and duly paid the sum of £189 5s., and he also paid the instalment of £55 18s. 4d. which became due on the 10th of September, but he made default in payment of the instalment which became due on the 10th of December.

On the 7th of February, 1899, the writ in this action was issued, and on the 21st of February it was served on the defendant. By it the plaintiff claimed £55 18s. 4d., the instalment of rent which became due on the 10th of December.

On the 24th of February the plaintiff gave notice to the defendant in pursuance of the clause in the agreement as to re-entry, and on the 2nd of March the plaintiff re-took possession of the premises.

The defendant contended that, by the virtue of the Apportionment Act, 1870, the plaintiff was only entitled to apportioned rent up to the date of re-entry, and he brought into court the sum of £15 14s. 5d., which he said was sufficient to satisfy the plaintiff's claim.

Kennedy, J., gave judgment for the plaintiff.

The defendant appealed.

C. A. Russell, Q.C., and Frank Dodd, for the defendant.

Rawlinson, Q.C., and Woodfin, for the plaintiff.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of opinion that the judgment of Kennedy, J., is right. The plaintiff let a house to the defendant for a year for the rent of £357, but it was expressly agreed that the rent was to be paid in advance by instalments—viz., an instalment of £189 5s. to be paid down when the tenant entered into possession, then an instalment of £55 18s. 4d. in advance on the 10th of September, then another instalment of £55 18s. 4d. in advance on the 10th of December, and then a similar instalment in advance on the 10th of March. The agreement contained an express stipulation, independent of the terms as to rent, that if the rent should be in arrear for fourteen days the landlord might after notice in writing retake possession of the premises. This condition was to be without prejudice to any other remedies which the landlord might have. The instalment which became due on the 10th of December was not paid, and the landlord after giving notice re-entered and took possession, and he then resorted to his other remedy of suing for rent due. The defendant seeks to rely on the Apportionment Act, section 2 of which is as follows: "From and after the passing of this Act all rents, annuities, dividends, and other periodical payments in the nature of income (whether reserved or made payable under an instrument in writing or otherwise) shall, like interest on money lent, be considered as accruing from day to day, and shall be apportionable in respect of time accordingly." By the common law, if a tenant, who was liable to pay rent every quarter day in respect of the past quarter, went out of possession before the last day of a quarter, the landlord received no rent for the current quarter. The effect of the Act is that now rent accrues due de die in diem, and the tenant who goes out of possession in the middle of a quarter is liable to payment of rent for the time during which he has been in occupation. How does that apply to the present case? This rent accrued due long before the tenant was turned out of possession. By the terms of the agreement the instalments of rent fell due in advance as the quarters arrived. The defendant points out that the section applies to "all rents," and he contends that all rents—that is to say, rents which have already accrued due as well as rents which have not yet accrued due—are now apportionable. But what the section says is that all rents shall be considered as accruing from day to day, and shall be apportionable accordingly. In my opinion that does not apply to a case where rent has accrued due before the date up to which it is suggested that it should be apportioned.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

COLLINS, L.J.—In this case I am not free from doubt, for I feel the weight of the argument on the part of the defendant. But I do not differ from my learned brethren.

ROMER, L.J.—I think that the Act only applies to sums accruing, not accrued, due at the time when the apportionment is said to be required, and that it does not apply to any sums duly and properly paid or accrued due before the happening of the incident which is said to necessitate the apportionment. To hold otherwise would lead to extraordinary results not contemplated by the Legislature, and would put a forced and unsound construction on the Act. I would add that it seems to me, with regard to this particular agreement, that the landlord was entitled to retain the rent reserved and paid in advance, though he subsequently became entitled to re-enter, and did re-enter.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, C. D. Travers Wire.

Solicitor for the defendant, George Trenam.

---

App. Bankruptcy.
(Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Feb. 28.

In re A. B. & Co. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Foreigner—Trading in England—Resident abroad—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 4 (a), 6 (d).

A foreigner trading in England, but resident abroad, is not a debtor within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 6 (d). A petition in bankruptcy cannot, therefore, be presented against him on his committing what amounts to an act of bankruptcy.

Bankruptcy effects an alteration of status, and the court ought not to alter the status of foreigners unless the jurisdiction to do so has been conferred on it by Parliament in unmistakeable terms.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Linklater.

The appellants were creditors of certain traders who were citizens of the United States resident in Baltimore, where they carried on business. They also carried on business in London by means of a manager. In carrying on their business in London they had incurred debts, and they also had assets of value there. In December, 1899, they executed in the United States a deed by which they assigned all their property to their manager at Baltimore as trustee for their creditors. English creditors presented in England a bankruptcy petition against the traders, alleging the execution of the deed as an act of bankruptcy. It was also alleged that the traders had in January, 1900, given notice in England to one of their English creditors that they had suspended or were about to suspend payment of their debts.

By section 4 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, "a debtor commits an act of bankruptcy . . . (a) If in England or elsewhere he makes a conveyance or assignment of his property to a trustee or trustees for the benefit of his creditors generally."

By section 6 "a creditor shall not be entitled to present a bankruptcy petition against a debtor unless . . . (d) the debtor is domiciled in England, or within a year before the date of the presentation of the petition, has ordinarily resided or had a dwelling-house or place of business in England."

The registrar held that the debtors being foreigners not resident in England were not subject to the Act.

The creditors appealed.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the appellants.—The question is whether an assignment which would be an act of bankruptcy if executed in this country is one when executed by a debtor who is domiciled abroad. A debtor cannot carry on business in this country and when proceeded against assert that he is not resident here. From the earliest times aliens have been subject to the bankruptcy laws. A person is a debtor within the meaning of the Act who carries on business here, contracts debts here, and commits an act of bankruptcy by dealing with his property in England in a way to defeat his creditors. In re Pearson, 40 W. R. 532, [1892] 2 Q. B. 263, does not apply to persons who are in this country in the sense that they are carrying on business here. Besides, what was considered in that case was the effect of bankruptcy in itself, and not the effect of a voluntary act of bankruptcy on the part of the debtor.

They also referred to In re Hecquard, 38 W. R. 148, 24 Q. B. D. 71; In re Clark, Ex parte Beyer, Peacock, & Co., 45 W. R. 118, [1896] 2 Q. B. 476; In re Clark, Ex parte Clark, 46 W. R. 103, [1898] 1 Q. B. 20.

C. A. Russell, Q.C., and A. H. Carrington, for the respondents, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I will not say what view I might have been inclined to take if it were not for the previous decisions of this court which are binding upon us. But, having regard to those decisions, I think this appeal must fail. It must be borne in mind that bankruptcy is a very serious matter. It alters the status of the bankrupt. This cannot be overlooked or forgotten when we are dealing with foreigners. What authority or right has the court to alter in this way the status of foreigners who are not subject to our jurisdiction? If Parliament had conferred this power in express words then, of course, the court would be bound to exercise it. But the decisions go to this extent, and rightly, I think, in principle, that, unless Parliament has conferred upon the court that power in language which is unmistakable, the court is not to assume that Parliament intended to do that which might so seriously affect foreigners who are not resident here, and might give offence to foreign Governments. Unless Parliament has used such plain terms as show that they really intended us to do that, we ought not to do it. That is the principle which underlies the decisions in Ex parte Blain, 28 W. R. 334, 12 Ch. D. 522, and In re Crispin, 21 W. R. 491, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 374. Nothing can be more plain than the language of James, L.J., in Ex parte Blain, and the language used by Cotton, L.J., is to the same effect. Ex parte Blain was a case under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. But when in In re Pearson the effect of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, was considered, the court, consisting of Lord Esher, M.R., and Fry and Lopes, L.JJ., said that the language of section 6 was not plain enough to override that general principle. I can see the difficulty in construing section 6. It might possibly be thought that the word "debtor" is so plain as to confer jurisdiction over foreigners. But the Court of Appeal has said that it is not, and I am unable to distinguish the present case from In re Pearson. The point about the other act of bankruptcy really involves the same question. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree.

Solicitors, Bentwich & Co.; J. H. Moggridge.

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Stirling, J. } March 7, 31.

In re GOY & CO. (LIMITED).
FARMER v. GOY & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Debentures—Winding up—Debenture-holder's action—Judgment—Transfer—Right of transferee to registration—Cross-claim by company against transferor—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 131.

Where debentures are issued subject to the condition that the principal and interest were to be paid without regard to any equities between the company and the original or any intermediate holder thereof, a transferee for value in good faith, after judgment in a debenture-holder's action, is entitled to payment of dividends in respect of his debentures, although the company had an equitable claim against the transferor.

This was a question in a debenture-holders' action as to whether a Mr. Robey, who, since the judgment in the action, had become the transferee of certain debentures in the company, was entitled to receive anything in respect thereof until payment had been made of a sum which his transferor had been ordered to pay to the liquidator of the company. The debentures in question formed part of an issue of sixty debentures of £100 each made in October, 1897. By each debenture the company charged its undertaking and all its property, both present and future, including its uncalled capital.

On the 12th of May, 1898, a resolution was passed for the voluntary winding up of the company, and a Mr. Doggett was appointed liquidator. Upon the passing of this resolution the principal sums secured by the debentures became payable. On the 9th of June, 1898, Mr. Doggett was appointed receiver in the action, and on the 11th of June, 1898, the usual judgment in a debenture-holder's action was pronounced.

In August, 1898, J. H. Chandler, who was a debenture-holder and had been a director of the company, applied to Mr. Robey for an advance on his debentures. On the 1st of September, 1898, Mr. Robey's solicitor wrote to Mr. Doggett, the liquidator and receiver, making inquiries about the debentures and asking whether there were any cross-claims by the company against Mr. Chandler. On the 2nd of September Mr. Doggett sent a letter answering some of the inquiries, but taking no notice of that as to cross-claims.

On the 14th of September, 1898, Mr. Robey made an advance to Chandler on the security of a mortgage and transfer of the debentures. On the 22nd of September, 1898, Mr. Robey's solicitor sent the transfer to Mr. Doggett for registration. Mr. Doggett referred the matter to the solicitor acting in the proceedings, but that gentleman thought that, having regard to the judgment in the action, there was a difficulty as to registration, and after some correspondence Mr. Robey's solicitor gave Mr. Doggett formal notice requiring him to register the transfers. Ultimately the matter was brought before the master, who directed that the receiver should enter a note of the transfers on the register, but should not enter the transferee's name thereon.

In October, 1898, Mr. Doggett discovered that Mr. Chandler had been guilty of misfeasance in respect of a sum of £300, which had come to his hands as a director of the company, and on the 16th of March, 1899, Chandler was ordered to pay that sum to the liquidator.

Upjohn, Q.C., and C. T. Mitchell, for the receiver.

C. E. Jenkins, Q.C., and A. à B. Terrell, for Mr. Robey, the claimant.

STIRLING, J., in giving judgment, said: Mr. Robey had clearly become transferee for value and in good faith, and was fully entitled to whatever benefit might accrue from that position. If Chandler had remained the owner of the debentures he would, on the one hand, have been entitled to receive out of the property comprised in his debentures a dividend thereon, and on the other he would have been liable to contribute to that same property a sum of £300. It had been repeatedly held inequitable that a person entitled to a share of a fund should receive anything in respect of that share without paying what he might be bound to contribute to the same fund. In such circumstances the court said in effect to the person claiming to be paid: "You have in your own hands, that which is applicable to the payment, pay yourself out of that." That had been done on the distribution of the residuary estate of a testator, where a person entitled to a share was also indebted to the estate: Willes v. Greenhill, 10 W. R. 33, 29 Beav. 376; In re Akerman, 40 W. R. 12, [1891] 3 Ch. 212; In re Watson, 44 W. R. 571, [1896] 1 Ch. 925. Where two companies were in liquidation and one held shares in the other, and was at the same time a creditor, it was held that the creditor could not take any dividend until all calls due on the shares were paid: In re Auriferous Properties, 47 W. R. 75, [1898] 2 Ch. 428, and In re Milan Tramways Co., 32 W. R. 601, 25 Ch. D. 587, where Cotton, L.J., said that probably the principle was applicable to the distribution of a fund to which debenture-holders were entitled. I am of opinion it is applicable to the present case, so that Chandler could not have claimed payment of a dividend until he had paid the £300. Then was his transferee in a better position? As a general rule the transferee of a chose in action stood in no better position than his transferor. There was nothing, however, to prevent a debtor from contracting with his creditor that he would not avail himself against a transferee of any rights which he might possess against the creditor, or any assignee of his: see In re Agra and Masterman's Bank, 15 W. R. 414, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 391, and In re Blakeley Ordnance Co., 16 W. R. 533, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 154. It was contended that such a contract existed in the present case. [His lordship then referred to the conditions of the debentures, which provided, inter alia (4), that every transfer must be delivered at the registered office of the company with a fee of 2s. 6d. and such evidence of identity or title as the company might reasonably require, and thereupon the transfer would be registered and a note of such registration would be indorsed thereon. Condition 6 provided that the principal and interest secured by the debentures would be paid without regard to any equities between the company and the original or any intermediate holder thereof.] It seems to me that condition 4 imposed an absolute obligation on the company to register a transfer upon the requirements of the condition being fulfilled. It was suggested that, that only applied while the company was a going concern, but having regard to section 131 of the Companies Act, 1862, I think that the right to transfer and to have the transfers registered was not affected by the winding up. It was said, however, that the equity which was set up was not that of the company but of the other debenture-holders; and that the right to transfer could not be insisted on after judgment had been given in a debenture-holder's action, at all events to their prejudice. The title of the debenture-holders to the £300 was derived from the fact that that sum was part of the property of the company. The debenture-holders all held their debentures under the same conditions, one of which was that the moneys secured by any debenture were to be paid without regard to any equities between the company and the original or any intermediate holder. That was a stipulation for the benefit of the debenture-holders, and was one to which debenture-holders attached great importance. The debenture-holders took this piece of property subject to the same obligations as the company, and they no less than the company were precluded by the conditions from asserting this equity against a transferee. I cannot see that the judgment in the action affected the right to transfer, and I hold that Mr. Robey was entitled to receive the dividend payable in respect of Mr. Chandler's debentures.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, T. Lamartine Yates; S. J. R. Stammers.

---

Chan. Div. } March 22.
Kekewich, J. }

In re LEWIS.
LEWIS v. SMITH. (a.)

Inland revenue—Will—Settlement estate duty—Incidence of duty—Settled legacy—General estate—Construction—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19.

A testatrix by her will directed that "my debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, including all duties payable by law out of my estate," and including the duties payable on certain annuities and legacies which she had bequeathed duty free, should be paid out of a fund which constituted her residuary general estate.

Held, that the words "all duties payable by law out of my estate" meant "duties payable by law out of my residuary general estate," and did not include settlement estate duty on a settled legacy, and were not "an express provision to the contrary" within the meaning of section 19 of the Finance Act, 1896.

Adjourned summons.

The testatrix, Teresa Lewis, who died on the 2nd of September, 1899, by her will dated the 11th of February, 1896, gave a fund of £9,907 Consols, to which she had become absolutely entitled under the provisions of her marriage settlement, to trustees, upon trust to pay out of the income three small annuities, and subject to these annuities to pay the income to her brother for life and then to her sister if she survived him, and upon the decease of the survivor, and subject to the payment of the three annuities, she directed the trustees to stand possessed of the fund upon the trusts declared in her will for the benefit of certain settled estates.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The testatrix possessed other property which she disposed of by clause 9 in her will, which was as follows: "Whereas in addition to my settlement trust fund" (being the above-mentioned fund in Consols) "I am also possessed of a sum of 2¾ Consolidated Stock at present amounting to £3,271, and there will also be a certain balance at my bankers at the time of my decease, now I direct that my debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, including all duties payable by law out of my estate and including the duties on the annuities hereinbefore charged on the income of my said settlement trust fund and the duties on any other annuities, and on all legacies hereby or by any codicil hereto bequeathed duty free shall first be paid thereout"; and the testatrix, after providing for the payment thereout, subject as aforesaid, of certain legacies, bequeathed the residue to her niece absolutely.

Testatrix was possessed of no other estate.

The executor duly paid estate duty on the settled trust fund as part of the estate of the testatrix; but in addition to this the Crown claimed settlement estate duty.

This summons was consequently taken out by the executor as plaintiff against the trustees of the settled fund and the residuary legatee as defendants to have the question determined whether the settlement estate duty leviable on the settlement trust fund settled by the will was payable out of that fund in exoneration of the rest of the estate of the testatrix or out of the sum of Consolidated Stock and bank balance mentioned in clause 9 of the will.

Section 19 of the Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), provides: "(1) The settlement estate duty leviable in respect of a legacy or other personal property settled by the will of the deceased shall (unless the will contain an express provision to the contrary) be payable out of the settled legacy or property in exoneration of the rest of the deceased's estate."

The real question was whether the will contained sufficient directions to take the incidence of the duty out of the general rule that it should fall on the settled legacy.

J. Howard Wright, for the executor.—The question is simply whether settlement estate duty on the settled legacy shall be paid out of that legacy or out of the funds comprised in clause 9 of the will.

H. Warlters Horne, for the trustees of the settled legacy.—There is sufficient "contrary intention" expressed in this will to make the settlement estate duty payable out of the funds comprised in clause 9 and not out of the settled legacy itself. It has been held that such contrary intention need not be specifically expressed if it can be sufficiently gathered from the general provisions of the will—e.g., cases of jointure have been held to be sufficient. Even if the word "estate" is to be read "general estate," the duty is to be borne by the "special funds," —i.e., the funds comprised in clause 9 of the will. The dictum of the Master of the Rolls in In re Sir Spencer Maryon-Wilson, 16 Times L. R. 256, is in conflict with the decision of the Court of Appeal in Attorney-General v. Clarkson, ante, p. 216, [1900] 1 Q. B. 156. [KEKEWICH, J.—That was on another Act and has nothing to do with this case.] Testatrix has directed that all duties payable by law out of her estate should be paid out of residue, and this would include settlement estate duty, which is called in the Finance Act, 1894, s. 5 (a), a further duty.

Austen Cartmell, for the residuary legatee under clause 9 of the will.—Testatrix had not expressed "contrary intention" within the meaning of the Finance Act, 1896, s. 19. She has divided the duties into two classes—first, those payable on death simpliciter; and second, those arising from the particular character of the persons taking; she draws a distinction and says the first class are to be paid out of residue, and the second class only out of residue where she has expressly stated the legacies or annuities are to be duty free.

KEKEWICH, J.—This testatrix, by her will, settled personal property, and the result is that the settlement estate duty leviable in respect of that personal property, which was hers to do as she pleased with, must be payable out of that settled property in exoneration of what is called the rest of the deceased's estate (that means what we generally call the residue) unless the will contains an express provision to the contrary. Therefore, now that we have had the case threshed out, the point comes back to that which Mr. Howard Wright told me it was in the opening—namely, a question whether this testatrix has expressed "a provision to the contrary." That depends, of course, simply upon the construction of the will. It matters very little whether she had a power of appointment over this fund which she settled or not, for as a matter of fact this settled fund, I understand, was her own to deal with, as I have said, as she pleased. At any rate, she dealt with it by her will, and she dealt with it in this way: she directed the trustees to pay certain annuities thereout, and she directed them to pay those annuities free of duty. It was assumed in argument rather than proved in any way that that meant that the duty which otherwise would have been payable by the annuitant was to be paid out of the settled fund. I do not myself see that at all. Perhaps it does not really call for decision, but I do not see myself how giving an annuity free of duty is an intimation or an expression of the will of the testatrix that that duty should be paid out of the fund of which she is disposing. Supposing it was a legacy, or an annuity standing alone not given out of the settled fund, but simply a bequest of £100 or an annuity of £100 free of duty, the duty would be payable out of the residuary estate, or, as Mr. Cartmell said, as one of the testamentary expenses, and the executor would have to account to the Crown, and he would not be able to make a deduction from the legacy or annuity, and the result would be he would have to bring it into the general account of the estate. Why should any different view be followed when she is dealing with a settled fund in this way? I cannot myself see here any direction that their duties should be paid out of the settled fund. I have not heard whether she has exhausted the settled fund or not; but it matters not. All she says is, the annuitant shall not pay it; she has not said the settled fund shall pay, and the result, it seems to me, is that if it rested there, the duty would have to be paid out of her general estate.

We go on to clause 9 of her will, where she deals with the general estate; and there is a very carefully framed and specific direction as to the duties which are to be paid. I do not follow Mr. Cartmell there. I do not think he is right in the construction of this clause as dividing the duties into two classes. I do not think he is right because I think there is only one class in which the testatrix has thought fit by express direction to include all the duties which she has mentioned. She says, "I direct that my debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, including all duties payable by law out of my estate"—that is what she says are to be paid out of this residue—"all debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, including all duties payable by law out of my estate"—some day we may have to consider whether duties are testamentary expenses without any such direction; but she says clearly, "all duties payable by law out of my estate" are to be included and paid in this way. Then she goes on to enumerate some duties which are to be paid, "duties on the annuities hereinafter charged on the income of my said settlement trust funds"—which, as I have already said, would have to be paid out of her residuary estate, even if she had not said so—"and all the duties on any other annuities and on all legacies hereby, or by any codicil herto, bequeathed, duty free." Those duties also would have to be paid out of the general estate, and the only reason for mentioning them here is to remove any question if it occurred to the executor, or those advising the executor, as to what duties ought to be paid. They are all included in the general phrase "debts and funeral and testamentary expenses," and she says, "By testamentary expenses I mean to include all these." I do not think she classifies them. It is only a means of enumerating what is to be treated as falling under that head. What, therefore, is the meaning of "all the duties payable by law out of my estate"? The duties on the annuities, no doubt, would be paid as coming within that category by the express provision in the will, but the question is whether the "duties payable by law out of my estate" would include the duty payable in respect of this legacy. "The duties payable by law out of my estate" means (according to our ordinary phraseology) the duties which are thrown upon the residuary estate. "Duties and funeral and testamentary expenses" are for the purpose of this will to include those particular duties. The law has said that settlement estate duty shall be payable out of the settlement fund. Those are the words of the Act with which we are dealing. How can I therefore, in those circumstances, read the will as saying that that particular duty shall be payable out of the general estate? It is not by law so payable, but it is payable out of something else. It is payable out of the settled fund. Therefore, far from expressing a provision to the contrary, she seems to me in language (and I can only treat the language as it is) to say that the settlement estate duty is to be left to be payable out of the settled estate; that seems to me to be the true construction of the document.

Whether the point was thought of or not is another thing. It seems to me she has given no direction to the contrary, she has left that to fall as the Legislature has said it shall fall. Consequently the settled fund must bear the burden of the duty in exoneration of the rest of the estate.

Solicitors, Pollock & Co.; Freshfields.

---

Chan. Div.
Byrne, J. } April 10.

LLOYDS BANK (LIMITED) v. PRINCESS ROYAL COLLIERY CO. (LIMITED) (NO. 2). (a.)

Practice—Summons in chambers—Adjournment into court—Costs of adjournment—Ord. 55, rr. 15, 15a—Ord. 26, r. 1—"The court or a judge"—Right of suitor to take an order from the judge personally.

A party to a summons in chambers in the Chancery Division has a right to have the summons adjourned into court, but his right, in cases where the rules do not make an order by the judge in person necessary, is subject to the discretion of the court as to the costs of the adjourn- ment, which will not be exercised against him merely because his application has failed.

(a.) Reported by R. LEIGH RAMSBOTHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The words "the court or a judge" in ord. 26, r. 1, do not mean only the judge in person, and an order made by a master in the Chancery Division is an order made by the court or a judge.

Lambton v. Parkinson, 35 W. R. 545, and In re Watts, 31 W. R. 262, 22 Ch. D. 5, distinguished.

The plaintiffs had brought an action against the defendants, and upon their applying under ord. 26, r. 1, for leave to discontinue the action a question arose as to whether the plaintiffs should be ordered to pay certain sums of money which the defendants contended ought to be treated as costs in the action.

A summons was taken out in chambers, and the master intimated that he was prepared to make an order, but the defendants desiring that the summons should be heard by the judge personally, the master made no order and adjourned the summons into court.

The summons was heard in due course, and Byrne, J., decided against the defendants and ordered them to pay the costs of the adjournment.

Levett, Q.C., for the defendants, contended that they had a right to come to the judge in person. It was not an appeal from the master's decision, because the master had made no order. The defendant was not bound to accept a master's decision.

He referred to ord. 55, rr. 15, 15*a*; In re Rigg, 10 W. R. 365.

Rowden, Q.C., for the plaintiffs.—A party has a right to adjourn to the judge, but it is at his risk as to costs. This right would be abused—e.g., for the purpose of gaining time, unless the court had some power to check it. The only power it has is by inflicting costs. This question could have been decided by the master. There was no necessity to bring it before the judge in person. In ord. 26, r. 1, the words "the court or a judge" do not mean only the judge in person.

He referred to Scott v. Homer, 60 L. J. Ch. 238, 39 W. R. Dig. 158; In re Watts, 31 W. R. 262, 22 Ch. D. 5; and Lambton v. Parkinson, 35 W. R. 545; and also to ord. 55, rr. 15 and 15*a*.

The court took time to consider.

April 10.—BYRNE, J., stating that he had made inquiries from judges and others of greater experience in these matters than himself, held that the right of every suitor in the Chancery Division to have any question determined by the judge personally was beyond question, and that an adjournment to the judge was not in the nature of an appeal. All orders made in chambers are orders of the judge, though taken without the parties actually going before him. Some orders must be made by the judge in person (see ord. 55, rr. 15, 15*a*), but in other cases, and especially when the master is prepared to make a proper order, the costs of an adjournment are in the discretion of the judge. If this were not so it might lead to grave abuses, e.g., summonses for time. Special care should be taken as to the costs of an adjournment in cases where, from the nature of the application, it is clear that the proper necessary costs of the application must be borne by the applicant. On the other hand judges are careful not to check reasonable and proper adjournments to themselves by visiting the party at whose instance the adjournment is taken with costs simply because he is unsuccessful. No general rule can be laid down, but judges have to use their discretion carefully. In this case the master's order would have been the judge's order.

The question whether a particular summons should be adjourned to the judge in chambers or into court is regulated by the nature of the case and other circumstances as to which the master, subject to general directions by the judge, exercises his discretion. The opposition to the order asked for by the plaintiffs was not reasonable, and it will not be right that the plaintiffs should suffer in consequence of the adjournment. The defendants will get the costs of the summons, but they must pay the costs of the adjournment.

It was urged that an order of the kind asked for must be made by the judge personally, because discontinuance could not have taken place without the leave of "the court or a judge"; but, as before explained, the order would have been the order of the judge though not personally pronounced by him. All orders in the Chancery Division are made by the court or by a judge either personally or through a master. The case of Lambton v. Parkinson, cited in the argument, does not apply here, as the duties of the masters in the Chancery Division and the Queen's Bench Division are quite different. In re Watts, also cited, was between mortgagee and mortgagor, and did not lay down any general rule as to costs of adjournments different from that which has been universally followed for many years.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Blyth, Dutton, Hartley, & Blyth, for M. F. Carter, Newnham.

Solicitors for the defendants, Wood, Bigg, & Nash, for Winterbotham & Sons, Stroud.

---

Chan. Div. Byrne, J. } April 3.

In re LORD CLIFDEN.
ANNALY v. AGAR-ELLIS. (a.)

Mortgage—Life policy—Personal covenant—Power of sale—Statute of Limitations (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8—Moneys received on surrender of policy by mortgagee—Payment or acknowledgment—"In the meantime."

Where a mortgagee, having received neither payment nor acknowledgment in respect of his mortgage for twenty-two years, at the end of that time surrenders to the insurance office a policy on the life of the mortgagor in order to realize part of his security, the surrender value of the policy so paid by the insurance company to the mortgagee will not operate as a payment or acknowledgment of the mortgage debt so as to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations.

The words "in the meantime" in section 8 of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, mean the period between the time at which the action or suit is brought and the time at which the debt or the remedy for it would have been barred.

Adjourned summons.

The plaintiff was the legal personal representative of Henry George Viscount Clifden.

The defendants were the executors of Leopold Viscount Clifden.

By an indenture of the 13th of February, 1871, Leopold mortgaged certain property, together with a policy of assurance on his own life in the Sun Life Office for the sum of £2,500. The mortgage contained the usual personal covenant for payment, and also the usual power of sale, and it was specially provided that the policy of assurance might be surrendered to the office by which the same had been granted by the mortgagee without the further consent of the mortgagor.

(a.) Reported by R. LEIGH RAMSBOTHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The mortgage in 1884 became vested absolutely in Henry George as mortgagee.

The mortgagor never paid any sum for principal, interest, or the premiums on the policy; but the latter was kept on foot throughout by the mortgagee.

In 1893 Henry George realized the policy by surrendering it to the insurance office for £1,463 14s.; but no notice was given to the mortgagor of this.

The plaintiff took out an originating summons to have it determined amongst other things whether the mortgage of 1871 could be enforced against the estate of the mortgagor on the personal covenant.

G. Lawrence, for the plaintiffs.—The Statute of Limitations (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), s. 8, has not run against the mortgagee. The payment of the surrender value of the policy was a payment or acknowledgment within the statute made in pursuance of an obligation created by the mortgage contract, which for that purpose constituted the insurance company the agents of the mortgagor. The payment made by the company was not a gift made by a stranger. The company was bound to pay the money to the mortgagee, who was bound to apply it in accordance with the provisions in the mortgage deed. There is no English case exactly in point, but the case is covered by the Irish case of In re Conlan, 29 L. R. Ir. 199.

He also cited Harlock v. Ashberry, 30 W. R. 327, 19 Ch. D. 539; Sutton v. Sutton, 31 W. R. 369, 22 Ch. D. 511; Chinnery v. Evans, 13 W. R. 20, 11 H. L. Cas. 115; Gregson v. Hindley, 10 Jur. 383; Allison v. Frisby, 38 W. R. 65, 43 Ch. D. 106; Lewin v. Wilson, 11 App. Cas. 639, 35 W. R. Dig. 123; In re Hale, 47 W. R. 579, [1899] 2 Ch. 107.

Prior, for the defendants.—The Statute of Limitations has run against the mortgagee. There was no compulsion upon the insurance company to accept a surrender of the policy. The company was not the agent of the mortgagor. There was no privity between the company and the parties to the mortgage. In any case the words "in the meantime" in the statute had operated because the policy was not surrendered until twenty-two years after the mortgage was created.

G. Lawrence replied.

BYRNE, J., after reviewing the cases, held that the words "in the meantime" in section 8 of 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57 meant the period between the time at which the action or suit is brought and the time at which the debt or the remedy for it would have been barred and that the mortgagee was therefore barred by the statute and could not enforce the mortgage.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Foyer & Hordern.

Solicitors for the defendants, Norton, Rose, Norton, & Co.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } Jan. 31; Feb. 6.

D. v. A. & Co. (a.)

Practice—Breach of undertaking in an order—Attachment—Service of order on solicitors—Motion for committal—Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 42, r. 7; ord. 44, r. 2.

Where defendants in an action committed a breach of an undertaking given by them and embodied in an order of the court which was not served on them personally, plaintiffs asked for leave to issue a writ of attachment.

Held, that the order might be enforced by committal without service, and that the proper remedy for the breach of an undertaking is by committal, and not by attachment.

This was a motion by the plaintiffs for leave to issue a writ of attachment against the defendants for breach of an undertaking contained in an order made on the 26th of January, 1900.

The facts of the case were these:

On the 4th of December, 1899, an action was commenced against the defendants, who were a firm of solicitors practising in Paris, for an injunction to restrain them from delivering up, communicating, or disclosing, except to the plaintiffs, certain documents in the possession of the defendants, and for delivery up to the plaintiffs of such documents, and for inspection with power to take copies thereof.

On the 26th of January, 1900, a motion was made by the plaintiffs for an interim injunction to the above effect.

The defendants undertook not to part with or disclose the contents of the documents in question, and also to deposit them at the Central Office on or before the 29th of January, 1900.

No order was therefore made, except that the motion should stand over till the trial of the action without prejudice to any question as to costs, and the undertaking of the defendants was inserted in the order.

Certain documents were thereupon deposited by the defendants at the Central Office on the 30th of January, but their affidavit of documents did not show that they were not in possession of others demanded by the plaintiffs.

The order of the 26th of January had not been served on the defendants, nor was the notice of motion for attachment served on the defendants personally, but on their solicitors.

Hon. E. C. Macnaghten, Q.C., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the motion.

Vernon R. Smith, Q.C., and F. H. Maugham, for the defendants.—The order of the 26th of January should have been served on the defendants: Halford v. Hardy, 44 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 90, [1899] W. N. 243. The notice of motion should have been served on the defendants personally: Mander v. Falcke, 40 W. R. 31, [1891] 3 Ch. 488; Annual Practice for 1900, pp. 599, 603, 604. The application should have been for committal, not for attachment. The remedy for breach of an undertaking is by committal: In re Evans, 41 W. R. 230, [1893] 1 Ch. 252.

Hon. E. C. Macnaghten, Q.C., replied.

COZENS-HARDY, J., stated the facts, and then said: The defendants object (1) that the order of the 26th of January, which contained the undertaking, was not served upon them; (2) that the notice of motion was not personally served upon them; (3) that the proper remedy for the breach of their undertaking is by committal and not by attachment.

As to the first objection, I think it is not well founded. It is settled law that an order granting an injunction may be enforced by committal, although the order has not been served. It is sufficient if it be shown that the defendant had notice of the order. Service of the order is a convenient mode of giving notice, but that is all. Notice may be given by telegram or otherwise: United Telephone Co. v. Dale, 32 W. R. 428, 25 Ch. D. 778. If this holds good where a hostile order has been made, it must equally hold good where th defendant has voluntarily given an undertaking. Indeed in such a case I think no notice at all is requisite, for in the words of Chitty, J., in Callow v. Young, 55 L. T. Rep. 544, 35 W. R. Dig. 11: "It is not necessary to show that the person sought to be attached had knowledge of his undertaking. He must be presumed to have known that he had given his undertaking." Having regard to the settled practice of giving an undertaking in the terms of a notice of motion, it would be highly dangerous to hold that a defendant who had given an undertaking could disregard it unless and until the order was served. I do not think Kekewich, J., intended to intimate a contrary opinion in Halford v. Hardy.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

As to the second objection, it is conceded that if committal is the proper remedy personal service of the notice of motion is necessary.

It remains to consider the third objection. According to the old law an order of the court for the committal of the defendant was the proper remedy for the breach of an order to abstain from doing a certain thing. On the other hand, the non-compliance with an order to do a certain thing was punished by attachment, which was issued at the instance of the party aggrieved and at his own risk. The applicant had to prove personal service of the order on the party required to do the act and also that default had been made. On production of the order, and on proof to the satisfaction of the proper officer that there had been due service and default made, the writ issued. It was not due service unless the order had a special indorsement which contained the words, "If you neglect to obey this order you will be liable to be arrested under a writ of attachment": see Braithwaite's Record and Writ Practice (ed. 1858), pp. 166-7. This, which was the old law, has been materially altered by ord. 42, r. 7, which provides in effect that a judgment, whether its form be negative or affirmative, may be enforced either by attachment or by committal; and by ord. 44, r. 2, which provides that no writ of attachment shall be issued without leave to be applied for on notice. In the present case, however, ord. 42, r. 7, does not apply, for there was no judgment or order upon the defendants to deposit documents. Their liability rested upon their undertaking. It is somewhat strange that there is no express authority as to what is the proper mode of enforcing an undertaking as distinct from an order. The question arose in Callow v. Young. In that case a motion was made before Chitty, J., on the 19th of November, 1886, for leave to issue an attachment for breach of a negative undertaking, and leave was granted. It appears, however, that the order was stopped on the ground that committal was the proper remedy, not attachment—a point which had not been taken in argument: 31 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 77, [1886] W. N. 209. The motion was brought on again on the 11th of February, 1887 (31 SOLICITOR'S JOURNAL 269, 56 L. T. Rep. 147). Chitty, J., after argument, gave leave to amend the notice of motion by asking in the alternative for committal, and directed the motion to be served again. I think this amounted to a decision that, where the undertaking is in form negative, attachment is not the proper remedy. Had there been an injunction instead of an undertaking, committal would, under the old law, have been the only remedy, and the decision may have proceeded on that ground. It does not seem necessary to cover the case of an undertaking which is positive in form. On principle, however, I think that except in a case falling within ord. 42, r. 7, attachment can only issue for breach of an order of the court commanding the respondents to do a certain act, and that in the numerous cases where there is a contempt, not arising from non-compliance with such an order of the court, the only remedy is by committal. This is the view expressed in Mr. Lavie's memorandum, printed in a note to the report of In re Evans, which is stated by Bowen, L.J., to represent the practice accurately. I adopt that view, and hold that an undertaking, whether positive or negative, must be enforced by committal, and not by attachment. The result is, that in my opinion the third objection prevails. The notice of motion was wrong in asking for attachment instead of committal. The plaintiffs must pay the costs of the motion.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Cheston & Sons.

Solicitors for the defendants, Dixon, Weld, & Dixons.

---

Chan. Div. Buckley, J. } Feb. 8.

STEPHENSON v. YORKE. (a.)

Practice—Middlesex Registry—Middlesex deed—Rectification of register—Jurisdiction to order—Land Registry (Middlesex Deeds) Act (54 & 55 Vict. c. 64), s. 1—Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 95—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 7.

The court now has power to order the Register of Middlesex deeds to be rectified, and, in exercise of this jurisdiction, ordered the registration of certain forgeries purporting to be assignments of leaseholds in Middlesex, dated in 1887, and also the registration of certain mortgages, dated in 1898, of the same property, to be vacated.

Gibbs v. Sidney, 49 L. T. Rep. 132, 31 W. R. Dig. 210, not followed.

Action.

The plaintiff, who was owner of leasehold premises in the county of Middlesex, in 1883 deposited the title deeds for safe custody with her solicitor. The solicitor absconded. It was then discovered that he had forged documents under seal purporting to be assignments on sale by the plaintiff to him of the leasehold premises aforesaid, dated in 1887, and by several indentures, dated in 1898, mortgaged the same to the defendant Yorke. Both the forged deeds of assignment and the mortgages were registered in the Middlesex Registry. The plaintiff brought the above action against Yorke and the solicitor, for the recovery of the property free from Yorke's charges, and Yorke having submitted to judgment in the terms of agreed minutes, the only question was whether the court had jurisdiction to order the registration of the above deeds to be vacated.

J. K. Young, for the plaintiff.—The Land Transfer Act, 1875, provides for rectification of the register by sections 95-97, and the provision so made is extended by the Land Transfer Act, 1897: see section 7. Then section 1 of the Land Registry (Middlesex Deeds) Act, 1891, enacts that the Middlesex Registry shall be transferred to the Land Registry, and form part of that office, and all powers and indemnities subsisting, and all penalties imposed for the purposes of the Land Transfer Act, 1875, are to be available for the purpose of the Middlesex Registry Acts. That makes the machinery of the Land Registry Acts available here, and the court can therefore order the registration to be vacated. In Gibbs v. Sidney, 49 L. T. Rep. 132, 31 W. R. Dig. 210, Seton, vol. 3, 1921, 1922, North, J.,

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

cause to a contrary conclusion, but that was prior to the Act of 1891.

Northcote, for the defendant.

BUCKLEY, J.—Having regard to the case of Gibbs v. Sidney, I certainly have power to make a declaration that the registration of these deeds ought to be vacated, but the question is, Can I go on and order that the register be rectified accordingly? I think the effect of section 1 of 54 & 55 Vict. c. 64, section 95 of the Land Transfer Act, 1875, and section 7 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, is that I have power to make the order, and I order the register to be rectified accordingly.

Solicitors, Pasco Daphne, for Leonard Hill, Margate; W. H. Hudson.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 30.

STEAD v. TILLOTSON AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Salmon Fishery Acts — Unlawful taking—Trout, apparently poisoned, but still alive, taken from river by the hand—Salmon Fishery Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 71), s. 22—Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 39), s. 7.

Taking dying salmon, trout, or char from a river or stream by hand, or otherwise than by a properly-licensed instrument is an offence within section 22 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873.

This was an appeal by case stated on behalf of the Yorkshire Fishery Board from a decision of the justices for the West Riding of Yorkshire, who had dismissed an information preferred by the appellants' chief water bailiff against the two respondents, for illegally taking trout contrary to section 22 of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1873, as extended to trout and char by section 7 of the Freshwater Fisheries Act, 1878. The case stated that the men were charged with taking twenty trout out of the tributary of the River Aire with their hands, that when the fish were taken out of the water by the respondents they had apparently been poisoned, and although alive were in a dying condition. The respondents subsequently sold some of the fish, which were found unfit for food. There was not sufficient evidence to prove how the fish had become in a dying condition, or that apart from taking the fish from the river with their hands, the respondents had in any way been concerned in killing them.

The justices held that the respondents had in the circumstances committed no offence within the meaning of the Act, as there was no evidence that the respondents had poisoned the fish, and they accordingly dismissed the summons.

The fishery board appealed.

H. T. Waddy, for the appellants.—The Act makes it an offence to take live fish by any means other than a properly licensed instrument from a river or stream, and therefore taking these trout out of the river by the hand while alive was an offence, and the justices should have convicted. If the Act is not strictly enforced, then persons who take poisoned fish that are not dead out of the river cannot be prosecuted unless it can also be proved that they were the persons who put the poison into the river. I rely on the case of Gazard v. Cooke, 55 J. P. 102, the head-note of which is as follows: "C. was charged with unlawfully taking a salmon by means other than a licensed instrument, contrary to 36 & 37 Vict. c. 71, s. 22. A salmon of 27lbs. was one day left on the tide retiring, and C. picked it up and took it home. There was no evidence whether the fish was dead or alive when picked up, but before picking it up it had been attacked by gulls. Held, that the justices were right in holding that the section only applied to live fish." [BUCKNILL, J.—Would you say that if you hooked a salmon a mile up stream and it got away in an injured condition and drifted down to where I was fishing, and I took it out with my hand when it was dying, but not quite dead, I should be guilty of an offence? Waddy.—Certainly; but the justices would have discretion to say that the offence was a trivial one.]

Walter Stewart, for the respondents.—At most these respondents were guilty of a merely technical offence. The statutes were passed to increase the number of fish, and the removal of dying fish from a stream would be beneficial to the fish left in the water. The justices had a discretion and used it rightly.

CHANNELL, J.—I think this appeal should be allowed and the case remitted to the justices to convict. If the magistrates find that the respondents who took these twenty dying and poisoned fish had in fact nothing to do with the poisoning of the fish, they might, under the Summary Jurisdiction Act, treat the offence as a merely technical one and impose no penalty. We think, however, that taking of dying fish from the river by hand is an offence within the Act. The appellants do not ask for costs and therefore we make no order.

BUCKNILL, J., concurred.

Case remitted.

Solicitors for the appellants, Richard Smith & Sons, for Charlesworth & Wilson, Skipton.

Solicitors for the respondents, Turner, Smith, & Crowle, for W. Thompson, Skipton.

---

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div.
Admiralty. Dec. 18.

"THE PHILADELPHIAN." (a.)

Ship — Damage — Vessel exceeding 150 feet in length required to exhibit when at anchor two anchor lights, one "at or near the forward part of the vessel"— Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 11 —Canadian Navigation Act, 1886 (49 Vict. c. 79), s. 4—44 Vict. c. 20, s. 2, Canadian—Order of Governor in Council, Feb. 9, 1897, art. 11—Want of look-out—Infringement of regulations by no possibility contributory to collision.

A vessel of 313 feet in length was lying at anchor at night in the River St. Lawrence, off Quebec, with two anchor lights exhibited—the after light on the flagstaff at the stern, and the forward light in the starboard fore rigging about sixty to seventy feet abaft the stem—when she was run into by a steamship. The defendants, the owners of the steamship, raised the defence, in an action of damage in rem against the steamship, that the vessel run into by the steamship did not, at the time of the collision, exhibit any proper or visible anchor lights properly carried and showing, as required by the Regulations for Preventing Collisions on the Rivers within Canada, of which article 11 (in terms the same as article 11 of the regulations for preventing collisions at sea) provides that a vessel of 150 feet or upwards in length, when at anchor, shall carry in the forward part of the vessel one such light (a white light) in a lantern so constructed as to show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light visible all round the horizon at a distance of at least one mile, and at or near the stern of the vessel another such light.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The court found that there had been a bad look-out on board the steamship, and that any failure on the part of the vessel at anchor to properly exhibit an anchor light "at or near the forward part of the vessel" within the meaning of the 11th article of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea and of the Canadian River Regulations, could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision, and that, therefore, the steamship was alone to blame for the collision.

Held, also, that the forward anchor light on the vessel at anchor had not been exhibited in accordance with the regulations "at or near the forward part of the vessel."

This was an action of damage instituted on behalf of the owners of the steamship Ella Sayer, of 2,549 tons gross and 1,618 tons net register, and 313 feet in length, against the vessel Philadelphian, of 5,120 tons gross and 3,322 tons net register, and her owners intervening as defendants.

The action was brought to recover for the damages occasioned by a collision between the two vessels on the night of the 10th of August, 1897, when The Ella Sayer was at anchor in the River St. Lawrence, off Quebec, with two anchor lights exhibited, and was run into by The Philadelphian and damaged.

The defendants pleaded that a good anchor watch was not being kept on board The Ella Sayer; that she was not exhibiting any anchor lights, or any proper or visible anchor lights properly carried and showing as required by the regulations, and that those on board her failed to comply with (inter alia) article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, and of the regulations set forth in chapter 79, section 2, of the Canadian Navigation Act as amended by Order in Council (of the Governor of Canada) of the 9th of February, 1897.*

Dec. 14, 15.—The case was now heard before the judge in court (Bucknill, J.) assisted by two of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House.

Laing, Q.C, Miller, and Roche appeared for the plaintiffs.

Aspinall, Q.C., and Glynn, for the defendants.

Reference was made to the case of The Gannet, [1899] P. 230.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 18.—BUCKNILL, J.—In this case the steamship Philadelphian collided with the steamship Ella Sayer in the River St. Lawrence, off Quebec, at about 11 p.m. on the 10th of August last, whilst The Ella Sayer was at anchor. There was nothing in the weather to account for the casualty, as it was a fine and clear night, and the excuse set up is that the anchor lights of The Ella Sayer were not burning, or, if burning, were giving such a poor light that it was impossible to see them in time to avoid the collision. [After reviewing the evidence the court found as facts that at the time of the collision both the lights of The Ella Sayer were properly burning; that there had been a want of proper look-out on board The Philadelphian; and that she had been navigated at too great a speed. The judgment then proceeded as follows:] The Philadelphian must, therefore, be found to blame. That being the case, is The Ella Sayer to blame? She is not to blame unless there is a breach by her of article 11. Now, the forward light was in the starboard forerigging, abaft the stem, and the after light was on the flagstaff. Article 11 of the regulations applicable to this collision provides: "A vessel under 150 feet in length when at anchor shall carry forward where it can best be seen, but at a height not exceeding 20 feet above the hull, a white light in a lantern so constructed as to show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light visible all round the horizon at a distance of at least one mile. A vessel of 150 feet or upwards in length when at anchor shall carry in the forward part of the vessel at a height of not less than 20 feet and not exceeding 40 feet above the hull one such light, and at or near the stem of the vessel and at such a height that it shall not be less than 15 feet lower than the forward light another such light. The length of the vessel shall be deemed to be the length appearing in her certificate of registry."

The Legislature has decided that a vessel under a certain length need only carry one light, but that a vessel of 150 feet or upwards shall carry two lights. The forward light is to be "in the forward part of the vessel." What does that mean. It may mean one of three things. It may mean a light fixed forward of the middle length of the ship, because directly you get forward of the middle length of the ship you are in the forward part of the vessel. It may mean that you are to put it as far forward as possible—right forward, which it does not say—or it may mean that it may be put in any spot between just forward of mid-length and the stem. I think, speaking under the advice of the Elder Brethren as to what may be reasonably called the forward part of the ship, that it may be put on one of the forward stays. If it is hung at the proper height on the forestay, it would necessarily have to be somewhere abaft the stem, or it might be put on the fore-topmast stay, but it must be abaft the stem. Now, in a case in the Court of Appeal, that of The R. L. Alston, 8 P. D. 5, 31 W. R. Dig. 176, I find a passage which appears to give me some assistance. There Brett, L.J., says, in effect, that where you find a rule or article which is capable of two constructions, as I find that this article 11 is, you ought to put upon the language that which you believe in the particular case to be the reasonable construction. It is quite clear that this article is capable of more than one construction. "In the forward part" may mean two or three different places, and I have to construe it in this case, and, if it is necessary, to decide the point. I hold that to put a light in a vessel, 313 feet in length, as this vessel was, 60 or 70 feet abaft the stem, is not to place it in the forward part of the vessel, and if it was important in this case I should find that what was done was not in compliance with the article. The object of the rule probably is, that where you have a vessel exceeding 150 feet in length, at anchor, those navigating the river should have good information as to her length; that when she is swinging in the river the vessels approaching her from astern or ahead should have an opportunity of knowing the length of the ship. How could that be given if the forward light is 60 or 70 feet from the stem? But whilst I am putting this construction upon the rule, it will not in this particular case affect the judgment of the court with regard to the responsibility of The Ella Sayer, because, although I find that the light was not placed in accordance with article 11, on my construction of it, I find, also, that that could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision. I say that for this reason, that the defendant's witnesses never saw the light at all. They swear that there was no light, but, as it is not suggested that the light was not hung skilfully and properly in the shrouds, it was therefore throwing an unbroken light all round the horizon, and it is clear to my mind that such breach of the article could not possibly have contributed to the collision. In this case, therefore, my judgment is that The Philadelphian is solely to blame.

* Article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea is in identical terms with article 11 of the Order in Council of the Governor of Canada of the 9th of February, 1897, and is set out in the judgment. The Governor of Canada obtained power to make the Order in Council in question under the provisions of the Canadian statute of 44 Vict. c. 20, s. 2 (Canadian), which section again is incorporated in the revised Canadian statutes as section 14 of the Canadian Navigation Act, 1886 (49 Vict. c. 79). The Order in Council in question is applicable "to all the rivers, lakes, and other navigable waters within Canada or within the jurisdiction of the Parliament thereof.

I may add that the Elder Brethren who are assisting me have suggested to me that article 11 is a very puzzling rule for any seaman to understand, and I agree with them that the language is so ambiguous that I think, speaking for myself, it might very properly be changed. How is a master to know where to put a light if he is only told to put it in the forward part of the vessel

Solicitors for plaintiffs, Botterell & Roche.

Solicitors for defendants, Thomas Cooper & Co.

---

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith and Romer, L.JJ.) March 17.

KNOWLES & SONS v. MAYOR, &c., OF BOLTON. (a.)

Arbitration—Award—Enlargement of time—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), ss. 9, 24—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 180, sub-section 9.

The court has power, under section 9 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to enlarge the time for making an award under the Public Health Act, 1875, at any time.

Section 9 of the Arbitration Act is not inconsistent with section 180, sub-section 9, of the Public Health Act

Warburton v. Haslingden Local Board, 48 L. J. Q. B. 451, 27 W. R. Dig. 11, approved.

In re Mackenzie and the Ascot District Gas Co., 34 W. R. 487, 17 Q. B. D. 114, overruled.

Appeal from the refusal of Kennedy, J., to make an order, under section 9 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, extending the time for making an award.

The Corporation of Bolton, having made a sewer through premises belonging to the plaintiffs, became liable, under section 308 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to make compensation for the damage done thereby, and proceedings for determining the amount of compensation were taken under sections 179 and 180. Each of the parties appointed an arbitrator, and the arbitrators appointed an umpire, who made an award giving the plaintiffs £40 compensation; but the award was made more than two months from the date of the reference to the umpire, and was therefore out of time.

The plaintiffs having applied for an extension of time for making the award, Kennedy, J., refused to extend the time, on the authority of In re Mackenzie and the Ascot District Gas Co., 34 W. R. 487, 17 Q. B. D. 114.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Danckwerts, Q.C., and Horridge, for the plaintiffs.—By section 9 of the Arbitration Act, 1889: "The time for making an award may from time to time be enlarged by order of the court or a judge, whether the time for making the award has expired or not." By section 24: "This Act shall apply to every arbitration under any Act passed before or after the commencement of this Act as if the arbitration were pursuant to a submission, except in so far as this Act is inconsistent with the Act regulating the arbitration or with any rules or procedure authorized or recognized by that Act." Section 180 of the Public Health Act, 1875, lays down regulations to be observed in all arbitrations under that Act. Sub-section 9 is as follows: "The time for making an award by arbitrators under this Act shall not in any case be extended beyond the period of two months from the date of the submission, and the time for making an award by an umpire under this Act shall not in any case be extended beyond the period of two months from the date of the reference of the matter to him." This sub-section deals only with the power of arbitrators and umpires to extend time, and does not affect the power of the court. Section 9 of the Arbitration Act is not inconsistent with the provisions as to arbitration contained in the Public Health Act, and therefore that section applies to awards made under the Public Health Act. The case of Warburton v. Haslingden Local Board, 48 L. J. Q. B. 451, 27 W. R. Dig 11, which was under section 8 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, is in the plaintiffs' favour: see also Lord v. Lee, 16 W. R. 856, L. R. 3 Q. B. 404; May v. Harcourt, 13 Q. B. D. 688, 33 W. R. Dig. 8; In re Yeadon Local Board and Yeadon Waterworks Co., 37 W. R. 360, 41 Ch. D. 52. The case of In re Mackenzie and the Ascot District Gas Co. was wrongly decided, and ought to be overruled.

Cripps, Q.C., and Buckmaster, for the defendants.—This case is governed by In re Mackenzie and the Ascot District Gas Co. Sub-section 9 of section 180 of the Public Health Act contains an express prohibition which is perfectly general in its terms. The time for making an award shall not in any case be extended beyond the specified period. Section 9 of the Arbitration Act is inconsistent with this; and therefore, by virtue of section 24, the Arbitration Act does not apply to an arbitration under the Public Health Act.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The question is whether the learned judge had power to enlarge the time for making an award in this case. In Lord v. Lee it was held, under section 15 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, that the court had power to enlarge the time for making an award, after the time for making it had elapsed and after an award had in fact been made. But it is said that by section 180 of the Public Health Act, 1875, the power of the court is now fettered with regard to arbitrations under that Act. Sub-section 9 is relied on. That sub-section, however, in my opinion, deals only with the powers of arbitrators and umpires to extend the time for making an award; it does not affect the power of the court at all. No case has been cited which binds us to hold that the jurisdiction of the court to enlarge the time for making an award at any time has been taken away. The case of Warburton v. Haslingden Local Board is in favour of what I am saying, and I agree with it. I do not agree with In re Mackenzie and the Ascot District Gas Co. I think that there is power to enlarge the time in this case, and that the time ought to be enlarged.

ROMER, L.J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for Fullagar & Hulton, Bolton.

Solicitors for the defendants, Holt-Beever Hinnell, Bolton.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

when, upon the 9th of February, 1897, he gave the second two notes to Peed in order to pay off the first three notes, and he gave value for the second two notes, when he paid the £4,000 in July, 1897, to Peed to pay them off; but this was months before the fraud was perpetrated by Peed upon the plaintiffs and before he got the notes back, which took place on the 29th of September, 1897. When he got the notes back the defendant gave nothing for them. How can it be said, then, that he took back the notes for value? For he did not. If the case cited of London and County Banking Co. v. London and River Plate Bank, 37 W. R. 89, 21 Q. B. D. 535, were to be held to apply to this case, we should have to hold that the defendant gave real value for the notes and then a supposed value over again for the same notes, which cannot be. But supposing the defendant did give value for the notes when he took them back, which in my opinion he did not, did he take the notes after they were due? I cannot see how it can be held that the defendant, when he received back the notes in September, 1897, though payable on demand, did not take them when overdue; for he must have known they were overdue if he thought about it at all, inasmuch as he had himself paid them off, the first three notes in February, 1897, and the last two notes in July, 1897. How can the defendant now say that they were not overdue in September, 1897, when he received them back? It seems to me that as the defendant did not give value for the notes when he took them back, and as, even if he did, the notes were then overdue, the defendant did not take a better title to them than Peed had, and that the plaintiffs, having disaffirmed, as they were entitled to do, the transaction with Peed, can maintain trover for the notes and bring an action upon the notes against the defendant, who has no better title to set up than that of Peed. I must point out that the difficulty which the defendant unfortunately is in arises through his own default in not getting the notes back from Peed when he paid them, thereby giving Peed the opportunity of cheating the plaintiffs as he did. It is a well-known principle of law that whenever one of two innocent persons must suffer by the acts of a third person, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it. See the well-known case of Lickbarrow v. Mason, in 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 674, and Babcock v. Lawson, 27 W. R. 886, 4 Q. B. D. 394, which contains matters very apposite to the present case. In my opinion counsel for the plaintiffs are right in their construction of section 61 of the Bills of Exchange Act, which was so much relied upon by the defendant's counsel, and that section does not apply to the present case, and the words "in his own right" do not mean in contradistinction to a representative right as argued for the defendant. For these reason I think that the appeal must be allowed, and that judgment must be entered for the plaintiffs.

COLLINS, L.J., read the following judgment: This case was very elaborately and ingeniously argued on both sides, but I think when the facts are understood it resolves itself into a simple question, and may be decided in accordance with the familiar principle laid down in Lickbarrow v. Mason, 2 T. R. 63—namely, "That wherever one of two innocent persons must suffer by the acts of a third, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it." In the present case the defendant de Freville placed three promissory notes, made by himself, in the hands of Peed, as security for sums due from the defendant to Peed, taking from him a promise not to negotiate them. He afterwards gave him two others in substitution for the first three, but suffered the first three to remain in Peed's possession. Peed, in violation of his promise, passed all five to the plaintiffs, innocent holders for value, who thereby acquired a good title against the defendant. The result of this was that the defendant, having handed to and left in the possession of Peed instruments on their face negotiable, was estopped from setting up against the plaintiffs any fact which as between the defendant and Peed would have debarred Peed from negotiating them. Peed after negotiating them obtained possession of them from the plaintiffs by fraud, and passed them back to the defendant without any fresh consideration, unless a consideration can be made out by implying a release given to Peed by the defendant of his right to complain of Peed having negotiated the notes: see London and County Banking Co. v. London and River Plate Bank. Are the plaintiffs to lose their remedy against the defendant because the physical custody of the instruments has been transferred to him by the hand of Peed? Can the defendant take back from Peed, otherwise than subject to the existing rights of the plaintiffs, which he was estopped from denying before he got possession of the notes again from Peed? This seems to me primâ facie to come clearly within the general principle above stated, unless there is something in the law regulating bills of exchange to prevent it. I have purposely left out the ineffectual dealings between the defendant and Peed for the satisfaction of the defendant's liability on the notes, because, in my opinion, for reasons which I will now give, they do not affect the principle which I think will turn out, when the facts are analyzed, to be decisive as to both sets of notes, though they do not stand on precisely the same footing. The fact, however, that such payment or attempted satisfaction of the notes as between the defendant and Peed had taken place before the defendant resumed possession of them will, as I shall presently point out, make it still clearer that the defendant has no answer to the plaintiff's claim.

First, then, as to the three notes originally given. They were fully negotiable in Peed's hands. They were delivered to him, not for safe custody, but as security, and the defendant had nothing but Peed's promise to protect him from their being negotiated. While they were thus in Peed's hands an arrangement was made whereby two new notes were to be taken by Peed in substitution for the first three, and two new notes were handed to him accordingly, though he was still allowed to remain in possession of the first three. This transaction has been treated by the Lord Chief Justice as not amounting to an extinguishment of these three notes so as to destroy their negotiability, and the argument has been conducted before us by both sides on that footing. Probably that is the true view, as the two might be deemed to be taken in final satisfaction only if and when they were paid (see Ex parte Barclay, 7 Ves. 597; Thorne v. Smith, 10 C. B. 659); and therefore I will so treat it. When these notes, therefore, were negotiated by Peed, they were still current, and the defendant was estopped as against the plaintiffs from setting up any fact which would have defeated Peed's right to negotiate them. Peed, then, having transferred them for value to the plaintiffs, gets them back by fraud from them and passes them on to the defendant. Obviously the plaintiffs could disaffirm the transaction by which Peed got possession against anyone who could show no better title than Peed. Did, then, the defendant when he opened the envelope containing the returned notes get a higher title against the plaintiffs than Peed had? In my opinion, clearly not. He remained bound by precisely the same estoppel that he was bound by before; no fresh fact had intervened to displace it. It is said that he has taken for value and without notice; but the only value that can be suggested is the somewhat artificial value based on the case of London and County Banking Co. v. London and River Plate Bank—namely, his implied release to Peed of his right against him in respect of his violation of duty in negotiating the notes; but it is precisely this duty which he is estopped from setting up against the plaintiffs. He cannot, therefore, as against the plaintiffs, prove any consideration given for the notes. There were no circumstances founding any such estoppel in the case cited, and if there had been the decision must have been different. The equities in that case were equal; the bank had done nothing to facilitate the fraud of their manager; and they were not debarred from protecting their possession by the somewhat fine-drawn consideration which was there implied out of the circumstances. Here the estoppel is raised by the handing to Peed by the defendant of negotiable instruments as such, which, as pointed out by Bramwell and Brett, L.JJ., in Baxendale v. Bennett, 26 W. R. 899, 3 Q. B. D. 525, is a very different thing from depositing for safe custody securities capable of being negotiated (see pp. 529 and 531 of the report); and, further, in the case of these three first bills, neglecting to resume possession of them. It would certainly be an extraordinary result if the payee who wrongfully negotiated the notes could by stealing them from the holder for value and replacing them in the possession of the maker get rid of the intervening title which was good against the makers before the theft.

Apart from the doctrine of estoppel, which, in my opinion, governs this case, I think the defendant could not acquire from Peed a higher title than Peed had to give. The three notes came back to him at the end of September from Peed's custody, he knowing that as between himself and Peed the latter had received from him, in the previous February, other notes instead of them, intended as between himself and Peed to satisfy his liability on these notes, at all events, if the second set were paid; and he had put money in Peed's hand's to pay these. Can he after such an interval receive back the notes, otherwise than subject to intervening rights, from the person in whose custody he had left them, in a negotiable condition, six months before, though he had given others in substitution for them, and furnished money to pay these last? Had he been an indorsee from Peed, and not himself the maker, and had known what had passed between Peed and the maker, he could not have acquired a better title than Peed. If he chooses to settle otherwise than in return for the notes themselves, can he after an interval receive the notes back from the person in whose custody he left them in a negotiable condition otherwise than subject to intervening rights? If, though maker, he has to rely upon a fresh consideration to support the transfer from Peed, why is he in a better position than an indorsee? He has to make title under a purchase for fresh consideration, given in respect of notes of which he knew that payment had been demanded, and an attempt at satisfaction made six months before.

There is authority that a note payable on demand is after demand overdue: see Barough v. White, 4 B. & C. 325; Bartrum v. Caddy, 9 A. & E. 275. As soon as demand has been made the time for payment has arrived just as much as if the note had been made payable on a particular day which had passed. It is true that there is nothing on the face of the notes to show that they are overdue, but had the facts known to the defendant been written on their face they would have appeared to be overdue or actually paid. How, then, can he get a better title than his transferor? For instance, if the fact of Peed's dealings had been communicated to the plaintiffs when they took the first three notes, could they have got a better title than Peed? Clearly not. But these are the facts known to the defendant when he gets back the notes, plus the additional fact that he has meanwhile paid the second set. He cannot displace the plaintiffs' title by virtue of his old right. He has got to show a new transfer for good consideration without notice of infirmity, and this he cannot do because the notes came back to him as pieces of paper only, evidencing the fact that he has satisfied them. Could this be doubted if Peed had written on them, as he might have done, "Paid" or "Cancelled" before he put them into the envelope? These pieces of paper, therefore, as between the defendant and Peed, having lost their negotiable quality, are denuded of that element which alone makes it possible for a transferee to get a better title than his transferor.

With regard to the two substituted notes, I think the same principles apply. These were negotiated before any attempt at payment by the defendant. But on such transfer to the plaintiffs the defendant was equally estopped from setting up against the plaintiffs a breach of duty in Peed in negotiating. When he put Peed in funds to satisfy these notes, Peed was not in fact the holder, and the defendant took no trouble to find out whether he was or not. Here, too, he is obliged to rely for consideration for Peed's transfer to him on the same constructive release of his claim against Peed; but admitting, as he has to do against the plaintiffs, that the plaintiffs took a good title to the notes, he cannot set up a duty in Peed, in derogation of that title, to return the notes otherwise than subject to it. The consideration therefore fails in this case also. Here, too, he receives back notes some two or three months after he had supposed he had satisfied them by the transaction in July, with the result, for the reasons that I have already given as to the others, that he cannot get a better title than his transferor.

I have, I think, shown that even if the defendant could be said to have given fresh consideration for the transfer from Peed, he could, nevertheless, in the circumstances, acquire no better title than Peed. I have also, I think, shown that even if the suggested consideration could exist, the defendant would be estopped from setting it up against the plaintiffs. But I am further of opinion that, in the circumstances of this case, no such consideration in fact existed. There is no room for an implied consideration when one is proved in fact.

If someone steals my boots, and afterwards replaces them, one might perhaps—but not, I think, without some strain on the imagination—conceive that I impliedly release my right to complain of the theft, in return for the restored boots, though I did not know that they had been stolen. But if I buy and pay for a pair of boots, and the bootmaker delays a fortnight before he sends them home, do I give two considerations for them—one when I pay for them; and a second when I receive them—or only one? It seems to me that in such case there is no need to search for an implied consideration. There is one in fact and only one, namely, the price. So here the only consideration given by the defendant was the sum which he paid in July, which entitled him as against Peed to a return of the notes.

It remains to consider the effect of section 61. I agree with the argument of the learned counsel for the plaintiffs on this point. "In his own right" must mean something more than "not in a representative capacity," as executor, for instance. It could not possibly mean that if a thief stole the note from the holder and placed it in the possession of the maker at or after maturity, the note should ipso facto be satisfied; and yet this would be the result if the words "in his own right" are to bear the limited meaning suggested. I think "in his own right" must mean having a right not subject to that of anyone else but his own, good against all the world.

On the whole, therefore, I think in this case there is no technical difficulty to prevent the application of the broad principle which I have named—that the defendant is "he who has enabled" Peed to occasion the loss, that he must therefore sustain it, and that the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice ought to be reversed.

As to estoppel being the foundation of rights arising upon unauthorized transfers of negotiable instruments, see Lord Mansfield in Russel v. Langstaffe, 2 Doug. 514; Tindal, C.J., in Schultz v. Astley, 2 Bing. N. C. 544; Ingham v. Primrose, 7 C. B. N. S. 82, 7 W. R. C. L. Dig. 12, impugned by Brett, L.J., in Baxendale v. Bennett, but decided in a considered judgment by a very strong court, not questioned so far as I know elsewhere, and at all events sound in principle if wrong on the facts.

ROMER, L.J., read the following judgment: In the course of the argument before us, many points, some of considerable difficulty, were raised and discussed. But I think that the question raised on this appeal can be, and ought to be, decided on comparatively simple considerations. It is clear that before Peed obtained the promissory notes from the plaintiffs by fraud, the defendant was liable to the plaintiffs upon those notes. Now, the notes were obtained from the plaintiffs by Peed and sent on by him to the defendant without the defendant taking any part or step in the matter, or having any communication of any kind with Peed. Peed alone carried the transaction through, and the defendant was simply the passive recipient of the notes when they were forwarded to him by Peed. This being so, it does not appear to me just that the defendant should be able to say, as against the plaintiffs, that he can avail himself of the fraud of Peed, by which alone the notes came into the defendant's hands, so as to discharge him from his pre-existing liability on the notes to the plaintiffs. I cannot think it right to hold that Peed's fraud had had the effect contended for by the defendant. It appears to me, when the facts of the case are duly appreciated, that legal considerations prevent us from so holding. For the plaintiffs, when they discovered the fraud of Peed, were entitled to have the notes re-delivered to them, and the only question is, whether the defendant acquired as against the plaintiffs a better title to the notes than Peed. In my opinion he did not. For, in truth and in fact, the act of Peed, after he obtained the notes from the plaintiffs, in forwarding them to the defendant, was, so far as the plaintiffs are concerned, a voluntary act on his part. As already pointed out, the defendant took no conscious part whatever in or about this act of Peed, and did not even know that it was about to be performed. The defendant, after Peed acquired the notes, did not then pay the notes, or purchase them, or bargain for their delivery. The notes were simply forwarded by Peed to the defendant, and accepted by him as notes which had been long since paid, and not as notes which in Peed's hands, so far as the plaintiffs were concerned, were current notes. The only possible consideration for the delivery by Peed to him which the defendant can allege is the fact that as between himself and Peed the notes had been previously discharged—that is to say, discharged while the notes were in the plaintiffs' hands as current notes, and that is precisely a consideration which the defendant could not set up as against the plaintiffs in respect of their rights against him upon the notes.

It appears to me that, in the peculiar circumstances of the case, the defendant cannot say, as against the plaintiffs, that he is to be regarded as having become a holder for value of the notes from Peed, although as between the defendant and Peed alone the defendant was entitled to receive the notes. And further, in my opinion, so far as he is concerned, the defendant can only be regarded as acquiring the notes from Peed as notes which were paid and no longer current, and, this being so, he can only take them subject to all the equities attaching to the notes in Peed's hands, including the rights of the plaintiffs to have the notes handed back to them as notes upon which the defendant was liable.

For these short reasons it appears to me that the plaintiffs are entitled to hold the defendant as liable for the amount of the notes, and that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Chester & Co.

Solicitors for the defendant, Cole & Jackson, for Francis, Francis, & Collin, Cambridge.

---

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — Feb. 9.

BURGE v. ASHLEY & SMITH. (a.)

Gaming—Wagering—Money deposited with stakeholder—Right to recover—Money paid under contract rendered void by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18—Gaming Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 9), s. 1.

Money deposited with a stakeholder to abide the event of a boxing match is not "money paid under or in respect of a contract made void by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18," and may be recovered by the depositor from the stakeholder if he has given the latter notice not to part with it.

O'Sullivan v. Thomas, 43 W. R. 269, [1895] 1 Q. B. 698, approved.

Appeal by the defendants from the judgment of Lawrance, J.

The plaintiff in the action sued to recover the sum of £300 deposited with the defendants as stakeholders, to be paid over to the winner of a boxing match. A boxing match took place between the plaintiff and another man, and each party deposited £300 with the defendants, who were the editors of the Sportsman. As a result of the contest the plaintiff's opponent was declared the winner. Subsequently, but before the stakes were handed over to the winner, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendants not to pay over the £300, but to hand it back to him. Notwithstanding this notice the defendants parted with the money.

At the trial of the action Lawrance, J., held, on the authority of O'Sullivan v. Thomas, 43 W. R. 269, [1895] 1 Q. B. 698, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

Duke, Q.C., and Ellis Hill, for the appellants.—Before the Gaming Act, 1892, the plaintiff might have recovered his deposit if he had claimed it before the defendants had paid it over to the winner. But the law has been altered by section 1 of that Act, and the present case comes within its very words, because the £300 is money "paid" to a stakeholder "under or in respect of a contract made void by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18." The substantial question is whether the money is "paid" to the stakeholder. The general words are clearly large enough to support the view that it is, and such money has been spoken of as "paid" in case after case. In Hastelow v. Jackson, 8 B. & C. 221, both the judges spoke of money deposited with a stakeholder as money "paid" to him. Unless such money is of the nature of a depositum and is not paid, it comes within the first clause of section 1 of the Act of 1892. Both in the primary and particular meaning of the word this money was paid to the stakeholder, the property in it had passed to him, and the plaintiff ought not to have recovered in the action. The payment should be looked at with regard to the intention of the parties at the time. Their intention was that the stakeholder should hold the money in trust for the winner of the wager, so the property in the money passes from the depositor to the stakeholder. The Act of 1892 was passed ten years after the decision of Read v. Anderson, so that there was no sudden intention on the part of the Legislature to upset that particular decision. The intention of the Legislature was to make a clean sweep of actions brought with regard to wagering contracts.

(a.) Reported by P. B. DURNFORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They referred to Read v. Anderson, 32 W. R. 950, 13 Q. B. D. 779; Diggle v. Higgs, 25 W. R. 777, 2 Ex. D. 422; Varney v. Hickman, 5 C. B. 271; Hampden v. Walsh, 24 W. R. 607, 1 Q. B. D. 189; Hastelow v. Jackson, 8 B. & C. 221; Carney v. Plimmer, 45 W. R. 385, [1897] 1 Q. B. D. 634; Shoolbred v. Roberts, [1899] 2 Q. B. 560.

Marshall Hall, Q.C., and Ashworth Harrison, for the respondents, were not called upon.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The real question in this case is whether the case of O'Sullivan v. Thomas was rightly decided. As matters stand now, there appear to have been four judges who have all decided a question of this kind in the same way. The point is this, whether or not the Act of 1892 prevents an action being brought against a stakeholder to recover from him money which has been deposited with him.

The circumstances of the case are very short. There was a bet made between two men on the result of a boxing match under the Queensberry rules. It may be taken for the purposes of this case that each man deposited with a stakeholder the sum of £300. It must be also taken that before the money was paid over the plaintiff gave notice to the stakeholders not to part with it. The plaintiff brought an action to recover it, and the Gaming Act, 1892, was set up in answer.

The real question is whether or not a deposit with a stakeholder comes within the words "to pay any person any sum of money." In ordinary parlance I should come to the conclusion that if I deposited a stake with a stakeholder, I had paid nothing to the stakeholder at all.

The first section of the Act says: "Any promise, express or implied, to pay any person any sum of money paid by him under or in respect of any contract or agreement rendered null and void by the Act of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, or to pay any sum of money by way of commission, fee, reward, or otherwise in respect of any such contract, or of any services in relation thereto or in connection therewith shall be null and void, and no action shall be brought or maintained to recover any such sum of money."

In a case of Strachan v. Universal Stock Exchange, 44 W. R. 90, [1895] 2 Q. B. D. 697, we had a great discussion as to the meaning of the Act 8 & 9 Vict. and the law on the subject of wagers, commencing with the year 1828, and I simply state what I stated then: "It is manifest that no action can be brought by the one against the other to enforce any contract so declared to be void; but it has been held by authorities, which it is far too late now to question, that, as soon as one party to a gaming contract receives notice from the other party that the former declines to abide any longer by the wagering contract, money deposited by him thereupon ceases to be money deposited in the hands of the latter 'to abide the event on which any wager shall have been made,' and any money still in the latter's hands unappropriated by him becomes money of the former, without any good reason for the latter detaining it, and in such circumstances an action for money had and received to the plaintiff's use will lie." That is not my own opinion only, but it is the opinion expressed by learned judges from the year 1828 down to 1880. Therefore it seems to me that the defendants cannot succeed under the first branch of section 1 of the Act of 1892.

But they said, Supposing that is not so, the defendants can get within the second branch of the section. They cannot do so because it has not been proved that depositing money with a stakeholder is a "payment" of a sum of money within the meaning of the Act. It has been attempted to stretch this Act to include any promise, express or implied, to pay any sum of money or to deposit any sum of money. I do not find these words in the section, and it seems to me that it would be passing strange if the very learned and noble lord (Lord Herschell) who settled the Act, had intended to bring in what was the notorious practice throughout the kingdom—namely, the depositing money with stakeholders—that he did not insert words to effect that purpose.

Now I come to what authorities there are on the subject, and in O'Sullivan v. Thomas Wills, J., said: "In my opinion an action will lie, we must give to the word 'paid' its primâ facie meaning of paid out and out. I do not think it is properly applicable to money deposited for the purpose of paying a third party." Wright, J., said: "The expression 'money paid by him' does not appear properly to apply to a revocable deposit. And it seems difficult wholly to disregard the consideration that a different construction would tend directly and almost necessarily to defeat the very object of the Act by preventing a revocation of the deposit, and so giving to the winner of the wager a practical certainty of being paid his bet, which advantage he did not previously possess."

I think that case was rightly decided. We had our attention called to the case of Carney v. Plimmer, which was decided by this court; but that case is not in point. Mr. Duke referred us to the judgment of Chitty, L.J., in which he spoke of money deposited with a stakeholder as money "paid" to him; but so little were the judges in that case thinking of the point which we have to decide here that, though the case of O'Sullivan v. Thomas was cited to them, not one of the learned judges thought it applicable to that case or referred to it in their judgments. I think that the judgment of the learned judge is right, and that the decision in O'Sullivan v. Thomas was right, and this appeal must therefore be dismissed.

COLLINS, L.J.—This is virtually an appeal from the decision in O'Sullivan v. Thomas, and the question is whether the Act of 1892 has in fact overruled or substituted new law for what existed as the interpretation of the Act of 1845. It was well settled under the Act of 1845 that a person who had deposited money with a stakeholder could in certain circumstances recover that money. Then came the Act of 1892, and it is suggested that the wording of that Act is such that it is now no longer possible to recover money from a stakeholder. Mr. Duke had to say that this money now in question was money paid by the plaintiff under or in respect of a wagering contract, and that being so paid there is an implied promise to pay it back, and that that is the very promise which, he says, is rendered null and void by the Act. This Act was passed after a long current of authorities had established that money so paid could be recovered, and if it was intended to overrule these authorities we should expect some clear and definite expression in the Act to that effect. I do not find any such expression. This Act was passed shortly after the decision in Read v. Anderson, and was, I consider, obviously passed to overrule that particular case. It was passed with the intention of dealing with the case where money had been paid in the full sense of the term, and I cannot escape the conclusion that it was passed alio intuitu as far as this case is concerned. I think that the word "paid" is not meant to cover this class of deposit. I agree with the reasoning of the court below, and I think the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this case.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. Before the passing of the Act of 1892 the matter stood thus: If a person deposited a sum of money with a stakeholder to abide the result of a game or wager, he had the right at any moment before the money was parted with to demand to have it handed back to him. So that the person depositing the money was, with regard to the stakeholder, in the position of a person who had deposited money with an agent, giving him instructions to deal with the money in certain events, but having the right to recover the money before the mandate was acted upon. Before 1892 you could not describe that as a "payment" to the stakeholders, so that when you come to the Act of 1892 it is reasonably clear that the Legislature did not intend to include that transaction under the word "pay." That being so, I agree with the decision in O'Sullivan v. Thomas.

The case of Carney v. Plimmer is perfectly distinguishable, and I agree that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Gush, Phillips, Walters, & Williams.

Solicitors for the respondent, Bernard Abrahams & Co.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) — Feb. 3.

In re GENERAL RAILWAY SYNDICATE. WHITELEY'S CASE. (a.)

Company—Winding up—Contributory—Action for payment of calls—Summons for leave to enter final judgment—Affidavit—Leave to defend—Misrepresentation—Rescission—Proceedings taken before commencement of winding up.

A shareholder who, in an action for calls brought against him by a company, obtains leave to defend an application to enter final judgment under order 14 on an affidavit which sets up misrepresentation as a ground of defence, and states that he intends to counterclaim for rescission, has done all that can reasonably be expected in the way of commencing legal proceedings to establish his right to repudiate his shares.

He is not made, therefore, too late for relief owing to a petition for the winding up of the company being presented before delivery of his defence and counterclaim.

This was an appeal from a decision of Wright, J. (reported [1899] 1 Ch. 770, 47 W. R. Dig. 36).

The facts were as follow:

On the 15th of June, 1896, 5,000 £1 shares in the above-named company were allotted to W. A. Whiteley.

On the 22nd of December, 1897, a call was made of 5s. per share, which was payable in the following January.

On the 27th of June, 1898, the company commenced an action against Whiteley to recover the amount of the call, and on the 12th of July served him with a summons for leave to enter final judgment under order 14.

On the 15th of July Whiteley filed an affidavit in opposition to the summons, wherein, after a formal denial of indebtedness, he stated that he had been induced to apply for the shares by misrepresentation on the part of the company, and that he intended to counterclaim for rescission of the contract and to have his name removed from the register of members, and on the 20th of July, Whiteley obtained unconditional leave to defend.

On the 22nd of July a petition was presented for the compulsory winding-up of the company, and on the 3rd of August a compulsory winding-up order was made upon the petition.

In the meantime on the 2nd of August, Whiteley put in a defence to the action, and delivered a counterclaim for a rescission of the contract and rectification of the register and for an injunction to restrain the company from enforcing the calls.

The liquidator having settled Whiteley on the list of contributories in respect of the 5,000 shares, Whiteley issued a summons asking that his name might be struck off the list, with leave to raise the question whether it was too late for him to set up a case of misrepresentation against the company.

Wright, J., held that Whiteley was not entitled to be relieved from his shares, since the counterclaim was not entitled to be delivered until after the presentation of the winding-up petition.

Whiteley appealed.

Upjohn, Q.C., and W. Whateley, for the appeal, cited Reese River Silver Mining Co. v. Smith, 17 W. R. 1042, L. R. 4 H. L. 64; In re Scottish Petroleum Co., 31 W. R. 846, 23 Ch. D. 413; In re Cleveland Iron Co., Ex parte Stevenson, 16 W. R. 95; In re Estates Investment Co., McNeill's case, 18 W. R. 1102, 1126, L. R. 10 Eq. 503.

Hon. E. C. Macnaghten, Q.C., and Peterson, contrâ.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I do not think that the case, although novel, is really difficult, although I am unable to come to the same conclusion as the learned judge upon it.

We have to consider what effect the new practice introduced by the Judicature Act has upon the rules which have been laid down respecting proceedings taken by a shareholder to get his name removed from the register when winding-up proceedings are imminent.

The old practice was settled, and the rule was laid down by the court in In re Scottish Petroleum Co. It is very difficult for judges to frame language which is adapted to all possible contingencies; they frame it with reference to the circumstances with which they have to deal. But the real question is whether what has been done by the applicant here is not equivalent for all practical purposes, and for all legal purposes, to taking proceedings to have his name removed from the register. In my opinion it is.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Here is a person on the register of members, and primâ facie a shareholder, and, before any petition to wind up was presented, an action was brought against him for calls, and a summons was taken out under order 14. That introduces the new practice. What is the effect of that? The applicant had two courses open to him. He could immediately commence a cross-action for rescission—there is no doubt about that; but he could also not only defend the action, but put in a counterclaim raising the question of his right to rescind. There were thus two ways of raising that question. Under the old practice there were not, and it was settled that a shareholder could not acquire a right to rescind by simply defending an action for calls. That may account for the decision of Bolt, L.J., in Ex parte Stevenson. In this case the applicant did not, as he might have done, bring a cross-action to rescind, but he took the other alternative of asserting his right to rescind in the action for calls, and he applied for leave to defend. After the summons had been taken out under order 14 he could not defend without leave, and I cannot help thinking it would have been rather a vexatious proceeding, considering that he could do everything he wanted in one action, to start another.

The summons for leave to sign judgment having been issued, he filed an affidavit which shows no defence at all apart from the right to rescind. It starts with a formal statement that the deponent is not indebted. That goes for nothing unless you can find some circumstances which can throw light upon it and give rise to some reason for supposing that that is a true statement. I disregard that altogether. Then the whole of the rest of the affidavit shows nothing more nor less than a right to repudiate the shares and to have the contract rescinded, and it is upon that affidavit that he gets leave to defend.

Now, it is true that the petition to wind up was presented before he could put in his counterclaim. If he had put in his counterclaim the case would not have been arguable. The difficulty arises from the fact that he had not put in his counterclaim. But he got leave to defend upon the affidavit to which I have referred, and I think that he did all that could be reasonably expected to assert in a legal proceeding his right to repudiate these shares. That is the principle on which the courts have acted in several cases.

Whether Ex parte Stevenson went a little too far or not it is unnecessary to consider. One can easily see that it would lead to very extraordinary results, because, supposing that in an action for calls the defendant pleaded that he had been induced to take his shares by fraud and repudiated his shares, and that were tried out, it would be very difficult to see how he could be made a contributory after that, assuming that he was successful. However, I say nothing more about it. We are asked to extend what was done by Bolt, L.J., under the old practice to a new practice which has entirely altered the procedure. I think that would be wrong. In substance the applicant has taken legal steps before the commencement of the winding up to have his name removed from the register. Therefore, upon this preliminary point, I think that the order must be set aside and the matter must go back to the learned judge.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER, L.JJ., concurred.

Solicitors, Ward, Perks, & McKay; Hays, Schmettau, & Dunn.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Jan. 27; March 1, 6;
Stirling, J. } April 5.

JACOB v. DOWN. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Construction—Building covenant—Repairing covenant—Continuing breaches of covenants—Waiver by acceptance of rent—Recovery of possession—Sufficiency of notice under Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14.

A piece of land, with four houses, was demised on lease to the defendants by the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs on the 4th of June, 1894. The lease contained a licence to the defendants to pull down the houses within twelve months, and covenants by the defendants (a) within the same period to erect new premises in their place, and (b) to "at all times during the said term keep the said messuages and premises so to be erected as aforesaid in good and substantial repair." There was also a proviso for re-entry on "any breach or non-observance of any of the lessees' covenants." The new houses were never built. On the 27th of August, 1895, rent was paid by the defendants and accepted on behalf of the original lessor. In August, 1898, the plaintiffs served on the defendants a notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which set out the building covenant and the breach thereof, but did not refer to the repairing covenant.

Held, (1) that, by the acceptance of rent, the breach of the building covenant, which had been made once for all, had been waived; (2) that there was no continuing breach of the building covenant; (3) that there was a continuing breach of the repairing covenant; and (4) that the notice served under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, was insufficient.

This was an action to recover possession of a piece of land in Cardiff held by the defendants under a lease dated the 4th of June, 1894, for an alleged breach of covenants therein contained.

The lease was made between a tenant for life (on whose death on the 22nd of November, 1895, the plaintiffs became entitled in possession to the property) and the defendants.

The lease demised for a term of twenty-one years from the 27th of November, 1893, a piece of land with four messuages or dwelling-houses erected thereon, and full licence and authority for the lessees at any time within twelve months from the date of the lease to pull down the same, and within the same period to erect good and substantial premises thereon in accordance with a building covenant by the defendants to erect the premises therein specified at a cost of not less than £2,500; the lease also contained a repairing covenant by the defendants to "at all times during the said term keep the said messuages and premises so to be erected as aforesaid in good and substantial repair, and the same in good and substantial repair deliver up to the lessor at the expiration or sooner determination of the said term"; and after other covenants there was a proviso for re-entry on "any breach or non-observance of any of the lessee's covenants."

On the 20th of June, 1895, the lessor's representatives wrote to the defendants complaining that they had taken no steps to comply with the building covenant.

The rent which fell due on the 27th of August, 1895, was paid by the defendants, and accepted on behalf of the lessor; the rent which accrued due subsequently to that date was paid and received without prejudice to the question between the parties.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The messuages had never in fact been built.

On the 8th of August, 1898, the plaintiffs served upon the defendants a notice under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, which set out the building covenant and that alone, stated the breach of it, and called upon the defendants to erect the buildings, in default of which the lessors would sue for recovery of possession.

The writ in the action was issued on the 5th of November, 1898, and the statement of claim (which did not mention the repairing covenant) was delivered on the 6th of December.

The defendants in their defence expressed their willingness to perform the covenants, but submitted that there was a waiver of the breach of the covenants by the acceptance and receipt of rent; they counterclaimed for relief.

Jan. 27.—Jenkins, Q.C., and St. J. Clerke, for the plaintiffs.—The building covenant is in substance one for the erection of the houses, and the period of twelve months mentioned therein is not of the essence. At any rate, there has been a continuing breach of the repairing covenant, and this latter covenant includes the words "so to be erected as aforesaid"; covenants to keep in repair and deliver up in repair involve a covenant to build: Clark v. City of Glasgow Assurance Co., 1 Macq. 668; Payne v. Haine, 16 M. & W. 641; Proudfoot v. Hart, 38 W. R. 730, 25 Q. B. D. 42. The proviso as to right of re-entry is not in common form but peculiar, for it includes a continuing covenant and a continuing breach and provides for re-entry on any breach of any of the covenants; it does not point to one definite breach. The acceptance of rent on the 27th of August, 1895, is immaterial, for it could not be a waiver where there was a continuing breach of a continuing covenant.

Upjohn, Q.C. (Kenyon Parker with him), for the defendants.—There was no continuing breach of the covenant, but one only, once for all, on the 4th of June, 1895. Assuming that, then on the 5th of June there was a right of re-entry which, however, was done away with either (a) by the death on the 22nd of November, 1895, of the original lessor, to whom alone the right accrued (Sheppard's Touchstone of Common Assurances, 1820 (7th ed.), p. 148), or (b) by waiver by the plaintiffs (i.) in accepting rent, and (ii.) by their conduct in treating the lease as a subsistent lease. Moreover, the notice of the 8th of August, 1898, served under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, was not sufficient, as it did not refer to the repairing covenant. The defendants are themselves entitled to relief: Sampson v. Easterby, 9 B. & C. 505, 6 Bing. 644; Dawes v. Tredwell, 29 W. R. 793, 18 Ch. D. 354; Coward v. Gregory, 15 W. R. 170, L. R. 2 C. P. 153; and Taylor v. Caldwell, 11 W. R. 726, 3 B. & S. 826, at p. 833.

Jenkins, Q.C., in reply.—As to the alleged extinction of the right of re-entry see section 10 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881; but the case must stand or fall on the "continuing covenants" point. It is artificial to say that because there is no house therefore the covenant to repair cannot be broken. The notice of the 8th of August, 1898, pointed out the breach which is in substance what is required: see dicta in Horsey Estate (Limited) v. Steiger, 47 W. R. 644, [1899] 2 Q. B. D. 79.

Cur. adv. vult.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts as above, said: The first question is whether there is a continuing breach of any and which of the covenants in the lease. This is, of course, a question of the construction of the document itself. For the plaintiffs it was contended that the building covenant was in substance one for the erection of these houses and that the period of twelve months mentioned therein was not of the essence; and, further, that at all events there was a continuing breach of the repairing covenant. For the defendant it was said that the building covenant was completely broken at the end of the period of twelve months specified and that the repairing covenant did not apply unless and until the new houses were built.

First, as regards the building covenant, a very similar point was raised in Bennett v. Herring, 6 W. R. 37, 3 C. B. N. S. 370, but was not decided, though the view contended for on behalf of the plaintiffs seems to have found favour with some of the learned judges. But it was held in Coward v. Gregory that a covenant forthwith to put the demised property into good and tenantable repair could only be broken once. In my judgment that is equally true of the building covenant in the present case.

Secondly, as to the repairing covenant, a covenant to keep in good repair imposes an obligation to put in repair premises which at the time of the demise were not in repair: Payne v. Haine, Proudfoot v. Hart. It also imposes an obligation to rebuild the demised premises if these are destroyed by fire during the term: Bullock v. Dommitt, 6 T. R. 650; Clark v. Glasgow Assurance Co. In Bennett v. Herring, already cited, a lease contained covenants by the lessee to complete within two months two messuages described as having been lately erected and to keep "the said messuages and premises" in repair during the term. The messuages were never completed, and it was held that there was a breach of the covenant to repair. But it is to be observed that in that case the covenant related to messuages which were treated as being in existence, though not complete at the time of the demise. None of these authorities completely covers the present case, but they go far to show that such a covenant imposes the obligation to do everything necessary in order that the houses may be found during the term to be in existence and in the proper state of repair. Here the covenant is not to keep in repair "the said messuages and premises if and when erected," but "the said messuages and premises so to be erected as aforesaid," words which seem to me to refer simply to the nature and character of the messuages and premises, and not to the time of their erection. The object of the covenant is to secure that at all proper times the messuages referred to shall be in proper repair, and in my opinion the covenant imposes an obligation to do all things necessary for that purpose, including the erection of the messuages if not completed within the period prescribed in the building covenant. If this be not so, it seems to me that the lessee by omitting to perform the building covenant might practically escape from the obligations of the lease. In my judgment, therefore, there is no continuing breach of the building covenant, but there is a continuing breach of the repairing covenant. This being so, the question arises whether the notice under the Conveyancing Act of 1881, s. 14, was sufficient. The form of notice required was considered by the Court of Appeal in the case of Horsey Estate (Limited) v. Steiger, 47 W. R. 644, [1899] 2 Q. B. 79 [His lordship read from the judgment of the court delivered by Lord Russell, C.J., at p. 91 of the latter report]. In the present case the plaintiffs were not in a position to rely on the breach of the building covenant, for that breach had been waived by acceptance of rent. There is a continuing breach of the repairing covenant, but this is not mentioned in the notice or the statement of claim. In these circumstances, in my judgment the notice was not sufficient. I think that the defendant was entitled to rely on his defence to the breach of the building covenant, and that if the plaintiffs desired to insist on the continuing breach of the repairing covenant they ought to have given the defendant notice thereof, all the more that it is not without difficulty that I have arrived at the conclusion already stated. The result is that the action fails and must be dismissed.

Action dismissed, with costs.

Solicitors, Warriner & Co., for W. Lyndon Moore, Newport; Downing, Bolam, & Co., for Downing & Handcock, Cardiff.

---

Chan. Div. } Kekewich, J. } March 28.

EWART v. FRYER. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease to company of public-house—Condition for re-entry on liquidation—Forfeiture—Underlessee, relief to—Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 14—Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 4—Waiver.

A voluntary winding up by a solvent company for the purpose of amalgamating with other companies works a forfeiture of a condition for re-entry on liquidation.

On forfeiture of the head lease the court has power, under section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, in granting relief to an underlessee, to vary (even by way of increase) the amount of rent reserved by the underlease.

This was an action by the trustees of the will of a lessor to recover possession of a public-house under a condition in the lease. By the lease in question, made in 1896, the lessor demised the premises to Coombe & Co. (Limited) for thirty years at a rent of £300 a year, and there was an express condition that if and whenever the lessees or their assigns, being a company, should enter into liquidation, whether compulsory or voluntary, it should be lawful for the lessor, his heirs or assigns, to re-enter upon the demised premises. By an underlease of the same date Coombe & Co. demised the premises to the defendant Fryer for 29¾ years in consideration of a premium of £8,000 and at a rent of £800 per annum, reducible to £300 so long as he should buy his beer from Coombe & Co. This the defendant Fryer had always done.

In the year 1899 Coombe & Co., who were perfectly solvent, were voluntarily wound up for the purpose of being amalgamated with two other large brewery companies under the name of Watney, Coombe, Reid, & Co. (Limited). This amalgamated company was the second defendant to the action. The amalgamation of the said companies was widely advertised in the Gazette and other newspapers, and by the issue of the prospectus.

The defendant Fryer had never paid more than £300 a year rent for the public-house, of which he was in possession; and in the event of the plaintiffs being held entitled to recover possession as against the defendant company, he claimed relief under section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, and an order vesting the demised premises in him for the remainder of the term of his underlease. It was admitted that in the event of forfeiture he was entitled to relief, and the only question was upon what condition it should be granted. By section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, the court has power on forfeiture of the superior lease to make an order vesting for the whole term of the lease or any less term the property comprised in the lease or any part thereof in any person entitled as underlessee "upon such conditions as to execution of any deed or other document, payment of rent, costs, expenses, damages, compensation, giving security or otherwise," as the court shall think fit.

Warrington, Q.C., and T. T. Methold, for the plaintiffs, argued that the voluntary liquidation of Coombe & Co. was a forfeiture of the lease, and cited Horsey Estate v. Steiger, 47 W. R. 644, [1899] 2 Q. B. 79; Wardens of Cholmeley's Schools v. Sewell, 41 W. R. 637, [1894] 2 Q. B. 906; Imray v. Oakshette, 45 W. R. 681, [1897] 2 Q. B. 218.

R. Merivale, for the defendant Fryer, claimed relief under section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892.

Warmington, Q.C., Renshaw, Q.C., and Davenport, for the defendant company, argued that even if there had been a forfeiture the plaintiffs had waived it by accepting rent after the amalgamation, of which they must be assumed to have had notice. With regard to the defendant Fryer, the true principle was compensation; he ought to be put in the same position as if no breach had taken place, and there was no reported case in which the rent had been increased.

They referred to North London Land Co. v. Jacques, 32 W. R. 283, [1883] W. N. 167; Bond v. Freke, [1884] W. N. 47; Quilter v. Mapleson, 31 W. R. 75, 9 Q. B. D. 672.

Warrington, Q.C., replied.

KEKEWICH, J., said that, having regard to the decision in Horsey Estate v. Steiger, it was impossible now to argue that the voluntary winding up of Coombe & Co. (Limited) did not work a forfeiture, and that being so the lease, together with the underlease, was now wholly gone. Then it was argued that the plaintiffs had waived the forfeiture in more ways than one. It was said that the fact of amalgamation was public property, so that no one could say that it had not happened. But supposing that the plaintiffs knew of the amalgamation, did they know that amalgamation meant a winding up of Coombe & Co.? Even if they knew of the amalgamation I cannot hold that they knew of the way in which it was effected so as to fix them with notice of the forfeiture. Neither the advertisement in the Gazette nor in the other papers nor the issue of the prospectus was notice in that way. [His lordship then proceeded to consider whether the plaintiffs had notice by the receipts for rent given after the amalgamation, and held on the facts that there had been no waiver on that or any other ground.]

The amalgamation, therefore, having worked a forfeiture, and the lease and underlease having consequently gone, the court must create a new interest, having regard to the new remedy imported by the Conveyancing Act, 1892. Mr. Warmington called my attention to the earlier cases decided before the Act of 1892, but we ought not now to be guided by them, but by the new relief given by the Legislature. It is not simply a question of compensation—there is no revival of the old estate, but a new estate is to be vested in the underlessee. The vesting may be part of the term or part of the property, but it cannot be for any longer term than the original sub-demise. The court has a large discretion, and may vest in the sub-lessee the original term, as in Cholmeley School v. Sewell, or no lease at all, as in Imray v. Oakshette. The language of section 4 is difficult to construe. What is meant by payment of rent? It has been argued that it only means rent up to the present time; but I cannot think that it means only payment of rent actually due, though such a construction runs well with the context, except with the words "giving security." I think the court has a very wide discretion as to the conditions on which the vesting order should be made and has power to vary the rent where circumstances require it. Do the circumstances require it here? Fryer was willing to pay £300 a year and buy his beer of Coombe & Co. The covenant as to buying beer will of course not be inserted in the new lease; and though it might be fair to Fryer to grant him a lease at £300 without the tie, it would not be fair to the plaintiffs now that the tie is gone. The new estate to be created must be fair to all the parties concerned. There was evidence that the rent of £300 was too small a rent to pay for the tavern if it was not a tied house and it would not be fair to the lessors to compel them to accept that. Fryer must pay a fair rent, which is a matter for reference. There will be a declaration of forfeiture and an order vesting the property in Fryer on conditions to be settled in chambers, and an inquiry as to rent having regard to the tie being gone; defendants to pay the costs.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, Bolton & Co.; Bompas, Bischoff, Dodgson, Coxe, & Bompas.

---

Chan. Div.
Buckley, J. } March 27, 28, 30; April 2.

SACCHARIN CORPORATION (LIMITED) v. ANGLO-CONTINENTAL CHEMICAL WORKS (LIMITED) AND REITMEYER. (a.)

Patent—Chemical process—Infringement—Use abroad—Part of manufacture of commercial article—Sale in England.

The sale in England of an article imported from abroad, in the manufacture of which a process patented in this country has been used, is an infringement of the patent, even although the process is only the first part of the manufacture, which also consists of subsequent processes not patented.

Action.

This was an action for the infringement of a patent (No. 25,273 of A.D. 1894) for improvements in the manufacture of toluene-sulpho-chlorides granted to Imray on the communication of Monnet, dated the 29th of December, 1894, which belonged to the plaintiffs. The claims were (1) The manufacture of toluene-sulpho-chlorides by acting with chlorsulphonic acid in large excess on toluene at a temperature not exceeding 5° C., substantially as described; and (2) the direct conversion of toluene by means of chlorsulphonic acid into toluene-sulpho-chlorides, mostly in liquid form, substantially as described; and his lordship found that the essence of the invention was that the whole of the toluene was converted into toluene-sulpho-chloride without the formation of any sulpho acids. The liquid form of toluene-sulpho-chloride was commonly known as ortho-toluene-sulpho-chloride, and was a coal tar product the manufacture of which was a necessary step in the production of saccharin.

The plaintiffs claimed an injunction against the defendant company and their managing director to restrain infringement, and consequential relief. They gave as particulars of breaches the importation into England and the selling and supplying in England of certain compounds sold by the defendants under the name of saccharin, manufactured according to the plaintiffs' invention. The defendants denied infringement, but in answer to interrogatories they admitted that they had imported and caused to be sent and supplied in this country certain saccharin which had been supplied them by the firms of Grandjean Zimmerman & Co., of Brougg, in Switzerland, and the Basle Chemical Works in the same country, and that they had dealt with these firms as manufacturers. Evidence was given at the trial as to the process employed by these firms in the manufacture of saccharin. They first manufactured ortho-toluene-sulpho-chloride, and it was then necessary for the production of saccharin first to change the chlorine for an amide group, and then oxidize into saccharin and water. His lordship held that in the manufacture of the ortho-toluene-sulpho-chloride the foreign firms had used substantially the patented process of the plaintiffs. The subsequent process was admittedly well known, and not within the patent.

Moulton, Q.C., C. A. Cripps, Q.C., J. C. Graham, and Colefax, for the plaintiffs.—The cases of Elmslie v. Boursier, 18 W. R. 665, L. R. 9 Eq. 217, and Von Heyden v. Neustadt, 28 W. R. 496, 14 Ch. D. 230, decide that the importation of an article manufactured abroad by the use of machinery or a process patented in this country is an infringement of the patent. The terms of the judgments in these cases are quite general, and not limited to cases where no other machinery or process is employed. Otherwise an inventor would lose all profit from his patent, as anyone could go over to Boulogne or Ostend and use it there, and bring back the products. The words of the grant cover the case, as the patentee is to have the whole profit and advantage of his invention, and no one is to use it either directly or indirectly.

Neville, Q.C., Roger Wallace, Q.C., Lord Robert Cecil, Q.C., A. J. Walter, and Bucknill, for the defendant company; and M. Romer, for the defendant Reitmeyer.—The plaintiffs' patent is for the manufacture of toluene-sulpho-chloride. We do not import this, but saccharin, which is a different thing. It is true, toluene-sulpho-chloride is used in the manufacture of saccharin, but even if that is manufactured according to the patented invention the case does not fall within the cases cited. The patented process is only one step in the manufacture.

BUCKLEY, J. (after stating the facts and holding the patent valid).—The article imported and sold therefore is produced by certain subsequent chemical operations from the article produced under the patented process. The imported article is saccharin, and not ortho-toluene-sulpho-chloride; but ortho-toluene-sulpho-chloride is contained as such in saccharin. The defendants say that the importation is not an infringement. Now, the grant contained in the letters patent is a grant to the patentee to make, use, exercise, and vend the invention, and to have and enjoy the whole profit and advantage by reason of the invention; and to the end that he may have and enjoy the sole use and exercise, and the full benefit of the invention, all others are precluded from either directly or indirectly making use of or putting in practice the invention, or any part of the same, or in any wise imitating the same. Accordingly it was held in Elmslie v. Boursier that the importation and sale in England of articles manufactured abroad according to the specification of an English patent is an infringement of that patent. This decision was followed by the Court of Appeal in Von Heyden v. Neustadt. Neither of these cases entirely covers that before me, but in my judgment the principle of the decisions applies. If the last stage in the production of the article sold was the patented process, it would, I think, plainly be an infringement, and it is not the less an infringement, in my opinion, because the article sold is manufactured with the subsequent use of other processes. By the sale of saccharin in the course of the production of which the patented process is used, the patentee is deprived of some of the whole profit and advantage of the invention, and the importer is indirectly making use of the invention.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TERBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Injunction granted.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, J. H. & J. Y. Johnson.

Solicitor for the defendant company, J. W. Asprey.

Solicitors for Reitmeyer, Deacon, Gibson, & Metcalf.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 18.

DAVIS (Appellant) v. HARRIS (Respondent). (a.)

Landlord and tenant — Distress—Exemptions from—Bedding — Bedstead — Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 21), s. 4—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 147.

By section 147 of the County Courts Act, 1888, which is incorporated in section 4 of the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888, wearing apparel and bedding to the value of £5 are exempt from distress.

Held, that the word "bedding" includes "bedstead."

Case stated by Haden Corser, Esq., metropolitan police magistrate, sitting at Worship-street.

On the 20th of June, 1899, at the Worship-street police-court, a complaint was preferred by Esther Davis, the appellant, against Gershon Harris, the respondent, under the provisions of 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 39, for that Gershon Harris did, on the 25th of May, 1899, unlawfully take from the appellant a certain article of furniture—to wit, a bedstead—by an unlawful distress.

At the hearing of the summons the following facts were proved or admitted:

In the month of April, 1899, the respondent let to the appellant on a weekly tenancy, at a rent of eight shillings per week, a certain two-roomed house, of which he was the owner.

On the 25th of May, 1899, there was due and owing from the appellant to the respondent, in respect of arrears of rent of the house, the sum of £1 5s., and upon that day the respondent, by his duly authorized bailiff, levied a distress for that amount upon the goods of the appellant at the house.

Amongst the goods of the appellant was a bedstead with certain bedding thereon.

The respondent's bailiff, having removed the bedding from the bedstead, took away the bedstead and sold it, leaving the bedding in the house.

Upon the above facts it was contended on behalf of the appellant that the bedstead was privileged from distress, as it was included in the term "bedding" mentioned in section 147 of the County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), which is incorporated in the Law of Distress Amendment Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 21), and which, so far as is material to this case, is as follows: "Excepting the wearing apparel and bedding of such person or his family, and the tools and implements of his trade, to the value of £5, which shall to that extent be protected from such seizure"; and that the said distress so levied by the respondent's bailiff was unlawful by reason of the removal and sale of the same.

On behalf of the respondent it was contended that the bedstead was not so included, and was not, therefore, privileged from distress.

The magistrate came to the conclusion that although a bedstead might in ordinary circumstances be included in the term "bedding," yet as the statute took away part of the landlord's security, and as it had not been the practice to include it in these cases, and there being no decision of the High Court upon the point, he ought to interpret the section strictly. He therefore dismissed the summons.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether upon the above facts the magistrate came to a correct conclusion in point of law, and, if not, what ought to be done in the premises.

Foa, for the appellant.—The word "bedding" in the section includes "bedstead." That is the reasonable construction to be placed on the word, and as such it is exempt from distress up to the value of five pounds. No doubt in one sense a "bedstead" and bedding have distinct meanings, but in the ordinary sense whatever is in, on, or about a bed is included in the word "bedding." Reading the word in this sense would not work hardship, because the exemption being limited to the value of five pounds, and all the articles being taken together, a valuable bedstead would not escape distraint. Dr. Johnson, in his dictionary, defines "bedding" as "the materials of a bed." Dryden and Chaucer both used it in this sense. In Skeat's Glossary of Chaucer "bedding" is described as "a couch." In the Century Dictionary "bedding" is defined as "a bed and its furniture; the materials for a bed, whether for man or beast." The magistrate, as stated in the case, thought the section must be construed strictly, as it took away part of the landlord's security; but this is not so. That was not the object of the Legislature; the object was to benefit and protect tenants of a very poor class: Wright v. Pearson, 17 W. R. 1099, L. R. 4 Q. B. 582.

J. R. Randolph, for the respondent.—The decision of the magistrate is right. In the Act "bedding" does not include "bedstead." The bedstead is a frame to support the "bedding." In all the dictionaries there are to be found three separate and distinct words—"bed," "bedding," and "bedstead." Had the word "bed" been used in the statute it might well be that both "bedding" and "bedstead" would have been included; but that word was not made use of in this section. The word "bedding" ought to be construed in the restricted sense.

Foa replied.

CHANNELL, J.—The question we have to decide here is not whether the word "bedstead" is commonly included in the word "bedding," but whether it is so included within the meaning of the 147th section of the County Courts Act, 1888. The word "bedding" occurs far more frequently in the English language in the sense as apart from "bedstead" than as including it; but the question we have to consider is in what sense the word "bedding" is used in this Act. I am not inclined to agree with the magistrate that the section ought to be construed strictly on the ground that it takes away part of the landlord's security, but rather that the point is upon whom does the onus of proof lie and which side has to bring his case within the statute. That is the real test.

In my opinion it is for the tenant to bring himself within the statute. In construing the statute, however, the words must not be taken as strictly against him, but in accordance with the object and purpose of the statute itself. The words of the section are, "excepting the wearing apparel and bedding of such person or his family." I think what the Act means by these words is that whatever is used—however inappropriate it may be for the purpose—as wearing apparel or bedding, so long as it really is used as such, is exempt up to the value of £5 from the liability to distress. Whatever the tenant happens to use as sleeping accommodation is "bedding" for the purposes of this section, whether it be a mattress on the floor, or on a raised frame, or a bedstead without a mattress; so also if he used a bedstead in addition to a mattress.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In the present case a bedstead as well as a mattress formed the sleeping accommodation, and the bedstead was therefore privileged from distress. This case must be sent back to the magistrate with the intimation that in our opinion the word "bedding" includes "bedstead."

BUCKNILL, J.—I entirely agree.

Appeal allowed; leave to appeal refused.

Solicitors for the appellant, Vandamm & Terry.

Solicitors for the respondent, Pritchard, Englefield, & Co.

---

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Wright, J.) March 23.

In re FLACK.

Ex parte BERRY v. EAST LONDON WATER CO. (a.)

Water—Waterworks Clauses Acts—Recovery of arrears of water rate—Bankruptcy—Adjudication—"Owner and occupier"—"Incoming tenant"—Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 17), s. 53—Metropolis Water Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 113), s. 48.

A trustee in bankruptcy who takes over the bankrupt's premises is an "incoming tenant" within the meaning of section 48 of the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, and is entitled to a supply of water without being obliged to defray the arrears of water rate left unpaid by the bankrupt.

Motion by the trustee in the bankruptcy against the East London Water Co. to recover from them certain arrears of water rate paid by him under protest.

The bankrupt Flack had been an oil and colour merchant having four shops in the north of London. A receiving order was made against him and he was adjudicated bankrupt upon the 28th of July, 1899.

The trustee took over the shops and carried on the business in order to be able to sell it as a going concern. At the date of the receiving order there were arrears of water rate due from the bankrupt in respect of two of the shops, and the water company threatened to cut off the supply to those shops unless the trustee paid the arrears. The trustee refused, pointing out that water rates are not a preferential claim in bankruptcy, but offered to pay for all water supplied since the receiving order.

The water company thereupon cut off the supply and informed the sanitary authority, who served the trustee with notice to close the shops. The trustee then paid the arrears under protest and now sought to recover them from the water company.

Frank Mellor, for the trustee.—The water company had no right to insist on payment of the arrears, or to cut off the water. They were bound to continue the supply by reason of section 48 of the Metropolis Water Act, 1871: "In case any consumer leave the premises where water was supplied to him without paying to the company the rate due from him, the company shall not require from the next tenant of the premises payment of the arrears so left unpaid, unless the incoming tenant agreed with the defaulting consumer to pay the arrears, but the company shall, notwithstanding any such arrears, supply water to the incoming tenant, on being required by him so to do." The trustee is in the position of an incoming tenant within this section because the premises have vested in him by virtue of the order of adjudication. This case is distinguishable from In re Smith, Ex parte Mason, 41 W. R. 159, [1893] 1 Q. B. 323, where there had been a receiving order, but no adjudication, and the official receiver was held not to be an "incoming tenant" under a similar statute.

Reed, Q.C., and Acland, for the respondents.—We rely on section 53 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847: "Every owner and occupier of any dwelling-house . . . shall, when he has . . . paid or tendered the water rate payable in respect thereof, . . . be entitled to demand and receive from the undertakers a sufficient supply of water for his domestic purposes." In this case the trustee ought not to be considered as "owner or occupier" of the shops, and if he were, he has not "paid or tendered" the water rate and is not entitled to receive a supply of water.

Frank Mellor was not called upon to reply.

WRIGHT, J.—In this case the water company have made a mistake. I am not called upon to decide whether the trustee tendered the water rate or not, but I am inclined to think that his offer to pay for water supplied after the bankruptcy did amount to a tender. The water company took a wrong point, they raised the question whether they could make the trustee pay the arrears of water rate due from the bankrupt. Here the trustee took possession of the shops and carried on the business and was in the position of a new tenant. Consequently, by reason of section 48 of the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, the water company were unable to claim the arrears from him. In those circumstances, although the water company might have refused a future supply without payment, they took up the position that they were entitled to the arrears of water rate left owing by the bankrupt, and managed to obtain payment of them. They must repay to the trustee the money they obtained, and then they will be in a position to insist on payment for water supplied and to be supplied since the date of the bankruptcy.

Application allowed.

Solicitors for the trustee, Piesse & Son.

Solicitors for the respondents, Bircham & Co.

---

Q. B. Div. (Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Jan. 24, 25.

NATIONAL SPORTING CLUB (LIMITED) (Appellants) v. COPE (Respondent). (a.)

Licensing law—Proprietary club—Company carrying on a club—Sale of liquors—Some shareholders of company not members of club—Necessity of licence for sale of liquors to members.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

The proprietor of an ordinary proprietary club, where the refreshments and liquors sold to the members are the property of the proprietor, and where the proprietor gets the profit from such sales, cannot sell intoxicating liquors to the members of the club without having the necessary licences.

A limited company incorporated under the Companies Acts carried on the business of a club. Most of the shareholders of the company were members of the club, but there were a few outside shareholders who were not members. The refreshments and liquors were the property of the company, and the profits (if any) from the sale of such refreshments went to the company, and not to the club.

Held, that the company, being a legal entity distinct from the club, and being composed of different members, could not sell intoxicating liquors or tobacco to members of the club without the requisite licences.

Case stated by the metropolitan police-magistrate sitting at Bow-street police-court.

Informations were taken out by the respondent, an officer of Inland Revenue, against the National Sporting Club (Limited) (the appellants) for having sold spirits, wine, beer, and tobacco without having in force the licences required by the various statutes in that behalf for such sales. There were seven summonses in respect of such sales, and the magistrate convicted the appellants on all the summonses, and imposed in respect of the charge of retailing spirits without a licence a fine of £10 and £10 10s. costs, and on each of the other summonses a fine of 1s. and 2s. costs.

The following facts were proved:

The appellants were a limited company duly registered and incorporated under the Companies Acts, and carried on the business of a club at No. 43, King-street, Covent-garden, W.C., under the style of "The National Sporting Club (Limited)," and rules, regulations, and bye-laws had been made for the government of the club.

It was admitted that the company had no excise licence for the sale of any intoxicating liquor or tobacco.

The capital of the company was £16,000, divided into 6,500 preference shares of £2 each and 1,500 ordinary shares of £2 each. The preference shares (of which rather more than one-half were issued) were originally allotted to members of the club, but were now held partly by members and partly by non-members; the holding by non-members was only of such shares as were not repurchaseable by the club by reason of their being the property of members who had resigned, or, having been held by members of the club who had died, had become the property of their representatives. The preference shareholders were entitled to receive out of the profits each year a preferential dividend of 8 per cent. per annum. The whole of the ordinary shares were taken by the two vendors of the business in part payment of the purchase-money, and dividends were only payable on such ordinary shares out of the surplus profits, if any, in the year's working after the payment of the preferential dividend of 8 per cent. No dividend was payable except out of the net profits of the company which were entirely earned on the club premises; and the business of the company was acquired from the two vendors, who became two directors of the company; and dividends were paid on the preference and ordinary shares for the years 1897 and 1898.

In August, 1895, a lease of the club premises, which up to that time had been held by the company from the vendors of the business, was granted to the company by the Duke of Bedford for a term of twenty-one years at a yearly rent of £750, the company undertaking to pay all rates and taxes, and execute all repairs.

The rules enabled members to introduce guests to the club. On ordinary nights the practice was for a member introducing a guest to write his (the member's) name and the guest's name in a book kept for that purpose. On "entertainment nights"—that is to say, on evenings when an athletic or some other display was being held in the theatre of the club—the practice was as follows: Tickets were issued to members desirous of introducing guests, such tickets being taken from a book containing the counterfoils of the same, and no person was allowed to be admitted to the club on such occasions unless he produced to the officials especially employed for the purpose a ticket, on the counterfoil of which was written the name of the guest and the name of the member introducing such guest, such member being held responsible for his guest.

There were provisions in the rules for preventing persons not being members of the club from paying for any refreshment or tobacco supplied to them in the club, and the same must be paid for by a member. Those provisions were made in good faith, and notices calling attention to these regulations were posted in the different rooms on the club premises. Strict instructions were given to the servants of the club to comply with this rule, and several persons, including an ex-inspector of the metropolitan police, were specifically employed (as on other "entertainment nights") to see that such rule was carried out.

All intoxicating liquor and tobacco served upon the club premises was supplied to the National Sporting Club (Limited), and paid for by the company's cheque, and the profit (if any) upon the sale of the same, as well as all profits derived from carrying on the club, went into the funds of the company, and were distributed in dividend among the shareholders.

On the evenings of the 24th of April and the 1st of May, 1899, which were "entertainment nights," the respondent, an officer of Inland Revenue, in company with a Mr. Thorpe, also an officer of Inland Revenue, obtained admission to the club by means of tickets which had been obtained from, and the counterfoils of which were signed by, a member.

On the 24th of April the officers Cope and Thorpe arrived about 9 p.m. At the door they handed in their tickets and passed in downstairs through a refreshment room into a theatre. A boxing competition was going on. About 10 p.m. there was an interval and they went into the refreshment room where there was a bar with tables there. Thorpe ordered supper for two, half a bottle of claret, and a glass of gin and soda from a waiter. No question was asked as to their being members. They had signed no book. What Thorpe ordered was supplied and he paid the waiter. After that Cope ordered of the waiter two cigars and was supplied, paying 2s. After that the officers went to the bar, and Cope ordered of the barmaid one gin and soda and one bottle of beer. She served the gin and as she was pouring the soda out she asked if Cope was a member and without waiting for an answer finished pouring it out. Cope made no answer, but put down 2s. The beer was supplied too. There were other persons in the room being supplied with liquors and tobacco.

On the 1st of May the same officers went to the club again. They handed in the tickets. They were not asked any questions, and signed no book. There was a boxing competition going on, and in the interval the officers went into the refreshment room. Thorpe ordered supper and gin, claret, and cigars of the waiter. They were supplied, and Thorpe paid. The officers went to the bar and Cope ordered from the same barmaid one gin and so[illegible] bottle

Bass. She said: "Are you a member?" Cope said "No." She said: "You know you are not allowed to pay"—and did not supply. While the officers were in the refreshment room other persons were being served with liquors and tobacco. Having regard to the circumstances in which these officers were served and to the evidence as to the precautions against the service of non-members, the magistrate was of opinion that for the purposes of this case the respondent and the other officer were in the position of members of the club, that they were in fact taken and assumed by the waiters and barmaid who supplied them to be members of the club, and under that assumption the officers were in fact supplied by the waiters and barmaid as members of the club. The magistrate thought that, if the waiters or barmaid had knowingly supplied non-members, they would have acted beyond the scope of their authority in so doing; and he found as a fact that they sold the liquors and tobacco to the officers thinking they were members, and he declined to deal with the case as one of a sale to non-members. Neither the waiters nor the barmaid were called before him.

It was also proved by these Excise officers, and not disputed by the appellants, that on each of the two visits a number of members of the club were served with intoxicating liquors and tobacco upon the club premises, and the magistrate found as a fact that the appellants, on the 24th of April and the 1st of May, made a practice of selling, and did sell, both intoxicating liquors of the kinds mentioned in the information and tobacco to members of the club.

On the part of the appellants it was contended that the sale by the National Sporting Club (Limited) of intoxicating liquors and tobacco to the shareholders of the company who were members of the club was a sale to members of their own property, or, at all events, of property of which the members were co-owners, or in which the members had an interest, and was not a sale within the meaning of the statutes under which the proceedings were taken; and that, therefore, no licence was necessary; and special reliance was placed by the appellants upon the cases of Graff v. Evans, 30 W. R. 380, 8 Q. B. D. 373, and Newel v. Hemingway, 58 L. J. M. C. 46, 37 W. R. Dig. 109.

On behalf of the respondent it was contended that the intoxicating liquor and tobacco sold to the members of the National Sporting Club (Limited) were the property of the limited company and not of the members of the club, and that in any case such sale was an infringement of the statutes.

The attention of the magistrate was called to the following cases: Graff v. Evans; Newell v. Hemingway; Newman v. Jones, 17 Q. B. D. 132, 34 W. R. Dig. 105; Bond v. Evans, 36 W. R. 767, 21 Q. B. D. 249; Bowyer v. Percy Supper Club, 42 W. R. 29, [1893] 2 Q. B. 154; John Foster & Sons v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 42 W. R. 259, [1894] 1 Q. B. 516; Collman v. Mills, [1897] 1 Q. B. 396, 45 W. R. Dig. 98; Lynam v. O'Reilly, [1898] 2 Ir. R. 48; and to the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 1, sub-section 1.

The magistrate was of opinion, upon the evidence, that the appellant company was carrying on the business of a proprietary club, the goodwill and fixtures whereof the company had bought; that the company known as the National Sporting Club (Limited) was a separate legal entity distinct from the club and also distinct from its shareholders; that the refreshments, liquors, and tobacco sold were bought for and paid for by the company, and were the property of the company, and not in any way the property of the members of the club; that the refreshments, liquors, and tobacco were sold by and for the company to the individual members of the club who were supplied therewith by the waiters and barmaid; that all the profits from the sale of the refreshments, liquors, and tobacco to members of the club, and from carrying on the club, were the property of and received by the company, and were divisible amongst the shareholders of the company as such according to their respective rights; that the managers, waiters, barmaid, and other servants employed in the club were the servants of the company, and that there was no transfer of the property in any liquor or tobacco until the particular liquor or tobacco was supplied and handed to the member of the club ordering it, who was in fact thereby bound to pay for it, and that such supplying and handing over the liquor and tobacco was a sale thereof.

The magistrate convicted the company accordingly of two offences against 6 Geo. 4, c. 81, s. 26, for retailing spirits without a licence on the two days respectively; and of two offences against the same enactment for dealing in tobacco without a licence on the two days respectively; and of two offences against 23 & 24 Vict. c. 27, s. 19, for selling wine by retail without a licence, and of one offence against 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 17, for selling beer by retail without a licence, and he imposed the penalties as above stated.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether upon the above statement of facts the magistrate came to a correct determination and decision in point of law with regard to the said sale of intoxicating liquors and tobacco to members of the club.

Lawson Walton, Q.C., and C. Mathews, for the appellants.

Sir Richard Webster, A.G., Danckwerts, Q.C., and Rowlatt, for the respondent, were not called upon to argue.

[CHANNELL, J., to the Attorney-General: If you are content to have this appeal dismissed on the ground that in this case there were outside shareholders, we are prepared to do that, but if you want to use the case to argue other questions we must hear you.—Sir R. Webster, A.G.: That would be sufficient for our purpose; but it is necessary to see what this club really is. It is the directors of the company who have the general management of the club. Rule 107 says so.—CHANNELL, J.: That is the reason why we are prepared to give judgment dismissing the appeal upon the special facts of this case without considering the more general question of what the result would be when the company is incorporated.]

CHANNELL, J.—In this case I am of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed. There have been a good many cases cited to us, and the principle of those cases has been referred to, but I think that this case must be disposed of on its special facts. The law with reference to purely members' clubs may be taken to be settled—namely, that in the case of purely members' clubs a licence is not required; that the form that is gone through in the coffee room or in other places in the club where refreshments are sold, in one sense is not a selling of liquors so as to make the licensing laws applicable, but that it is merely a form of distributing common property. It is treated as being analogous to the simple case in which people living in the same house might order a cask of beer from the brewers—order it all together on their joint account—and arrange between themselves that the proportions in which they should pay for it should be the proportions in which they used it and that an account should be kept of the quantity they each had out of it. As in that case there would clearly be one purchase of the cask of beer the beer would become—not their joint property.

because they might not all have equal interests—but property in which they all had a common interest, and the arrangement would be a mere distribution of common property. Members' clubs are treated as being similar to that. Then it has further been held that, that being the principle applicable to the members' clubs, it is not altered by the fact that the property is vested, for purposes of convenience, in trustees. In the case where it is vested in trustees the property is, of course, in those trustees, and in one sense the members' clubs have no legal property —certainly in the stock of exciseable articles—but they have an interest in them, and whether we may properly call it an equitable interest or not, I do not know and it does not signify. For this purpose it is treated just the same as if the legal property had been in them; it is so to all intents and purposes, and it is treated in that case as being a mere distribution of property in which they have a common interest, although the legal interest is vested in trustees. Counsel for the appellants may be quite right—though I express no opinion upon the matter—in saying that a corporation may be constituted a members' club which may stand in exactly the position which the trustees stand in in the case I have put. That much seems clear. He may also be right in saying that Newell v. Hemingway is a distinct authority to that effect. Possibly it is, but possibly, on the other hand, it may be explained merely by the fact that it was only the manager who had been prosecuted in that case. I say nothing about which way it is, because I do not think the facts of this case bring this case within the principle, even if he is right upon it; and as to that, we have not heard the Attorney-General's argument upon that, or indeed upon any part of the case. Going on from that, what is the case in an ordinary proprietor's club? I propose to imitate the caution of Wright, J., in one of the cases, in not laying down any general rule applying to proprietary clubs generally, because I can conceive that it is possible that a club might exist which might be called a proprietary club and in which nevertheless the proprietors might really be in the position of trustees of a members' club. It is possible by special constitution, and it might be so; but to take the ordinary case of a proprietary club, or the case of an individual or of several individuals joining together, an individual runs the club, as it is called, provides everything that is provided, but only to persons who are members of the club. He does not allow everybody to come into the place, or to use the place or have his liquors there, as an hotel proprietor would do. He is either elected by the members themselves or by a committee or in some way or other by the club. It is a very limited portion of the public who have the benefit of the institution, nevertheless the proprietor manages the whole thing; the property is his both legally and in fact. The members have no interest in the property at all, and it is impossible to bring that case within the suggestion that it is a mere distribution of, and a mere mode of enjoying, property in which they have a common interest. That seems to me to be the case in reference to an ordinary proprietor's club in which the proprietor makes a profit out of the concern. It has been said, and rightly said, in the members' club cases that it does not signify whether there is a profit or not—that is to say, that it does not signify whether the articles are sold in the club at the exact cost price, or whether they are sold for something greater than the exact cost price, so as to make a profit to the club. That does not signify in the case of the members' club, because the profit there goes to the general purposes of the club and is distributed again among the members, and so it is only a mode of distributing and enjoying common property. Where, however, there is a proprietor of the club it is a very important question—to whom does the profit go, and who bears the loss if there is a loss? The Irish case (Lynam v. O'Reilly, [1898] 2 Ir. Rep. 48) which has been cited is important, to a certain extent, in bringing that out.

The result, therefore, seems to me to be that it is quite clear in principle that in the case of what I call an ordinary proprietor's club—that is, where the proprietor gets the profit of the transaction and is carrying on the business—there is a case of sale, and sale by retail. I further think that that was in fact decided, and must be taken to have been decided, in Bowyer v. Percy Supper Club, because although it is true that observations were made by one of the learned judges which show that he did not agree with the magistrate in point of fact, yet we might assume that he decided the case upon that ground. He purports to decide it upon the very ground upon which I think it ought to have been decided, and upon which the case of a purely proprietor's club, where the proprietor gets the profit, ought to be decided. The important passage of that judgment begins where Mathew, J., says: "It is agreed on all hands that the stock of wines and spirits in this place belonged to the proprietary company. It is agreed further that the company was under no obligation to furnish the members of the club with any special wine or any particular spirits. The company supplied them as it thought proper out of its stock." In many or most proprietary clubs there would be a tariff put up that would be generally settled in concert with, and in consultation between, the proprietor and the members. That is only a portion of the terms on which the members have come into the club and paid their subscriptions; it is a matter of arrangement and does not give them any real interest in the property of the club or in the stocks of wines and spirits which are distributed when sold in the coffee-room. That appears to me to be clearly the principle of an ordinary proprietary club, and that appears to me to have been decided in Bowyer v. Percy Supper Club. From my recollection of that case I think it was so understood at the time, and it was understood as a decision that proprietary clubs pure and simple required a licence, although Wright, J., carefully said that he did not say there might not be proprietary clubs which would really come under the same principle as members' clubs.

That being so, how are we to deal with the present case? The present case is not a case in which the members of the club have been incorporated into a simple corporation consisting solely and entirely of the members of the club. If that were the case the argument might be a strong one; but we said we should not decide that point, and I do not decide it. The argument is a strong one to say that the corporation are simply put in the position of a members' club, although in law the shareholders in the company have no interest at all in the property of the club. They have only a right to share in the ultimate proceeds of it in certain circumstances; and although in law the company is a legal entity entirely distinct from its shareholders, yet nevertheless in such a case as that, it might well be held (and counsel for the appellants says it was held in Newell v. Hemingway) that it was still a mere case of distributing property in which the shareholders of the company and the members of the club—who would be identical in that case—had a common interest. But in this case the constitution of the company does not appear to me to be confined to a mere incorporation of the members of the club; as a matter of fact there are more than members. It is said that the number is few and arising from accidental circumstances—from people having resigned or people having died—but there are some outside shareholders, and therefore we have got a legal entity (the corporation) which is not either in law or in fact "the members' club"; and it is to that outside body that the property of the club belongs. If the members of the club in buying or taking liquors on the club premises are distibuting some common property they are distributing not their own common property, but the common property of a different body—namely, the shareholders in the company. The consequence is that the case is clearly brought within the case of an ordinary proprietor. The "proprietor" in this case is incorporated, but the proprietor makes profits out of his club and pays dividends, and there are some few shareholders who are not members of the club actually taking profits arising from the sale of the liquors, or at any rate from the general carrying-on of the club in which the liquors are sold, and of which the selling of the liquors forms part. It seems to me, therefore, quite impossible to bring this case within the principle of members' clubs. It comes within the case of a proprietary club where there is a sale of liquors, and it is a sale by retail; and whether we treat this case as arising upon the words of the Excise Act or upon the words of the 3rd section of the Licensing Act, 1872, it is clearly within it. On this ground the appeal must be dismissed.

BUCKNILL, J.—I entirely concur, and I do not think I can add anything.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Lea & Lea.

Solicitor for the respondent, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Collins and Romer, L.JJ.) — March 29.

STREET v. STREET. (a.)

Practice — Costs — Arbitration — Reference of action — Costs of reference in discretion of arbitrator — Award for less than £50 — Scale of costs — R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 12.

Where an action of contract is referred to arbitration, whether compulsorily or by consent, upon the terms that the costs of the action shall abide the event of the award, and the costs of the reference and award shall be in the discretion of the arbitrator, if the arbitrator awards the plaintiff a sum less than £50 and orders that the defendant shall pay the plaintiff's costs of the reference and award, such costs may be taxed on the High Court scale, although by virtue of ord. 65, r. 12, the plaintiff's costs of the action can only be taxed on the county court scale.

Moore v. Watson, 15 W. R. 429, L. R. 2 C. P. 314, overruled.

Galatti v. Wakefield, 4 Ex. D. 249, 27 W. R. Dig. 59, followed.

Appeal from an order of Bigham, J., refusing a review of taxation of costs.

The action was brought in the district registry of Manchester to recover a sum of £90, the balance of an account for building work, and the defendant set up a counterclaim.

By an order of the district registrar, the action, as involving mere matters of account, was referred to an arbitrator agreed on by the parties, and the order provided that the costs of the action should abide the event of the award, and that the costs of the reference and award should be in the discretion of the arbitrator.

The arbitrator made an award in favour of the plaintiff for £33, and ordered that the defendant should pay the plaintiff's costs of the reference and award.

On the case coming before the district registrar for taxation of costs, he directed that the plaintiff's costs of the action should be taxed on the county court scale, the plaintiff having recovered a sum less than £50, but that the costs of the reference and award should be taxed on the High Court scale.

Bigham, J., refused an application by the defendant for a review of taxation.

The defendant appealed.

H. Tindal Atkinson, for the defendant.—The district registrar had no jurisdiction to tax the costs of the reference and award on the High Court scale. By ord. 65, r. 12, "In actions founded on contract, in which the plaintiff recovers, by judgment or otherwise, a sum (exclusive of costs) not exceeding £50, he shall be entitled to no more costs than he would have been entitled to had he brought his action in a county court, unless the court or a judge otherwise orders." The costs of the reference and award as well as the costs of the action ought to have been taxed on the county court scale. In Moore v. Watson, 15 W. R. 429, L. R. 2 C. P. 314, which was a case of a compulsory reference under the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, it was ordered that the costs of the reference should be in the discretion of the arbitrator, as in the present case. The arbitrator awarded the plaintiff a sum less than £20, and directed the defendant to pay the costs of the reference. But the court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to these costs, by reason of section 11 of the County Courts Act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 61). This is a case of a compulsory reference, and the principle of that case applies.

A. J. Ashton, for the plaintiff.—This is a reference by consent. Unless the parties had consented, the district registrar could only have sent the case to an official referee. In Galatti v. Wakefield, 4 Ex. D. 249, 27 W. R. Dig. 59, it was held that the rule laid down in Moore v. Watson did not apply to a reference by consent. Moreover, the court expressed great doubt as to the correctness of Moore v. Watson, and that case ought now to be overruled. See also Holland v. Vincent, 2 W. R. 96, 9 Exch. 274, and Forshaw v. De Wette, 19 W. R. 777, L. R. 6 Ex. 200.

COLLINS, L.J.—In this case an action was referred to an arbitrator agreed upon by the parties by an order which directed that the costs of the action should abide the event of the award, and that the costs of the reference and award should be in the discretion of the arbitrator. The plaintiff recovered by the award a sum less than £50, and he is accordingly not entitled to more costs of the action than he would have got in the county court. The costs of the reference, however, have been allowed on the High Court scale. Against this taxation the defendant appeals, and he relies on the case of Moore v. Watson. That was a case of a compulsory reference, and there it was ordered, as it was here, that the costs of the cause should abide the event, and that the costs of the reference should be in the discretion of the arbitrator. The court held that in a compulsory reference the costs of the reference were to be treated as part of the costs of the cause, and were therefore governed by the rule debarring a plaintiff who recovered less than £20 from recovering any costs of action. That was a decision with regard to compulsory references. The defendant contends that the present case is one of a compulsory reference, and that it is covered by Moore v. Watson. Moore v. Watson, however, has been criticized in Galatti v. Wakefield. In that case an action was referred to arbitration by consent, and it was urged that the principle laid down in Moore v. Watson as to a compulsory reference was equally applicable to a reference by consent, and that in either case the costs of the reference were part of the costs of the cause. But in answer to that Bramwell, L.J., commented on the earlier case. He said, "Reliance has been placed upon Moore v. Watson: it seems to me that that case is quite distinguishable from that before us; but I desire to add that, as at present advised, I do not agree with the decision." Brett, L.J., also refrained from approving of it. Moore v. Watson has been again referred to in Fergusson v. Davison, 30 W. R. 462, 8 Q. B. D. 470. Counsel for the plaintiff called our attention to a case under the earlier practice, Holland v. Vincent. That was a case of a reference in an action, but it does not appear whether it was by consent or not. The costs of the reference and award were to be in the discretion of the arbitrator. The arbitrator made an award in favour of the plaintiff for £17, and ordered the costs of the reference and award to be paid by the defendant. The master treated the costs both of the cause and the reference as governed by the rule in the "Directions to the Masters of the Courts of Hilary Term, 16 Vict.," making a lower scale applicable where the sum recovered did not amount to £20. It seems to me that the same point was raised there as here. Does the lower scale cover the costs of the reference as well as the costs of the action? The court held that the lower scale did not apply to the costs of the reference, but only to the costs of the action. That case is an authority that the costs of the reference are not part of the costs of the cause; and it was not cited in Moore v. Watson. In Forshaw v. De Wette an arbitrator made an award for less than £10 in tort and less than £20 in contract, and directed the defendant to pay the costs of the reference and award. It was held that, though the plaintiff was debarred from recovering any costs of the cause, the costs of the reference and award were on a different footing, and the plaintiff was entitled to those costs. These cases seem to me inconsistent with the principle lying at the bottom of Moore v. Watson.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The reference in the present case is in one sense a compulsory reference, but it is also a reference by consent, because the person named as arbitrator could not have been appointed except by consent. The reference gives him a discretion over costs. Why does not the consensual part of the reference extend to what the named person is to do in dealing with costs? In my opinion the order for reference in this case is virtually a consent order. But whether that be so or not, I think that the opinions of Bramwell, L.J., and other judges justify us in saying that, even supposing it to be a compulsory reference, the costs of the reference are not part of the costs of the cause, and that ord. 65, r. 12, does not apply to them.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. I think that a reference such as we have to deal with in this case is a reference by consent within the meaning of consent as used in Galatti v. Wakefield. If so, this case is governed by Galatti v. Wakefield; but in my opinion the question should be decided on a broad ground, and we ought to consider what is the meaning and effect of this order of reference, if it is a compulsory order. I think the order means what it says, and that the costs of the reference are left in the discretion of the arbitrator and are not made merely part of the costs of the action. The arbitrator has a discretion expressly given him by the order, and under it he can deal with the costs of the reference apart from the costs of the action. I disagree with Moore v. Watson, and I agree with what was said by Bramwell, L.J., in Galatti v. Wakefield. The authority of Moore v. Watson received a blow in Galatti v. Wakefield, and it remains with us to give it the coup de grace. As to ord. 65, r. 12, I think it refers only to the costs of the action and does not include the costs of the reference.

The question remains, Has the arbitrator exercised his discretion? I think he had a discretion to say on what scale the costs of the reference should be taxed. His award is silent as to the scale of costs; but what is the proper inference to be deduced from the terms of his order and the circumstances? I think he intended to award costs on the ordinary scale—that is to say, on the High Court scale—and not on any special scale or the county court scale. For these reasons I think the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, G. Featherstone Johnson, for John A. Bradbury, Manchester.

Solicitors for the defendant, Robbins, Billing, & Co., for Nicholls, Harris, & Lindsell, Manchester.

---

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) — Feb. 21.

RICHARDSON v. STORMONT, TODD, & CO. (a.)

Stock Exchange—Defaulter—Assets—Official assignee—Right to sue—Stock Exchange Rules.

Rule 176 of the Rules of the Stock Exchange, which says that the official assignee shall collect the assets of a defaulting member, applies to all his assets without any limitation. The official assignee is, by virtue of the rule, in the position of an equitable assignee of the assets, and, if he has allowed the defaulting member to sell any of the assets as his agent, he can recover the price from the purchasers.

Tomkins v. Saffery, 26 W. R. 62, 3 App. Cas. 213, considered.

Appeal from a judgment of Mathew, J., at the trial of an action without a jury.

The action was brought to recover £187 10s., being the balance of the price of 2,105 preference shares in the Western Australian Market Trust (Limited), alleged to have been sold to the defendants by the plaintiff as the official assignee of the London Stock Exchange.

The plaintiff's case was that it was his duty as official assignee to collect the assets of one Reavely, a defaulting member of the Stock Exchange, and to distribute the same according to the rules of the Stock Exchange; that among Reavely's assets was a debt of £5,339 due to him from the Western Australian Market Trust (Limited); that the plaintiff took steps to realize that debt; that the company being unable to pay, a scheme of reconstruction was carried out, under which the shares in question were allotted to Reavely; that the plaintiff allowed the shares to remain in the name of Reavely in trust for him; that the plaintiff authorized

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Reavely to sell the shares as his agent, and that Reavely, acting under that authority, sold them to the defendants.

The defence was that Reavely sold the shares to the defendants as a principal, and not as an agent, and that Reavely was at the time of the sale indebted to them in the sum of £187 10s., which they claimed to be entitled to deduct from the price of the shares. The defendants denied that the plaintiff as official assignee had any legal or equitable right to or interest in the shares.

Rule 174 of the Rules of the Stock Exchange is as follows: "Two or more members shall be appointed annually by the committee to act as official assignees, whose duty it shall be to obtain from a defaulter his original books of account and a statement of the sums owing to and by him; to attend meetings of creditors; to summon the defaulter before such meetings; to enter into a strict examination of every account; to investigate any bargains suspected to have been effected at unfair prices; and to manage the estate in conformity with the rules, regulations, and usages of the Stock Exchange."

Rule 176 is as follows: "The assignees shall collect and pay the assets to the credit of their joint account at a banker's, and shall distribute the same as soon as possible."

Mathew, J., was of opinion, on the evidence, that the defendants dealt with Reavely in the purchase of the shares, not as a principal, but as an agent for a disclosed principal—namely, the plaintiff; and he gave judgment for the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed.

Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., and McIntyre, for the defendants.—The plaintiff purported to act under the Rules of the Stock Exchange; but those rules cannot affect the rights of the general creditors of a defaulting member: Tomkins v. Saffery, 26 W. R. 62, 3 App. Cas. 213, and Ex parte Grant, In re Plumbly, 28 W. R. 755, 13 Ch. D. 667. Secondly, the plaintiff never reduced these shares into his possession, and therefore he cannot sue the defendants in this action. The utmost extent of his power was to collect the shares.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., and F. M. Abrahams, for the plaintiff, were not called upon to argue.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I agree with the judgment of Mathew, J. The first question is as to the construction of rule 176 of the Rules of the Stock Exchange, which says that the official assignees shall collect and pay the assets of a defaulting member to the credit of their joint account at a banker's, and shall distribute the same as soon as possible. What is the meaning of "the assets" in that rule? Does it mean only the Stock Exchange assets or all the assets? Primâ facie, it means all the assets which he had; and the case of Tomkins v. Saffery in the House of Lords contains a strong indication of opinion that the rule means all the assets of the defaulting member without any limitation. I am prepared to hold that the meaning of the rule is that the official assignees shall collect the whole of the defaulting member's assets and shall distribute them among his Stock Exchange creditors.

Then it is said that the official assignee cannot sue. I agree with Mathew, J., in thinking that he can. Further, there is good evidence of a direct bargain between the defendants and the official assignee that the price of 3s. per share should be paid to the official assignee without any set-off. I therefore think the appeal must be dismissed.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The case seems to me to resolve itself into one small point—viz., whether the effect of the Stock Exchange rule is such that it constitutes a cessio bonorum on the part of Reavely of all his assets, either by itself or coupled with what was done. If it is a cessio bonorum, that disposes of the first point—namely, that the rule applies only to Stock Exchange assets, and it also disposes of the second point—namely, that the official assignee only has power to collect the assets. I think that Tomkins v. Saffery amounts to a decision that the operation of the rule was in that case to constitute a cessio bonorum. It seems to me that the plaintiff became the true owner of these shares, and that the defendants who bought them cannot refuse to pay the full price to the true owner.

ROMER, L.J.,—I agree. The first question is whether the assets of a defaulter which the official assignee is to collect are limited to special assets or are his general assets. I think that the rule covers the whole of his assets. This point seems to me to have been in substance disposed of in Tomkins v. Saffery. The other question is as to the right of the official assignee with regard to the estate of a defaulting member. In my opinion he is in the position of an equitable assignee of the assets. Reavely held these shares as the property of the plaintiff as official assignee; and the defendants, having become the purchasers of them with knowledge of all the facts, cannot now, when they come to pay for them, set off against the price a private debt due to them from Reavely.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Michael Abrahams, Sons, & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Spyer & Sons.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Vaughan Williams and Romer, L.JJ.) — Jan. 18-20; Feb. 19.

ALLEN v. GOLD REEFS OF WEST AFRICA (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Deceased member—Notices—Calls—Special resolutions — Forfeiture — Fully paid-up shares — Vendor's shares—Company's lien.

Notices addressed to a member at his registered place of address in the books of a company are not invalidated by the fact that the company was aware, at the time the notices were sent out, that such member was dead, so long as his executors have not been registered as the holders of the shares of such member.

A limited company formed with articles which confer no lien on fully paid-up shares has, under the Companies Act, 1862, s. 50, power to alter the articles so as to impose a lien and restrictions on the transfer of those shares by members indebted to the company, and such lien and restriction can be imposed in respect of debts contracted before and existing at the time of the alteration of the articles, as well as in respect of debts subsequently contracted.

In the absence of a special bargain, there is no distinction between fully-paid shares allotted to the vendor by the company and any other fully-paid shares; and, consequently, the altered articles apply to vendors' shares.

Order of Kekewich, J. (47 W. R. 568, [1899] 2 Ch. 40), varied.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J. (reported 47 W. R. 568, [1899] 2 Ch. 40).

The plaintiffs were the executors of one Emilie

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Zuccani, who died on the 4th of February, 1897. At the time of his death Zuccani was the registered holder of 27,885 fully-paid 5s. shares issued by the defendants, and 36,435 5s. shares with 1s. 8d. paid up.

The defendants' articles provided (article 29) that they should have a lien for all debts, obligations, and liabilities of any member upon all shares (not being fully paid) held by such member.

The 27,885 fully-paid shares were shares which had been allotted to Zuccani as the nominee of the vendor to the company. No suggestion was made that these shares were not his own property. He had also applied for, and had allotted to him, 60,000 ordinary 5s. shares, not paid up. Previous to Zuccani's death the company had made several calls on him in respect of these shares. He did not pay these calls, but from time to time he had paid up quantities of shares in full before the amounts had been called up. This was done to enable him to deal with these shares. The amount due for calls at his death was over £6,000.

On the 9th of February, 1897, the defendants sent out a notice of an extraordinary general meeting to be held on the 18th of February for the purpose of passing a special resolution to alter article 29 by omitting the words "not being fully paid."

The meeting was held on the 18th of February, and the special resolution passed.

On the 8th of March the confirmatory meeting was held and the resolution confirmed. Notices of these meetings were sent to Zuccani at his registered address, although the defendants were aware of his death. Zuccani was, in fact, the only holder of fully-paid shares.

On the 4th of June, 1897, the defendants posted a notice to Zuccani at his registered address requiring payment by the 21st of June of £6,072 10s. due in respect of the 36,435 shares, and a sum of £804 6s. 11d. for interest on arrears of calls and further interest from the date of the notice. The notice also stated that in the event of non-payment by the time appointed the shares would be liable to be forfeited. This notice was also sent to the plaintiffs, who had not then lodged the probate for registration. The amount demanded was not paid, and on the 23rd of June the defendants purported to forfeit the shares.

The plaintiffs claimed a declaration that the defendants had no lien upon the fully-paid shares, and an injunction to restrain the forfeiture of the partly-paid shares.

Clause 5 of the memorandum of association of the defendant company provided that the original shares or any of them, or any other shares which might be afterwards created, might be issued fully paid up, and with such preference, privileges, or priority over, or postponement to the remaining or any other shares of the company in respect of dividends or otherwise as might be determined.

The defendants' articles provided (article 2) that the word "member" should mean a registered holder of any share or stock of the company; (article 22) that if any member failed to pay any call, instalment, or interest, the directors might serve a notice on such member requiring him to pay the same, together with further interest from the date of the notice; (article 23) that the notice should state that in the event of non-payment the shares would be liable to be forfeited; (article 24) that if the requisition of the notice were not complied with, any share in respect of which such notice was given might be forfeited by a resolution of the directors to that effect; (article 29) that the company should have a lien for all debts, obligations, and liabilities of any member to the company upon all shares (not being fully paid) held by such member; (article 41) that the executors or administrators of a deceased member (not being one of several joint holders) should be the only person recognized by the company as having any title to the shares registered in the name of such member; (article 42) that any person becoming entitled to a share in consequence of the death of any member might elect either to be registered as a holder, or to have some person nominated by him registered as a transferee; (article 45) that a person so becoming entitled should, subject to any lien of the company, be entitled to receive dividends, bonuses, or other moneys payable in respect of the share, but should not be entitled to receive notices of, or to attend, or vote at a meeting of the company, or, save as aforesaid, to any of the rights or privileges of the member unless and until he should have become a member in respect of the shares; (article 74) that notice of general meetings should be given to such members as were under the provisions therein contained entitled to receive notices, but the accidental omission to give such notice to, or the non-receipt of such notice by, any member should not invalidate any resolution passed at any such meeting; and (article 170) that a notice might be served upon any member either personally or by sending it prepaid by post addressed to such member at his registered address as appearing in the register of the members of the company.

There was no special provision for service of notices in the case of a deceased member.

Kekewich, J., held that the notice threatening forfeiture was invalid as claiming interest from too early a date, and also on the ground that the company could not give notice to a dead man after notice of his death. He also held that the notices of the meetings of the 18th of February and the 8th of March, 1897, were invalid on this latter ground, and he made a declaration and granted an injunction accordingly. He also doubted whether a company had power to alter its articles so as to affect retrospectively the existing rights of the owner of a particular group of paid-up shares without his consent.

The company appealed.

On the appeal the question of the interest was first taken, and on this point the court upheld the decision of Kekewich, J.

The question of the lien was then argued.

Warrington, Q.C., and Dunham, for the appellants.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Kerly, for the respondents.

Warrington, Q.C., replied.

The following cases were referred to in the course of the argument: Pépé v. City and Suburban Building Society, 41 W. R. 548, [1893] 2 Ch. 311; Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., 45 W. R. 321, [1897] 1 Ch. 361; Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Works, 22 W. R. 396, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 350; James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate, 44 W. R. 372, [1896] 1 Ch. 456; Swabey v. Port Darwin Gold Mining Co., 1 Megone 385; Strohmenger v. Finsbury Permanent Investment Society, [1897] 2 Ch. 469, 46 W. R. Dig. 19; Sixth West Kent Mutual Building Society v. Hills, 47 W. R. 647, [1899] 2 Ch. 60; Const v. Harris, Turn. & R. 496; Kaye v. Croydon Tramways, 46 W. R. 405, [1898] 1 Ch. 358; Bradford Banking Co. v. Briggs, 35 W. R. 521, 12 App. Cas. 29; Bank of Africa v. Salisbury Gold Mining Co., [1892] A. C. 281, 40 W. R. Dig. 43.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 19.—LINDLEY, M.R. — This is an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J., granting an injunction restraining the defendants from enforcing a lien on some fully paid-up shares in the company which belonged to a deceased shareholder named Zuccani. The appeal is not only important to the parties to it, but it raises several questions of great general interest relating to the powers of limited companies to alter their articles, and especially to their power to alter their articles so as to affect shares standing in the names of deceased shareholders, and as to the effect of an alteration duly made on vendors' fully paid-up shares issued before the alteration is made. [His lordship then referred to the facts, and continued:] No one can blame the directors for endeavouring to obtain payment of the money due from Zuccani's estate to the company by any legal means. Steps were taken to have his estate administered in the Chancery Division, and the company could, of course, have carried in a proof for its debt. But more summary means were had recourse to. The articles of association as they stood when Zuccani died contained a power to forfeit shares in respect of which any money was due to the company. The company attempted to exercise this power, but the court has held that, owing to mistakes made by the company, the forfeiture declared was invalid. The power of forfeiture extended only to shares not fully paid up. The articles gave the company no power to refuse to register a transfer of fully paid-up shares. The directors did, however, refuse to register a transfer of some paid-up shares on the 29th of January, 1897. But they were wrong in so doing, and that transfer was ultimately passed. Again, the company had no lien whatever on fully paid-up shares. A lien on such shares, or the possibility of a lien on them, renders them unquotable on the Stock Exchange, and it is usual in articles of association conferring a lien on shares expressly to exclude fully paid-up shares from any lien. Article 29 did this. The articles of the company gave it a lien on unpaid-up shares, not only for money due from their holder to the company in respect of such shares, but for all debts, liabilities, and engagements of their holder to the company; and on proper notice and default of payment power was given to the company to sell the shares subject to such lien. Moreover, the directors were empowered to refuse to register the transfer of any shares on which the company had a lien. The lien conferred by the articles clearly extended to all Zuccani's unpaid shares, and did not cease on his death. It continued to be available as against his executors (although not themselves members) as it was against him in his lifetime. But, independently of any article, a lien on property does not cease on the death of the owner of the property. So far, therefore, as Zuccani's unpaid shares are concerned, the company was entitled to the lien and power of sale conferred by articles 29 and 30. I do not understand that this was disputed. The directors, however, desired to extend the lien and power of sale and power to refuse to register transfers to Zuccani's fully paid-up shares. I say to his shares, for he was the only person entitled to fully-paid up shares from whom any calls were due. Accordingly, steps were taken to pass a special resolution to alter article 29 by striking out the words "not being fully paid." A resolution to that effect was passed on the 18th of February, 1897, and confirmed on the 8th of March, 1897. Notice of these meetings was sent addressed to Zuccani at his registered place of address, and the notice came to the knowledge of his executors. The directors knew that he was dead; but I cannot agree with the learned judge that the resolution was invalid by reason of any defect in the notice. Notices of meetings have only to be given to members, and the executors were not members. If no notice at all had been sent to the executors or to Zuccani's registered address, the omission would not, in my opinion, have affected the propriety of holding the meetings or the validity of the resolutions passed at them. Article 45 expressly provided that notices of meetings need not be sent to executors who had not become members. To hold that meetings of companies could not be properly held unless the notices convening them were given to the legal personal representatives of all deceased members would be to paralyze the transaction of business, and would be contrary to the ordinary principles applicable to corporate bodies, and indeed to other associations as well. The regularity of the proceedings to alter the articles by no means, however, disposes of the matters in controversy between the parties.

The facts above stated raise the following important questions: First, whether a limited company registered with articles conferring no lien on its fully paid-up shares can by special resolution alter those articles by imposing a lien on those shares; secondly, whether, if it can, the lien so imposed can be made to apply to debts owing by fully paid-up shareholders to the company at the time of the alteration of the articles; thirdly, whether, if it can, fully paid-up shares allotted to vendors of property to the company are in any different position from other fully paid-up shares issued by the company; fourthly, whether, assuming the altered articles to be valid and to be binding on the general body of the holders of fully paid-up shares in the company, there are any special circumstances in this particular case to exclude the fully paid-up shares held by Zuccani from the operation of the altered articles. The articles of a company prescribe the regulations binding on its members (Companies Act, 1862, s. 14). They have the effect of a contract (section 16), but the exact nature of this contract is even now very difficult to define. Be its nature what it may, the company is empowered by the statute to alter the regulations contained in its articles from time to time by special resolutions; and any regulation or article purporting to deprive the company of this power is invalid on the ground that it is contrary to the statute: Walker v. London Tramways, 28 W. R. 163, 12 Ch. D. 705. The power thus conferred on companies to alter the regulations contained in their articles is limited only by the provisions contained in the statute and the conditions contained in the company's memorandum of association. Wide, however, as the language of section 50 is, the power conferred by it must, like all other powers, be exercised subject to those general principles of law and equity which are applicable to all powers conferred on majorities, enabling them to bind minorities. It must be exercised not only in the manner required by law, but also bonâ fide for the benefit of the company as a whole, and it must not be exceeded. These conditions are always implied, and are seldom, if ever, expressed. But if they are complied with, I can discover no ground for judicially putting any other restrictions on the power conferred by this section than those contained in it. How shares shall be transferred, and whether the company shall have any lien on them, are clearly matters of regulation, properly prescribed by a company's articles of association. This is shown by Table A in the schedule to the Companies Act, 1862 (clauses 8, 9, 10). Speaking, therefore, generally, and without reference to any particular case, the section clearly authorizes a limited company, formed with articles which confer no lien on fully-paid up shares, and which allow them to be transferred without any fetter, to alter those articles by special resolution, and to impose a lien and restrictions on the registry of transfers of those shares by members indebted to the company.

But then comes the question whether this can be done so as to impose a lien or restriction in respect of a debt contracted before and existing at the time when the articles are altered. Again, speaking generally, I am of opinion that the articles can be so altered, and that, if they are altered bonâ fide for the benefit of the company, they will be valid and binding as altered on the existing holders of paid-up shares, whether those holders are indebted or not indebted to the company when the alteration is made. But, as will be seen presently, it does not by any means follow that the altered article may not be inapplicable to some particular fully paid-up shareholder. He may have special rights against the company which do not invalidate the resolution to alter the articles, but which may exempt him from the operation of the articles as altered. The conclusion thus arrived at is based on the language of section 50, which, as I have said, the court is not, in my opinion, at liberty to restrict. This conclusion moreover, is in conformity with such authorities as there are on the subject. Andrews v. Gas Meter Co. is an authority that under section 50 of the Companies Act, 1862, a company's articles can be altered so as to authorize the issue of preference shares taking priority over existing shares, although no power to issue preference shares was conferred by the memorandum of association or by the existing articles. The answer to the argument that the company could not alter existing rights is that, within the limits set by the statute and memorandum of association, the rights of shareholders in limited companies, so far as they depend only on the regulations of the company, are subject to alteration by section 50 of the Act. The decision of Chitty, L.J., in Pépé v. City and Suburban Building Society is in principle also clearly in point. A member of a building society, who had given notice of withdrawal, and who by the rules as they then stood became entitled to a certain sum of money, was held to be deprived of his right to that sum by an alteration made in the rules before he had ceased to be a member. This case went very far, but it has been treated as correct in Botten v. City, &c., Building Society, [1895] 2 Ch. 441, 43 W. R. Dig. 25. It was urged that a company's articles could not be altered retrospectively, and reliance was placed on Rigby, L.J.'s, observations in James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate. The word "retrospective" is, however, somewhat ambiguous, and the concurrence of Rigby, L.J., in Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., shows that his observations in James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate are no authority for saying that existing rights, founded and dependent on alterable articles, cannot be affected by their alteration. Such rights are in truth limited as to their duration by the duration of the articles which confer them. But although the regulations contained in a company's articles of association are revocable by special resolution, a special contract may be made with the company in the terms of or embodying one or more of the articles, and the question will then arise whether an alteration of the articles so embodied is consistent or inconsistent with the real bargain between the parties. A company cannot break its contracts by altering its articles, but, when dealing with contracts referring to revocable articles, and especially with contracts between a member of the company and the company respecting his shares, care must be taken not to assume that the contract involves as one of its terms an article which is not to be altered. It is easy to imagine cases in which even a member of a company may acquire by contract or otherwise special rights against the company, which exclude him from the operation of a subsequently altered article. Such a case arose in Swabey v. Port Darwin Gold Mining Co., where it was held that directors, who had earned fees payable under a company's articles, could not be deprived of them by a subsequent alteration of the articles, which reduced the fees payable to directors. I take it to be clear that an application for an allotment of shares on the terms of the company's articles does not exclude the power to alter them, nor the application of them when altered to the shares so applied for and allotted. To exclude that power or the application of an altered article to particular shares, some clear and distinct agreement for such exclusion must be shown, or some circumstances must be proved conferring a legal or equitable right on the shareholders to be treated by the company differently from the other shareholders.

This brings me to the last question which has to be considered, whether there is in this case any contract or other circumstance which excludes the application of the altered article to Zuccani's fully paid-up vendors' shares. First, let us consider the shares. I am unable to discover any difference in principle between one fully paid-up share and another. Whether a share is paid for in cash or is given in payment for property acquired by the company appears to me quite immaterial for the present purpose. In either case the shareholder pays for his share, and in either case he takes it subject to the articles of association and power of altering them, unless this inference is excluded by special circumstances. Next let us consider whether a vendor who makes no special bargain, except that he is to be paid in fully paid-up shares, is in any different position from other allottees of fully paid-up shares. I fail to see that he is, unless he stipulates that his shares shall be specially favoured. Zuccani bargained for fully paid-up shares and he got them. The imposition of a lien on them did not render them less fully paid-up than they were before. They remained what they were. Zuccani did not bargain that the regulations relating to paid-up shares should never be altered, or that, if altered, his shares should be treated differently from other fully paid-up shares. I cannot see that the company broke its bargain with him in any way by altering its regulations or by enforcing the altered regulations as it did. I have already drawn attention to clause 5 of the memorandum of association. Having regard to its plain language, no allottee of shares, whether a vendor or an ordinary applicant, can complain of injustice or even hardship if his rights under the original articles are modified to his disadvantage. Every allottee was told by the memorandum that his rights as a shareholder were subject to alteration, and no allottee acquired any rights except on these terms, unless, of course, some special bargain was made with him. If Zuccani had not been indebted to the company, could he have successfully maintained that the company had no power to alter the articles and so make his shares liable to a lien, and consequently less marketable than before? I take it that it is clear that he could not. But I arrive at this conclusion only because the bargain with him has not been broken. Zuccani's indebtedness to the company confers on him or his executors no rights against it. But it is his indebtedness which creates the embarrassment from which they seek to escape. The fact that Zuccani's executors were practically the only persons affected at the time by the alterations made in the articles excites suspicion as to the bona fides of the company. But, although the executors were the only persons who were actually affec[illegible]me, that was because Zuccani was the c[illegible]id-up shares who at the time was in [illegible] The altered articles applied to all ho[illegible]d shares and made no distinction between them. The directors cannot be charged with bad faith. After carefully considering the whole case, and endeavouring in vain to discover grounds for holding that there was some special bargain differentiating Zuccani's shares from others, I have come to the conclusion that the appeal from the decision of the learned judge, so far as it relates to the lien created by the altered articles must be allowed. His decision as to the forfeiture having, however, been affirmed, each of the parties should be left to pay their own costs.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I have had an opportunity of reading the judgments of my brethren. I do not know that I differ from them as to the law of this case. We are all agreed that there was power in the shareholders to pass the resolution which they did pass. There is no question of the abstract validity of the resolution. It falls within the power of alteration conferred by section 50 of the Companies Act, 1862. We are further all agreed that a company cannot contract itself out of the statutory power of alteration conferred by section 50, and the alteration of the articles in the present case involves no contravention of the memorandum of association. But I think we are all agreed that cases might occur in which a member might have acquired, by contract or otherwise, special rights against the company which would exclude him from the operation of the altered article. It is in this sense that I understand the observation of Rigby, L.J., in James v. Buena Ventura Nitrate Grounds Syndicate. A resolution may alter the regulations of a company, but cannot retrospectively effect existing rights. I also take it to be clear that the alteration must be made in good faith. The result is that we have to consider in the present case whether the alteration, if enforced against Zuccani's executors, would defeat existing rights or operate oppressively. On this point I confess that I have much more doubt than my brethren seem to have. It is, of course, true that Zuccani, when he took these shares as the price of the property which he was selling, knew, or must be taken to have known, of the statutory powers of alteration; but it does not seem to me that it follows that the company could make alterations which would alter the value, according to the articles in force, of the consideration which they were giving for the property purchased. For instance, I doubt very much whether in a case in which the articles provided (as they might well do) for the issue of ordinary and preference shares, and the memorandum of association contained a clause in the terms of clause 5 of the present memorandum, a company who had bought a property by the issue of fully-paid preference shares could afterwards, by altering the articles, issue preference shares and thus reduce the value of the consideration which they had agreed to give. It is impossible to suppose that the parties to such a contract of sale and purchase could have contemplated the value of the consideration shifting from time to time at the will of the purchasers: Griffith v. Paget, 25 W. R. 523, 5 Ch. D. 894, which, of course, was decided prior to Andrews v. Gas Meter Co., is an authority that, in the absence of express power in the memorandum, such a thing could not be done. This, of course, is not the present case. The present case is that the company, by the articles then in force, reserved to themselves a lien upon all shares not being fully paid, and then purchased a property by the issue of fully-paid shares; and the question is whether they could on the very day after the contract, it might be, materially affect the consideration given by passing a resolution that the fully-paid shares thus given as a price should be subject to a lien for all debts, obligations, and liabilities of the vendor to the company, whether such debts, liabilities, and obligations should actually have accrued or not, and thus render the shares unmarketable. I think not. I think that, notwithstanding the statutory powers of alteration, the basis of the contract of purchase was that the property should be paid for in marketable shares. I think that the very object of the exception in article 29 of fully-paid shares from lien was to render those shares marketable; and as they chose to pay for the property in shares thus made marketable, I think that to allow the company to subject the vendor's shares to a lien would be to make the alteration of the articles retrospectively affect existing rights. I think, moreover, that the resolution was not passed in good faith, being really passed merely to defeat the existing rights of an individual shareholder. My observations have no bearing on shares fully paid up in pursuance of calls in the ordinary way; but it is worthy of observation that Zuccani did, in respect of shares other than vendor's shares, prepay such shares, with the assent of the company, for the purpose of freeing those shares from lien. I doubt if the company could have subjected these shares to lien after receiving prepayment.

ROMER, L.J.—For the reasons given by the Master of the Rolls in his judgment, I agree with him that there was no defect in the resolutions altering the articles of the company as to lien on the ground of absence of notice to Mr. Zuccani or his representatives, and I have nothing to add to what the Master of the Rolls has said on this head. I also agree with him in the conclusions he has come to on the other points taken by the respondents on this appeal; but having regard to the importance of some of the arguments addressed to us, I think it right to give my reasons for arriving at these conclusions.

A company such as this may undoubtedly by its articles of association provide for a lien on the shares of its shareholders in respect of any debts for the time being due from them to the company, and, if the original articles do not provide for the lien, the company may subsequently, by duly altering its articles, give itself such a lien; and the fact that the original articles did not provide for a lien would be in itself no ground for justifying a shareholder who was indebted when the articles were altered in saying that he contracted the debt or that he took his shares in reliance on there being no lien, and that the new articles must not operate so as to make the lien thereby given extend to his existing debt. A shareholder must be taken to have known that the articles might be so altered as to give the lien. And certainly a shareholder could not say as against the company that he was entitled to special rights because he did not pay his debts. And the same considerations apply to the case where the original articles give only a limited lien, as, for example, a lien limited to debts due for unpaid calls. The company might by subsequent articles extend their lien, and a shareholder would have no right to object to the extended lien because he happened to be indebted to the company. Of course, by the above observations I have not been dealing with exceptional cases. I can imagine a case, for example, where by the memorandum of association certain provisions as to lien are made part of the constitution of the company which could not be effected by any alteration of the articles. And special contracts might be made with particular classes of shareholders or individuals, or special obligations to them might be incurred by the company, and that even by virtue of the original articles alone, which would prevent the articles being altered as against them or prevent the alterations being enforceable against them. But putting aside such exceptional cases, the observations I have made as to the general law are, in my opinion, sound. I will now consider the circumstances of the case before us; and the first question is as to the meaning and effect of article 29 of the company. In my opinion, that article merely provides for limited lien—that is to say, it limits the lien so as to include fully paid-up shares. There is nothing in the memorandum of association of the company to prevent that lien being subsequently extended to fully paid-up shares by an alteration in the articles. There is nothing in the company's original articles of association to prevent such extension of the lien, nor was any shareholder justified in assuming from article 29 that fully paid-up shares would never be made subject to the lien by an alteration in the articles. That article only in substance stated that the lien thereby given did not extend to fully paid-up shares. No one was justified in assuming from it that the company thereby held out in favour of any person acquiring fully paid-up shares that those shares should never be made subject to a lien by an alteration of the articles. If article 29 had gone on to state expressly that the lien thereby provided might be extended later on by an alteration of the articles no one could venture to doubt what was the true meaning and effect of the article. But such a statement is implicit though not expressed. It was not, in my opinion, necessary for the article to say at the end: "Caution.—Remember the power of the company by altering its articles to extend its lien," or any words to that effect. But then it is said that, though holders of shares paid-up in the ordinary way by calls could not complain of an alteration of the articles, yet the holders of other paid-up shares stand in a different position, though they were not the subject of any special contract as to lien. I cannot think this contention sound. Put aside, for the moment—as we are doing—any case of a special bargain with the company, in my opinion no shareholder was justified in assuming from article 29 that if he obtained by allotment fully paid-up shares or ordinary shares subsequently paid up in full in advance of calls, those shares should be specially distinguished from shares subsequently paid up in full by ordinary calls, or give him special rights, so as to prevent the company from altering the articles and extending the lien to fully paid-up shares, or so that he would be able to say that such an alteration of the articles if made could not be enforced as against his shares. I find nothing in article 29 to deprive the company of its right by altering its articles to extend its lien to fully paid-up shares generally or to limit that right to shares paid up by ordinary calls. Still less, in my opinion, was any shareholder entitled to assume from the company's memorandum and original articles that the lien, if extended at all, should only be extended so as to give a lien for liabilities incurred after the alteration in the articles. I fail to see why a shareholder because he became indebted to the company should acquire special rights against the company in respect of that debt as to the alteration of the articles, or why the company should not when it obtained its extended lien use it in respect of any existing debt as well as in respect of debts subsequently incurred. In truth, every shareholder was bound to bear in mind—when paying up in full his shares, or acquiring fully paid-up shares, or incurring a debt to the company—that the company had a legal right by altering its articles to extend its lien, and might exercise that legal right at any time. This being so, Zuccani's shares became bound by the company's alteration of its articles, unless he can show some special bargain with the company or some special obligation incurred towards him by the company in respect of his fully paid-up shares. He fails to establish any such special bargain or obligation. There was certainly no such special bargain or obligation alleged or proved with regard to the shares allotted to him as fully paid up, and, as already pointed out, no such bargain or obligation can be implied merely from the wording of article 29. Nor was there any special bargain or obligation with regard to the shares paid up in full by him after allotment. The fact is, with regard to the latter, that being indebted at the time in very large sums to the company, and paying certain sums on account, he was permitted as a favour to him to attribute the payment to a few shares so as to make them paid up. No doubt this was done so as to give him the opportunity, so long as the lien was limited by the original articles, of disposing of the fully paid-up shares, but if he did not avail himself of the opportunity before the alteration of the articles, then he could not do so afterwards. I understand that as a matter of fact he did fully avail himself of the opportunity; but, even if he did not do so as regards some shares, that would not, in my opinion, prevent those shares from becoming subject to the extended lien. Zuccani, in respect of all his fully paid-up shares, whether allotted as paid up or not, in fact has obtained and enjoyed all the advantages with regard to lien which the company ever impliedly or expressly promised him—that is to say, the right to deal with the shares without their being subject to any lien so long as the articles remained unaltered, and did not extend the lien to fully paid-up shares. Something was said on behalf of the respondents as to want of good faith on the part of the company in altering its articles. I fail to see any want of good faith. In my opinion, it is eminently fair for a company to provide by its articles as originally framed or as altered by resolutions that shareholders who are indebted to the company should not be permitted to dispose of their shares without paying their debts, and that the company should have a lien on the shares for the debts. In the ordinary case of a partnership no partner would be permitted to withdraw or sell his share in the partnership venture without his debts to the partnership being first paid thereout; and, if the company in the present case had, as I think it had, the legal right to alter its articles so as to give it the lien it now claims, I cannot see why, in exercising that legal right, it should be accused of want of good faith. That the reason of the alteration was the large debt due from Zuccani, and that the company had principally in mind this large debt when it made the alteration in the articles, is no ground for impeaching the action of the company. It appears to me that the shareholders were acting in the truest and best interests of the company in exercising the legal right to alter the articles so that the company might as one result obtain payment of the debt due from Zuccani. The shareholders were only bound to look to the interests of the company. They were not bound to consult or to consider Zuccani's separate or private interests. Further, I may say that the alteration of the articles giving the extended lien was, in my opinion, in no true sense retrospective. The lien given was not made to take effect before the date of the alteration. It operated only from and after that date. Again, the alteration of the articles cannot be impeached as being one not binding on all shareholders alike. It purports to bind, and d[illegible] the shareholders without exception. An [illegible] lien cannot be objected to as made in f[illegible] inst a special class of shareholders m[illegible] me shareholders only are or may bec[illegible] he company. Lastly,

I may say that the contention that there was anything improper in the way alteration of the articles was effected falls to the ground on examination. It is untrue that the company intentionally waited for the death of Zuccani before attempting to alter the articles, with the object of thereby preventing votes in respect of his shares being used in considering whether the alteration should or should not be made. Besides, as a matter of fact, under the articles, Zuccani, if living, could not have voted, seeing that he was indebted to the company. I have now dealt substantially with the points raised on behalf of the respondents, and in the result I can find no good or sufficient ground on which to hold that the lien given by the amended articles was not good against Zuccani's executors, and accordingly I think that the appeal on this point should be allowed.

Order varied.

Solicitors, Mayo & Co.; Kerly, Son, & Verden.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. — Dec. 1.

LONDON AND GLOBE FINANCE CORPORATION v. KAUFMAN. (a.)

Practice—Subpœna—Issue of—Oppression—Ord. 27, rr. 26-34—Abuse of the practice of the court.

Although a subpœna ad testificandum may be issued at any time, the court will set aside the service of a subpœna which is issued at a time when it cannot be effective by any possibility, and can only be oppressive to the witness.

Motion.

On the 15th of November the plaintiff had served on several witnesses in the action a writ of subpœna ad testificandum requiring the attendance of the witnesses from the 14th of November, 1899, and daily during the sittings.

The pleadings in the action were not closed, and just prior to the issue of the above writ the plaintiff had applied for an extension of time of a month for delivering reply to the defence. On the writ was indorsed a notice that "notice will be given you by letter or telegram when your attendance is required." At the time of serving the writ on the witnesses the plaintiff sent a typewritten letter stating the writ was issued as a matter of form, and that the action was in the list of actions to be taken next, and that the witnesses would receive notice when they need attend.

As a matter of fact the action had not yet been set down for trial. The plaintiff's solicitors' affidavit stated that the object of issuing the writ thus early was to get into communication with the witnesses and to prevent their leaving the country without the solicitors having an opportunity of taking their evidence on commission.

This was an application by the witnesses to set aside the writ of subpœna as being oppressive and an abuse of the process of the court.

H. Terrell, Q.C., and Younger, for the motion.—A party aggrieved by the issue of the writ of subpœna need not wait until the trial, but can apply at once: Steele v. Savory, (1891) W. N. 195. The issue of the writ now is oppressive and interferes with the applicants, who will be harassed in their business by being unable to go abroad without the plaintiff's leave. The court has a discretion and will not allow such a writ to be issued oppressively, although we admit that the writ may be issued at any stage of the action: Raymond v. Tapson, 31 W. R. 394, 22 Ch. D. 430; Reg. v. Vickery, 12 Q. B. D. 478.

Martelli, for the plaintiff.—There is no oppression in this case; the witnesses are expressly told that they need not attend until they have notice. Raymond v. Tapson is in my favour, as it shows that a man is entitled to make sure of the evidence of anybody whose evidence he thinks will be in his favour. There is nothing in the rules limiting the time when a subpœna may issue: see ord. 37, rr. 26-34. A subpœna may be issued before issue joined: Chitty's Forms, p. 328 (12th ed.).

Vernon Smith, Q.C., and P. F. Wheeler, for other witnesses who had similar motions.

NORTH, J., made the order asked for, and pointed out that under the Practice Masters' rule 14, subpœnas only remain in force for the sitting or assize for which they were issued, so that this subpœna would expire with the current sitting, during which the case could not by any possibility come on. The consequence would be that the witnesses would be harassed in their business, and prevented from going away without the plaintiff's leave and be entirely at the latter's mercy. The learned judge refused to lay down any general rule as to when subpœnas should be served, but said that in this case it had been served at a time when it was wholly unnecessary and when the parties knew that the subpœna would not be operative for those sittings.

Solicitors, Tatham & Lousada; Slaughter & May; Duffield & Bruty.

---

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. — Feb. 20-22; March 29.

SMITH v. BAXTER. (a.)

Easement—Light—Ancient lights—Obstruction—Alteration of dominant tenement—Abandonment—Evidence—Undertaking—Prescription Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), ss. 1, 3, 4.

Where a substantial quantity of useful light, which would have passed through portions of old windows of a building if they still existed, now penetrated through the corresponding portions of new windows, the temporary use of interior boarding and shelving, by which a material interference with the light had been caused, is a mere discontinuance of user, and not an adverse obstruction or "interruption" within the meaning of sections 3 and 4 of the Prescription Act.

It is not necessary, in order to the acquisition of a right to the access of light under the said section 3, that the building should be occupied or fit for occupation during the specified period (Courtauld v. Legh, 17 W. R. 466, L. R. 4 Ex. 126, and Collis v. Laugher, 43 W. R. 202, [1894] 3 Ch. 659). Continuous user is not necessary: Cooper v. Straker, 37 W. R. 137, 40 Ch. D. 21. Fixedness and mobility of obstacles are elements to be considered, but the decision must turn on all the circumstances of each case.

Evidence of the intention of those who rebuild to preserve ancient lights is admissible (Newson v. Pender, 33 W. R. 243, 27 Ch. D. 43), but may be unnecessary (Scott v. Pape, 34 W. R. 465, 31 Ch. D. 554).

(a.) Reported by R. SILLEM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Per Stirling, J.—(1) Non-user which would not be sufficient to establish an abandonment of a right acquired may be enough to prevent the acquisition of the right under the Prescription Act; (2) the user or non-user cannot be entirely determined by simply considering whether an obstacle interposed to the light is fixed or movable.

This was an action in which the plaintiffs sought to restrain the defendant from obstructing the access of light to certain sky and window-lights in premises leased to the plaintiffs, and involved two questions—viz., (1) whether the plaintiffs were entitled to any ancient lights; (2) if so, whether they were entitled to any and what relief in respect thereof.

The plaintiffs were underlessees of a large building, Nos. 28 to 32, Hatton-street, Whitefriars, for a term of twenty-one years, from the 29th of September, 1892, under a lease dated the 5th of September, 1892; on the site of this building there formerly stood five small houses, Nos. 28 to 32, Hutton-street, which were pulled down in 1891; and the plaintiffs claimed the access of light in respect of certain parts of the skylight lighting the ground-floor and of three windows on the first floor, all at the back of the existing building. These portions of the skylight and windows corresponded to skylights and windows in the old houses, Nos. 28, 29, and 30. The existing skylight was situate in a plane parallel to that of the old skylights, but was 1ft. 6in. higher than they were. The first floor back wall of the plaintiffs' premises was set back from the common boundary of the plaintiffs' and defendant's premises to a distance of 4ft. 6in, while the back wall of the old premises was set back from the same boundary 4ft. only.

Upjohn, Q.C., and Hamilton, Q.C., for the plaintiffs.—A substantial quantity of useful light which would have passed through the old skylights and windows if they still existed is shown by the evidence to pass through the corresponding portions of the new skylight and windows respectively, and the plaintiffs are entitled to relief in respect of the same: Aynsley v. Glover, 23 W. R. 457, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 283; Carr v. Foster, 3 Q. B. 581; Cross v. Lewis, 2 B. & C. 686; Moore v. Hall, 26 W. R. 401, 3 Q. B. D. 178; Martin v. Price, 42 W. R. 262, [1894] 1 Ch. 276; Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., 43 W. R. 238, [1895] 1 Ch. 287. The interference with the access of light by the boarding and shelving (described in the judgment, infra) is not "interruption" within the meaning of sections 3 and 4 of the Prescription Act, 1832, and does not amount to abandonment: Tapling v. Jones, 13 W. R. 617, 11 H. L. Cas. 290; Scott v. Pape, 34 W. R. 465, 31 Ch. D. 554, at p. 561; Greenwood v. Hornsey, 35 W. R. 163, 33 Ch. D. 471.

Jenkins, Q.C., and Sargant, for the defendant.—The interference with the first floor lights was trivial: Presland v. Bingham, 37 W. R. 385, 41 Ch. D. 268. The plaintiffs must show uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years next before action: Hollins v. Verney, 33 W. R. 5, 13 Q. B. D. 304; Cooper v. Straker, 37 W. R. 137, 40 Ch. D. 21; Wheaton v. Maple & Co., 41 W. R. 677, [1893] 3 Ch. 48; Carr v. Foster, 3 Q. B. 581, also relied on.

Cur. adv. vult.

STIRLING, J., after detailing the facts of the case, proceeded as follows: Dealing first with the old skylights, I am quite satisfied by the evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs that useful light reached the ground-floor of the old houses through them, and also that a substantial quantity of useful light which would have passed through these old skylights now reaches the ground-floor of the existing building through the existing skylight, the area of which, however, is larger than that of the combined areas of the three old skylights.

As regards the old windows on the first floor no one of them has been preserved in its entirety in any existing window of the plaintiffs' premises; but (subject to a question to be presently mentioned) substantial portions of all three coincide with portions of windows numbered 1, 4, and 7 on a plan put in evidence by the defendants. Here, again, I am satisfied upon the evidence that (subject to the question mentioned) a substantial quantity of useful light which would have passed through those last-mentioned portions of the old windows if they still existed now reaches the first floor of the plaintiffs' building through the corresponding portions of the existing windows.

The first point to be considered is whether the rights which the plaintiffs would have had if they had been owners of the old houses have been lost by reason of the alterations made in rebuilding. A question arose whether evidence of the intention of those who rebuilt was admissible. Such evidence appears to have been considered admissible in Newson v. Pender, 33 W. R. 243, 27 Ch. D. 43, and I allowed it to be given. It was to the effect that the building was not erected in accordance with the plan originally prepared, but in accordance with plans altered in order to preserve the ancient lights, both skylight and windows, in Nos. 29 and 30. From that the inference may be drawn that there was an intention to preserve the ancient lights on rebuilding. It appears to me, however, that regard being had to the subsequent case of Scott v. Pape, 34 W. R. 465, 31 Ch. D. 554, at p. 567, such evidence is unnecessary. In my opinion, that applies to the skylight in the present case, and also (subject to the question reserved) to the first floor windows. That question arises in this way; it was admitted on cross-examination by Mr. Hall, one of the plaintiffs, that in the windows Nos. 1 and 7 considerable portions of the old area had been boarded up for more than twelve months before action brought, the reason being that printing machines were placed before each window at which the printers worked with their backs to the light, and it was found that accidents repeatedly occurred by which these portions of the windows were broken. As regards window No. 4 it was also admitted by the same witness that a considerable portion of the old area had for more than a year been covered by open shelving used for drying printing work. The shelves were three inches to a foot apart, and projected about two feet, and caused a material interference with the light, though substantial quantities of light still passed into the plaintiffs' building. The boarding and shelving had been removed before the trial; but it was contended that in these circumstances the access and use of the light claimed by the plaintiffs to the first floor windows had not been actually enjoyed for the full period of twenty years mentioned in section 3 of the Prescription Act without interruption, that period being by section 4 the period next before the bringing of the present action. It was first of all said the erection of the boarding and shelving constituted an interruption within the meaning of the section. The term "interruption," however, has the same meaning there as in section 4, and refers to an adverse obstruction, and not a mere discontinuance of user: see Carr v. Foster; Hollins v. Verney. It was then urged that the use of the light had not been actually enjoyed for the statutory period. On this there are some decisions which ought to be referred to. It is not necessary in order to the acquisition of a right to the access of light under section 3 of the Prescription Act that the building should be occupied or fit for occupation during the specified period: Courtauld v. Legh, 17 W. R. 466, L. R. 4 Ex. 126; Collis v. Laugher, 43 W. R. 202, [1894] 3 Ch. 659. In both cases it is pointed out that there may be a user of light without actual occupation. In Cooper v. Straker, 37 W. R. 137, 40 Ch. D. 21 (see pp. 26 and 27), Kay, J., held that the owner of a building having windows with movable shutters acquired a right to light under section 3 of the Prescription Act if he opened the shutters at any time he pleased for the admission of light during those twenty years. The learned judge refers to what was said by Channell, B., in Courtauld v. Legh, and remarks, "The essential word in that sentence is fixed, which obviously means either shutters that will not open or shutters that are never, in fact, opened during the twenty years." It is expressly laid down that continuous user is not necessary. With this view of the law I entirely agree. Not only, as is pointed out, is no such word as continuous found in that Act, but there are strong reasons against such a construction of it. For example, it is matter of common knowledge that in this country most shops have the shutters regularly closed for one whole day every week and occasionally at other times. It cannot have been intended that this class of property should be excluded from the benefit of the Act. The conclusion is really involved in the decisions of the cases that the right is not lost by rebuilding; for where one building is pulled down and another built on the site, there must in most cases be an interval where there is no actual enjoyment of the light in connection with any building. This being so, it seems to me that the rule laid down in Hollins v. Verney, with regard to discontinuous easements applies to light.

Before proceeding to apply that to the present case I wish to make two observations: (1) I think that non-user which would not be sufficient to establish an abandonment of a right acquired may be enough to prevent the acquisition of the right under the Act; (2) I do not think that the user or non-user can be entirely determined by simply considering whether an obstacle interposed to the light is fixed or movable. Fixedness and mobility are elements to be taken into consideration, but the decision must turn on all the circumstances of each case. Guiding myself by this rule I have to deal with the boarding over of parts of these windows. Here the plaintiffs, being in occupation and carrying on their ordinary business, have for upwards of a year absolutely excluded from the rooms the light which arrived at those parts of these windows. I cannot see my way to say that there has been as to the portions of the windows No. 1 and 7 which were boarded over a user of the light actually enjoyed for the prescribed period. On the other hand, the shelving did not exclude the light, but allowed a substantial portion of it to pass; and I think that a sufficient user is made out as regards the whole of window No. 4. It was then said that as regards the portions of windows which were boarded up, sufficient evidence had been given to establish a title under a lost grant. It is laid down in Aynsley v. Glover, that a plaintiff may establish his right in this way; see also the observations of Lord Blackburn in Dalton v. Angus, 30 W. R. 91, 6 App. Cas. 740. In the present case the action was tried without pleadings. The affidavits on the motion did not direct the attention of the defendants to this mode of making out a title. The plaintiffs' evidence, however, did go to show that the old cottages now pulled down did enjoy access of light to the windows for more than twenty years before they were pulled down. On the second day of the trial the plaintiffs' counsel expressed his intention of availing himself of this right. Although the defendant's counsel objected, I think it was open to the plaintiffs, subject only to the defendant having an opportunity of adducing evidence for the purpose of rebutting the presumption which arises from twenty years' enjoyment.

His lordship then expressed his readiness to make a declaration to the following effect—viz., that the plaintiffs were entitled to the enjoyment as ancient lights of such portions of the skylight and windows which formerly existed in the ground and first floors of the messuages Nos. 28, 29, and 30, Hutton-street, as were not blocked up in the rebuilding of the plaintiffs' premises, or had not been subsequently boarded up; and as regards the portions of the windows which were boarded up, either to allow the defendant to adduce evidence before the judgment was drawn up, or to reserve the matter, giving either party liberty to apply. After some discussion, and an undertaking by the defendant to give the plaintiffs a month's notice of his intention to build, and at the same time to produce his building plans, his lordship said that the plaintiffs' rights would be amply protected by reserving them liberty to apply for an injunction based upon the above declaration.

Solicitors, James, White, & Leonard; Ranger, Burton, & Frost.

---

Chan. Div. } April 3, 4.
Byrne, J. }

LLOYDS BANK (LIMITED) v. PRINCESS ROYAL COLLIERY CO. (No. 1). (a.)

Practice—Leave to discontinue—Auxiliary proceedings before another tribunal—Costs incident to those proceedings costs in the action—R. S. C., ord. 26, r. 1.

A plaintiff seeking to discontinue an action upon terms of paying the defendant's costs in that action will not be compelled as part of his bargain to pay the costs incurred by the defendant in auxiliary proceedings taken by the plaintiff before another tribunal arising out of the same case, and the result of which caused the plaintiff to discontinue his action.

Adjourned summons.

In 1897 the plaintiffs commenced an action before Romer, J., alleging that the defendants had trespassed upon a certain gale or colliery work belonging to the plaintiffs, situate in the Forest of Dean, and claimed in addition to an injunction that if and so far as might be necessary the boundary between the plaintiffs' gale and an adjoining gale belonging to the defendants might be ascertained and determined.

The defendants delivered a defence in which, amongst other things, they objected that the dispute as to the boundary between the gales ought to be ascertained and determined by an officer called the gaveller, or his deputy, in accordance with the provisions in that behalf contained in the Dean Forest Mines Act, 1838, and amending Acts and the rules and regulations made thereunder.

The plaintiffs, after delivery of this defence, took no further proceedings in the action, but applied to the gaveller of the forest to ascertain and determine the disputed boundary between the two gales.

The gaveller upon compulsion by mandamus decided the question and delivered an award, but did not deal with the costs of the proceedings before him to which the defendants were made parties.

(a.) Reported by R. LEIGH RAMSBOTHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It was conceded that the Dean Forest Mines Acts and rules made no provision for such costs.

Before the gaveller had given his award the defendants applied to have the action before Romer, J., dismissed for want of prosecution, but the judge directed that the action should be set down forthwith, but should not come into the paper without his sanction, which would not be given until the proceedings before the gaveller had been terminated.

On the result of the gaveller's award the plaintiffs now applied by summons under R. S. C., ord. 26, r. 1, for leave to discontinue their action upon terms of their paying the defendants' costs in the action.

The question now arose whether the costs of the proceedings before the gaveller and the costs of obtaining the mandamus were costs in the action.

Rowden, Q.C., and J. G. Wood, for the plaintiffs.—The discretion given to the court as to costs is limited to such costs as could have been given at the trial. Whether the action had proceeded or been dismissed for want of prosecution the defendants could only have got the costs of that action. The court has no materials upon which to decide as to who ought to pay the costs incurred in connection with the proceedings before the gaveller.

Levett, Q.C. (O. L. Leigh Clare with him), for the defendants.—The proceedings before the gaveller were incident to and in support of the plaintiffs' action for trespass. It was "just" that the plaintiffs in seeking to discontinue their action should pay the costs of those proceedings.

BYRNE, J., without going into the question of jurisdiction as to the costs incident to the proceedings before the gaveller, decided that on the merits it was not just that the plaintiffs should be made to pay those costs as part of the terms upon which they were to be allowed to discontinue their action.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Blyth, Dutton, Hartley, & Blyth, for M. F. Carter, Newnham.

Solicitors for the defendants, Wood, Bigg, & Nash, for Winterbotham & Son, Stroud.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } Feb. 10.

In re BROWN. (a.)

Lunacy—Lunatic—Charging order—Fund in court.

Where a charging order has been obtained against the interest of a lunatic in a fund in the Court of Chancery, the charge will be satisfied before the fund is ordered to be transferred to Lunacy.

Petition.

M. B. Brown had been found a person of unsound mind by inquisition. She, as executrix and sole legatee of the will of R. Brown, had carried on in pursuance of the will the business of R. Brown. She had never proved the will, and subsequently to being found of unsound mind administration with the will annexed was granted to the committee of the lunatic. Creditors of the testator had commenced the present action for the administration of the estate of the testator, and the usual inquiries and accounts had been directed. The business had been sold in these proceedings, and the proceeds paid into court. Thomas Clutterbuck had obtained judgment against M. B. Brown in the Queen's Bench Division, and had obtained an order absolute charging the interest of M. B. Brown in the fund in court for the amount of the judgment debt and costs.

This was a petition by the committee and the lunatic asking that the fund in court, after payment of costs and testator's debt, should be transferred to Lunacy notwithstanding the charging order.

Eve, Q.C., and Hon. Frank Russell, for petitioners.—The fund should be transferred to Lunacy and used for the maintenance of the lunatic without reference to the charging order: In re Plenderleith, 42 W. R. 224, [1893] 3 Ch. 332; In re Winkle, 42 W. R. 513, [1894] 2 Ch. 519. In In re Leavesley, 39 W. R. 276, [1891] 2 Ch. 1, the lunatic had died and that is why effect was given to the charging order: In re Clarke, 46 W. R. 337, [1898] 1 Ch. 336.

T. L. Wilkinson, for judgment creditor.—Effect must be first given to the charging order and the balance only transferred to Lunacy. In re Plenderleith is distinguishable, as there the fund was in Chancery and not in Lunacy. Charging orders have been enforced in Horne v. Pountain, 38 W. R. 240, 23 Q. B. D. 264, and In re Leavesley.

Hon. E. C. Macnaghten, Q.C., and Kenyon Parker, for plaintiffs.

T. T. Methold, for D. F. Alexander, appointed by the master in Lunacy to report on the lunatic's property.

COZENS-HARDY, J., thought that the charging order obtained by the judgment creditor must be recognized. The cases of In re Plenderleith and In re Winkle merely decided that when once the property had come under the jurisdiction of the court in Lunacy the requirements of the lunatic as to maintenance are preferred to the rights of execution creditors. But it has long been established that the court of Lunacy cannot override common law or statutory rights which have been established before the property has come under the control of the court. When an application has to be made to the court in Lunacy then no order can be made, except subject to the consideration of the lunatic's welfare. Here the court in Lunacy had not the property under its jurisdiction, and the charging order is effective against the property, and the judgment and costs should be paid out of the property before the balance is brought into court in Lunacy.

Solicitors, Warriner & Co., for W. Lyndon Moore, Newport; Thorneycroft & Willis, for Taynton, Sons, & Siveter, Gloucester; Thomas White & Sons; The Official Solicitor.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } Jan 17, 26.

In re COOLGARDIE GOLD FIELDS.
Ex parte FLEMING. (a.)

Solicitor — Practice — Unstamped documents — Undertaking to stamp—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 14.

Where a solicitor undertakes at the hearing to have a document stamped, such an undertaking is properly given by the solicitor and not by the client, and is a personal undertaking of [illegible] and will be enforced against him by [illegible]

(a.) Reported by R. SILLEM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported [illegible] Esq., Barrister-at-

Motion.

In this case two applications were made by shareholders seeking to have their names removed from the register of shareholders in the company on the ground substantially that the prospectus on the faith of which they had applied for shares contained statements which were false. The motion came on before the learned judge in July last. Witnesses were examined and cross-examined. Counsel for the company in the course of the cross-examination of one of the applicant's witnesses, proposed to put in certain documents which were unstamped, and which plainly required to be stamped. The learned judge pointed out the difficulty having regard to section 14 of the Stamp Act, 1891. That section, so far as material, is as follows: "Upon the production of an instrument chargeable with any duty as evidence in any court of civil jurisdiction in any part of the United Kingdom or before any arbitrator or referee, notice shall be taken by the judge, arbitrator, or referee of any omission or insufficiency of the stamp thereon, and if the instrument is one which may be legally stamped after the execution thereof, it may, on payment to the officer of the court whose duty it is to read the instrument, or to the arbitrator or referee, of the amount of the unpaid duty and the penalty payable on stamping the same, and of a further sum of one pound, be received in evidence, saving all just exceptions on other grounds."

Counsel for the company thereupon communicated with his professional client, and, upon an undertaking being given by the company's solicitors to stamp a certain deed, the matter proceeded. This course was adopted with reference to several similar documents which the company's counsel desired to use in opposition to the case of the applicants. The deeds and documents thus tendered did not, in the learned judge's opinion, assist the company. On the contrary, they helped the applicants.

In the result the learned judge allowed the application with costs.

The solicitor, who was present in court, seems to have been under the impression that he was not giving a personal undertaking, and he immediately endeavoured to be relieved from his undertaking. It was stated that to stamp the documents it would cost several hundred pounds. When an application by the solicitors was made to the learned judge on the 25th of July ex parte, the judge declined to enter in it without notice being given to the company and to the Inland Revenue authorities. This application is reported in the Weekly Notes for 1899, p. 128. Certain communications took place between the solicitors and the Inland Revenue authorities, but nothing more was done. The orders were not and could not be drawn up although six months had elapsed. The applicants still remained on the register. Meanwhile the company had been wound up by the court on the ground of insolvency.

In these circumstances the applicants now applied by motion for directions that the orders made on the hearing of motions on the 21st of July might be drawn up forthwith, omitting from such orders the unstamped documents, the company's liquidator undertaking not to appeal from the orders; or in the alternative that the solicitors might be committed for contempt in making default in carrying out their undertaking to stamp the documents; or as a further alternative that the solicitors might be ordered to stamp such documents with the proper stamp duty with four days after service upon them of the order. The notice was served upon the company and its liquidator. The liquidator was willing to undertake to withdraw the pending appeals from the order, as he did not desire to prosecute those appeals. The other respondents were the solicitors who gave the undertaking and the Commissioners for Inland Revenue.

Martelli, for applicants.—It is a great hardship that the applicants have to still remain on the register because the solicitors have not complied with their undertaking to have the documents stamped. I ask, therefore, that the order may be drawn up without entering the unstamped documents. In default, the application to commit the solicitor must be pressed.

Hon. A. Russell, for liquidator.

Muir Mackenzie.—The undertaking was given by the solicitor under a misapprehension, and as soon as the solicitor found his mistake he asked to be relieved from it. The client is the proper person to pay the money for stamping, and in the Queen's Bench Division the money would be paid by the client at the time, in court, before the case proceeded, and that is the course which should have been followed here.

Vaughan Hawkins, for the Commissioners of Inland Revenue.—The practice in the Chancery Division is for the solicitor to give the undertaking (In re Ward, 31 Beav. 1), and the court will enforce it against him. The commissioners have no power to remit the stamp duties, but they are willing to waive the penalties. The orders cannot be drawn up without entering the unstamped documents: Owen v. Thomas, 3 Myl. & K. 353. The court has to protect the revenue: Nixon v. Albion Marine Insurance, L. R. 2 Ex. 338.

Martelli, in reply.

COZENS-HARDY, J., after stating the facts, continued: Notwithstanding the express language of section 14 of the Stamp Act, 1891, it is settled practice to allow an unstamped document to be used upon the personal undertaking, not of the parties to the action, but of solicitors who are officers of the court, to stamp it and to produce it so stamped before the order is drawn up. I have endeavoured to ascertain the origin of this practice. The earlier Stamp Acts, so far as my investigations have extended, do not contain any provisions similar to section 14 of the Act of 1891. The Consolidation Act of 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 83), only enacts in section 27 that every instrument liable to stamp duty shall be admitted in evidence in any criminal proceedings, although it may not be properly stamped. But by section 28 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, which received the royal assent two days later, it was enacted as follows: "Upon the production of any document as evidence at the trial of any cause, it shall be the duty of the officer of the court whose duty it is to read such document to call the attention of the judge to any omission or insufficiency of the stamp, and the document, if unstamped, or not sufficiently stamped, shall not be received in evidence until the whole, or, as the case may be, the deficiency of the stamp duty and the penalty required by statute, together with the additional penalty of £1 shall have been paid." Section 29 gives certain consequential directions. These sections were repealed in 1870 and subsequently re-enacted in section 16 of the Stamp Act, 1870. This again was repealed and re-enacted in 1891, the chief distinction being that the obligation now rests directly upon the judge and not upon any officer of the court. I am indebted to Mr. Lavie, the registrar, for a note of the case which I believe to be the origin of the settled practice to which I have referred. On the 20th of July, 1855, a cause of Jennings v. Christopher came on before Sir John Romilly on motion for judgment, and the following is an extract from the registrar's minute, folio 218: "Collins proceeds to show his title. The agreement referred to. Mr. Roupell says it is not stamped. The solicitor tenders the money to the registrar, who protests. Court reads the Act as to this clause and is of opinion that, though under the clause of the Act making these sections applicable to all courts of civil jurisdiction, this Act is applicable to this court, yet there is no officer of this court now, unless it be the clerk of records and writs, who answers the description of the officer whose duty it is to read the documents, &c.; certainly not the registrar. Mr. Blaxland, the solicitor for the plaintiff, undertaking that the proper stamp shall be paid and affixed, let the cause proceed," and at the end of the entry relating to the cause are the following: "See that memorandum is duly stamped before drawing up decree. The memorandum was duly stamped before drawing up the order." It will be observed that the court accepted the undertaking of the solicitor without requiring any signature of the registrar's book or other document. The advantages of the practice are obvious. It is not always easy to settle at once what is the amount of the stamp duty, and, moreover, it may well be that when the amount required is known the cash is not at the moment in court. It would be in the last degree inconvenient and undesirable to direct an action to stand over in the middle of the trial in order that a document might be stamped. The court, therefore, accepts the undertaking of its own officer that the document shall be stamped before the order is drawn up as satisfying the requirements of the statute. The court looks to its own officer and leaves the officer to claim indemnity from his own client. I am not aware of any difficulty having arisen until the present case. Sir John Romilly in 1862 refers to it as the ordinary course; see In re Ward, 31 Beav. 1, p. 8, where he says: "The court accepts the undertakings of solicitors to pay the penalty of not stamping an agreement and various other acts"; and he proceeds to say, "I am never informed whether they are performed or not, I have not the slightest doubt that they are performed in every case, but if it afterwards came to my knowledge that the act, without the performance of which the case could not have properly been heard, had not been performed or that the money had not been paid, I should compel the solicit r at the instance of anybody interested in the matter to make good his undertaking or assertion on the faith of which the court had acted; it is no answer to say that it is the duty of many other persons to look into the matter and see that the act was duly performed": see also Seton on Decrees, p. 26 (4th ed.). In this state of circumstances it seems to me to be clear that an undertaking was given to the court by the company's solicitors acting through the member of their firm who was present in court. This is not seriously disputed, for the application to be relieved from the undertaking presupposes that an undertaking was given. I think it is of the utmost importance that such an undertaking given by officers of the court should not be released without the consent of the person or persons for whose benefit the undertaking was given. Those persons are the Commissioners for Inland Revenue. They, through their counsel, state that they have no power to waive the stamping of the documents, although they can and will in the present case waive the penalties, and they insist for the protection of the Revenue that the undertaking should be enforced. On the other hand I think it is not just that the applicants, who have by their own evidence established a title to relief, should be prevented from obtaining relief by reason of the failure of their opponents or of their opponents' solicitors to stamp documents which were put in, not by the applicants, but by their opponents. If I make no order on the present motion it may be that the applicants will have to pay several hundred pounds before they can get the order made by me in July last perfected. I think I shall be doing right between the parties and right towards the Inland Revenue authorities by directing the order to be forthwith drawn up without entering the unstamped documents, the company undertaking to withdraw their appeals. I must order the solicitors upon their undertaking to cause these documents to be produced to Mr. King, the registrar, at his room properly stamped within a few days after service upon them of this order. It will be stated on the face of the order that the Inland Revenue authorities agree to waive penalties and I shall expressly reserve liberty to the commissioners to apply in case this order is not obeyed by the solicitors. The solicitors must pay the costs of the applicants of this motion. In point of form I think the motion should be headed "In the matter of the solicitors," and I direct it to be amended accordingly.

Solicitors, Morten, Cutler, & Co.; Cannon, Son, & Morten; Solicitor for Inland Revenue; Solicitor for the Board of Trade.

---

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } Dec. 11, 15; Feb. 7.

COWLEY v. COWLEY. (a.)

Peer—Title or dignity of honour acquired by marriage—Divorce—Re-marriage to a commoner—Injunction to prevent the wife from using her former title.

A peeress, not in her own right, but who has derived her title from marriage with a peer, and who, after procuring a decree of dissolution of the marriage, marries a commoner, loses the right to use the title so acquired, and will be restrained by injunction from continuing its use.

Motion by a peer for an injunction to restrain his former wife, who had obtained a decree for divorce against him and subsequently married a commoner, from continuing to describe herself by the title she had derived from him by marriage.

Dec. 11, 15.—Bargrave Deane, Q.C., and Willock, for Earl Cowley.

Lawson Walton, Q.C., and Barnard, for the wife.

The facts and arguments are fully set out in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 7.—BARNES, J., in delivering a considered judgment, said: In this case Lord Cowley seeks to restrain a lady who was formerly his wife, but is now the wife of Mr. Robert E. Myddleton Biddulph, from using the style or title of "Countess Cowley." The application is made to this branch of the court in a suit for divorce, brought by the lady against Lord Cowley and determined in her favour. It will be convenient in this judgment still to term the parties petitioner and respondent respectively. The respondent is Henry Arthur Mornington Wellesley, third Earl Cowley. The first Lord Cowley was raised to the peerage of the United Kingdom in 1828 by the title of Baron Cowley. His son, the present earl's grandfather, was by letters patent under the Great Seal, dated the 11th of April, 1857, created

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

Viscount Dangan in the county of Meath and Earl Cowley. On the death of his father in 1895 the respondent succeeded to these titles, which were by the letters patent aforesaid limited to the first earl and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten and to be begotten. On the 17th of December, 1889, the respondent married the petitioner, who is a daughter of the Marquis of Abergavenny. There is one child of the marriage—a boy, Christian Arthur Wellesley—who is now by courtesy called by his father's inferior title, Viscount Dangan. The petitioner on the 17th of June, 1896, instituted a suit in this court for divorce from the respondent, and on the 2nd of February, 1897, obtained a decree nisi for the dissolution of her marriage with him, on the ground of his desertion and adultery. This decree was made absolute on the 9th of August, 1897. The petitioner afterwards married her present husband, Mr. Biddulph. Notwithstanding that her marriage with the respondent had been dissolved and that she has married again, the petitioner has without any sanction from the Crown continued to use, and still uses, the style or title "Countess Cowley"; for example, in her affidavit in opposition to this motion she describes herself as "Violet Countess Cowley," and signs herself "Violet Cowley." No objection seems to have been made by the respondent to this use of the title by the petitioner between the date of the said final decree and the lady's second marriage; but since she has become the wife of Mr. Biddulph the respondent has made formal objection to the petitioner's using the title "Countess Cowley." On the 14th of December, 1898, the respondent's solicitors wrote on his behalf to the petitioner's solicitors a letter in the following terms:

"Dec. 14, 1898.

"Gentlemen,—We presume that you still act for the Lady Violet Biddulph, formerly Countess Cowley. We have been consulted by the Earl Cowley in reference to the fact that, although married to Mr. Biddulph, the lady continues to use the title 'Countess Cowley,' notwithstanding it was she who sought the divorce, and by her own volition obtained a dissolution of the marriage. As long as Lady Violet was unmarried there may have been some ground for her continuing to bear her late husband's name, although we believe that this is a moot legal point; now, however, that she has remarried there cannot be the slightest doubt about the matter. While very anxious to avoid any unnecessary annoyance, we are instructed by Lord Cowley to request that the Lady Violet will cease using his name and adopt the only and very honourable one to which she is now entitled—viz., Lady Violet Biddulph. Trusting that we may hear from you that this course will be adopted,

"We are, your obedient servants,

"WONTNER & SONS.

"Messrs. Lewis & Lewis."

A letter in reply was received from the petitioner's solicitors as follows:

"Dec. 15, 1898.

"Gentlemen,—We are in receipt of yours of the 14th inst. In reply to your inquiry, we have to inform you that Countess Cowley intends to retain the same name as her son, notwithstanding that she has been compelled to divorce her husband on the grounds of his desertion and adultery.

"Yours obediently, LEWIS & LEWIS.

"Messrs. Wontner & Sons."

On the 6th of July, 1899, the respondent's solicitors wrote a letter to the petitioner's solicitors, in which the following passage occurs: "Thirdly, we are again instructed to ask that Lady Violet Biddulph cease to call herself by the name and title of 'Countess Cowley.' We have made research into the matter, and find that she undoubtedly has no right to so call herself, the only person entitled to now bear the title being Lord Cowley's mother, who since the divorce has become the only 'Countess Cowley,' and has also instructed us on her behalf and requested us to ask that the Lady Violet should cease to bear this name and title. We are writing you this in order, if possible, that some arrangement shall be arrived at on these points, which we desire to settle amicably, but unless we can come to some settlement within the next week we shall have to apply to the court without further delay." To this letter the petitioner's solicitors replied on the 7th of July, so far as is material, as follows: "It is useless you writing again to ask that Lady Cowley shall call herself by any name other than the Countess Cowley; all that we have to say upon that subject we have already said. We observe that you will now go to the court . . . We are prepared at any time to receive notice of motion on behalf of Lady Cowley." The respondent then moved the court in the old suit between the parties to restrain the petitioner from using the style or title aforesaid, on the ground that by so doing she was guilty of molestation. The motion was supported by the respondent's mother, the Dowager Countess Cowley. Upon the motion coming on before the court it seemed to me that the real questions raised between the parties were not strictly questions of molestation, but these—viz., whether the petitioner is entitled to use the style or title in question; and, if not, whether the respondent has any right to obtain an injunction in the High Court to restrain the petitioner from so doing; and that these questions could not be dealt with in a divorce suit which was at an end except so far as the court has jurisdiction to entertain applications with regard to the custody, maintenance, and education of the child of the marriage during his minority. It was thereupon agreed by counsel for the parties that the motion should be treated as if it was a motion to restrain the petitioner from using the style or title "Countess Cowley" in a suit for that purpose brought in the High Court, and the arguments proceeded on that basis.

The first question, then, is whether the petitioner is entitled to use the style or title "Countess Cowley." The petitioner, although the daughter of the Marquis of Abergavenny, was in the legal sense a commoner. At the time of her marriage with the respondent he had not succeeded to the peerage; but when his father died, in 1895, he became Earl Cowley and a peer. The petitioner by virtue of her union with the respondent became a peeress, for husband and wife are regarded in certain respects as one person in law, and a woman who is married to a peer of the realm becomes entitled to the same dignity as her husband, and acquires all the rights and privileges of peerage which are consistent with her sex; for instance, if she is accused of treason or felony she can only be tried by the House of Peers. The statute 20 Hen. 6, c. 9, declared what would seem to have been the common law: "That ladies of great estate in respect of their husbands, peers of the land, married or sole, that is to say, duchesses, countesses, or baronesses, shall be put to answer and judged before such judges and peers of the realm as peers of the realm should be if they were indicted or impeached, and in like manner and form and none otherwise." The petitioner, then, on the respondent becoming a peer shared his dignity, and as his wife her style and title was Countess Cowley, countess being the Norman feminine which corresponds with earl or comes: Seldon on Titles of Honour (ed. 1672), Part II., c. 5, s. 7, p. 526. Her marriage with him has, however, been dissolved; and she has married again to a commoner, and she has lost her dignity aforesaid, and all the rights and privileges annexed to it. What her legal name, position, or dignity was between the time of the dissolution of her first marriage and her second marriage was not discussed before me, and it is not necessary to consider this, for there can be no doubt that, being legally a commoner by birth and only a peeress by marriage with Lord Cowley, on her second marriage she took her present husband's position, and her proper legal description became Violet, the wife of Robert E. Myddleton Biddulph, and, as the daughter of a marquis, she would be called by courtesy Lady Violet Myddleton Biddulph. The law on the subject is strictly stated in c. 3, section 83, p. 90, of Cruise on Dignities as follows: "If a woman who has acquired a dignity by marriage afterwards marries a commoner, she loses her dignity and all the rights and privileges annexed to it, for that which is gained by marriage may be lost by marriage. Eodem modo quo quid constituitur dissolitur." This is in accord with all the old authorities: see Acton's case, Coke Rep., pt. 4, fol. 118*b*, at p. 556; Countess of Rutland's case, Coke Rep., pt. 6, fol. 53*b*, at p. 362; Brooke's Abridgment, Tit nosme de dignit., 69; Co. Litt., tit. Offer Simple, 166; (ed. 1832), 2 Inst., vol. 1, tit. Magna Charta, c. 29, 50 (1); Duchess of Suffolk's case, Comyn's Digest, tit. Dig., vol. 3, c. 6, p. 407; Fortesque de Laudibus, 95. In the case of Hayward v. Duke of Suffolk, in Hil. term, 6 & 7 Ed. 6, reported in 1 Dyer 79*b*, a writ of partition was brought against the Duke of Suffolk and his wife and others by Ranulph Hayward, Esq., and Lady Anne Powys, his wife, and so she was named in the writ. An exception was taken for misnomer because she ought only to have been called by the name of her husband and not otherwise. In the opinion of Montague, C.J., and Hales, J., the exception was good and the reason given was that "by the law of God" she was "under the power of her husband, and so her name of dignity shall be changed according to the degree of her husband notwithstanding the courtesy of the ladies of honour and of the court." Upon which the plaintiff brought a new writ to "Ranulph Hayward and Anne his wife—late wife of the Lord Powys, deceased." Further, in Lady Dacres' case, Journals of the H. of L., 13 Car. 2, July 4, 1661, p. 298, when she had petitioned the House of Lords claiming the privilege of Parliament, the House declared (having received the opinion of all the judges there present in point of law) "that the Lady Dacres by marrying a commoner had forfeited and lost her privilege of peerage in law." Also in 1692 the House of Lords ordered and declared "that privilege of Parliament should not be allowed to minor peers, noblewomen, or widows of peers, saving the right of peerage," and that, "if the widow of any peer should be married to a commoner, she should not be allowed the privilege of peerage": H. of L. Journals, vol. 15, 241, Feb. 21, 1692. I may also refer to the following passage in his work on the order of precedence, by the late Sir Charles George Young, Garter Principal King of Arms (1851), p. 75: "The widows of peers, baronets, knights of the order and knights bachelors are entitled to enjoy the same style and rank which they derived from their husbands so long as they remain unmarried, but on marrying again they have no other style or rank than that which the second husband may confer upon them, it being the established law that what a woman gains by marriage she loses by marriage." In a footnote referring to the above passage, the author states as follows: "Some instances, however, occur, where the Crown has permitted the retention of the title and precedence notwithstanding a second marriage, as in the case of Catharine Duchess of Lennox, relict of Esme Duke of Lennox, who died in 1624, remarried to James Earl of Abercorn, when, as a mark of favour, Charles I., in 1632, granted his royal letter, declaring that, notwithstanding her said second marriage she should still retain both the title of Duchess of Lennox and all the rank and precedence due thereto." So far the law is clear, and on the argument before me the petitioner's counsel did not seek to maintain that the petitioner was still entitled to her former dignity of peeress or to a legal right in the title in question; but he contended that she was justified in continuing to use her former title by some usage by society. No authority, precedent, or evidence was produced in support of this contention, and this is not surprising, for a case which would give rise to a question such as that under consideration cannot often have arisen. The only foundation for the contention was the following passage in Stephen's Commentaries, vol. 2. (12th ed.), p. 605: "By courtesy or the usage of society all dowager peeresses though afterwards married to commoners are ordinarily addressed by their former title." This statement was not supported by the citation of any further authorities; and, even if it be correct, this courtesy or usage of society (a somewhat vague term) is of no legal force or validity and cannot alter the legal positions and titles of dowager peeresses (not in their own right) who have afterwards married commoners. They no longer have any right to their former privileges, rank, and titles, and it is therefore difficult to understand why anyone in such a position should without the sanction of the Crown allow herself to be addressed by a title not hers as of right even though there may be a usage of society to do so. There is this important feature in connection with this subject—that in certain cases, of which instances are given in the affidavit filed in this case of Sir Albert William Woods, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., Garter Principal King of Arms, the sovereign in the exercise of the royal prerogative has expressly sanctioned the retention by dowager peeresses (not in their own right) marrying below their rank of their former titles, rank, and precedence, and has directed memorials thereof to be recorded in the register books of the College of Arms. There is a further answer to the contention aforesaid. It is obvious that the courtesy or usage of society, if correctly stated with regard to dowager peeresses (not in their own right) who have afterwards married commoners, has no application to the present case, when the petitioner's first husband is alive and is objecting to the use by her of a style or title which she only acquired as his wife, she now being the wife of another person. It was further argued that the petitioner is justified in calling herself Countess Cowley, because a person is entitled to call himself or herself by any name, and cannot be restrained from doing so. In support of this contention certain cases were cited to show that the courts will not restrain the use of a family name. The principal of these was the case of Du Boulay v. Du Boulay, 17 W. R. 594, L. R. 2 P. C. 430, where Lord Chelmsford in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council said: "In this country we do not recognize the absolute right of a person to a particular name to the extent of entitling him to prevent the assumption of that name by a stranger. The right to the exclusive use of a name in connection with a trade or business is familiar to our law, and any person using that name after a relative right of this description has been acquired by another is considered to have been guilty of a fraud, or at least of an invasion of another's right, and renders himself liable to an action, or he may be restrained from the use of the name by injunction. But the mere assumption of a name which is the patronymic of a family by a stranger who had never before been called by that name, whatever cause of annoyance it may be to the family, is a grievance for which our law affords no redress." The foundation of this is that, except in certain cases, when the right to exclusive use of a name in connection with a trade or business has been acquired, there is by English law no right of property in a person to the use of a particular name to the extent of enabling him to prevent the assumption of his name by another. But the argument omitted to notice the difference between the use of a name and the use of a title. The law as to the former is as above stated, but as to the latter the position is entirely different. Titles of honour, or, in the language of the law, dignities, are conferred by the exercise of the royal prerogative. Among them the principal is that of the peerage. The dignities of the peerage "having been originally annexed to lands were considered as tenements or incorporeal hereditaments wherein a person might have a real estate; and although dignities are now become little more than personal honours and rights, yet they are still classed under the head of real property": Cruise, c. 4, s. 1; Co. Litt. 16*b*. The grant of the dignity in the present case was to the grantee and the heirs male of his body and created an estate in tail male. Lord Cowley had the exclusive right to the use of his titles, but on his marriage his wife became a sharer in his dignity and Countess Cowley.

Even if she had become his widow, and Dowager Countess Cowley, she would have lost all the privileges she had acquired by her marriage if she married again to a commoner. She is now no longer the respondent's wife, but the wife of Mr. Biddulph, "and has lost the right to style herself Countess Cowley"; and, although she does not desire to represent that she is now the respondent's wife, she is still using the style and title which can only lawfully be used by a woman who is the wife of the respondent, and is not merely assuming a name to the use of which objection could not be raised. I am, therefore, of opinion that the petitioner is not entitled to use the style and title "Countess Cowley."

The next and more difficult question is whether the respondent is entitled to obtain an injunction to restrain the petitioner from using the style and title aforesaid. The first point made against him was that, as his marriage with the petitioner had been dissolved in consequence of his misconduct, the present motion was one which he ought not to have made and ought not to be entertained by the court; to which it was answered that the respondent's conduct, which led to the dissolution of the marriage, did not affect the present question, and that the petitioner's real reason for using the title was to annoy the respondent, and not (as alleged in the letter of her solicitors above set out and in her affidavit) to retain the same name as her son. Upon this point, whatever view may be taken of the course adopted by the respondent in bringing forward this motion, it is necessary to observe that the court has to deal with the rights of the parties whose marriage has been dissolved, and who are now strangers to each other; and, in my opinion, the legal questions now raised do not depend on the cause which led to the dissolution of the marriage in this case. With regard to the suggestion of a desire on the part of the petitioner to annoy the respondent, it is to be noted that there is nothing in the evidence to show that she is actuated by any such desire, though it seems strange that she should wish to use her former title in the circumstances, instead of her present legal name, and though the reason given by her for wishing to retain the same name as her son is one which it is difficult to appreciate, seeing that during his father's lifetime the son will neither have the name nor title of Cowley. The main point made against the respondent was that the court has no jurisdiction to grant the injunction asked for. This was based upon the cases which deal with the right of a person to assume any name he may choose, and upon the contention that the court will not interfere by injunction when the relations between the parties are strictly of a personal nature and no question of proprietary rights are at issue. I have pointed out the difference between the assumption of a name and of a title or dignity such as that in question. With regard to the contention last mentioned, it is to be observed that it overlooks the proprietary rights which the respondent has in his dignities. He is entitled to share them with any lady whom he may make his wife, and, in my opinion, to assert that no other woman shall use the privilege which his wife should share with him. It may be observed further that if the petitioner were to assert that she was still the wife of the respondent she would be subject to a suit in this court for jactitation of marriage, which is founded on the injury which may be done to a complainant by a person representing that he or she is the husband or wife, as the case may be, of the complainant: Lord Hawke v. Corri, 2 Hagg. Cons. 280. This is not the position asserted by the petitioner; yet she asserts that she is justified in describing herself in a manner which represents that she is still sharing his dignity with the respondent, and by the style and title which only describes, and can only be used lawfully by a person who is, the wife of the respondent. There has been, and is, in my opinion, an invasion by the petitioner of the respondent's rights. There is in the legal sense a wrong done to the respondent, without lawful excuse, and intentionally, although an actual desire to annoy him is not established. In conclusion, it is important to notice, upon the question of the power of the court to interfere by injunction, that this is not a case in which a right is asserted by the petitioner to the dignity of a peerage. In cases of that character the jurisdiction of the court is exercised on petition, which may be referred in the first instance to the Attorney-General for examination and then, if necessary, to the House of Lords for investigation: Cruise, c. 6. The facts of this case are not in dispute, and, if my view of the law be correct, there is no assertion by the court of any jurisdiction to deal with a matter which should be considered elsewhere, and the remedy by injunction seems both applicable and convenient. The result is that, in my judgment, there must be an injunction restraining the petitioner from using the style and title of Countess Cowley.

Order for injunction, each party to pay their own costs.

Solicitors for the applicant, Wontner & Sons.

Solicitors for the petitioner, Lewis & Lewis.

Court of Appeal.

Appeal.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) May 5.

DANIEL v. OCEAN COAL CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Payment in case of death—Right of legal personal representative to receive whole of compensation money—Investment for benefit of dependant—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), Schedule I., 4, 5, 6, 7.

In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the applicant was the widow of the deceased workman, and she had taken out letters of administration. The county court judge by his award ordered the respondents to pay a lump sum to and for the benefit of the dependants of the deceased, whom he declared to be the widow and the two infant sons of the deceased, and he apportioned the said sum between the widow and the sons, and he ordered the sum apportioned to the widow to be paid to her, and the sum apportioned to the sons to be paid to the registrar and to be invested by him for their benefit.

Held, that, on the construction of paragraphs 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the first Schedule to the Act, the county court judge had power to make such order, and that the applicant, although she was the legal personal representative of the deceased, had no absolute right to receive the whole of the compensation money.

Appeal from an award of the judge of the Pontypridd County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant for compensation was the widow of a workman who had been killed by an accident in the course of his employment. The applicant had taken out letters of administration to her deceased husband's estate.

The county court judge by his award ordered that the respondents, the Ocean Coal Co. (Limited), should pay the sum of £246 7s. to and for the benefit of the dependants of the deceased workman as compensation under the Act; and he declared that the persons entitled to share in such compensation as dependants were the widow and the two infant sons of the deceased; and he ordered that the said sum of £246 7s. be apportioned between them as follows—viz., £146 7s. to and for the benefit of the widow, and £100 to and for the benefit of the sons in equal shares; and he ordered that the sum of £146 7s. apportioned to and for the benefit of the widow should be paid to her, and that the sum of £100 apportioned to and for the benefit of the sons should be paid to the registrar of the court, and should be invested by the registrar in his name in the Post Office Savings Banks for the benefit of the sons.

From this award the applicant appealed.

Cripps, Q.C. (Rhys Williams with him), for the applicant.—The applicant, having taken out letters of administration, is the legal personal representative of her husband, and she is entitled to have the whole of the compensation money paid to her. The first schedule to the Act deals with compensation, and paragraph 4 of the schedule says: "The payment shall, in case of death, be made to the legal personal representative of the workman, or, if he has no legal personal representative, to or for the benefit of his dependants, or, if he leaves no dependants, to the persons to whom the expenses are due; and if made to the legal personal representative, shall be paid by him to or for the benefit of the dependants or other person entitled thereto under this Act." The right of the legal personal representative to receive the compensation money is clearly expressed. Paragraph 6, which provides for the sum allotted as compensation to a dependant being invested for his benefit, does not affect the right of the legal personal representative to have the whole of the money paid to him.

Ruegg, Q.C., and Anton Bertram, for the respondents, were not called upon to argue.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In my opinion paragraphs 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the first schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act must be read together. Paragraph 4 is as follows: [His lordship read the paragraph as set out above.] Then paragraph 5 says: "Any question as to who is a dependant, or as to the amount payable to each dependant, shall, in default of agreement, be settled by arbitration under this Act." Then by paragraph 6: "The sum allotted as compensation to a dependant may be invested or otherwise applied for the benefit of the person entitled thereto, as agreed, or as ordered by the committee or other arbitrator." By paragraph 7: "Any sum which is agreed or is ordered by the committee or arbitrator to be invested may be invested in whole or in part in the Post Office Savings Bank by the registrar of the county court in his name as registrar." Reading those paragraphs all together I have no doubt that the county court judge had power to make the order which he has made in this award. The appeal must therefore be dismissed, but as the question which has been raised is one which does not in any way concern the respondents, it will be dismissed without costs.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS and ROMER, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the applicant, Riddell, Vaizey, & Smith, for Walter Morgan, Bruce, & Co., Pontypridd.

Solicitors for the respondents, H. P. Becher, for Simons & Sons, Pontypridd.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Stirling, J. April 4; May 1.

In re WESTON.
DAVIES v. TAGART. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Separation deed—Assignee in bankruptcy of husband—Default in payment of annuity—Trustees' right to retain trust property—Deed for valuable consideration.

Where a husband has become bankrupt, the trustees of a separation deed are entitled, as against the assignee in bankruptcy of the husband, to retain the trust property until the amount payable under the husband's covenant under the deed is satisfied.

Where husband and wife live apart pursuant to a separation deed, such deed is for valuable consideration.

This was an originating summons by the sole surviving trustee of a separation deed, dated the 1st of September, 1864, made between Edward Weston of the first part, Ann Weston his wife of the second part, and trustees of the third part; it asked for the determination of questions which had arisen as to the interests of persons claiming to be entitled to the property, subject to the trusts of the indenture.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The deed contained a recital that unhappy differences had arisen and were subsisting between Edward Weston and Ann Weston, and by reason of the same they had agreed to live separate and apart from each other, and that Edward Weston had agreed to make such provision and settlement, and enter into such covenants as were thereinafter contained; and in pursuance and performance of such agreement Edward Weston assigned to the trustees certain leasehold property upon trust to pay the rents to Ann Weston during her life for her separate use (subject to the discontinuance of the same as afterwards mentioned), and after her decease upon trust for sale and payment of the net proceeds to such one or more of them Walter Weston and Annie Weston, two of the children of Edward and Ann Weston, as should be living at the death of the latter, and if more than one in equal shares; but if neither should be then living, then the net proceeds were to be in trust for Edward Weston, his executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely. Edward Weston covenanted with the trustees for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, in case the rents of the leaseholds should not amount to £300 a year, to make up the wife's income to that amount.

The deed contained a proviso for determination in case Ann Weston should return or attempt to return to cohabitation. The deed contained a covenant by E. Weston that Ann Weston should be allowed to live apart from him. There was no covenant by Ann Weston or by anyone on her behalf.

On the 26th of May, 1868, Edward Weston was adjudicated a bankrupt. The trustees of the deed proved in the bankruptcy for the arrears due down to the bankruptcy under the covenant; it was admitted in argument that under the law of bankruptcy as it then stood no further proof could be carried in, and that the order of discharge did not free the bankrupt from the obligations under his covenant.

Ann Weston died on the 6th of May, 1899, having survived the two children named in the deed. She made a will of which the applicant and the respondent W. Tagart were the executors. The other respondent was the assignee in the bankruptcy of Edward Weston, who was himself also now deceased.

Edward Weston failed after his bankruptcy to perform the covenant on his part to make up the income of Ann Weston to £300, and a large sum was due from him under that covenant.

Part of the leasehold property was taken compulsorily by the London School Board, and the purchase-money had been invested in £1,862 11s. 10d. South Australian Stock. The rest of the property remained in the same state as at the date of the settlement.

The trustee in bankruptcy claimed to have the property subject to the trusts of the settlement transferred to him: the defendant Tagart claimed that the trustees ought not to make such transfer until the liability of Edward Weston under his covenant in the deed was satisfied.

Eustace Smith, for the trustee of the separation deed and one of the executors of Mrs. Weston.

Jenkins, Q.C., and Martelli, for the other executor.

Upjohn, Q.C., and Whinney, for the assignee in bankruptcy.

STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, said it was admitted in argument that the trustee in the bankruptcy was in no better position than Edward Weston would have been if he were now claiming the property.

The contention on behalf of the trustees is, that Weston's right to the property subject to the trusts of the deed was equitable only and was derived under the deed; and that he could not claim in a court of equity any benefit under the deed without fulfilling his obligations under the same instrument, one of which is to pay what is due under his covenant.

Assuming for the moment that the title of Weston is derived under the deed, I shall first consider whether the rest of the contention is well founded.

In Priddy v. Rose, 3 Mer. 86, by a settlement made on the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hunt, two sums of money, the property of the wife, were assigned to trustees; the husband covenanted with the same trustees to pay to them a sum of £4,000; under the trusts, the husband took a first life interest both in his wife's property and in the investments of the £4,000. The husband afterwards absconded without having paid the £4,000 in accordance with the covenant: it was held that the trustees were entitled to retain the income of the wife's property towards satisfaction of the covenant. Grant, M.R., says: "I apprehend it to be clear that he" (Hunt) "could not have claimed a benefit under the settlement without making good his part of it." In that case the fund of which the income was impounded was derived from the wife, the defaulter was the husband. In Smith v. Smith (1835), 1 Y. & C. Ex. 338, the husband in contemplation of marriage executed in favour of the trustees of his marriage settlement a bond and also a mortgage of real estate by way of security for £15,000 to be held upon trusts under which he took the first life interest. He failed to pay the £15,000 in accordance with the bond; the mortgage was realized and produced less than £15,000; it was held that the trustees were entitled to retain the income arising from the investment of the purchase-money until the whole of the £15,000 should be made good.

Burridge v. Row (1842), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 183, was also a case of a marriage settlement. The trust property consisted of two sums of £5,000, one secured by the covenant of the husband and policies of assurance on his life, the other by the bond of the father-in-law. The trusts of the former were for the wife for life, with remainder to the husband for life, with an ultimate remainder in default of children of the marriage (which event happened) for the husband, his executors, administrators, and assigns. The husband became bankrupt, and the father-in-law purchased the husband's interest in the £5,000 coming from his son-in-law, and afterwards himself became bankrupt. It was held that the assignee in the bankruptcy of the father-in-law could not take any interest in the fund, which had arisen from the policies brought into settlement by the husband without satisfying what was due under the father-in-law's bond.

These cases have been followed in many others, among which I may mention one in the Court of Appeal in Ireland, Corr v. Corr, 3 L. R. Ir. 435, 28 W. R. Dig. 196.

Various reasons were urged why the right claimed by the trustees should not have effect given to it in the present case. In the first place it was said that whereas these cases are all decided upon marriage settlements, the separation here in question contains no covenants by or on behalf of the wife, and must be treated as voluntary. On this I may remark that it is nowhere laid down that the right does not exist in favour of the trustees of a voluntary settlement, which has been so completed as to be enforceable by the court. It exists in the case of trusts arising under a will, provided these are equitable and not legal: see Fox v. Buckley, 25 W. R. 170, 3 Ch. D. 508. It extends even to legal estates, provided the right arises by virtue of a contract contained in the instrument creating the legal estate, or another instrument forming part of the same transaction: see Woodyatt v. Gresley, 8 Sim. 180; Fox v. Buckley. It is not, however, necessary to express a concluded opinion on this point, because, in my judgment, the separation deed was not voluntary. It contains a recital that the husband and wife had agreed to live separate, and that recital is evidence of the existence of such an agreement. By such an agreement a married woman can bind herself: see Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. D. 605, 27 W. R. Dig. 95; Clark v. Clark, 33 W. R. 405, 10 P. D. 188; Aldridge v. Aldridge, 37 W. R. 240, 13 P. D. 210. The husband and wife did from the execution of the deed live apart; and consequently the husband received the full consideration for the assignment and covenant on his part contained in the deed. He cannot be heard to say that the deed was not executed for value.

It was, however, urged that in Woodyatt v. Gresley, and also in most, if not all, of the cases on marriage settlements, property was brought into settlement on the part of the wife, and it was argued that this was necessary. I fail to see why this should be so. If it is once made out that the deed is given for valuable consideration, the quantum of it is immaterial: see Gravely v. Barnard, 22 W. R. 891, L. R. 18 Eq. 518. It was also urged that the right only applied where there was a fund in the hands of the trustees on the one hand, and a debt due to them on the other. In this case the leaseholds ought to be conveyed on the death of the widow so that under the settlement there would be such a fund in the hands of the trustees.

It was said that in the events which happened E. Weston had become the sole owner in equity and was entitled to require the trustees to convey to him. No doubt he might elect to take the property in specie, so long as he did not thereby derogate from the rights of others, but I apprehend that a court of equity would not allow him so to elect to the prejudice of another. In truth, however, the right in its strictest form appears to me to be wider than is asserted on behalf of the trustee in bankruptcy: it is that a person entitled to property legally vested in trustees cannot compel those trustees to hand over the property to him until he has satisfied a debt due to those trustees and arising under the instrument which creates the trust. This is shown by the form of the order made in Burridge v. Row and Corr v. Corr.

It was, however, contended that though Edward Weston's interest was equitable he did not derive it under the separation deed, and for this Hallett v. Hallett, 28 W. R. 621, 13 Ch. D. 232, was relied on.

That case is entirely distinguishable; the bonuses there in question were in terms excluded from the operation of the deed; here the deed contains an express trust in favour of Edward Weston. The settlor having executed the deed could not, in my opinion, disclaim the benefits under it (see Standing v. Bowring, 34 W. R. 204, 31 Ch. D. 282), and the express trust excludes any implied or resulting trust. This appears to be in accordance with the decision in Burridge v. Row. In my judgment, therefore, the trustees are entitled to retain the trust property until the arrears due under the covenant are satisfied. There will be a declaration that the trustees of the indenture of the 1st of September, 1864, are entitled, as against the defendant, Herbert Kelly as assignee in bankruptcy of the late Edward Weston, to retain the property now subject to the trusts of the said indenture until the amount payable to the said trustee under the covenant of the said Edward Weston therein contained shall be satisfied, and that the defendant, the said assignee, without making good such amount, is not entitled to claim the said property or any part thereof.

Solicitors, Poole & Robinson; Surtees & Surtees.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } Feb. 27; March 9.

GARDNER v. HODGSON'S KINGSTON BREWERIES CO. (a.)

Easement—Payment of rent—Uninterrupted enjoyment of over forty years—Parol licence—Prescription Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71), s. 2.

Where a licence to use a way across a yard was given by parol more than forty years before action brought, and where such licence was subject to the payment of an annual rent,

Held, that, in the absence of any proof of a "consent or agreement expressly given or made for that purpose by deed or writing," the uninterrupted enjoyment of the easement for over forty years gave an absolute and indefeasible right to the use of the way.

The plaintiff in this action was Cordelia Gardner. Under her father's will she was entitled as trustee to a freehold messuage and premises at No. 206, High-street, Sutton. These consisted of a shop, wherein a saddler's business had been carrried on for eighty-nine years, a yard, a stable and other outbuildings at the rear, which had been used as a livery stable for a like period.

The only access to these premises was through a gateway from the plaintiff's yard opening into the yard of an adjoining public-house, called the Red Lion Inn, and thence into High-street. The right of way to the yard at the back of the house had been openly and regularly enjoyed without interruption during the whole period of eighty-nine years.

The defendants were the owners of the Red Lion Inn and of the yard in rear of it.

The plaintiff now claimed a declaration that she was entitled to a right of way from the backyard of her premises to a pump in the yard of the Red Lion Inn, and to take water from the pump; and also to a right of way for carts and horses to and from High-street through the Red Lion yard. The defendants did not contest the plaintiff's rights as far as the pump and the way to it were concerned, but they denied the existence of a right of way from High-street across the yard of the inn. The defendants alleged that a sum of 15s. a year by way of rent was paid by the plaintiffs for the exercise of the right of passing to and from the yard. The plaintiff denied this, and asserted that the money was paid for the repair of the road. It was not denied by the plaintiff that this payment had been made since 1855.

On the 31st of March, 1898, the defendants served notice in writing upon the plaintiff requiring her to give up the use of the yard of the Red Lion and to close the gate.

Micklem, Q.C., and E. S. Ford, for the plaintiff, contended that the plaintiff had acquired a good title to the use of the yard under the second portion of section 2 of the Prescription Act, 1832, seeing that the user of the yard for more than forty years was admitted. It was true that payment had been made, but payment is not "an interruption" within the meaning of the Act: Plasterers' Co. v. Parish Clerks'

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVISTER-at-Law.

Co., 6 Ex. Ch. 630. The enjoyment mentioned in the second portion of the section as "so enjoyed as aforesaid" need not be "as of right," but only "without interruption": Dalton v. Angus, 30 W. R. 191, 6 App. Cas. 740. In this case the enjoyment was "as of right": Kinloch v. Nevile, 6 M. & W. 795; Tickle v. Brown, 4 A. & E. 369; Bewley v. Atkinson, 27 W. R. 452 28 ib. 638, 13 Ch. D. 283.

Hon. E. Macnaghten, Q.C., and G. Cave, for the defendants.—The payment of the 15s. a year was in respect of rent. The user was not therefore enjoyed "as of right": Chamber Colliery Co. v. Hopwood, 32 Ch. D. 549, 35 W. R. Dig. 76; Monmouthshire Canal Co. v. Harford, 1 Cr. M. & R. 614; Beasley v. Clarke, 2 Bing. N. C. 705; Tone v. Preston, 32 W. R. 166, 24 Ch. D. 739.

Micklem, Q.C., replied.

COZENS-HARDY, J., stated the facts and then proceeded: Upon these facts I think the inference I ought to draw is that a licence or permission to use this way across the yard was given by parol more than forty years before action brought, and that such licence was not gratuitous but was subject to the payment of 15s. a year. I do not find that there was any fresh application for permission during the currency of the forty years, or anything to suggest a change in the original arrangement when first the licence by parol was granted. In these circumstances it is asserted by the plaintiff and denied by the defendants that a right has been acquired under section 2 of the Prescription Act. It is necessary to consider carefully the language of the Prescription Act, and it will be convenient first to attempt to construe it without reference to the authorities. [His lordship, after reading section 2 of the Prescription Act, 1832, continued:] The effect of this section seems to be this. There must be actual enjoyment for twenty years "without interruption," which is defined in section 4.

It is not necessary that "any person claiming right thereto" should during the whole period have claimed to be legally entitled against the owner of the servient tenement. An easement within section 2 which has been actually enjoyed without interruption during the prescribed period without any shred or tittle of justification is rendered valid; there is, however, a difference between uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years and for forty years. The former is only primâ facie evidence of the title of the owner of the dominant tenement, and his title may be defeated in any other way by which in 1832 it was liable to be defeated. Proof of a consent or agreement, whether by parol or in writing, will suffice to defeat the title. But uninterrupted enjoyment for forty years is absolute and conclusive evidence of title with one exception only—namely, if the owner of the servient tenement can establish that the enjoyment was "by some consent or agreement expressly given or made for that purpose by deed or writing." A parol agreement will not suffice. [His lordship then read and considered the effect of section 5 of the Act, which relates to pleading, and was not, in his opinion, material to the present case.] In the present case there has been actual uninterrupted enjoyment for more than forty years under a parol licence, and, according to the construction, which, apart from authorities, I should adopt, that establishes the plaintiff's right to the easement.

It remains to consider whether this view is consistent with the authorities by which I am bound. In the cases of Bright v. Walker, 1 Cr. M. & R. 211, and Monmouthshire Canal Co. v. Harford a somewhat narrow construction was put on the Act. If, however, they mean that the Act only applies where, during the whole of the prescribed period the enjoyment was, apart from the Act, rightful, they cannot now be regarded as good law. In Tickle v. Brown a more liberal construction was put upon the Act, and it was decided that evidence of an application for leave, within the forty years, was admissible evidence to negative the enjoyment for forty years. Beasley v. Clarke and Kinloch v. Nevile are both consistent with the decision in Tickle v. Brown. In Warburton v. Parke, 2 H. & N. 64, 5 W. R. Dig. 224, Bramwell, B., pointed out that the proviso at the end of section 2 "supposes there may be an enjoyment as of right though by consent or agreement." This seems tersely to affirm the view which I have expressed. Lastly, in the well-known case of Dalton v. Angus, Lord Selborne says: "It is undoubtedly true that under the 2nd section there is an important difference between a forty years' and a twenty years' user. Forty years' user has the same effect which (under the 3rd section) twenty years' user has as to light; it makes the right absolute and indefeasible, unless it is shown to have been enjoyed by consent or agreement in writing."

The above authorities seem to me to lay down that actual uninterrupted enjoyment of a way for forty years suffices to establish the easement; unless it can be shown to have been enjoyed under some written consent or agreement. And, further, that a parol licence is of no moment, unless it was applied for and granted within the period of forty years, in which case it may probably be used to negative the enjoyment of the easement for forty years. This principle must, in my judgment, apply whether the parol licence is gratuitous or for a consideration. The continued payment of an annual sum is attributable, as in Bewley v. Atkinson, to the original parol agreement or licence given more than forty years ago, and is not evidence of a fresh application each year for a fresh licence. Although I prefer to base my judgment on the Prescription Act, I wish to add that I think this is a case in which, if necessary, a lost grant ought to be presumed of the right to the pump and of the right of way through the yard, and any requisite amendment to the pleadings ought to be allowed. Such a grant might be subject to payment of 15s. a year. This nominal payment is of no real importance to either party. The only substantial question is as to the existence of this right of way, which is vital to the enjoyment of the plaintiff's property. The result is that, in my opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief claimed, and I must make the declaration and grant the injunction asked.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Spencer, Gibson, & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Lovell & Broad.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Bigham and Phillimore, JJ.) April 3.

CANNAN v. EARL OF ABINGDON. (a.)

Bicycle—Tolls—Toll bridge—Toll on "cart, car, or other carriage whatsoever"—Liability of bicycles and tricycles as carriages—7 Geo. 3, c. lxiii.

A statute imposed certain tolls in favour of the owner of a certain bridge for passage over the bridge in respect of "every coach, . . . cart, car, or other carriage what- soever," with four wheels, the sum of 4d., and with less than four wheels, the sum of 2d.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that bicycles and tricycles are "carriages" within the meaning of the above statute, and are liable under the terms of the statute to the toll of 2d each on passing over the bridge.

Special case stated for the opinion of the court by consent of the parties pursuant to the order of a master.

In pursuance of an Act passed in the seventh year of the reign of King George III. (c. lxiii.), intituled "An Act for building a bridge across the River Thames from Swynford in the county of Berks to Eynsham in the county of Oxford," the Earl of Abingdon, the defendant's predecessor in title, erected the bridge now known as Swinford Bridge in the highway leading from Oxford to Cheltenham in lieu of an ancient ferry across the river of which he was the owner and proprietor.

By this Act it was—amongst other things—enacted as follows: "For and in consideration of the great charges that the said Earl of Abingdon, his heirs and assigns, will be obliged to defray in erecting the said bridge, and repairing and supporting the same, and also the loss which he and they will sustain by the ceasing of the tolls of the said ferry, the said bridge when built shall be and is hereby vested in the said Earl of Abingdon, his heirs and assigns, for ever, and it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Earl of Abingdon, his heir and assigns, from time to time, and at all times hereafter, to erect, or cause to be erected, a gate or gates, turnpike or turnpikes, and also a toll-house or toll-houses at, near, or upon the said bridge, and there to ask, demand, receive, recover, and take . . . before any passage over the said bridge shall be permitted, the several sums following, that is to say—For every coach, chariot, berlin, hearse, chaise, chair, calash, waggon, wain, dray, cart, car, or other carriage whatsoever with four wheels, the sum of fourpence, and with less than four wheels the sum of twopence; which said respective sums of money shall be demanded and taken in the name of pontage, or as a toll or duty . . . and the said Earl of Abingdon, his heirs and assigns, shall and may deny and refuse to permit any passage over the said bridge until payment thereof. . . . Provided always that no toll shall be taken for the driver of any coach, cart, or other carriage aforesaid drawn by horses or other cattle, or for any person or persons riding in and bonâ fide belonging to the same, but all and every person and persons not bonâ fide belonging to such coach, cart, or other carriage, as aforesaid, shall be liable to pay the same tolls and duties as if he, she, or they were passing on foot."

The defendant was the owner of the bridge and entitled to take the aforesaid tolls.

On four several occasions on the 3rd of December, 1898, the plaintiff, who was a member of the council or committee of the Cyclists' Touring Club, passed over the bridge. On one occasion he was riding on a bicycle without any luggage or luggage carrier. On another occasion he was riding on a bicycle having a valise or bag fitted to its frame for carrying luggage. On another occasion he was riding on a tricycle without any luggage or luggage carrier. And on another occasion he was riding on a "tradesman's tricycle," having a box fitted to its frame for conveying goods.

On the 17th of December, 1898, the plaintiff again passed over the bridge. He was then riding on a tricycle having a wicker chair fitted to its frame, commonly known as a "bath-chair tricycle," in which another person was seated.

On each of the five occasions the defendant's servant (the keeper of the toll-gate on the bridge) refused to allow the plaintiff to pass over the bridge without payment of the sum of twopence as a toll, and the plaintiff paid that sum to the keeper on each of such occasions under protest in order to obtain passage over the bridge; and he then brought the present action to recover back the sums he had so paid for passing over the bridge.

The plaintiff contended that the Act did not authorize the defendant to charge him any toll on any of the first three occasions, or in the alternative that it did not authorize the defendant to charge him with a greater toll than the sum of one halfpenny (the toll for a foot passenger) on any of those occasions.

The plaintiff also contended that the Act did not authorize the defendant to charge him any toll on either the fourth or fifth occasion, or in the alternative that it did not authorize a greater toll than the sum of one halfpenny on the fourth occasion, or than the sum of one penny on the last occasion.

The defendant contended that all the bicycles and tricycles were chairs, cars, or carriages within the meaning of the Act, and were respectively liable to the toll of twopence.

The questions for the opinion of the court were with what tolls, if any, was the defendant entitled to charge the plaintiff by virtue of the Act when riding over the bridge in manner above set forth—(a) On a bicycle without any luggage or luggage carrier; (b) on a bicycle having a valise or bag fitted to its frame for carrying luggage; (c) on a tricycle without any luggage or luggage carrier; (d) on a tradesmen's tricycle having a box fitted to its frame for carrying goods; (e) on a bath-chair tricycle in which another person was seated.

Judgment was to be entered for the plaintiff or defendant according to the answers of the court to the above questions.

Alexander Glen (Macmorran, Q.C., with him), for the plaintiff.—Tolls were not payable on any one of the five occasions. Bicycles and tricycles are not "carriages," and are not within the Act at all. The tolls under the Act are clearly not exhaustive; it was not intended that everything or everybody should pay toll; for instance, a man passing over on a camel would not be liable, and there many animals which are not included. The words "or other carriage whatsoever" must be construed ejusdem generis with the things previously specified, and bicycles or tricycles are not ejusdem generis with the things already specified, such as coaches, cars, carts, &c. The things that come within the Act are wheeled carriages, and such things as bicycles were never contemplated when this Act was passed. The case is really a casus omissus in the Act. The authorities on the point show that when we have in a statute certain specified kinds of carriages, followed by the general words "other carriage whatsoever," then these latter words are to be construed ejusdem generis with the previous things: Taylor v. Goodwin, 27 W. R. 489, 4 Q. B. D. 228; Williams v. Ellis, 28 W. R. 416, 5 Q. B. D. 175; Hatton v. Treeby, 46 W. R. 6, [1897] 2 Q. B. 452; Plymouth, &c., Tramways Co. v. General Tolls Co., 14 Times L. R. 531. At the very utmost the plaintiff would be liable as a foot passenger.

A. B. Shaw, for the defendant, was stopped.

BIGHAM, J.—I think that all the things enumerated in the questions put to us are within the meaning of this particular Act of Parliament, carriages with less than four wheels, and that, therefore, they are liable to pay a toll of twopence. The framers of the Act, of course, never contemplated anything in the nature of bicycles; but the Legislature has, I think, used words which do cover those things like bicycles which have come into existence since the Act was passed. The bicycle is a thing that carries; it may carry a man as a horse or a carriage does, or it may carry luggage as the tradesmen's tricycles do. It is therefore, in my opinion, a carriage; and being a carriage it is made by the terms of this Act liable to pay the toll. I do not think any distinction ought to be made between the different classes mentioned in the case. It seems to me that they are all equally liable to pay the toll in question.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that in this case, as in the Plymouth case, the intention was that all vehicles should pay toll, and I think that the bicycle is a vehicle or is a carriage. Any mechanical contrivance which carries weights or people over the ground, taking the weights off the ground or the people off their feet so that the feet and body of the man do not support either the man himself or the burden he is bearing, is a carriage; and I do not think it matters that the man himself who is carried gives his own propulsion to the carriage. I think that it makes no difference that in fact he uses his feet for the purpose of pedalling, and that in this way he propels himself by a different operation to that of walking or running, in which cases he bears his own weight at the same time that he moves himself. Therefore I think that a bicycle is a carriage. I conceive that it is impossible to say that the two last things are not carriages. Even if I thought that a bicycle itself was not a carriage when carrying a man, I should scruple very much in saying that a bicycle when carrying luggage was not a carriage. However, all these difficulties are avoided by our saying that a bicycle is a carriage for all these purposes.

Judgment for the defendant, with costs.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Leslie J. Williams.

Solicitors for the defendant, Witham, Roskell, Munster, & Weld.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Ridley and Darling, JJ.) April 2.

BUXTON LIME FIRMS CO. (LIMITED) (Appellants) v. JAMES HOWE (Respondent). (a.)

Master and servant—Dispute—Summons to recover fine—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875—Truck Act, 1896, s. 1, sub-section 2 (b).

By a contract of service in writing the appellants were to be entitled to deduct 2*s.* 6*d. from the wages of the workman for each day he was absent without leave.*

The respondent having so absented himself for two days,

Held, that, whether the contract was good or bad under the Truck Act, 1896, the justices should have proceeded to hear and determine on its merits a summons taken out by the appellants under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, to recover from the respondent 5*s. as "a fine or penalty, or alternatively, by way of damages for such abstention," and that the justices were in error in holding that the appellants had lost their right to sue under the Act of* 1875 by reason of the fact that the Truck Act of 1896 ousted the jurisdiction of the justices to determine disputes under the Act of 1875 in all cases where the contract in question fell within its provisions.

Special case stated by justices of the peace of the Bakewell division of the county of Derby.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 2nd of January, 1899, the respondent, James Howe, entered into the service of the appellants, and was employed by them under an agreement of that date signed by him, and by William Brierley on behalf of the company.

By the terms of the agreement the respondent agreed to serve the company exclusively for twelve calendar months from the 1st of January, 1899, until the 31st of December, in the work of getting limestone and breaking it to the required size. The agreement contained a clause that the workman should be "subject to a fine, or penalty, or drawback of 2s. 6d. for each and every working day on which he was absent without leave, except in case of sickness."

The company agreed to pay the workman, on the usual fortnightly pay days, the sum of 7¼d. for every 2,240lbs. of limestone got and properly loaded into the company's wagons, and the agreement concluded "in the event of the breach of any of the conditions of this agreement on the part of the workman then, and in every such case, it shall be lawful for the company to dismiss the workman without any notice or without being liable to make any payment by way of damages or otherwise for dismissal without notice, but all wages earned shall be paid up to the time of such dismissal less any amount then due for fines, penalties, or drawbacks for absence as aforesaid, should the company insist thereon."

A notice setting out the terms of the contract as to absence without leave and the penalties therefor, was posted up in the cabin where the respondent had his meals.

On the 13th of September, 1899, the respondent applied for leave of absence from his work on the 14th, 15th, and 16th of September, and leave was granted for the first and refused for the other two days.

On hearing that leave on the 15th and 16th was refused, the respondent said he should take French leave, and he absented himself without permission on the days in question. By reason of his absence the company sustained a greater loss than 2s. 6d. for each day he was absent.

The respondent after this continued in the employment of the appellants, and received wages from them, but no demand was made upon him for any penalties under the agreement for absenting himself from his employment, or for damages consequent thereon, until he received the particulars of claim attached to the summons to appear before the magistrates.

The company preferred their claim under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and claimed 5s. as a fine or penalty, or alternatively by way of damages, from the respondent for having absented himself from his work on the 15th and 16th of September, 1899, being at the rate of 2s. 6d. a day.

It was contended on behalf of the respondent before the magistrates that the agreement brought the case within the Truck Act, 1896—that Act provided, under section 1, sub-section 2, clause (b), that the giving of particulars in writing was to be a condition precedent to the levying of a fine or penalty such as was claimed—that the appellants had their remedy for the respondent's misconduct in their own hands by deducting the penalties from his wages as provided by the agreement; and that their only remedy was by so deducting the amount claimed after complying with the requirements of the Truck Act.

For the appellants it was argued that the case was not governed by the Truck Act, but that if it were the service of the claim in the form of particulars attached to the justices' summons was sufficient notice under the Act, and that the deduction from the respondent's wages was not obligatory. The justices held that the appellants by their agreement with the respondent had the remedy for the offence in their own hands, and that their proper course was to have deducted the penalty from the next payment of wages as they had done in similar cases; that the agreement came within the Truck Act and that the proceedings to recover a penalty under it could only be brought after a strict compliance with the terms of that Act; that, in their opinion, section 1, sub-section 2 (b), of the Truck Act, 1896, had not been complied with, and that the particulars of claim attached to the summons was not a compliance with the Act, and they, therefore, dismissed the summons.

The question for the court was whether the justices were right in dismissing the summons on those grounds; if they were wrong their order was to be quashed and the case was to be remitted to them.

Hextall, for the appellants.

H. Jacobs, for the respondent.

RIDLEY, J.—I think in this case that the justices have come to a wrong decision. To decide it one must bear in mind that the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, was passed by the Legislature expressly to give a court of summary jurisdiction the power to determine disputes between employers and workmen, and that it was under that Act that the summons in the present case was taken out. The Truck Act, 1896, contains certain provisions as to contracts made between employers and workmen which contain any agreement under which deductions are to be made from the wages to be paid, and requires that certain forms must be complied with; the terms of the contract must be contained in a notice, and that notice must be put in some place open to the workmen. And there are other conditions, all of which, so far as material, seem to me in substance to have been complied with in this case. By section 1 (2) the employer is not to make any deduction unless the deduction is made in accordance with the terms of the contract, and unless particulars were put in writing and given to the workman. Now both those conditions have been complied with here, and the justices appear to have thought that because the Truck Act of 1896 contained these provisions, it ousted the jurisdiction of magistrates to determine disputes in all cases where the contract in question fell within the Truck Act. In other words, they seem to have thought that employers and workmen must make use of the Truck Act to decide all disputes that arose out of contracts which provided for a deduction in wages; and if they did not comply with the provisions of that Act then they were without a remedy and no deduction could legally be made. To put such a construction on the scope of the Act it would be necessary to read into its provisions a good deal that is not there. For example, the word "receive" in this sub-section must be read as "receiver." In my opinion the Legislature never intended this Act of 1896 to interfere with the powers in these matters given to magistrates by the Act of 1875. If that had been intended some provision to that effect would have been found in the Truck Act. It might be that the agreement came within the Act, but it does not follow that proceedings to recover the penalty could only be taken when the contract complied with the requirements of the Act. The magistrates went on to find that under section 1, sub-section 2 (b), particulars had not been delivered to the workman and therefore under the Truck Act the claim could not be maintained. With that conclusion I do not agree as I think there was a notice given to the workmen. Then it was argued that damages could not be recovered because penalties were provided for in the agreement itself. I am not sure of that, but I do not wish to decide if that is or is not the proper view to take of that part of the Act. I think the matter must be sent back to the magistrates for them to determine it on its merits under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875.

DARLING, J.—I am of the same opinion. Here the employers and workmen entered into a contract for the payment of a fine or penalty or for the making of a deduction, and therefore the contract would be bad in law if it did not comply with the provisions of the Truck Act, 1896. And it is not disputed that the employers could have deducted 5s. when the wages were paid. But, instead, they thought fit to proceed before the magistrates under the Act of 1875 to recover that amount as a fine or penalty, or alternatively, by way of damages for such abstention.

It was argued that because that was a penalty under the Truck Act it could not be recovered before the magistrate by means of that summons. In my judgment this was a good contract under the Truck Act. Section 1, sub-section 2, of the Act says "that an employer shall not make any such deduction"—he does not make any deduction, so that does not apply—"or receive any such payment." It was argued that if he proceeded before the magistrates and got judgment in his favour and received the proceeds, he was receiving a payment and must comply with sub-section 2 of section 1, which prevents him from recovering "unless particulars in writing . . . are supplied to the workman." Such an argument cannot avail the present appellants, for the statute provides that particulars are to be given when payment is made, and therefore it seems to me that the requirements of the statute would be satisfied if particulars were given even after the justices had given their decision awarding the sum claimed. I think there are circumstances under which the master might well recover for loss occasioned by the wrongful absence of a workman at law, although there was no contract subsisting that gave the master a right in that case to impose a fine or make a deduction. But however that may be, it would not conclude this case, for here the summons is to recover unliquidated damages, and it was said that because a penalty was agreed upon, unless proceedings were taken to recover the penalty no right to recover damages remained. That is a view I do not accede to. The Truck Act does not deal with damages, and I fail to see either by means of the Truck Act or by the contract the master has given up his right to sue for any damages he has sustained by the conduct of this workman.

The magistrates, I think, were misled by not understanding that the Truck Act applies to the making of a good contract, and if the parties had made a bad contract, neither thereby would have lost his rights under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875.

For these reasons I agree that the case should go back to be tried on its merits under the earlier Act.

Solicitors for the appellants, Cree & Son, for Sidney Taylor, Buxton.

Solicitors for the respondent, Steadman & Van Praagh, for Arthur Neal, Sheffield.

Q. B. Div.
(Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Grantham and Phillimore, JJ.) March 27, 28.

REG. v. GRAY. (a.)

Contempt of court—Abuse of judge in his conduct as judge—Power to punish on summary process.

The publication in a newspaper, after the conclusion of a trial in court, of an article containing scurrilous abuse of the judge in his character of judge in the hearing of the case, is a contempt of court which may be punished by the court on summary process.

Order made by a Divisional Court that Thomas Lancaster do attend the court to answer for contempt of court committed by him on the 16th of March, by publishing in a certain newspaper styled the Birmingham Daily Argus, an article headed "A Defender of Decency."

The proceedings were originally taken against Thomas Lancaster, the printer and publisher of the newspaper, but it appeared from the affidavits that he was at the time in question, and still is, abroad, and Howard Alexander Gray, the editor of the newspaper and the writer of the article, now appeared and assumed the whole responsibility for the article; and he appeared in obedience to the order and submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court.

The facts were as follows:

The Birmingham Spring Assizes began on the 13th of March, 1900; and on Thursday, the 15th of March, a man named Wells was to be tried in the Crown Court at Birmingham, in which Darling, J., was the presiding judge, for unlawfully and indecently publishing and uttering certain obscene and filthy words, and for unlawfully publishing and selling an obscene libel contained in a book. Before the case of Wells was commenced Darling, J., addressed some observations to the reporters in court as to their not reporting any details of the case that might be of an indecent nature. The learned judge said: "Before this case of Wells is gone into, I wish to say a word for the benefit of the press. This is a case which, whatever may be the rights of it, is bound to involve the giving in evidence or the discussion of matters which it would be wholly inexpedient to have published in anything like detail. . . . However I will say this one word in case any newspaper should be inclined not to act upon the advice I now give them, and it is this. Although a newspaper has the right to publish accounts of proceedings in a law court, and although for many purposes they are protected in doing so, there is absolutely no protection to a newspaper for the publishing of objectionable, indecent, and obscene matter, and any newspaper which does so may be as easily prosecuted as anybody else, and if I find my advice disregarded I shall make it my business to see that the law is in that respect enforced."

Wells was tried on the 15th of March; his trial was concluded on that day and he was convicted and sentence had been passed upon him. After the conclusion of the trial, and whilst the Birmingham Assizes were still going on and Darling, J., was still sitting as one of the judges of assize, the defendant wrote and published in the Birmingham Daily Argus, of which paper he was editor, an article headed "A Defender of Decency," referring to the observations made by the judge before the trial of Wells. This article was described by Lord Russell, C.J., in his judgment, as a personal scurrilous abuse of the judge as a judge.

An affidavit was filed on behalf of the defendant (Gray) in which he expressed his sincere regret for the terms in which he had referred to the learned judge, and apologized to the court and to the judge for the same. The concluding portion of his affidavit is set out in the judgment.

Sir Richard Webster, A.G. (H. Sutton with him), for the Public Prosecutor, argued that the publication by the defendant of this abusive language was a contempt of court, and that the procedure adopted—namely, by summary application or process, was the right one under the circumstances. [He was stopped by the court.]

Hugo Young, Q.C. (Gilbertstone Tangye with him), for the defendant, said that he did not take objection to the form of the procedure, but desired to deal with the case on its merits. The defendant had filed an affidavit expressing his regret for the language he had used, and he now did not wish to justify his language, but apologized to the court.

He referred to Reg. v. Castro, L. R. 9 Q. B. 219.

The defendant was ordered to appear before the court on the following morning.

March 28.—The judgment of the court was delivered by Lord RUSSELL, C.J.—In this matter the Attorney-General on Friday last moved for a rule calling upon Thomas Lancaster to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt by reason of the publication of an article in a paper called the Daily Argus, published on the 16th of March. It then appeared that Thomas Lancaster was the printer and also the secretary and manager of a limited company which published at Birmingham the paper called the Daily Argus. Yesterday, when the matter again came before the court the Attorney-General informed the court, and an affidavit was referred to evidencing the fact, that Thomas Lancaster was abroad at the time at which the article in question appeared, and that he is still abroad. At the same time it was announced that Howard Alexander Gray was the editor and the writer and the person solely responsible for the appearance of the article of the 16th of March, which is impugned as a contempt of court. Howard Alexander Gray appears here in person and is represented by counsel, and submits himself to the judgment of the court. The court, therefore, is seised of this matter, and is now able to deal with it. The facts of the case are these. One Wells was indicted at the Birmingham Assizes for certain indecent publications. The case came to be tried before Darling, J., sitting under the Queen's Commission of Oyer and Terminer at Birmingham, and before the trial the learned judge thought it right to call public attention to the nature of the trial and to the character of the evidence which would be necessarily brought forward, evidence of various indecent matters very undesirable from every point of view for publication. The learned judge thought it right to warn all concerned, including the press at Birmingham, against the publication of any of those indecent details, taking care at the same time that his observations should not in any sense prejudge the matter to be tried, because he was careful to point out that although necessarily indecent matter was to be put in evidence, it did not follow that the publication of it under the circumstances in the actual case would not constitute a criminal offence. The learned judge proceeded, after giving this warning, to point out the means existing in point of law for the punishment of persons who did publish any of the indecent matter which might be given in evidence. I do not think for one single instant that the learned judge meant thereby to insult the press of Birmingham. His warning may have been unnecessary; he may not have been aware of the fact which evidenced the good sense and the propriety of conduct of that press, that there was no publication of indecent details in this case during the preliminary proceedings before the magistrates and before the defendant was committed for trial. There is a popular, but erroneous impression, that there is impunity for the publication of any matter that transpires in a court of justice. The above facts having taken place upon the 15th of March, on the evening of the next day, and after the trial of the man Wells had taken place resulting in his conviction, the article in question was published. It was read yesterday, and I do not propose to read it again. Of its character there can be no question, and no one has described it in stronger language of condemnation than Howard Alexander Gray himself in the affidavit which he has filed. It is not too much to say that it is an article of scurrilous abuse of the judge in his character of judge; scurrilous abuse in reference to his conduct when acting under the Queen's Commission, and scurrilous abuse published in the town in which he was still sitting in discharge of the Queen's Commission. It cannot be doubted, and it has not been doubted or argued to the contrary, that it does constitute a contempt of court; but as these applications are happily of an unusual character, we have thought it right to explain a little more fully than is perhaps necessary what does constitute a contempt of court, and what are the means which the law has placed at the disposal of the Judicature for checking and punishing contempt of court. Any act done, or writing published, calculated to bring the court or a judge of the court into contempt, or to lessen his authority, is a contempt of court. That is one class of contempt. Another class is any act done, or writing published, calculated to obstruct or interfere with the due course of justice or the lawful process of the court. That is another class of contempt. The former class belongs to that category which Lord Hardwicke characterized as "scandalizing the court or judge": In re Read and Huggonson, 2 Atk. 469. That description of that class is to be taken subject to one qualification, which is an important qualification. Judges and courts are alike open to criticism if reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good. No court could or would treat that as contempt, and the courts would not be, and ought not to be, astute in such cases to criticize adversely what in such circumstances and with such an object is said; but it is to be remembered that in this matter the liberty of the press is no greater and no less than the liberty of every subject of the Queen. No one would, I think, suggest, and no one has here suggested, that this is not a contempt of court, and that it does not fall within the right of public criticism in the sense that I have described. I repeat that it is personal scurrilous abuse of the judge as a judge. We have therefore to deal with it as a case of contempt, and we have to deal with it brevi manu. This is not a new-fangled jurisdiction. It is a jurisdiction as old as the common law itself, of which it forms part; a jurisdiction the history, the purpose, and the extent of which are admirably treated in the opinion of Wilmot, C.J., then Wilmot, J., in the case of Rex v. Almon in his Opinions and Judgments, at p. 243. It is a jurisdiction, however, to be exercised with scrupulous care; to be exercised only when the case is clear beyond reasonable doubt, but if it is not a case beyond reasonable doubt, the courts ought to, and will, leave the Attorney-General to proceed by criminal information. How then are we to deal with this matter? That it is a serious case no one can doubt, and I do not hesitate to say, speaking for myself and for my brethren, that if it had not been for the conduct of the defendant since the publication, and especially if it had not been for the affidavit which he has put before the court for its consideration, we all think that it would have been our duty to have sent the defendant to prison for a not inconsiderable period of time. But he has come forward and frankly acknowledged his own individual and sole responsibility in the matter. He has done more; he has in his affidavit, we believe sincerely, expressed his regret for what he has done. In that affidavit he makes reference to the fact that other publications and other newspapers in Birmingham had made comments upon the conduct of the learned judge. In regard to that I have but to make this observation. So far as they have been at all adverted to they were obviously comments of a very different character. They are not before us, and we must assume that they are not before us because the Attorney-General in his discretion did not think that they were sufficiently serious to be called to the attention of the court in order that the punitive jurisdiction of the court should be exercised in regard to those responsible for their publication. After referring to this matter the defendant in his affidavit says that he wrote the article under a strong feeling that the learned judge had not in effect shown sufficient confidence in the judgment and good taste and discretion of the press in Birmingham; and he then proceeds: "That was the only motive present to my mind in writing the article, and I wrote it on the impulse of the moment. In doing so I used language referring to Mr. Justice Darling in terms which were intemperate, improper, ungentlemanly, and void of the respect due to his lordship's person and office. The expressions applied to Mr. Justice Darling were not deliberately intended to bring discredit upon his lordship, but were the outcome of my strong feeling. I know they cannot be justified, and I do not seek to justify them. I am entirely responsible for the article and for everything which it contains. I deeply regret the publication of the article and the inexcusable and insulting language in which it referred to one of her Majesty's judges, and I humbly apologize to his lordship and to the court for my conduct, which I now upon consideration see reflected not only upon the individual judge, but upon the bench of judges, and the administration of justice, and I submit myself to the merciful consideration of the court." Howard Alexander Gray, the judgment of the court is that you be fined £100 and a further sum of £25 for costs, and that you be detained, and, if necessary, lodged in Holloway Gaol until these sums be paid.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitor for the Public Prosecutor, The Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitors for the defendant, Pepper, Tangye, & Co., for Pepper, Tangye, & Winterton, Birmingham.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Collins, and Romer, L.JJ.) March 2.

DURANT & CO. v. ROBERTS AND KEIGHLEY, MAXSTED, & CO. (a.)

Principal and agent — Undisclosed principal — Unauthorized agent — Ratification—Contract made by person in his own name on behalf of another without authority.

A contract made by a person in his own name, but intending to act for another in making it, though without authority from him, can be ratified by that other person, although the intending agent did not disclose at the time of making the contract that he was acting for someone else.

So held by the Court of Appeal (Collins and Romer, L.JJ.; A. L. Smith, L.J., dissenting).

Application for a new trial of an action tried before Day, J., and a jury.

The action was brought by the sellers of wheat to recover damages from the purchasers for breach of contract in failing to take delivery.

The contract of purchase purported to be made with the plaintiffs by the defendant Roberts on his own account. Roberts had authority from the defendants, Keighley, Maxsted, & Co., to make a contract on their behalf, but in making the contract in question he exceeded their authority as to price. It appeared, however, that at the time when he made the contract he intended to apply to Keighley, Maxsted, & Co., to adopt the contract as their own, and that they subsequently expressed their willingness to adopt it.

The question was whether in law it was possible for Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. to ratify the contract made by Roberts.

Roberts having allowed judgment to go by default, the action proceeded against Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. Day, J., held that there could be no ratification by Keighley, Maxsted, & Co., and directed that a verdict and judgment should be entered for them.

The plaintiffs applied for a new trial.

Robson, Q.C., and Scrutton, for the plaintiffs.

Carver, Q.C., and Danckwerts, Q.C., for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

March 2.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment: The question in this case is whether a contract made by a principal with, what I will call, an unauthorized agent in the latter's name, which contract does not purport or profess to be made by the unauthorized agent on behalf of any one excepting himself, and as regards which contract he has not when he made it assumed to be acting on behalf of any one excepting himself, is capable of being ratified by a stranger, if it be shown that the unauthorized agent had at the time he made the contract the undeclared intention in his own mind of making the contract for a person who had never authorized him to make it.

It was said by the learned counsel for the appellants that this question had never been decided, and that the law was that, if an unauthorized agent—that is, any one—had in his own mind, when he entered into a contract with another, the undeclared intention of making it on behalf of himself and of some other person, or of some other person alone, that other person could ratify the act of the unauthorized agent and thus become as if he had been a party to the contract ab initio. It struck me, when I heard this proposition put forward by the appellants' counsel (that is by the plaintiffs' counsel), that it was not in accord with my recollection of the law; for I thought it had been long ago well engrained into the law of England that a stranger in such circumstances could not ratify; and, having had my memory refreshed at great length by the cases upon the subject, I find that my recollection has not played me false. It will be seen hereafter that very learned judges over and over again have stated the law as regards ratification to be that, unless the contract made by the unauthorized agent purports or professes (which in my judgment is the same thing) to have been entered into on behalf of another, or the unauthorized agent, when he made the contract, assumed to be making it on behalf of another, then the contract made by the unauthorized agent is not capable of being ratified by a stranger to it; for to be capable of being ratified the contract must purport or profess to have been entered into by the unauthorized agent on behalf of another, or the agent must have assumed by what he did when he entered into the contract to have been acting on behalf of some person who afterwards proposes to ratify. I find that every learned judge who has dealt with the question during the last three-quarters of a century at least, has affirmed the doctrine of ratification to be as above stated, with a most remarkable unanimity of opinion, and there is only one solitary instance to the contrary to be found in the books—viz., the judgment of Cockburn, C.J., in the case of Matheson v. Kilburn, only reported 1 Sm. L. C. (10th ed.), p. 349, which I will refer to hereafter, and in which Lord Cairns and Brett, L.J., differed from the Lord Chief Justice, and, in my opinion, decided the point now raised in this case adversely to the appellants.

Before I deal with this consensus of judicial opinion I would point out that the learned junior counsel for the appellants, in order to meet this undeniable difficulty in his way, with a courage which distinguishes him, roundly asserted that the statements by the judges to be found in the books were mere obiter dicta, and should be discarded as worthless, and were not decisions upon the point. This struck me as remarkable, but I find that my brothers Collins and Romer are of opinion that this doctrine of ratification has never yet been decided, and they think that it is therefore necessary to begin ab ovo, and go back to the Roman law and other ancient works to try and ascertain what is or ought to be the law upon the subject and to see whether what all the learned judges (with the one exception) have been saying throughout the last century is correct or not.

The point argued is that is an anomaly that the law relating to contracts entered into by an unauthorized agent without any principal behind him should not be the same as that relating to contracts entered into by an authorized agent with an undisclosed principal behind him, and it is said that, according to first principles the law should be the same as regards each. In my opinion, as I will hereafter point out, it is far too late to deal with this case upon such considerations; and, indeed, it seems to me, if it were not so, that the law relating to authorized agents with undisclosed principals behind them is far more anomalous than that relating to unauthorized agents with no principals behind them; and therefore the argument that the law should be held to be the same in each case does not appear to me to be of any weight, and I do not see why the law applicable to an unauthorized agent should be levelled down to that applicable to an authorized agent.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In my judgment to call the phalanx of judicial authority to which I must necessarily refer mere dicta is a misnomer altogether; and I must point out that, with the exception of Cockburn, C.J., the appellants cannot produce a single decision or even a dictum of a single judge in opposition to what they had called mere dicta, and which are all adverse to the appellants' contention.

I will now state how the present case arises. Roberts, one of the defendants, by contracts in writing in the months of April and May, 1898, purchased certain wheat of the plaintiffs. The only material part of these contracts as regards the point in hand is as follows: "Bought of Messrs. Durant & Co., London, . . . for F. O. Roberts, Esq., Wakefield, five hundred tons of wheat. Signed, Burgett & Newson, Brokers." The contract, it will be noticed, is made solely in the name of Roberts, so far as the buyer is concerned, and gives no intimation that it is made on any other person's behalf (which in fact it was not), nor did Roberts or the brokers assume that he or they were acting on any person's behalf excepting that of Roberts, when the contracts were made. Roberts having failed to take the wheat purchased by him, the plaintiffs, Durant & Co., thereupon sued him and also the firm of Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. for damages for breach of these contracts. Roberts let judgment go by default, and the question is, Can the plaintiffs now make Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. liable upon these contracts? It is admitted that Roberts had no authority whatever to enter into these contracts on behalf of Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. He had no principal behind him whatever. Roberts says that in his own mind he intended, when he entered into the contracts, that they should be on the joint account of himself and Keighley, Maxsted, & Co.; in other words, he expected and hoped that Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. would join him in the contracts after he had made them, as he in fact did, in his own name and on his own account.

To raise the point of law which has been argued before us, I will take it that Roberts is to be believed when he states what he expected and hoped Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. would do after he (Roberts) had entered into the contracts with the plaintiffs—that is, take a joint venture in the wheat speculation, and there is evidence fit to be left to a jury that Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. did afterwards desire to do so.

The question argued before us is this: In those circumstances are the contracts made by Roberts, not professing or purporting to be made for any one excepting himself, capable of being what is called ratified by Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. so as to make them parties to the contracts made by Roberts, in which case the plaintiffs, Durant & Co., can sue Keighley, Maxsted, & Co. upon those contracts, and the latter could sue Durant & Co. thereon?

To see how the law stands as to this, I will take the case of Saunderson v. Griffiths, 5 B. & C. 909, decided over seventy years ago, in the remarkable and unbroken sequence of authority which I am now coming to. There the question arose whether A., who was no party to the contract sued on, could take advantage of and sue upon the contract. The doctrine of ratification was resorted to on his behalf. The contract sued on purported to be made by an agent on behalf of B. and C., not of A. Holroyd, J., when dealing with the doctrine of ratification, at p. 915, said: "It was said, however, that he" (A.) "at a subsequent time assented to that agreement, and that such subsequent assent made it his agreement ab initio. There might have been some weight in that argument, if the agent at the time when he made the agreement had professed to have authority to act for the husband" (A.), "because then the subsequent ratification would have been a recognition of the authority which the agent assumed to have when he made the agreement. But here the husband never previously authorized the agent to make the agreement on his behalf, nor is he named as a party for whom the latter professed to act." It is said that this case is not in point, but I do not agree, for it shows that Holroyd, J., when dealing with ratification, distinctly says that the argument as to ratification would have had weight, if the agent had professed to act for A. at the time when he made the contract. In my judgment a man keeping an intention locked up in his own mind is not "professing" to act for another when he makes the contract, and to hold otherwise would not, I think, be in accord with plain language. Many years afterwards, in Bobbett v. Pinkett, 24 W. R. 711, 1 Ex. D. 368, at p. 375, Amphlett, B., expressly recognized what Holroyd, J., had said in Saunderson v. Griffiths, saying: "Suppose B., professing to act as A.'s agent, but in fact not authorized, enters into a contract with C.; would not A., by subsequently ratifying B.'s act, be entitled to sue C. on the contract in his own name?" This is a dictum, but the learned baron fully recognizes the judgment of Holroyd, J., which, I think, was no dictum at all, and again he lays stress upon the phrase "professing to act." In the year 1829 in the case of Vere v. Ashby, 10 B. & C. 288, Parke, J. (afterwards Parke, B.), states the rule as to ratification thus. He says: "The rule as to ratification applies only to the acts of one who professes to act as the agent of a person who afterwards ratifies. Here Rowland at the time when the first bill was discounted did not profess to act as the agent of Shaw." I have already said what I think is the meaning of the word "profess." It does not describe an undeclared intention locked up in a man's own mind. The appellant's counsel may call this a dictum if he likes. In my judgment it is a deliberate declaration of a most learned judge as to what is the rule of ratification according to the law of England, and, as will be seen hereafter, is repeated by the learned judge, when Lord Wensleydale, in the House of Lords. In Wilson v. Tumman, 6 M. & G. 236, in 1843, the question arose whether the defendant was liable for a seizure of the plaintiff's goods by the sheriff, and it was argued that, although the defendant had given no precedent authority to the sheriff to take the plaintiff's goods, yet he had ratified the taking after it was made. The sheriff when he took the plaintiff's goods did not purport to do so on behalf of Tumman, and Tindal, C.J., in delivering the unanimous judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, said: "The question, therefore, is a dry question of law, whether the subsequent ratification by this defendant of a taking under such circumstances is the same, in its consequences, as a precedent command of the defendant. And we think, under the authorities, and upon the reason of the thing itself, that it is not. That an act done for another by a person not assuming to act for himself, but for such other person, though without any precedent authority whatever, becomes the act of the principal if subsequently ratified by him, is the known and well-established rule of law. In that case the principal is bound by the act, whether it be for his detriment or his advantage, and whether it be founded on a tort or a contract, to the same extent as by, and with all the consequences which follow from, the same act done by his previous authority." The Chief Justice then cites the Year Book 7 Hen. 4 and Godbolt's Reports 109, and he adds: "They (the sheriff's officers) did not assume to act at the time as agents or bailiffs of the then plaintiff Tumman." The court therefore held the defendant not liable. The appellant's counsel calls this a mere dictum of the Court of Common Pleas. He may say so, but I do not agree with him. Moreover, twenty years afterwards, in the year 1862, in Woollen v. Wright, 10 W. R. 715, 1 H. & C. 554. in the Exchequer Chamber, consisting of Wightman, Williams, Crompton, Willes, Byles, and Blackburn, JJ., Wightman, J., delivering the unanimous judgment of the Exchequer Chamber, expressly approved of the decision in Wilson v. Tumman, and stated that it had "not been disputed until the present case." In the year 1850 Rolfe, B., when delivering the unanimous judgment of the Court of Exchequer in Bird v. Brown, 4 Exch. 786, again dealt with the doctrine of ratification. He said: "The doctrine omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato æquiparatur is one intelligible in principle and easy in its application when applied to cases of contract. If A. B., unauthorized by me, makes a contract on my behalf with J. S., which I afterwards recognize and adopt, there is no difficulty in dealing with it as having been originally made by my authority. J. S. entered into the contract on the understanding that he was dealing with me, and when I afterwards agreed to admit that such was the case, J. S. is precisely in the condition in which he meant to be . . . In cases of tort there is more difficulty. If A. B., professing to act by my authority, does that which primâ facie amounts to a trespass, and I afterwards assent to and adopt his act, there he is treated as having from the beginning acted by my authority, and I become a trespasser unless I can justify the act, which is to be deemed as having been done by my previous sanction. So far there is no difficulty in applying the doctrine of ratification even in cases of tort. . . . But the authorities go much further and show that in some cases where an act which, if unauthorized, would amount to a trespass, has been done in the name and on behalf of another, but without previous authority, the subsequent ratification may enable the party on whose behalf the act was done to take advantage of it, and to treat it as having been done by his direction." In the year 1857 Lord Wensleydale in the House of Lords, in Ridgway v. Wharton, 5 W. R. 804, 6 H. L. Cas. 238, at p. 296, said: "If a man, professing to act for another, makes a contract for him, and authority is afterwards given by that other, the authority given subsequently is equal to authority given before, according to the old maxim, Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato æquiparatur." Here I find the learned judge as Lord Wensleydale reiterating in the House of Lords what, as Parke, J., he had declared eight and twenty years before to be the rule as to ratification in the case of Vere v. Ashby. Again, in 1862, in Watson v. Swann, 11 C. B. N. S. 756, 31 L. J. C. P. 210, 10 W. R. C. L. Dig. 46, which was an action upon a policy of insurance entered into by John Smith in his own name, Erle, C.J., and Willes, J., deal with ratification as follows. The Chief Justice says: "It is clear law that no one can sue upon a contract unless it has been made by him or has been made by an agent professing to act for him, and whose act has been ratified by him." (There was no question in that case nor in the present of an authorized agent acting for an undisclosed principal.) "Now here the contract was not made by the plaintiff, nor did it purport to be made on his behalf; it purported to be made by Smith on his own behalf." Willes, J., said: "To entitle a person to sue upon a contract it must clearly be shown that he himself made it, or that it was made on his behalf by an agent authorized to act for him at the time, or whose act has been subsequently ratified and adopted by him. The law obviously requires that the person for whom the agent professes to act must be a person capable of being ascertained at the time. It is not necessary that he should be named, but there must be such a description of him as shall amount to a reasonable designation of the person intended to be bound by the contract." In the same year, 1862, in Ancona v. Marks, 10 W. R. 251, 7 H. & N. 687, and apparently when the judgment in the Exchequer Chamber in Woollen v. Wright had been delivered, Wilde, B., adopts and distinctly approves of the case of Wilson v. Tumman, and Martin B., in his judgment does the same and adds: "In the note to Armory v. Delamirie in Smith's Leading Cases there occurs the following passage: 'And on similar reasoning seems to rest the well-known doctrine that a subsequent ratification is tantamount to a prior command of an act done in the name of the party who ratifies. So, that, where a person, if present at the time, could lawfully command any act to be done, any other person, though either wholly without authority or exceeding the limits of his authority, would be justified in doing that act, provided he did it in the name, or as one acting by the authority, of the person entitled (whether to his advantage or not), and obtained his subsequent ratification.'" In 1868, Blackburn, J., in the case of Lord v. Lee, 16 W. R. 856, L. R. 3 Q. B. 404, when dealing with a question involving that of ratification, is in line with all those who had preceded him upon this point. That learned judge says: "Now it is also a principle of the common law that whenever an act is done by a person professing to act for another, though in reality he had no authority at the time, (subject to exceptions which do not affect the present case), the ratification of the other had the same effect as if the authority had been originally conferred, so as even to effect the vested rights of third persons. . . . It was argued for the defendant that such an enlargement of the time amounted only to the making of a fresh submission; but that is not so. The act having been done under the professed authority of the previous submission, the enlargement of the time is a ratification in the shape of a continuation of the original authority."

Are all the above mere dicta? I cannot think so.

In 1877 the point now taken was expressly raised and, as it seems to me, determined by Lord Cairns and Brett, L.J. (dissentiente Cockburn, C.J.), in the case of Matheson v. Kilburn, 1 Sm. L. C. (10th ed.) 349. In that case a person intending to buy on behalf of another, but without authority, and without avowing that he was acting for another, bought goods in his own name. Lord Cairns and Brett, L.J., were of opinion that a contract so made was incapable of ratification by the person for whom the buyer intended to buy, as the latter did not assume to buy on behalf of another. I know that Cockburn, C.J., dissented; but can anything be clearer than what the majority, Lord Cairns and Brett, L.J., held to be the law. This case is, I believe, only reported in 1 Smith Leading Cases (10th ed.), 349. The last case which I will cite, for those which I have cited are, in my opinion, ample, is that of Falcke v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Co., 35 W. R. 143, 34 Ch. D. 234, at p. 249. In that case Bowen, L.J., states clearly what I believe to be the law, and what, in my opinion, is shown by the cases I have had to cite at such length to be the law. The very learned Lord Justice said: "There is nothing more vague than the way in which the word 'adoption' is used in arguments at law, and sometimes ambiguous language, used about adoption, is imported into arguments about ratification. There is no such thing in law as adopting or ratifying anything except where there is the sanctioning of an act professedly done on your behalf in such a sense as to make you liable for it. A man can ratify that which purports to be done for him, but he cannot ratify a thing which purports to be done for somebody else. . . . There have been many attempts to make people liable by what is called adoption of a contract or of some other act which never purported to be made or done on their behalf, and such attempts have failed."

It will be seen that every one of the learned judges whose judgments I have cited from, when dealing with the question of ratification, have always used the following expressions as to when a contract made by an unauthorized agent is capable of being ratified by a stranger. The contract must (a) have "professed" to have been made on behalf of another; (b) have "purported" to have been made on behalf of another; (c) have been made "on behalf of another"; (d) have been made "in the name of another"; or (e) the agent must have "assumed to act on behalf of another"; every one of which expressions, in my judgment, is wholly inconsistent with an unauthorized agent keeping locked up in his own mind a mere undeclared intention that another shall afterwards participate in the contract.

It is not necessary, I think, to go through the text-books in which, as far as I have gone, I have found nothing inconsistent with what I believe to be the law as regards this doctrine of ratification, but I will cite two: one is Story on Agency, s. 251*a*, where it is laid down "that a ratification can only be effectual between the parties when the act is done by the agent 'avowedly' for or on account of the principal"; and the other is Kent's Commentaries, vol. 2, p. 616, note 1, Ratification, where the author says: "A person cannot ratify acts done without his authority unless they were done for him by a person assuming to act as his agent," and for that he cites Wilson v. Tumman and Watson v. Swann, both of which are now said to be mere dicta.

The appellants, in my judgment, as I have said before, are unable to produce a high authority during the last two or three hundred years, even if they can produce one before, which I doubt, excepting the judgment of Cockburn, C.J., dissented from by Lord Cairns and Brett, L.J., in support of the proposition they now contend for. They do produce the case of Soames v. Spencer, 1 D. & R. 32, in which it does not appear what was the form of contract sued on, and they also seize upon an expression of Parke, B., in the case of Foster v. Bates, as reported in 12 M. & W. 226, at p. 233, which is inconsistent with what I have cited of the learned judge's expressions as Parke, J., and Lord Wensleydale; but it appears from the contemporaneous reports of the case in 1 D. & L. 400, 3 L. J. Ex. 88, 7 Jur. 1093, that the expression of the learned judge is not accurately reported in 12 M. & W., for a material omission has therein been made, and when the accurate report of it is read, it is not in the appellants' favour.

In my judgment upon this doctrine of ratification the law has been settled for years. If I am to accede to the appellants' contention I should have to differ from and disagree with Lord Wensleydale in the House of Lords; the Exchequer Chamber, which I could not do even if I had desired to do so, which I do not; the Court of Appeal, consisting of Lord Cairns, Cockburn, C.J., and Brett, L.J., presided over by Lord Cairns, to which the same remark applies; the full Court of Common Pleas, presided over by Tindal, C.J.; the full Court of Exchequer, presided over by Rolfe, B.; and Parke, B., before he went to the House of Lords, Holroyd, J., Erle, C.J., Willes, J., Blackburn, J., Wilde, B., Martin, B., and Amphlett, B., and last but not least Bowen, L.J. With all submission to my learned brothers who disagree with me, I think even if I had the courage to try to differ from all these very learned judges, which I have not, it would not only be useless, but it would be most mischievous at this date to try to overturn what for years has been laid down as law by these most eminent judges without a single discordant voice, with the exception of Cockburn, L.J.; and in my judgment, for the reasons above, this appeal should be dismissed. As my brothers, however, disagree with me, the action must go down for a new trial.

COLLINS, L.J., read the following judgment: The question raised by this appeal is whether a contract made by a person in his own name, but intending to act for another in making it, though without authority from him, can be ratified by that other person, unless the intending agent disclosed to the other party at the time of making the contract that he was acting for someone else.

Roberts, the intending agent in this case, did not disclose to Durant & Co., the sellers, that he was acting otherwise than for himself, and Day, J., appears to have held that such non-disclosure rendered the contract incapable of ratification by the other defendants. In other words, that there can be no ratification by an undisclosed principal—I mean undisclosed in the sense that the existence of a principal has not been disclosed at the time of making the contract. This being the ground of decision, it is immaterial to consider whether there would be any difference as to the possibility of ratification where the intending agent who contracts as principal knows that he has no authority or that he is exceeding a given authority, and the case where he is under a mistaken belief that he has authority, since the right of ratification is negatived in either case. For reasons which I will give more in detail later on, I think the point has never been actually decided, though there are numerous dicta upon it, which have become the foundation of statements in text-books more or less adverse to the appellants' contention; but it is raised now for actual decision, and I think it cannot be satisfactorily determined without examining how far these dicta are consonant with principle, and if not, whether they have been acted upon for so long as to render it undesirable for this court, at all events, to interfere with them.

It is clear law that an act done or a contract made by a person stating that he is acting for another, but without authority, can be ratified by that other. What, then, is the essence of this right to ratify? Does it depend on the intention with which the act was done by the would-be agent, of which what he says at the time is merely evidence, or is the open avowal of the fact by him not merely evidence, but itself an essential condition of the right to ratify? Ratification is equivalent to a prior command, and, as between the would-be agent and the person ratifying, it can make no possible difference whether the former has avowed his intention or not. The ratifier's command, had it been given beforehand, would have been equally effectually carried out, whether the agent had contracted in his own name or in terms on behalf of the principal. The intention to contract for the principal must certainly exist in the mind of the agent, since in our law the act of a mere stranger cannot be ratified. That would be, not ratification, but adoption, which our law does not admit. But, given intention existing in the mind of the would-be agent, it seems impossible to suggest any reason why from the standpoint of the agent and the ratifier avowal of it to the other contracting party should be essential, unless the rights of the principal against the other contracting party are affected by it. It would seem, then, that the reason, if any, must be sought in some difference caused to the other contracting party by reason of the non-disclosure. But where the law admits, as our law does admit, a person who has authorized another to make a contract on his behalf, to sue and be sued upon it, although he is not named in the contract and his agent contracts as principal without disclosing that he has a principal, every person who makes a contract with another (excluding, of course, certain special personal contracts) must be taken to know that he may have to deal with some other person on whose behalf the contract is made. He cannot complain, therefore, of non-disclosure. He loses nothing, and gains an option of suing either the party named in his contract or the principal behind him. Indeed, any ground of supposed alteration of the position of the other contracting party that might be urged in support of the view that disclosure as well as intention on the part of the agent is necessary, is succinctly disposed of by Rolfe, B., in a well-known passage in delivering the judgment of the court in Bird v. Brown, 4 Exch., at p. 798, a passage other parts of which are usually relied on in support of the necessity of disclosure by the agent. He says: "If A. B. unauthorized by me makes a contract on my behalf with J. S., which I afterwards recognize and adopt, there is no difficulty in dealing with it as having been originally made by my authority. J. S. entered into the contract on the understanding that he was dealing with me, and when I afterwards agreed to admit that such was the case, J. S. is precisely in the condition in which he meant to be, or, if he did not believe A. B. to be acting for me, his condition is not altered by my adoption of the agency, for he may sue A. B. as principal at his option, and has the same equities against me if I sue which he would have had against A. B." It would seem, then, that neither from the point of view of the ratifier or of the other party to the contract is there any solid reason why disclosure by the would-be agent should be essential.

But it has been suggested that the nature of ratification itself presupposes a contract purporting to bind the ratifier. I can find no such limitation in the word. I think it does involve the idea of something which was intended to be done on behalf of the ratifier, and which needs nothing but confirmation, not to create it ab integro, but merely to give it validity. It does not involve the existence of a contract stating anything more on its face than would have been necessary if there had been actual prior authority. Is there anything in the word "ratification" itself to make it inapplicable to a case where an agent, believing he has authority, has made a contract intending to do it for a principal but in his own name and without disclosing that he is agent? It is clear law that a contract may be ratified by a person unknown to the would-be agent himself, who contracting in his own name discloses the fact that he is acting for another. It cannot be contended, therefore, that it is essential to ratification that all the terms of the contract (in cases of contract) should have been already expressed either by words or in writing. This shows that what is essential is what is intended, and not what is expressed, and, so long as the form is capable of covering what was really intended, there is nothing in the nature of ratification itself to make it inapplicable to such a case.

The doctrine of ratification would seem, as its name imports, to have come into our law from a Roman source; but, so far as I am aware, no argument can be drawn from the Digest that the person acting without authority in the affairs of another must avow that he is acting for him in order to let in ratification. On the contrary, it would seem that the contemplatio was, in that as in many analogous cases, the essential point. In Dig. 3, 5, ss. 11, 12, we find the phrase—Ratihabitio constituet tuum negotium quod ab initio tuum non erat sed tuâ contemplatione gestum. The instance to which this observation is appended, the collection of a debt, may have involved avowal, though I am not clear that it did, but the point is that contemplatio is made the test.

Another illustration is given: "If I exact payment from a debtor of Titius, believing that you are the heir of Titius, whereas in fact Seius was his heir, and you afterwards ratify it, reciprocal rights will arise between you and me. For, though the affair was not really yours, ratification gets over this, and it is deemed to be yours as though you were in fact the heir." It seems here that there could have been no avowal of intention to act on the part of the person whom he thought to be heir; but the ratification was effective to constitute it the act of the person for whom he in fact intended to act, though the person was not the heir. In the same article it is pointed out that the rights of a negotiorum gestor—that is, a person who intervenes without authority in the affairs of another (cf. Hunter's Roman Law (3rd ed.), 661, 664), will depend on the contemplatio—i.e., the intention with which he acted, whether, for instance, in a given case he has acted from friendship for a son or slave, vel eorum contemplatione, or looking to the father or master. His mental attitude is made the criterion of his rights, and this is so likewise where ratification has followed.

In the case of torts the Digest does not support the view that the act must avowedly be done on the part of the ratifier. After dealing with the case of a true and a false procurator, it says (43, 16, 1, s. 14): "Sed et si quod alius dejecit, ratum habuero; sunt qui putent secundum Sabinum et Cassium (qui ratihabitionem mandato comparant) me videri dejecisse, interdicto que isto teneri: et hoc verum est. Rectius enim dicitur, in maleficio ratihabitionem mandato comparari." This is repeated in effect in 50, 17, 152; and in 50, 17, 60, which apparently applies to tort or contract, the words are pro se gestum, which would cover the case of intention without avowal. Indeed, so far from the Digest supporting the view that there must be actual statement of intention to contract for the ratifier, it was a moot point among the commentators whether even a thing done alieno nomine might not be ratified; and some were of opinion that it could: see Van Leeuwen's Corpus Juris Civilis, edition of 1663, 3, 5, note 98, p. 109. Later on, however, the doctrine was expressed in the Papal Decretal mentioned in Serjeant Manning's note to Wilson v. Tumman in the form, Ratum quis habere non potest quod ipsius nomine non est gestum. This in its ordinary meaning does not necessarily imply avowal on the part of the agent, since by a common Latin idiom a thing may be said to be done nomine alicujus where merely "on account of" is meant, and the possibility even of actual naming is excluded. That would be the name under which he would enter it in his books, if he had to record it, and was frequently necessary in Roman law. Instances of this usage are given in Facciolati. No doubt the commentator quoted in the same note regards it as requiring the name of the proposed principal to be actually stated, giving reasons from the supposed hardship on the other party to the contract which I have already shown can have no place in our law. This maxim is apparently the foundation of the paragraph in Story cited for the respondents. Pothier, Obligations (Part I, c. 1, s. 1, Art. 5, s. 4 (75)) in one passage uses the phrase "in the name of," and in another (ibid 77) "assuming to do so on my (the ratifier's) behalf." "Assuming," of course, is a neutral word amounting merely to "taking upon himself" to act for me, and "in the name of" is open to the observations already made. But, if these authorities do make the avowal of the name essential, they would seem to have gone a step beyond the Roman law, while purporting to follow it; and the early English authorities seem to be more consonant with what I conceive to be the Roman law.

In the Anon. case, Godbolt 109, following the case 7 Hen. 4, Hil. 34 (b), emphasis is laid on the intent with which the act sought to be ratified was done. "Can he," says Anderson, C.J., "so father his misdemeanour upon another? He cannot, for once he was a trespasser, and his intent was manifest." This seems to point to the intention being the essential and the manifestation being only the evidence of it, and I think this view is confirmed by later authorities. In Fuller v. Trimwell, 2 Leon. 215, an action of replevin, decided on the authority of the case in 7 Hen. 4, it was objected that the averment that the defendant took as bailiff to another could not be traversed. The court say, "and as to that which has been objected, that if this traverse be allowed the meaning of the party shall be drawn in question—i.e., the meaning of him who took the cattel, the same is not any mischief, for so it is in other cases as in the case of recaption." Buller's case, 1 Leon. 50, is to the same effect. These cases seem conclusive that the issue to be tried is the intention. If so, what was said or done at the time would only be material as evidence of the intention of which there might be other conclusive evidence. And this quite accords with the attitude of our older lawyers in analogous cases. For instance, in the case of a person who, entering under a licence given by law afterwards abused it; "for," says Coke in the Six Carpenters' case, 8 Rep. 146 (a), "the law adjudges by the subsequent act quo animo, or to what intent, he entered, for acta exteriora indicant interiora secreta, citing 11 Hen. 4, 75 (b). The passage in the Institutes, 4 Inst., c. 73, p. 317, where Lord Coke quotes the maxim in the form in which it is current in England is quite consistent with these early authorities, and gives no support to the notion that actual statement by the agent is necessary. "He that receiveth a trespasse and agreeth to a trespasse after it be done is no trespasser, unless the trespasse was done to his use or for his benefit, and then his agreement subsequent amounteth to a commandment, for in that case omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato æquiparatur."

Of the more modern cases, the earlier ones follow on the same lines. Hull v. Pickersgill, 1 B. & B. 282, decided in 1819, is really an authority that avowal is not necessary, if from the facts, of which the subsequent application for ratification is itself some evidence, "the interests of the ratifier were remembered in the seizure." There creditors, who had become such subsequent to the bankruptcy, seized the goods of the plaintiff. They knew the property in the goods was in the assignees, but did not know who they were, and "hazarded" their consent. There was no evidence that they avowed their intention to seize for the assignees, and the citation by Parke, J., from the Year Book, whether correct or not, shows that the court were dealing with the case on this footing. Nevertheless the court held the inference to be properly drawn that they intended to act for the assignees, and upheld the ratification. Soames v. Spencer, decided in 1822, a case of contract, seems to support the same view. There one of two joint owners sold goods through a broker without authority, and without giving any indication, so far as can be gathered from the report, of an intention to act in any interest but his own. His co-owner at first refused to ratify, but afterwards consented, and joined in suing the vendees, who denied his right. The ratification was upheld. Holroyd, J., cited a maxim which is material in the present discussion: "omne actum ab agentis intentione est judicandum." In Foster v. Bates, decided in 1843, the question was whether the administrator of an intestate could ratify a sale made by the agent of the intestate after the death of the latter for the benefit of the estate. It was held that he could, and Parke, B., in delivering the judgment of the court says: "The sale was made by a person who intended to act as agent for the person, whoever he might happen to be, who legally represented the intestate's estate; and it was ratified by the plaintiff after he became administrator; and, when one means to act as agent for another, a subsequent ratification by the other is always equivalent to a prior command; nor is it any objection that the intended principal was unknown at the time to the person who intended to be the agent." This case, therefore, also gives no countenance to the view that avowal on the part of the intending agent is necessary, nor do the words added in the report in the Jurist relied upon by the respondents—viz., "and acts accordingly," seem to me to make any difference. But two cases decided before Foster v. Bates were said to be authorities for the necessity of avowal. It will be found, I think, when examined, that they do not touch the point. In the first, Saunderson v. Griffiths, decided in 1826, an agreement of letting had been made in writing by one Murray "agent for and on behalf of" two named ladies, one of whom, Mrs. Saunderson, was married. The question was whether the husband of Mrs. Saunderson, who had received rents under the agreement, had thereby become a party to it, so as to be properly joined as plaintiff in an action against the tenant for breach of some of the stipulations. It was held that he had not. It was held that no parol evidence was admissible to explain or vary the contract, and Bayley, J., adds: "The husband does not appear to have had any authority himself to enter into an agreement or to authorize anybody to execute it on his behalf. He was a mere stranger to the instrument." Holroyd, J., after stating that the agent was authorized to act for the two ladies only, says: "If, indeed, he had assumed the power of including the husband as a party, the subsequent assent of the latter might have had relation back." Apart from the objection to admitting evidence to vary the written contract, it was quite clear that the agent had no intention whatever of contracting on behalf of the husband. The case has no bearing, therefore, on this discussion, neither do any phrases in the judgments support the respondents' contention. The word "assume" is neutral. The second case is Vere v. Ashby, decided in 1829. The point there was whether a person who had become a partner in a firm after a bill had been indorsed by one of the partners in the then partnership name (which had not been changed on the introduction of the new partner) had made himself liable on the bill by ratification. It was held that he had not. Here again it was quite clear that the partner who indorsed could not have intended to indorse on behalf of a person who was not a member of the firm. It is in reference to these facts that Parke, J., says: "The rule as to ratification applies only to the acts of one who professes to act as the agent of a person who afterwards ratifies," and I think it is straining the meaning of the learned judge to suggest that in such connection he meant by using the word "profess" to indicate more than that the agent had no intention, did not in fact take upon himself to contract on behalf of a stranger. Clearly no more was necessary. In 1843, the same year as Foster v. Bates, was decided Wilson v. Tumman, which was much relied upon by the respondents. This case again, so far as the decision itself is concerned, does not touch the present case. The point was whether an execution creditor could by ratification make himself liable for a trespass by the sheriff's officer in executing the writ. It was held that the sheriff was the agent of the law and not of the creditor—i.e., that he did not in fact act on behalf of the creditor, but of someone else, and therefore that the creditor could not ratify what was not done on his behalf. The decision therefore is in full accordance with the earlier cases above mentioned; but some of the expressions used in the judgment of Tindal, C.J., might, apart from their context, seem to go further. He says: "An act done for another by a person not assuming to act for himself, but for such other person, may be ratified." He cites the cases in the Year Book and the cases in Godbolt above referred to in support of this proposition, showing that what he is really dealing with is the case where the alleged agent has made clear his intention of acting for someone other than the ratifier. He does not, as it seems to me, intend to decide or pronounce an uncalled-for opinion on the question that was left open in that case, as appears by the words in Godbolt, ad hoc non fait responsum. Speaking of the sheriff's officers, he goes on to say, "They did not assume to act as agents or bailiffs of the then plaintiff Tumman, but they acted as the servants of another—namely, the sheriff, by virtue of the process directed to him by the court." It is perhaps doubtful whether by "assume" in this passage he means more than "take upon themselves," which is the literal meaning of the word. Next comes Bird v. Brown, decided in 1850, also much relied on by the respondent. There, again, the point now raised did not come in question. The act ratified had been done in terms on behalf of the person who ratified, and the only question was whether the ratification could undo the rights already acquired in the interval. Rolfe, B., makes a general statement of the law of ratification both in the case of contract and of tort. So far as he deals with contracts there is nothing to hurt the appellants or support the respondent's case. He says simply, "If A. B., unauthorized by me, makes a contract on my behalf with J. S., I may ratify it." He then adds a sentence already cited in the latter part of this judgment by which he shows that by "on my behalf" he does not mean in terms expressed; for he adds, "or if he did not believe A. B. to be acting for me, his condition is not altered by my adoption of the agency, for he may sue A. B. as principal, &c." Now since he could not sue A. B. as principal, if A. B. had in terms contracted "on behalf of"—i.e., as agent only, and as he did not believe A. B. was contracting for me, there could have been no avowal. This, therefore, seems so far to be a clear authority that an undisclosed principal on whose behalf the agent had not avowed intention to contract could nevertheless ratify. In dealing with torts, however, he uses the phrases "professing to act by my authority," and further on "in the name and on behalf of another," which last phrase at all events seems to contemplate in the case of torts actual statement of the name. I think the explanation is that his attention was not really directed to the point, and that the words are somewhat loosely used. He is certainly right in saying, as he does, that ratification may take place in such circumstances, which indeed were the actual circumstances in the case before him, but this, of course, falls very far short of saying that it cannot take place, if those precise conditions do not concur. Woollen v. Wright, decided in 1862 in the Exchequer Chamber, also cited for the respondents, merely affirms the proposition of Wilson v. Tumman, that the sheriff's officers do not act as agents of the execution creditor, and adds nothing to this controversy. In the same year, 1862, Watson v. Swann, also cited for the respondents, was decided. In that case, also, the facts did not raise the present question. Smith, whose act the plaintiff claimed to ratify, had effected a policy to cover risks in which he had no reason to suppose the plaintiff was interested, and had no intention whatever of contracting on his behalf. It was held, therefore, that the plaintiff could not claim any benefit by ratification; but again some phrases in the judgments are relied on by the respondents. Erle, C.J., says in the report in the Law Journal: "No one can sue on a contract but the person who made it or the person who ratified what purported to be a contract made by his agent"; but in the next sentence he uses a phrase which shows that after all the intention, the "contemplation" of the Roman law, is the governing consideration. He says: "A very wide extension has been given to the principle to which I have adverted of the parties to a contract in respect of a policy of insurance, and persons who could not be named at the time, if intended to come within it, and so capable of being ascertained, have been allowed to be entitled to the benefit of the same; but they must have been such as were contemplated at the time the policy was made." This view, which seems to be in entire accord with the Roman law and the early English authorities—namely, that the right of any particular individual to ratify, in the case of contracts, at all events, depends on the "intention," the "contemplation," of the agent—leaves very small place for the operation of avowal; since, provided a sufficient general description be given, the particular individual who may take the benefit of the contract will depend on the unavowed intention of the agent. Indeed, the agent need not even have any particular individual in his mind, since it is assumed that he could not name him. Then comes the phrase used by Willes, J., which was so much pressed by the respondents. He says: "The law obviously requires that the person for whom the agent professes ('purports' in the Law Journal) to act must be a person capable of being ascertained at the time. It is not necessary that he should be named, but there must be such a description of him as shall amount to a reasonable designation of the person intended to be bound by the contract. . . . In the ordinary policy the broker who effects it declares that he does so as well in his own name as for and in the name or names of all and every other person or persons to whom the same doth, may, or shall appertain, &c.; and the person who sues upon it must be either the broker by whom it is effected or the person on whose behalf it was intended to be effected; no subsequently acquired interest will give a stranger a right to sue upon the policy." Here, again, the governing factor is made to be the intention. What the learned judge's mind is addressed to is the impossibility of introducing under general words wide enough to cover him, some person who was really not contemplated—intended—at the time. He adds further on, "It is necessary that underwriters should know with whom they are contracting," an observation which may well be applicable to the peculiar contract of insurance, which contains in it some of that personal element which I have before referred to, but is certainly not applicable to ordinary cases of purchase, such as we are now concerned with, where the law undoubtedly is that the seller need not know whether he is dealing with anyone behind the buyer or not. Looking, then, at the nature of the cases these learned judges were dealing with, the limited scope which they leave to avowal, and the supreme importance which they give to intention, even in the special contract of insurance, they seem to support rather than oppose the contention of the appellants in a case where any notion that it is necessary that the seller should know who the buyer is must be eliminated from the discussion. The passage from the speech of Lord Wensleydale in Ridgway v. Wharton, must be read with reference to the case with which he was dealing, which was that of an agent contracting in terms for another person from whom he had no authority, and who did not, as the learned lord considered, ratify. His words are: "If a man professing to act for another makes a contract for him, and authority is afterwards given by that other," there is effectual ratification; and he adds: "If a contract is made by an agent, whether by authority before given or afterwards by ratifying the contract, it legally binds the principal." Read in the light of the facts he was considering, it is obvious that these remarks have no bearing on the present question. I now come to the observations of Bowen, L.J., in Falcke v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Co., cited by the respondents. There, also, the question raised had no relation to the point before us. There Emanuel, who had mortgaged a policy of life assurance to Falcke, paid a premium thereon on his own account without any authority or request from Falcke. Falcke's representative afterwards attempted to take the benefit of the policy, and the question to which Bowen, L.J.'s, observations were addressed was whether Emanuel under these circumstances could recover the premium from Falcke's representative on the footing that by claiming a benefit on the policy she had ratified the payment of the premium. This premium having been in fact, as the court held, paid by Emanuel as owner of the equity of redemption, and not for Falcke's estate, the present question never arose for discussion; and when Bowen, L.J., says that you can only ratify an act "professedly done on your behalf in such a sense as to make you liable for it," he is distinguishing adoption of an act not done on your behalf, which is impossible, and ratification of an act which was done on your behalf, which the law permits. It is doubtful whether by the words "professedly" and "purporting," which he uses in the next sentence, he meant to deal with anything but the actual intention, which in the case before him was to pay it for Emanuel's own benefit. He says: "A man can ratify that which purports to be done for himself; but he cannot ratify that which purports to be done for somebody else." The "purporting" in the case before him was that Emanuel being owner of the equity of redemption paid the premium. He does not appear to have accompanied it with any statement at all, but the circumstances founded the inevitable inference that he paid it for himself and no one else. Purporting, therefore, in the last line of the sentence cannot be intended to mean more than "assuming" or "meaning."

I have now, I think, examined all the cases relied on by the respondents except Matheson v. Kilburn, of which there is no report except the short note in Smith's Leading Cases, and this is the only case, so far as I know, in which the point before us was actually raised for decision. It was not, however, decided, though two very eminent judges seem to have favoured the respondent's contention, while Cockburn, C.J., took the other view.

No doubt the law has been laid down repeatedly in text-books in language copied from the various judgments in the cases which I have just examined, but I have not found the point explicitly raised and considered in any of them. There may also, no doubt, be other cases where language similar to that quoted has been used, but I think the passages cited are the fountain-head from which these observations are drawn. One general observation applies to them and to the text-books. They profess to deal with the circumstances under which ratification may take place, and name the most obvious conditions; and in similar general language they describe when it cannot, of which the most obvious instance would be where the act is professedly done for another person. Hence the antithesis which so frequently recurs between an act "purporting" to be done for someone else, and purporting to be done for the ratifier; while the intermediate case of an act neutral in itself, and carrying no indication on whose behalf it is done, is left unconsidered. I have already pointed out that the passage in Story, s. 251 (a), is founded on Wilson v. Tumman, and Serjeant Manning's note thereon, having been added to the original after the decision of that case. Wilson v. Tumman I have, I think, shown does not justify it, and there are, I think, good grounds for supposing that the Latin words nomine ipsius in the rule quoted in the note were not meant to convey more than "on behalf of," or to do more than express the law of the Digest, though the commentator quoted in the note puts the literal interpretation upon them. That the learned serjeant himself did not treat the present point as settled in English law would seem clear, since in a special note to Tindal, C.J.'s, citation of the case in Godbolt he calls attention to Shuttleworth's question, "What if he distrain generally not showing his intent," to which non fait responsum.

It seems to me, therefore, that the supposed rule is not based on any sound reason; that, though supposed to be drawn from Roman law, it finds no support in Roman law; that it is opposed to the early English authorities; that there is no actual decision where it was raised and decided against the appellants; that the dicta which are supposed to establish it were pronounced alio intuitu, and in many instances, when carefully examined with their context, either do not support it or involve the contrary; and that if it is to be supported at all it must be rested on grounds of convenience only, and not of principle.

As to convenience, it is, no doubt, a rule of English law that a contract really made for one person cannot be adopted by another, and there may be room for violations of this rule, if it is to depend on what is passing in the mind of the person who makes the contract, who is to be bound by it. But if this be an inconvenience, it is one which the law already tolerates, in that it allows a contract for an undisclosed principal by a person who contracts as principal himself; furthermore, the case would be rare where no other evidence would be available but the statement of the agent himself. But, even if there were inconvenience, it would not equal that which would be caused by an arbitrary limitation in the case of contracts for undisclosed principals. That it is arbitrary seems to be obvious, when it is realized how far the law has admittedly gone, and where it is that, according to the contention of the respondents, it stops short. A person may contract in his own name, and yet give rights to and against a third person from whom he had prior authority, though he gave no indication whatever to the other party to the contract that such person existed. He may by a similar contract, but without prior authority, if he avows that he intends to act for someone else, give a right to ratify to a person whom he could not name if asked, provided such person is capable of being ascertained, and that he answers the description of person for whom he intended to contract (see passage from the judgment of Erle, C.J., above cited). What substance is there then in avowal as a vital fact when the party of whom avowal is required is not obliged to know the name of the person for whom he intends to act, and the standard by which the right to ratify is to be tried is what description of person the unauthorized agent contemplated at the time of the contract? The doctrine of undisclosed principal is a substantive part of the law of agency, and, as far as I can trace it, it is as old in our law as the doctrine of ratification itself. There is no reason, therefore, why it should be subject to an anomalous exception. On the whole, therefore, though I am sensible of the great weight due to the opinion of the two judges who formed the majority in Matheson v. Kilburn, 1 Sm. L. C. (10th ed.) 349, as well as that of my brother A. L. Smith in the present case, I cannot regard that as a decision binding this court, though it is the only case in which the point was ever actually raised for determination. I am bound therefore to decide the case in accordance with what I regard to be principle and common sense.

ROMER, L.J., read the following judgment: The judgments already delivered have dealt so fully with all the cases in any way bearing on the question of law arising in this case that it would be useless for me again to review in detail those cases. I need only say that, having considered the authorities referred to, I come to the same conclusion as Collins, L.J. I think that the question is open to us for decision, and ought to be decided by us according to principle. So far as I can ascertain the question has not been decided in any case contrary to the view expressed by Collins, L.J.; and, in my opinion, the many observations of learned and distinguished judges relied on by the respondents, when carefully considered, and when the circumstances of the cases in which they were made are remembered, do not amount to expressions of judicial opinion which render it undesirable for us to treat the question as an open one. With the exception of what was said in Matheson v. Kilburn almost all the observations were made in reference to facts which did not give rise to the question we have to decide, and were not made in contemplation of the question; and I think the reason why in those observations you find it often stated that, for his act to be capable of ratification, the agent must have "professed" or "purported" to act on behalf of, or must have acted in the name of the principal is because the judges wished to guard themselves against the supposition that where in fact a person did not contract on behalf of a particular principal he could afterwards at his own will and pleasure create or select a principal. In the case of Matheson v. Kilburn the question we have to decide was treated as an open one, and was left undecided; and I certainly cannot assume that, had it fallen to be decided, Lord Cairns, C., and Brett, L.J., would have decided it contrary to the view herein expressed.

I wish, further, to observe that the question ought not to be stated as one depending merely on what passes in the mind of the person said to be an agent at the time he contracts. Such a statement only tends to obscure the real question we have to decide. It may well be, if a person has nothing to support his contention that he contracted on behalf of a principal beyond his assertion that he had it in his mind so to contract, that he will fail to prove his contention as a matter of fact. The question of law, to deal with it fairly, may be stated as follows: Where a person makes a contract which is not under seal or by bill of exchange, without disclosing to the person with whom he contracts that he is acting as agent, and it is proved or admitted that in fact he entered into the contract on behalf of a principal, but without authority, cannot that principal ratify the act of the agent so as to place himself in the same position he would have been in as an undisclosed principal if he had previously authorized the agent to make the contract? That is really the question we have to decide, and it is one which, in my opinion, ought to be decided according to the principles of law applicable, and ought not to be treated as concluded by authority.

In order to illustrate what I have mentioned is the true question to be decided, I will give an example of a case clearly raising the point of law as stated by me. Some of the directors of a limited company discover that certain goods are for sale, and that it is of importance that the company should buy the goods at the price at which they are offered; but time presses, and the contract of purchase has to be made at once. The directors in question have no time to convene a meeting of the board, and there are other directors besides themselves. They feel no doubt that the contract is one beneficial to the company, and one sure to be duly ratified. They accordingly resolve that one of their number shall enter, and he does enter, into the contract, in his own name but on behalf of the company. The fact that he has contracted on behalf of the company is not disclosed to the vendor, but the director acknowledges in writing, signed at the time and addressed to his co-directors, that he has bought on behalf of the company. The company subsequently, at a board meeting duly convened, purports to ratify the directors' act, and adopt the contract. After that, when the vendor discovers the facts, can he not treat the company as an undisclosed principal and liable on the contract, or must it be said that it was impossible for the company to ratify?

This being the nature of the question we have to decide, it appears to me that on principle it ought to be held that ratification is possible, and that to hold the contrary would be to establish an anomaly in the law, and moreover a useless one. Collins, L.J., has dealt fully in his judgment with the reasons why ratification should be allowed by law in such a case, and I do not intend to travel again over all the ground covered by him. I agree with him in his observations and conclusions, and will only add the following remarks.

It is of course settled law that in a contract between A. and B., not being one under seal or by bill of exchange, if B. had at the time authority to do so, he might contract on behalf of an undisclosed principal. It is equally clear that if a person contracts on behalf of a principal, but without authority at the time, then, as a rule, the principal may subsequently ratify what has been done, and we know that at law ratification relates back, and puts the agent in the same position as he would have been in if he had originally acted with authority. It seems to me to follow that, in the case we have to consider, we ought to hold, on principle, that ratification should be allowed, so as to place the ratifier in the position of an undisclosed principal. To hold otherwise would certainly establish an exception to the general law of ratification. I quite agree that it does not of necessity follow, because a certain view would appear logically to be the proper deduction from previously decided cases or from well-known principles, that that view ought to be the law. But I think that a logical inference ought not to be disregarded, an exception to a general rule ought not to be established, unless on strong grounds. In the case I am considering I can find no sufficient reason why ratification should not be allowed. The agent cannot complain if ratification be allowed, nor the principal. They both knew what they were doing when they assumed the positions they did. Nor is the person contracted with really injured. It makes no real difference to him whether an undisclosed principal had previously or subsequently authorized the agent. It is rather to his advantage if he discovers subsequently to the contract that there is a previously undisclosed principal at the back of the person with whom he contracted. He has his option which to sue; and, if he be sued, he has the same rights against the undisclosed principal as he had against the agent. It has been decided to be no legal hardship on him to allow the undisclosed principal to appear where the agent had been previously authorized, and it cannot be any hardship on him to allow the appearance of the undisclosed principal who has subsequently ratified the act of his previously unauthorized agent.

It is said that a difficulty may arise in proving whether a party to a contract did or did not in fact contract on behalf of another when not previously authorized; for that fact might depend simply on what was passing at the time in the mind of the party. But to this objection there are several answers. First, in most cases of ratification of the kind I am considering there would be no such difficulty of proof of intent on the part of the agent; as, for example, in cases like that of the directors of a limited company suggested above, and cases when it is clearly shown that the agent thought he had authority at the time but subsequently found that he was mistaken: and the mere difficulty of proof in certain cases ought not to prevent ratification as a rule being allowed, especially seeing (as already mentioned) that ratification is really not injurious to anyone concerned. Secondly, as previously pointed out, the difficulty of proof in special cases is met by the consideration that, if the proof of the agent's intent be challenged, those who allege the intent must satisfactorily prove it, and it may well be, if no evidence is forthcoming beyond the agent's statement as to what he had in his mind at the time, that the intent will be held not established; and thirdly, similar difficulties of proof might arise in the case of an agent alleged to be acting at the time with authority on behalf of an undisclosed principal. That authority might be verbal, and the principal might be dead when the question of authority has to be proved, or he might refuse to give evidence, or say he did not remember, or deny the agent's statement that he had authority; and the fact whether or not the agent did really contract on behalf of the alleged principal as well as the fact of authority to do so might both be very difficult of proof, and depend as to the first fact upon his evidence as to his intention. Yet such difficulties of proof afford no ground for impeaching the established rule of law as to undisclosed principals whose agents act at the time with authority. So that, even viewing the question from the mere standpoint of convenience, I can find no sufficient reason for refusing to allow the doctrine of ratification to be applied in the case we have to decide. I ought perhaps to refer to the suggestion that, because in the contract no principal is mentioned, it must be taken that there is a representation that no such principal exists. That suggestion, in my opinion, cannot be supported. Had it been well founded, the courts would never have recognized the existence of the undisclosed principal even in cases of his having previously given authority to the agent. For those reasons it appears to me that the question of law falling to be decided by us ought to be decided in favour of the appellants.

In the special circumstances of this action I think we are all agreed that, if the point of law is not against the appellants, there was evidence which should have been left to the jury in support of the plaintiffs' contention that the defendant Roberts contracted on behalf of himself and his co-defendants. This being so, in my opinion there should be a new trial.

Application granted.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Thorowgood, Tabor, & Hardcastle.

Solicitors for the defendants, Chester, Broome, & Griffithes, for Holden, Sons, & Hodgson, Hull.

---

App. Bankruptcy.
(Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) April 27; May 4.

In re A. B. & Co.
Ex parte J. M. RICHARDSON. (a.)

Bankruptcy — Petition — Interim receiver — Special manager—Petition ultimately dismissed—Account of special manager—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 10, 12.

The official receiver in bankruptcy is entitled out of the debtor's estate to all expenses properly incurred by him during the pendency of a bankruptcy petition, whether by himself personally in the capacity of interim manager under section 10 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, or by a special manager appointed by him under section 12 of the same statute. And this is true even in cases in which the petition is ultimately dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

Where a bankruptcy petition is presented, and an interim receiver and a special manager of the debtor's property are appointed pending its hearing, the validity of these appointments and of acts done under them, so long as they endure, is not affected even in cases in which the petition is ultimately dismissed for lack of jurisdiction.

This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Linklater, given on the 2nd of April, 1900.

The appeal raised an important question as to whether the official receiver is entitled out of the debtors' estate to the expenses properly incurred by him whilst acting as interim receiver during the pendency of a bankruptcy petition, in cases in which the petition is ultimately dismissed.

On the 18th of January, 1900, a bankruptcy petition was presented against A. B. & Co., an American firm trading both in America and England. Pending the hearing of the petition, the official receiver was appointed interim receiver of the debtors' property under section 10 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883; and on the application of the petitioning creditors, he appointed a special manager of the debtors' business in England under section 12 of the same statute. The special manager carried on the business till the 28th of February, when the petition was finally dismissed by the Court of Appeal on the ground that in this particular case the English court had no jurisdiction (ante, p. 424, [1900] 1 Q. B. 541).

On the 2nd of April Mr. Registrar Linklater ordered that the sum of £409, which had been paid over to the official receiver by the special manager during his managership and represented the gross receipts of the business for the period in question, should be handed over to A. B. & Co., without allowing any deduction for wages and other necessary sums of money which had been paid by the special manager out of his own pocket, and which he had not been recouped.

From this order the special manager and the petitioning creditors now appealed.

---

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Muir Mackenzie, for the appellants.—Two courses only are open to the respondents. (1) They are free to ignore altogether the special manager's trading and its results (including the whole sum of £409), to treat him as a trespasser, to demand back their property, and to claim damages for its conversion. Such an action, however, will not lie against even those creditors on whose initiative the special manager was appointed, for the manager is in no sense their agent, but the officer of the court: Peruvian Guano Co. v. Dreyfus Bros., [1892] A. C. 166, per Lord Field, at p. 199, 40 W. R. Dig. 69; Ex parte Vaughan, 33 W. R. 151, 14 Q. B. D. 25. (2) Or they may agree to recognize, and to take the benefit of, the manager's trading; but in that case they must allow him his properly incurred expenses, and the accounts must be passed in the ordinary way just as are the accounts of a receiver: Dowse v. Gorton, 40 W. R. 17, [1891] A. C. 190, per Lord Macnaghten, at p. 203; Whitmore v. Black, 13 M. & W. 507; In re Taylor, Ex parte Board of Trade, 51 L. T. Rep. 711, 1 Morrell 264, 33 W. R. Dig. 20.

C. A. Russell, Q.C., and Carrington, for the respondents.—There was never any jurisdiction to make these orders, and the official receiver and the special manager are alike mere trespassers. Meanwhile our business has produced in their hands this sum of £409, and we say that it belongs to us. We ought not to be compelled to treat these gentlemen as our agents, and so allow them to bring their expenses into account.

LINDLEY, M.R.—This is a matter of some little difficulty, and of more than a little interest. I do not attach much importance to the question whether the receiving order in this case was discharged simply on the ground that the order was erroneous, or because there was never any jurisdiction to make it. In my opinion this order was an erroneous order rather than an order without jurisdiction. The line between the two is, no doubt, a very fine one; but I am not going to discuss it now. The petition has been dismissed; and that being so, the official receiver has no longer any authority to carry on the busines. But it does not follow that the official receiver is therefore to be treated as though no such order had ever been made. His accounts must be passed in the usual way—his account alike of the moneys he has received, and of those he has paid away. Now what is this sum of £409 which is now in the hands of the official receiver? It is money which represents gross receipts, and is not a balance at all. The learned registrar has made an order that this sum is to be handed over, just as it stands, to the debtors. That, in my opinion, would be grossly unjust. Even if the order appointing the receiver had been made, in the proper sense, without jurisdiction, yet the court would never allow its officer to pay more than the balance due from him on taking the account. No injustice will be done to anybody, and the appeal must be allowed.

RIGBY, L.J.—As to the general principle, I agree entirely with the Master of the Rolls. As to the appointment of the official receiver, I wish to add a word or two. I do not think it is open to anyone to say that he was wrongly appointed in the sense that there was no jurisdiction to appoint him. As soon as a petition is presented, there arises at once the power to appoint a receiver, whatever the result of the petition may be.

COLLINS, L.J.—I agree. The question has been raised as to whether the debtor is entitled to treat the special manager as a wrongdoer. If he is entitled, there is then much to be said for the respondents' point of view. But I do not myself think that the special manager can be so treated. His appointment by the court was perfectly good till it was set aside.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Bentwitch, Watkin-Williams, & Gray; J. H. Moggridge.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — April 25.

MUTTON v. PEAT. (a.)

Banker—Separate accounts—Deposit of securities for debt due on one account—Rights of third parties.

Securities belonging to the clients of a firm of stockbrokers were deposited with a bank to secure a debt due from the stockbrokers to the bank. The stockbrokers had two accounts with the bank—a loan and a current account. This debt was due on the loan account, but there was no agreement that the securities were deposited to secure the loan account exclusively. The stockbrokers became bankrupt. At the date of the bankruptcy they had a balance in their favour on the current account, which was at any rate partly made up of money they had received from clients for investment. The bank did not set off the balance due on the current account against the indebtedness on the loan account, but sold the securities and discharged the debt.

Held, that the securities were deposited to secure the indebtedness of the stockbrokers to the bank, and that this indebtedness was the amount due on all their accounts. Consequently, the clients of the stockbrokers were not entitled to be repaid out of the balance on the current account money which had been paid by them to the stockbrokers for investment and paid by the stockbrokers into their current account.

Decision of Byrne, J. (ante, p. 62, [1899] 2 Ch. 556), reversed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Byrne, J. (reported ante, p. 62, [1899] 2 Ch. 556).

The facts were as follow: Messrs. Tatham & Co., stockbrokers, had two accounts with their bankers, Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., a current account and a loan account. On the latter account Messrs. Tatham owed on the 30th of December, 1895, £7,500, and to secure this debt they had deposited with the bank certain securities which really belonged to some of their clients, one of whom was the plaintiff in the present action.

On the 11th of January, 1896, Messrs. Tatham paid into their current account £790 4s. 6d., which they had received from one Parker for investment. Two days afterwards they were declared defaulters on the Stock Exchange.

On the 21st of January a receiving order was made against them, and on the 24th of January they were adjudicated bankrupt.

On the 20th of January the bank closed Messrs. Tatham's current account and transferred the credit balance of £1,362 10s., partly made up of Parker's £790 4s. 6d., into a new account, which they also credited with a sum of £3,342 15s., produced by a sale of some of the before-mentioned securities.

On the 22nd of January the debit side of the new account showed: "Loan (part discharged) £3,340; twenty days' interest to the 20th of January, £3 13s. 2d." Further sums were similarly received and entered in the new account by the bank in respect of sales of others of the said securities, so that on the

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

30th of January, 1896, on the debit side there appeared, "Loan (balance) discharge, £3,590; thirty days' interest, £5 17s. 11d." No part of the £1,362 10s., which had been the credit balance on Messrs. Tatham's current account, was applied in the reduction of the debt on the loan account, but the proceeds of the sales of the securities were specifically appropriated in discharge of this debt, leaving a small balance in the hands of the bank. Some question arose on a letter and affidavits of Mr. Harvey, the secretary to the bank, whether the bank had or had not appropriated this sum towards the reduction of the debt, but the court concluded that they had not.

Parker then took out a summons claiming to be repaid the £790 4s. 6d. out of the £1,362 10s., the balance on the current account transferred to the new account.

Byrne, J., held that, having regard to the fact that the bank had appropriated specific receipts to payment of a specific debt due from a customer, Parker had established his claim, and that the rule in Clayton's case did not apply, and that the cestuis que trustent of the deposited securities had no equity against Parker to enforce the rule.

The plaintiff appealed.

Levett, Q.C., and Hull, for the appeal.—However many accounts a banker may have with his client they are all at law one account, and no appropriation which the banker may make as between himself and his client can affect the rights of third parties.

They referred to Grant's Law of Banking (5th ed.), p. 250; Pedder v. Preston Corporation, 10 W. R. 773, 12 C. B. N. S. 535; Thomas v. Howell, 22 W. R. 676, L. R. 18 Eq. 198; In re European Bank, 21 W. R. 45, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 41.

G. Lawrence, contrâ.—The cases cited are cases between a banker and his customer, but this is a question of what are the rights between two parties both claiming under the customer. The rule in Clayton's case, 1 Mer. 572, does not apply here.

He referred to Marquis of Bute v. Cunynghame, 2 Russ. 275; Dunlop v. Dunlop, 31 W. R. 211, 21 Ch. D. 583.

Kenyon Parker, in the same interest.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I do not think we need hear a reply, Mr. Levett. Your point is unanswerable when it is grasped. I agree with Mr. George Lawrence and Mr. Kenyon Parker on the accounts as they stand—that is to say, I agree that the bank had two accounts with Tatham & Co., the deposit account and the current account, and I agree that when Tathams became defaulters on the 13th of January, 1896, the bankers closed the current account; at that time there was £1,362 odd standing to Tatham's credit on that account. I agree that the accounts were not then closed by transferring that £1,362 to the deposit account, thereby reducing the amount due on that deposit account, but the £1,362 was carried to the bankruptcy ledger, some other account; in other words, they are right when they contend that according to the books of the bank the £1,362 was kept to an account in the bankruptcy ledger. Now what follows from all that? What was the plaintiff's position? His securities had been deposited by Tatham with the bank in December, 1895. What were the terms of that deposit? It appears to me that everything in this case turns upon that. There was no special agreement in writing about the matter, they were deposited for the indebtedness of Tatham, they were a security to the bank for what Tatham owed the bank, including, of course, what Tatham owed on the loan account. What is important and is, to my mind, the key to the whole case is that there was no agreement at the time those securities were deposited that the two accounts—the loan account and the current account—should be kept separate so that the indebtedness for which the securities were deposited should be ascertained by looking at the loan account alone; in other words, there was nothing agreed to the effect that these securities should be a security for anything except that which on taking an account between Tatham and the bank under all heads of all accounts should be found ultimately due from Tatham to the bank. That has its advantages and its disadvantages. That there were two accounts is plain, and I feel satisfied that Mr. Lawrence is right in saying that the £1,362 was, as a matter of book-keeping, kept in the way he mentioned.

Now, to return to the question, what are the rights of Mr. Mutton, the plaintiff, as regards these securities? He says: "I cannot deny the right of the bank to retain the securities for the amount of the indebtedness. What is the indebtedness? It is the amount, taking the deposit account and current account (you cannot separate them), which is due to the bank on those two accounts, and this is the amount my securities must stand charged with. Now, I do not know how the bank have manipulated their books or how many accounts they have kept. When you come to ascertain what is the amount due from Tatham to the bank, the answer admits of only one solution, that is the lesser sum and not the greater sum which is in dispute here." Then the plaintiff says, Give me back my security. Now, what answer can Mr. Parker have to that? This is one of those unfortunate cases in which the court has to decide on which of two or three innocent parties a loss has to fall, but when once you grasp the principle that the securities were granted or deposited for the amount which Tatham should be found to owe to the bank, it is impossible to say that the amount is to be ascertained by setting one account against the other. It is the right of the depositor of the securities to say, "You cannot hold my security except for the ultimate balance." There is no answer to it, and Mr. Parker has no right to dispute that, nor Mr. Kenyon Parker's client either. It is no answer to say, "If you look at the accounts as they are kept you will find that this £790 4s. 6d. is still in the hands of the bankers." I think that Byrne, J., has gone wrong on a question of fact. He has tried this case and adjudicated upon it, upon the theory which, I think, is erroneous in point of fact, that the securities were deposited to secure the loan account exclusively and without reference to the other account. This was not so; there was no agreement which entitled the bank or Tatham to say that these securities should be treated as a security for what is due on the loan account alone. Apart from that there is no answer to Mr. Levett's case, and I think the appeal must be allowed.

RIGBY, L.J.—If I thought it was in anyway within the powers of the bank to mix up these accounts or not to mix them up as they thought proper I should have to decide something I should be very glad to be free from—that is to say, the effect of Mr. Harvey's affidavits as contrasted with his letter, but I think I may assume that there has been for the purpose of this case no appropriation de facto of that balance of £1,362. Then I inquire what is the effect of that? The answer seems to me it does not matter in the least whether they appropriated it or not, if we are able to say they ought to have appropriated. I take it we are bound to say that the bank ought to have appropriated that £1,362 in reduction of the £7,500 loan, or rather perhaps the more correct statement would be that they were bound to allow it in account whether they appropriated it or not, even if they tried not to appropriate it. The indebtedness of Tatham was what the securities were given for and not anything else. That indebtedness was the £7,500 minus the £1,362, and that and that only.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

Solicitors, Longbourne, Stevens, & Co.; Bower, Cotton, & Bower, for H. B. Bradley, Folkestone; Foyer & Hordern.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) March 22, 23, 26.

THOMSON v. CLANMORRIS (LORD). (a.)

Limitations, Statute of—Company—Prospectus—Untrue statements—Action by shareholder for compensation—Directors' Liability Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 64), s. 3—Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), s. 3.

An action for compensation for loss or damage sustained by a shareholder in a company by reason of untrue statements in a prospectus under section 3 of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, is not an action "for penalties, damages, or sums of money given to the party grieved" within the meaning of section 3 of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, and consequently need not be brought within two years after the cause of action accrued.

The Directors' Liability Act, 1890, does not impose a penalty, but merely a liability to make compensation for a loss sustained.

In such an action the cause of action accrues and the time begins to run from the time when the plaintiff subscribes for shares.

Semble, the period of limitation would be six years under the Act 21 Jac. 1, c. 16.

Held, also, on the merits of the case, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed.

Judgment of Kekewich, J. (ante, p. 39, [1899] 2 Ch. 523), affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of Kekewich, J., reported ante, p. 39, [1899] 2 Ch. 523, where the facts in the case are set out.

By that judgment Kekewich, J., decided that one important statement at least in the prospectus was untrue in fact, and that the defendants (the directors) had not reasonable ground for believing it to be true; that the plaintiff subscribed for shares on the faith of this statement as much as any other statement in the prospectus; that the action was not one within the meaning of section 3 of the Act of 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42); and that the cause of action arose on the loss or damage being sustained by actual payment of the money, so that, as to the last payment on the shares made by the plaintiff in November, 1898, the statute, even if it applied, was no answer.

One of the defendants and directors, J. W. Wilson, now appealed from that decision.

The question as to the applicability of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 3, to an action brought under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, was first argued.

Lawson Walton, Q.C., and T. Willes Chitty, for the appellant.—The Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, applies to actions for damages or compensation under any subsequent Act, and therefore applies to a claim for statutory compensation brought under section 3 of the 1890 Act by a "party grieved" within the express meaning of section 3 of the 1833 Act. There is no direct authority upon the point here raised, but see Cork and Bandon Railway Co. v. Goode, 1 W. R. 410, 13 C. B. 826. The Act 21 Jac. 1, c. 16, does not apply. The last decision on the 1890 Act is Greenwood v. Leathershod Wheel Co. (Limited), [1900] 1 Ch. 421. The language of the 1890 Act covers a case under the 1833 Act; although it does not use the word "damages," it uses the word "compensation," which is equivalent to measure of damages: see 2 Co. Litt. 257*a*. As to when the statute begins to run, see Darley Main Colliery Co. v. Mitchell, 11 App. Cas. 127, 34 W. R. Dig. 108, affirming 32 W. R. 947, and Gibbs v. Guild, 30 W. R. 591, 9 Q. B. D. 59. Under the Employers' Liability Act there is a special limitation fixed; otherwise the 1833 Act would apply to cases arising thereunder. [They referred also to Howell v. Young, 5 B. & C. 259, at p. 264; Mayne on Damages (6th ed.), pp. 6, 514; and Darby and Bosanquet on the Statutes of Limitations (2nd ed.), p. 512.] [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., referred to Godefroy v. Jay, 7 Bing. 413; and LINDLEY, M.R., to the Statute of Marlebridge, 52 Hen. 3.]

Renshaw, Q.C. (George Henderson with him), for the respondent.—The time under the Statute of Limitations begins to run when the plaintiff sustained loss, by reason of the misrepresentations in the prospectus, on the company being ordered to be wound up. No limit of two years is provided by the 1890 Act; the time allowed is six years (21 Jac. 1, c. 16); unless it be the Act of James I., there is no Statute of Limitations applicable to this case. The plaintiff's right of action under the 1890 Act is a statutory right to sue for "compensation," and the sum recoverable thereby is not a penalty within the meaning of section 3 of the 1833 Act. An instructive case is Saunders v. Wiel, 40 W. R. 594, [1892] 2 Q. B. 321. [LINDLEY, M.R.—I have looked at that and compared it with Adams v. Batley, 35 W. R. 437, 18 Q. B. D. 625.]

T. Willes Chitty replied.

LINDLEY, M.R.—We will not take time to consider this point, having had an opportunity of looking into it. The point is a new one to all of us and no doubt there is a difficulty about it. The first thing that I will deal with is the 3rd section of the Act of 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42), which has been so much relied upon. In construing that enactment, as in construing any other enactment, you must look not only at the words used, but at the history of the Act, and consider what were the reasons that led to its being passed. You must look at the mischief that had to be cured as well as the cure afforded. And when you have looked at the state of the law previous to that Act, you see pretty well what it was that had to be dealt with. There were certain causes of action as to which there was no defined time of limitation. Some of them were alluded to in the earlier part of the section—actions for debt or specialties and other things which are there enumerated. They were not provided for by the existing Statutes of Limitations, and they are brought in. That was defect number one. There was another class of actions as to which there was no definite time for suing. Those were actions for penalties and damages and sums of money given by various Acts of Parliament by way of penalty or punishment and not by way of compensation. But as was pointed out by the late Master of the Rolls, Lord Esher, when commenting on the case of Saunders v. Wiel in Adams v. Batley, the punishment was there an object, and whether you call it penalty, damages, or sum of money, it was not assessed with a view to compensate the plaintiff, although he might put some of it in his own pocket. In other words they were what are popularly called "penal actions." You get at that from the history of the legislation and from knowing what the state of the law was and what the defect was. Now, then, if we take that as our guide, it is quite obvious to my mind that the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, does not come within that class at all. If you leave out any consideration of the history of the legislation there is some difficulty in saying that the language of the Act of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, does not cover cases arising under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890. If you look at the words very critically I do not think they do, because if you look at the frame of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, you do not find that an action is given or that damages are given or that a penalty is given. Nothing is given. This is, to my mind, rather hypercritical, but it is none the less true. What you find in the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, is a liability imposed—a liability to make compensation; and the money payable under the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, is obviously compensation to the plaintiff for the loss which he has sustained. It must be estimated and awarded with reference to that. It is not in the least like a penalty, damage, or sum of money imposed by statute as a punishment without referring at all to the injury sustained by the person who sues for it. Therefore it appears to me that, whether you look at it hypercritically—which I never like to do—or whether you look at the good sense of the thing and the history of the legislation, it is plain to my mind (although there is a little difficulty about the language) that it is not an action for a penalty, damage, or sum of money within the meaning of section 3 of the Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42.

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

That brings us to the next question, what time, if any, is limited. If we get rid of the question of two years under the Act of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, we can reserve that for further consideration. My own impression—I speak now of my own view only—is this, that the true view to take of this enactment of the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, is that if we were in the old days of pleadings not under the Judicature Acts, an action on the case for breach of duty would be the proper remedy, and six years would be the time. But we need not decide that, because whether twenty years or six years is the period which is limited, this writ has been issued in plenty of time to avail the plaintiff. In other words there can be no Statute in Limitations which can be pleaded having regards to the dates, the cause of action having arisen, if at all, at the outside three years before the issue of the writ, and the writ being issued as late as December, 1898. Passing that over, we come, I think, to this conclusion, that whatever the Statute of Limitations may be, if there is one applicable at all, there is none to this action. And if so, we need not trouble ourselves much about the cause of action or the time when that accrued.

Here, again, as the case has been argued and the point is new, I may say at once my own view is that Mr. Willes Chitty is right and that the cause of action accrues and the time begins to run from the time when the shares were subscribed for. I get at that rather by an exhaustive process. I cannot adopt Mr. Renshaw's suggestion that you must wait till the company is wound up to see what loss is sustained. The company may never be wound up at all and yet there may be an action. Then I do not think it is at all in accordance with ordinary rules of procedure and ordinary views respecting the Statute of Limitations to say that there is a separate action every time a man has to pay a call. That would bring about a state of things to which we are not accustomed. It is foreign to our habits of thought. I cannot help thinking that the true view is that the limitation is six years by analogy to the old actions, and that the time begins to run when the public subscribes for and take shares on the faith of the untrue statements in the prospectus. Those are my own views. It is quite sufficient to say here that the only point that we have to decide is whether this particular action is barred by any Statute of Limitations. To my mind it is plain that it is not. Therefore we must hear the case on the merits.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree that there is no statutory limitation which applies to this case.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. As the point is a new one, I should like to say a word or two upon it myself, and it is my duty to do so. One has to consider what really is the nature of the enactment contained in the Directors' Liability Act, 1890. I wish to say with regard to that, that if one reads section 3 it seems to one that what that section does is this: although it does not in form give a new action, all that it does being to say that persons who have done certain things shall be liable to pay compensation to all persons who shall subscribe for any shares, debentures or debenture stock on the faith of such prospectus or notice "for the loss or damage they may have sustained by reason of any untrue statement in the prospectus or notice, or in any report or memorandum appearing on the face thereof," yet what really is done by the section is to give a new action on the case. It really creates a new negative duty. These persons, be they directors or promoters, or whatever class they come under which is included in this section, have really cast upon them a new duty in respect of prospectuses and similar notices. That duty one finds in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of the section. Speaking generally, one may say that this Act of Parliament creates a new statutory duty as to accuracy, a new statutory duty to abstain from inaccurate and untrue statements. Then in effect it gives a new action on the case to those persons who may have been injured by the neglect of that statutory duty, and it seems to me therefore that really this is a case which is provided for by the statute of James I. It is an action on the case, and, of course, if it is an action on the case the six years' limitation would apply. But then it is said that this is not an action on the case; that this is an action on the statute, and the case of Cork and Bandon Railway Co. v. Goode is relied on for that proposition. But it is to be remembered that that was an action for a statutory debt, and the sole question there was whether that debt was within the terms of the statute of James I. founded on specialty or not. It does not seem to me that the decision in that case really is material to the case that we have here to decide. Maule, J., points out that there is a difference between an action which is given by a statute and an action on the statute. The case of Cork and Bandon Railway Co. v. Goode was an action of debt on the statute, and as I have already pointed out the only real question in the case there was whether that action of debt came within the words of the statute of James I., "contract not founded on specialty." In the present case it seems to me that you have merely a new duty of accuracy created in respect of the preparation and issue of prospectuses, and an action on the case given to those persons who are injured by it. It is said that this is a new form of statute. But it does not seem to me that in substance this statute differs from the Statute of Marlebridge, a very old statute (52 Hen. 3), because there in respect of not only illegal but irregular and excessive distresses, notwithstanding the liability to punishment, it is provided in the earlier part of the section that there shall be full amends made to those who have sustained loss. I will give the exact words of the section, which says: "Nevertheless, amends shall be made fully and sufficiently to them that have sustained loss by such distress." And it seems to me that here the effect of this section is that amends shall be made to those that have sustained loss by being induced to subscribe for shares or debentures by reason of the misstatement in the prospectus or other similar document. In these circumstances it is not really necessary to go on to decide the other question, from what time the statute is to run. But I agree with the Master of the Rolls that the statute does not run from the sustaining of each piece of damage, neither does it run from the time of the wrongful act, whether the preparation or the issue of the document containing the untrue statement. It cannot run from that time by reason of two well-known principles of law regarding all Statutes of Limitation. The Statute of Limitations cannot begin to run unless you have two things present, a party capable of suing and a party liable to be sued. Now, in the case of this Act of Parliament it is perfectly plain that inasmuch as the compensation is given to those persons who have subscribed for shares in respect of the damages sustained thereby by them, you cannot have any cause of action whatever until you have had the subscriptions for the shares. That to my mind decides the first point—that is, that the statute does not run from the time of the preparation or issue of the incorrect document. Then it is said that, even if it does not, inasmuch as the compensation is given for the loss, must not a fresh cause of action accrue as each fresh item of loss accrues. It seems to me that it is untrue to suggest that in fact the whole loss is not assessable the moment that the subscription for the shares has been made upon the faith of the prospectus. Generally speaking, it is obvious that you can assess that loss by going into the market and selling the shares for which the subscription has so been made. It is said that in some instances the shares may not be saleable, or that the shares may carry such a liability for uncalled capital that you positively have to pay somebody to relieve you of those shares. It is further suggested that if there is a winding up, there may be a liability to be put upon the B. list of contributories within twelve months of the sale of the shares. But all those matters, supposing they appear in any case, although they may not be capable of perfectly exact computation of the damage, are clearly so capable of computation that according to the well-established principles of the English law in favour of finality of litigation you would have amply sufficient evidence and means of proof such as to not only make it a duty to claim in respect of those more difficult matters at the time when you bring your action, but also to debar you from any further action if you did not so claim.

The appeal was then heard upon the merits.

T. Willes Chitty, for the appellant.

The respondent's counsel were not called upon.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I give Mr. Wilson credit for being perfectly honest and in believing, and perfectly honestly believing, that the statements made about the 7,000 square miles were true. But then that is not enough. We have to consider whether he had reasonable ground to believe that that was true. Seven thousand square miles is an extensive tract of land, and when I come to sift the grounds of his belief, I must say that they seem to me, to say the least of it, to be extremely unsatisfactory. He was told by Sir Alfred Kirby, and he says that he was told by another person. When you look at the matter and go into it, do you find that those persons knew about it? They knew uncommonly little about it. They knew something about the country where this land is situated. But as to the dimensions, they knew no more about that matter, or very little if anything more, than anyone who knew nothing about it. If you go to the concessions you cannot find that they comprised 7,000 square miles of land. It is not a question of a few miles merely. It is a question between 600 or 700 and 7,000. Making every allowance for exaggeration, and every allowance for difficulty of survey and so on, the difference is so enormous that there is no accounting for it. The truth is that somebody or other, I do not know who, put this misstatement into the first prospectus and there it has passed muster, and Mr. Wilson has been misled. I have myself no doubt that what he says is true, that he has been thoroughly taken in. Very likely he has, but unfortunately he has made himself responsible for this prospectus, and he is liable for this scandalous untruth unless he can satisfy the court that he had reasonable grounds to believe that the statements were true. I cannot see those grounds at all, and I cannot possibly differ from the learned judge in the court below on this point. The appeal will therefore be dismissed with costs.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. I am very sorry for Mr. Wilson. When one has to ask oneself the question, Was there reasonable ground for this belief? I am afraid that there can be only one answer to it—namely, that it is not a reasonable ground for this belief that Mr. Wilson believed the statements which were made to him. Although that is the only answer one can give to this question, one cannot help being sorry at having to arrive at this conclusion, because it involves a confusion of a man who is a victim and has been robbed with the robbers themselves. I cannot help feeling that it is very hard that Mr. Wilson should be put in that category.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Morten, Cutler, & Co.; Herbert Toomer.

---

From County Palatine of Lancaster. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — March 8.

In re MANCHESTER REAL ICE SKATING AND SUPPLY CO. (a.)

Practice—Palatine Court of Lancaster—Taxation—Costs—Scale.

The order of the 28th of November, 1884, of the Chancery Court of the County Palatine of Lancaster, "as to court fees and solicitors' costs" only introduces a modification of the lower scale of costs established by the order of the 27th of November, 1884, and has no application to any cases to which that lower scale did not apply.

This was an appeal against an order dated the 5th of February, 1900, of the Vice-Chancellor of the Chancery Court of the County Palatine of Lancaster directing that certain fees and costs should be allowed on the higher scale. Leave to appeal had been given by the Court of Appeal.

On the 14th of November, 1899, the Vice-

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chancellor dismissed with costs to be taxed as between party and party an originating motion on behalf of M. C. Bannister asking that the register of members of the above company might be rectified by removing his name therefrom as the holder of 200 shares of the nominal value of £1 each in the company. The rules as to the taxation of costs in the Palatine Court are as follow:

The Order as to Court Fees of the 27th November, 1884, provides by rule 7 that "the fees and percentages set forth in the column headed 'Lower Scale' in the first part of the schedule hereto are to be taken and paid in the cases mentioned in the second part of the same schedule, and the fees and percentages set forth in the column headed 'Higher Scale' in the said first part of the said schedule are to be taken and paid in all other cases."

The second part of the schedule mentions eight classes of cases. The first seven classes comprise cases (none of which includes such a case as the present) in which the matter in question is "under the amount or value of £1,000." The eighth class is "All proceedings by original special case, originating petition, or notice of motion, and all proceedings relating to funds carried to separate accounts, and all proceedings under any railway or any private Act of Parliament, or under any other statutory or summary jurisdiction, and generally all other cases where the estate or fund to be dealt with shall be under the amount or value of £1,000."

By another order dated the same day and entitled Order as to Solicitors' Costs, it is provided (rule 1) that "solicitors shall be entitled to charge, and be allowed, the fees set forth in the column headed 'Lower Scale' in the schedule hereto, in the following cases"—namely, the eight cases mentioned in the second part of the schedule to the Order as to Court Fees.

By rule 2: "Solicitors shall be entitled to charge, and be allowed, the fees set forth in the column headed 'Higher Scale' in the schedule hereto in all actions for special injunction to restrain the commission or continuance of waste, nuisances, breaches of covenant, injuries to property, and infringement of rights, easements, patents, and copyrights, and other similar cases where the procuring such injunction is the principal relief sought to be obtained, and in all cases other than those to which the fees in the column headed 'Lower Scale' are hereby made applicable."

Rule 3: "Notwithstanding these rules the court or the Vice-Chancellor may in any case direct the fees set forth in either of the said two columns to be allowed to all, or either, or any of the parties, and as to all or any part of the costs."

By another order as to Court Fees and Solicitors' Costs dated the 28th of November, 1884, rule 1: "Notwithstanding such of the provisions of the order as to fees and percentages, dated the 27th of November inst., and those of the order as to solicitors' costs of the same day as relate to cases in which the several lower scales of fees and costs therein respectively set forth are thereby made applicable, the fees appointed to be taken by the registrars or other officers of the court, and authorized to be charged by and allowed to the solicitors of the court upon foot of the several scales headed 'Lower Scale' in the several schedules to such orders respectively, shall not, until further order be taken, charged, or allowed in any case in court which shall be under the amount or value of £300; but in all such cases the fees to be taken and to be charged and allowed as aforesaid respectively shall be one half of the fees specified in the several higher scales of the said orders respectively, except in the instances following—namely, except that this rule is not to apply in any case, so as to increase the amount of any fees authorized to be taken or to be charged or allowed on foot of the said lower scales respectively; and is not to apply to any fee authorized to be taken or to be charged or allowed for copies, or any ad valorem fee."

Rule 2: "Except in the particulars specified in the last preceding rule, all cases in court under the amount or value of £300 shall, until further order, be regulated by such of the provisions of the said orders of the Chancery of Lancaster Rules, 1884, as are applicable to cases to which the said several lower scales mentioned in the said orders are thereby made applicable."

On the taxation of costs under the order of the 14th of November, 1899, the registrar taxed the costs on the lowest scale provided by the orders of the Palatine Court. The company objected that the costs ought to have been taxed on the higher scale, and the Vice-Chancellor allowed the objection. He was of opinion that rule 1 of the order of the 28th of November, 1884, applied only to those cases to which under the orders of the 27th of November, 1884, the lower scale of costs and fees is applicable—that is, to the cases mentioned in the second part of the schedules to these orders, and that the effect of rule 1 of the order of the 28th of November was only to substitute the scale of fees and costs mentioned in it in those cases coming within the second part of the schedules which were under the amount of £300. And the Vice-Chancellor held that at any rate he had a discretion in the matter, and that the case was one in which fees and costs ought to be allowed on the higher scale.

The shareholders appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and Austen Cartmell, for the appellant, cited Harrison v. Leutner, 31 W. R. 837, 24 Ch. D. 594.

P. O. Lawrence, Q.C., and R. B. Lawrence, contrà.

Warrington, Q.C., replied.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I do not think there can be any doubt as to the true construction of the order of the 28th of November, though the key to its construction is not at first sight easy to find. The order of the 27th of November is evidently founded on the Rules of the Supreme Court under the Judicature Acts. The order of the 28th of November only introduces for cases under £1,000 in amount or value a modification of the lower scale of costs established by the order of the 27th of November and it has no application to any cases to which that lower scale did not apply. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

RIGBY and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.JJ., concurred.

Solicitors, Pritchard, Englefield, & Co., for Simpson, North, & Co., Liverpool; Arthur S. Mather, Liverpool.

---

From Chan. Div.
(Lindley, M R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) March 7.

BURCHELL v. WILDE. (a.)

Partnership—Dissolution—Goodwill—Name of old firm—Partner's name.

On the dissolution of a partnership, where no provision is made about the use of the firm name, but the goodwill, apart from the benefit of the firm name, is not to be sold, but is to be divided between the partners, each partner is at liberty to use the firm name so long as he does not thereby hold out his late partner as his partner in business.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A man does not necessarily hold out his late partner as his partner in business by using the old firm name, even though the old firm name is the name of his late partner.

This was an appeal from a decision of Byrne, J., refusing to make any order on a motion brought to restrain the defendants from carrying on business as solicitors under the name or style "Burchell & Co.," or under any other name or style of which the name of "Burchell" or "Burchells" formed part.

In 1847 Wm. Burchell the elder (an uncle of the plaintiffs) was carrying on business as a solicitor in partnership with two gentlemen named Kilgour and Parson, under the style of Burchell, Kilgour, & Parson.

In 1851 Kilgour and Parson retired from practice, and Wm. Burchell the elder practised alone in his own name until 1857, when a new partnership was constituted between Wm. Burchell the elder, James Burchell (father of the plaintiff James Ward Burchell), and Wm. Burchell the younger.

These partners carried on business at No. 5, The Sanctuary, Westminster, under the style of "Burchells."

In 1874 James Burchell retired, and the plaintiff James Ward Burchell was admitted a partner.

The firm so constituted continued in business still as "Burchells" till 1882.

In that year a new partnership was constituted, the partners being Wm. Burchell the elder, Wm. Burchell the younger, the defendant Wm. George Wilde, and the plaintiffs James Ward Burchell and C. T. D. Burchell, and they carried on business under the style of Burchell & Co. Wm. Burchell the younger retired from the firm in March, 1884, and Wm. Burchell the elder died in 1888.

By an agreement dated the 21st of June, 1893, the plaintiffs and the defendant Wm. George Wilde agreed to continue in partnership as solicitors in continuation of their then partnership for the term of ten years from the 31st of March, 1893, under the style of Burchell & Co. at No. 5, The Sanctuary.

The defendant Wm. Wilde, who was a son of the defendant Wm. George Wilde, had been admitted as a solicitor, and an agreement was at the same time made for the introduction by any partner with the consent of the other partners of a son who had been admitted upon certain terms, and that if Wm. George Wilde should not during his life have introduced a son into the firm, the defendant William Wilde should on the death of his father be admitted as a partner upon certain terms. In the year 1899 differences arose between the partners, and the partnership was dissolved by consent as from the 9th of December, 1899. Heads of an agreement for dissolution were on the 15th of September, 1899, signed by the partners, various points being left to the determination of an arbitrator. In the opinion of the Court of Appeal the effect of the agreement coupled with the arbitrator's award afterwards made was that the goodwill of the business was not to be sold for the benefit of the partners, but was to be divided between them in so far as it was incident to the possession of the client's documents, and no provision was made as to the use of the firm name. The plaintiffs acquired the office of No. 5, The Sanctuary, at a valuation. At the date of the dissolution the defendant W. G. Wilde was entitled to a larger share of the profits than any of the other partners, and he had been a partner in the successive partnerships since 1882, when the style was changed from Burchells to Burchell & Co. Notice of dissolution was duly signed and gazetted, and independent circulars were sent by the plaintiffs and the defendant W. G. Wilde respectively to every client of the old firm stating the fact of the dissolution and also respectively giving notice of the names of the partners constituting the new firms respectively and the addresses of the new firms and the styles under which they respectively intended to carry on business. The plaintiffs, with a new partner also named Burchell, continued to carry on business at the old offices as Burchells & Co. and the defendants (the defendant Wm. Wilde having been taken into partnership by his father) began to carry on business at 36, Victoria-street, Westminster, under the style of Burchel, & Co., and both the plaintiffs and the defendants were willing to make some modification in their respective firm names so as to render the resemblance less close; but the plaintiffs claimed the exclusive right to use the name Burchell or Burchells and to restrain the defendants from using either of these names in any way as part of their firm name. The motion came on for hearing before Byrne, J., on the 19th of January, 1900, who dismissed the motion.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and Vernon, for the plaintiffs.—The defendants are not entitled to trade as Burchell & Co. because their name is not Burchell. Burchell & Co. was the name of the old firm, and the defendants are trading as if they had bought the goodwill of the old firm: Gray v. Smith, 38 W. R. 310, 43 Ch. D. 208; Thynne v. Shove, 38 W. R. 667, 45 Ch. D. 577; In re David & Matthews, 47 W. R. 313, [1899] 1 Ch. 378. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—That case was the case of a sale.] True, but the principle is that you are not entitled to represent yourself as having that which you have not. The defendants represent that they have the old business, but they have not acquired the goodwill under the contract.

They also referred to Scott v. Rowland, 20 W. R. 508; Chatteris v. Isaacson, 57 L. T. Rep. 177; Banks v. Gibson, 13 W. R. 1012, 34 Beav. 566; Chappell v. Griffith, 53 L. T. Rep. 459, 34 W. R. Dig. 184.

Levett, Q.C., and Norton, Q.C., for W. G. Wilde, and Alexander, Q.C., and Napier, for W. Wilde, were not called on.

LINDLEY, M.R.—We must first ascertain the facts and then see whether the learned judge was right in the view which he has taken. [His lordship stated the facts, and continued:] The agreement of the 15th of September, 1899, as expounded by the award, amounts to this, that the clients and the documents were to be divided, some of them going to the Burchells and some to W. G. Wilde. There were also provisions for the books of the firm being handed over to a Mr. Gardiner with liberty to either of the partners to inspect. Some of the older books were to be left with the Burchells, they being under an obligation to give extracts to Wilde if he should want them. What does that arrangement mean? It involves this, that the goodwill of the business was not to be sold for the benefit of the partners. The goodwill was to be divided between them in so far as it was incident to the possession of the clients' papers. That is a most important fact. It was left entirely undecided what was to be done about the use of the name of the firm. But if you come to the conclusion (about which there can be no doubt) that the goodwill, apart from the benefit of the firm name, as to which nothing is said, was not to be sold but was to be divided between the partners, what is the result? It appears to me to follow that such partners could use the name of the old firm. They have become tenants in common of that asset, and each partner was entitled to enjoy that asset subject only to a limitation which I will mention presently. I cannot see any legal answer to this position, and this, I think, explains the decision of Lord Romilly, M.R., in Banks v. Gibson, and clearly distinguishes the present case from Gray v. Smith and the other cases which have been cited. The limitation to which I have referred is this—and I think Byrne, J., has fully recognized this. Apart from some express stipulation, a man has no right to hold out his late partner, or, indeed, anyone else, as his partner in business, and if it could be shown that the defendants were holding out the plaintiffs as their partners, I should think, subject to what the defendants (whom we have not heard) might say, that the plaintiffs would be entitled to an injunction. But, in my opinion, the plaintiffs have not established anything of the kind.

What are the defendants doing? They have been using the name of the old firm, "Burchell & Co." They are, in fact, now carrying on business under the name of "Burchell, Wilde, & Co," and there is no reason to suppose that they intend to go back from that. They have not undertaken to use that name; it would have been more satisfactory if they had, and perhaps they will not object to do so, after hearing the judgment of the court. How does that hold out these particular plaintiffs as the defendants' partners? Considering the history of the use of the name "Burchell," it does not hold them out as the defendants' partners at all; and even if it could do so, let us see what the defendants have done. They have taken care by their circulars and by the letters which they have sent to the best of their ability to all the old clients of the firm to tell those old clients who are the members of the firm of "Burchell & Co.," who are carrying on business in Victoria-street. There is no holding out in any business-like sense of the plaintiffs as their partners, and I cannot see any substantial or practical risk which the plaintiffs will incur by reason of the conduct of the defendants. I do not say that you cannot imagine a possible case in which someone might be foolish enough to bring an action against the Burchells upon the ground that they are continuing partners with the Wildes. But, bearing in mind the nature of a solicitor's business, and that the old clients if they continued to employ the Wildes would see from their letters who the partners are this imaginary possibility ought, in my opinion, to be discarded. There is practically no risk at all.

I think that Byrne, J., has decided the case upon the correct principle. I agree with him that, although you may imagine possible risks, they are not substantial in a business sense. As to the goodwill of the business and the use of the firm name, apart from any liability to which they may be exposing the plaintiffs, the defendants are in the right, and to my mind that liability is so shadowy that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

I repeat that it would be more satisfactory for every one if the defendants would undertake to continue to use the name "Burchell, Wilde, & Co."

As to Wm. Wilde, the son, his father has a right to take him into partnership if he chooses to do so.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I also agree.

Solicitors, Burchells & Co.; Burchell, Wilde, & Co.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. — April 27, 28.

In re MASON.
OGDEN v. MASON. (a.)

Will—Residuary devise—Gift of "all other my freehold" property—Restriction as to tenure—Wills Act, 1837 (1 Vict. c. 26), s. 25.

A testator devised all other his freehold messuages and tenements at W. and elsewhere.

Held (following the decision in Springett v. Jenings, 19 W. R. 575, L. R. 6 Ch. 333), that this was not a residuary devise, there being no gift of copyholds.

A gift restricted as to tenure is not, any more than a gift restricted as to locality, a residuary gift.

This was an originating summons taken out to determine the question whether a freehold property devised by the will of T. W. J. Mason to his son Thomas (which devise failed) was comprised in a subsequent devise of all other the testator's freehold messuages and tenements at Wimbledon and elsewhere, or was undisposed of and went to his son as heir-at-law.

By his will made on the 27th of January, 1862, the said T. W. J. Mason devised all his freehold house and shop and all and singular other the premises used by him at the time of his decease at Wimbledon to his son Thomas, and the will continued "and as to all other my freehold messuages and tenements at Wimbledon aforesaid and elsewhere and all my leasehold estates whatsoever and wheresoever I give, devise, and bequeath the same unto my wife for her life for her own use and benefit." And after the death of his wife the testator gave the last-mentioned freehold and leasehold hereditaments upon trust as therein mentioned. The will was attested by the son Thomas, and the devise to him consequently failed.

The testator died in May, 1865, possessing at the time of his death certain freehold houses at Wimbledon as well as the house and shop specifically devised, and also some freehold property at Kingston. The testator had no copyhold property.

Renshaw, Q.C., and C. H. Sargant, for the plaintiff, argued that this was a good residuary devise, and referred to Bernard v. Minshull, 1 John. 276, 7 W. R. Ch. Dig. 104; Blight v. Hartnoll, 31 W. R. 535, 23 Ch. D. 218; Hensman v. Fryer, 16 W. R. 162, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 420.

Warrington, Q.C., and George Henderson, for the defendants (the executors of the son Thomas), argued that the devise was specific, being restricted to freeholds, and referred to Springett v. Jenings, 19 W. R. 575, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 333; In re Brown's Will, 3 W. R. 542, 1 K. & J. 522; Wainman v. Field, Kay 507, 2 W. R. Dig. 117.

Renshaw, Q.C., replied.

KEKEWICH, J., said: If free from authority I should have wished to hold that this was a residuary devise, but I do not see how I can do that without departing from the principle which I understand to be laid down in Springett v. Jenings. It was distinctly argued in that case (L. R. 6 Ch. App. at p. 334) that a restriction as to locality could not take away from the gift the character of a residuary gift, and, further, that section 25 of the Wills Act, 1837, carried out the idea of section 24, and that taking the will as speaking from the death of the testator, the gift must be treated as residuary. That argument was expressly negatived by the decision of the Court of Appeal. No doubt something turned there upon the use of the word "rest," which may be not improperly compared with the use of the word "other" in the present case. But I think it is impossible to read the judgments of the Lords Justices without seeing that they negatived the proposition that a gift restricted as regards locality could be a residuary gift. If that is so, it seems to follow that a restriction as regards tenure must make this devise also fail to be residuary. I do not logically see any difference between the two. The principle upon which the court seems to have proceeded was that the gift must be universal to be residuary. At first I thought that a distinction might be drawn between a restriction as regards locality and a restriction as regards tenure, and it is quite possible that to other minds a distinction of that sort may present itself. But I must accept what I understand to be the decision of the Court of Appeal and apply it as well as I can. I think that if I decided now that a devise of freeholds, there being no copyholds, was residuary, it would be logically inconsistent, though, of course, not verbally inconsistent, with the decision of the Court of Appeal. The two things seem to me to hang together so closely that I do not see my way to decide according to my present impression without deciding against the principle of that authority. The question which I have to consider is whether, according to the law, the words of the will, and the authorities bearing upon the point, there is what Mellish, L.J. (p. 338), calls a "real residuary devise," and he explains that by saying that it must be a devise "so worded as to apply to all land that is not otherwise disposed of." If that particular point had not been argued about the restriction as to locality it might have been said that "land" meant all land vested in the testator at the time of his death when the will operated, but the words of the Lord Justice, which I have quoted, prevent that argument from being adduced. This particular gift is not so worded as to apply to all land that is not otherwise disposed of, if the testator had or might have had any copyholds. I think that if the Lords Justices had had this very point before them they would, on their own reasoning, have been obliged to conclude that this gift is not residuary. Mellish, L.J., accentuates it again in the very concluding words of his judgment, where, in commenting on the words of section 25 of the Wills Act, he says: "That appears to me to show that the Legislature intended the section to apply only where there was what may be called an universal residuary devise—that is to say, a devise of all the residue of the testator's lands." In the event which was contemplated by the Wills Act it is a devise of all the testator's land, but it is not so worded. No doubt the word "other" deserves special consideration, but I need not dwell upon that as I propose to decide the case simply on the ground which I have stated, that this gift, according to the principle of the decision in Springett v. Jenings, is not a real residuary devise. Therefore the particular property in question which is given to the son, and which he could not take under the specific devise because he was a witness to the will, is not included in the gift of "all other the freehold messuages and tenements at Wimbledon aforesaid and elsewhere." The word "elsewhere" is, of course, important, but it does not get over the difficulty that the description is of freehold. There must be a declaration that the freehold house in question descended upon T. F. Mason as the heir of the testator and was not comprised in the subsequent devise.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, H. S. Bridge; H. J. Manning.

Q. B. Div.
(Channell and Bucknill, JJ.) Feb. 16.

UPPERTON (Appellant) v. RIDLEY (Respondent). (a.)

Police—Pension on retirement—Mode of computation—Annual pay—Special allowance—Police Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 45), s. 1; Schedule I., Parts 1, 3.

A constable in the Metropolitan Police force had received for five consecutive years before the date of his retirement a special allowance of seven shillings per week (in addition to his ordinary weekly pay) in respect of his employment on special duty at the Houses of Parliament throughout those years.

Held, by Channell, J. (Bucknill, J., dissenting), that, in calculating the amount of the retiring pension to which he was entitled, the amount of the special allowance was not "pay," and ought not to be reckoned as part of his "annual pay" within Schedule I., Part 1, of the Police Act. 1890.

Held, also (by Channell and Bucknill, JJ.), that "annual pay" means the entire amount received as pay in the course of the year, and not fifty-two times the weekly pay.

Case stated by the Quarter Sessions for the County of London.

Upon an appeal by the appellant (a constable in the metropolitan police) to the general quarter sessions for the County of London against the decision of the police authority for the metropolitan police district under the Police Act, 1890 (viz., the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Sir Matthew White Ridley), refusing to reconsider the claim of the appellant for an increased amount of pension, the court on the 1st of July, 1899, dismissed the appeal, subject to the opinion of the High Court upon this case.

The appellant joined the metropolitan police force on the 30th of December, 1872, and on the 1st of January, 1899, he had completed not less than twenty-five years' approved service as a police-constable. He had previously signed an acceptance of the provisions of the Police Act, 1890. He had given notice to retire, and he was entitled as of right by the Police Act, 1890, to retire and receive a pension for life of two-thirds of his annual pay at the date of his retirement.

On the 11th of March, 1894, the appellant, having already served for nine years as a police-constable at the Houses of Parliament, was selected by the Commissioner of Police for permanent duty at the House of Lords, and continued to serve in that capacity until the 2nd of January, 1899, the date of his retirement. Nineteen constables were appointed for this special duty for the session of Parliament only; but six constables, of whom the appellant was one, were appointed permanently for the whole year.

The duties which the appellant had to perform at the House of Lords were to preserve the peace, to keep order, to protect the person and property of the High Court of Parliament and persons resorting thereto, to attend fire drill, and protect the premises from fire, and generally to act as a police-constable.

From March, 1894, up to the 2nd of January, 1899, the date of his retirement, the appellant was paid every week the sum of 39s., which was made up as follows: 32s. being the ordinary pay of a constable of his rank and service, and an additional sum of 7s. in respect of the special duty on which he was employed.

It was stated in evidence that the commissioners of police were under no obligation to pay the appellant the additional sum of 7s. even while he remained on special service, though that is done partly as a recognition of the good conduct for which a constable is placed on special service, and partly because by being withdrawn from ordinary duty he loses to some extent his chance of promotion. The entire cost of the police employed on special duty is paid out of moneys provided by Parliament in each year.

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From the above sum of 32s. the sum of 7d. was deducted as a contribution towards the Pension Fund in accordance with section 15 of the Police Act, 1890; but the sum of 7s. was paid without any deduction for pension being made therefrom.

The appellant signed the weekly pay list. The sum of 32s. appears therein in the column headed "Amount of pay," and the sum of 7s. in the column headed "Allowances for special duties."

By section 15 of the Police Act, 1890, the police authority of every police force is authorized and directed to deduct from the pay of every constable such stoppages during sickness as may be provided by the regulations respecting the force.

In the metropolitan police force during absence owing to sickness one shilling a day is usually stopped from the ordinary pay of a constable, and in the case of a constable employed as the appellant was on special duty and receiving special allowance in respect thereof, such allowance is usually stopped in addition to the stoppage of 1s. a day from his ordinary pay. During the period of such absence the amount of the allowance would be paid to the constable who actually performed the special duty.

A good service allowance of £25 per annum is granted to each of the eight senior superintendents of the metropolitan police force, and the allowance is taken into account in the calculation of pensions.

Upon the appellant's retirement the respondents awarded him a pension of £55 9s. 4d. a year, payable in quarterly instalments. This sum of £55 9s. 4d. was fifty-two times the sum of £1 1s. 4d., which sum of £1 1s. 4d. was two-thirds of the above-mentioned sum of £1 12s.

Upon behalf of the appellant it was contended: (a) That he was entitled to receive a pension at the rate of two-thirds of the sum of £1 19s. per week, and that the sum of 7s. which was expressly voted by Parliament as a special duty allowance, and had been paid to the appellant for a period of nearly five years, was "pay" within the meaning of the 1st Schedule, Part 1, to the Police Act, 1890, and that the purpose of that Act would be defeated if a police authority could treat as non-pensionable a special duty allowance attached to a permanent appointment. (b) That the appellant's "annual pay," within the meaning of the Police Act 1890, did not mean fifty-two times his weekly pay, but 365 times his daily pay. In support of the latter contention, a return to Parliament signed by the Commissioners of the Metropolitan Police was put in. This return comprises a statement of the salaries or pay per annum of each class of the metropolitan police force, including constables who are paid weekly, and the salaries or pay per annum of these constables are calculated at fifty-two times the weekly pay, plus one day's pay. The special duty allowances of the police employed on special duty at the House of Lords are similarly calculated in the estimate of the money voted by Parliament.

On behalf of the respondents it was contended: (a) That the appellant was only entitled to a pension at the rate of two-thirds of £1 12s. a week, and that the sum of 7s. was not part of his pay as a constable, but was only an allowance in the nature of a gratuity, and that this sum of 7s. was properly not taken into account in arriving at the pension due to the appellant. (b) That, as the appellant was paid weekly, his "annual pay" meant fifty-two times his weekly pay, and not plus one day's pay, and that the pension of £55 9s. 4d., was the proper yearly pension due to the appellant. The majority of the court were of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed, and the appeal was dismissed accordingly, subject to the opinion of the court upon this case.

The questions for the opinion of the court were (a) Whether the sum of 7s. though called an allowance, was "pay" within the meaning of the Police Act, 1890, and as such ought to have been taken into consideration in arriving at the amount of the pension due to the appellant; and (b) whether "annual pay" means fifty-two times the weekly pay, or 365 times the daily pay.

The Police Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 45), provides:

Section 1.—"Subject to the provisions of this Act, every constable in a police force—(a) if he has completed not less than twenty-five years' approved service, . . . shall . . . be entitled without a medical certificate to retire and receive a pension for life."

Schedule I., Part 1.—(1) The pension to a constable on retirement shall be within the maximum and minimum limits following; that is to say—(c) if he has completed twenty-five years' approved service, an annual sum not less than thirty sixtieths, nor more than thirty-one fiftieths of his annual pay, with an addition of not less than one-sixtieth, nor more than three-fiftieths of his annual pay for every completed year of approved service above twenty-five years, so however that the pension shall not exceed two-thirds of his annual pay"; Part 3 (11) "In estimating any pension, gratuity, or allowance for the purposes of this Act—(a) a pension or gratuity to a constable shall be calculated accordingly to the amount of his annual pay at the date of his retirement."

Pickersgill, for the appellant.—The allowance for special service is part of the constable's pay. "Pay" includes more than mere "salary": 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, ss. 9, 22; Police Act, 1890, ss. 14, 15. The fact that in the pay list the special allowance was not treated as pay does not affect the question. The allowance was regularly paid to and received by the constable for five years and ought therefore to be regarded as part of his pay for the purpose of calculating his pension: Reg. v. Postmaster-General, 26 W. R. 322, 3 Q. B. D. 428. As to the second point, annual pay in Schedule I, Part 1 (c) of the Police Act, 1890, means 365 times the daily pay—the whole sum received by the constable for his services in the course of the year—the fact that it is paid weekly is immaterial.

Macmorran, Q.C. (J. P. Grain with him), for the respondents.—Section 11 of the Police Act, 1890, makes the decision of the quarter sessions final, but that point is waived. There is a distinction between "pay" and "emoluments" both in this Act, s. 32 (5), and in other Acts, such as the Superannuation Act, 1859 (22 Vict. c. 26), and the Poor Law Officers Superannuation Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 50). The appellant's pay was 32s. per week, and the 7s. per week is an additional emolument or gratuity; the commissioners were not bound to pay it, nor could the constable have maintained an action respecting it. The special employment and the allowance for it might have ceased at any time. On the second point the payment was a weekly payment and the annual amount is properly calculated at fifty-two times the weekly amount.

Pickersgill replied.

CHANNELL, J.—Upon one point in this case we each of us have some considerable difficulty, and we must give our own opinions, though they are not quite identical. We have to consider the Police Act of 1890, and the main difference between that Act and the prior Acts is that in certain cases it gives to constables their pension as of right. The sections of the Act which give that pension as of right do not themselves define the amount of the pension. The pension that the constable is entitled to is a pension in accordance with the pension scale for the force. As to this pension scale, the statute says that the fixed scale to be adopted by the police authority must be within the maximum and minimum limits set forth in Part 1 of the first schedule to the Act. We have not had put before us the words of the scale for the metropolitan police; but it is stated to us, and I assume accurately stated, that what was adopted there was the maximum of this schedule, so that we must deal with the question as to what pension the appellant is entitled to, according to the words of the maximum of this scale. The only words that are important in this connection are the words in Part 1 of Schedule I., which, after dealing specially with the pensions in reference to various years' services in section 1, (c) ends thus: "So, however, that the pension shall not exceed two-thirds of his annual pay." The appellant in this case has been granted a pension upon the footing of its being two-thirds of what, for that purpose, was assumed to be his annual pay; so that what we have to find out is what was his "annual pay" within the meaning of those words in the schedule. "Annual pay," so far as I see, is only used in the schedule, and it is used in several other places in the schedule both in Part 1 and Part 3. But "pay" is used in other places throughout the Act, and I think that "pay" and "allowances" are shown by the Act to have been, at the time of the passing of the Act, separate matters, separately treated by prior statutes and in this statute. In the case of certain persons in the metropolitan police, by virtue of the Metropolitan Police Staff (Superannuation) Act of 1875, relating to the superannuation allowances of certain officers of the staff of the metropolitan police—not of all constables, but of certain officers of the staff—those officers appear to have had pensions calculated both upon their pay and upon their allowances, and in section 32 of the Police Act of 1890 provisions are made for applying that Act to the metropolitan police force. Section 32 says: "This Act shall apply to the metropolitan police force, subject as follows: (5) The rate and conditions of pension of the chief commissioner of metropolitan police and of the assistant commissioners of metropolitan police shall be regulated by the provisions of this Act, and not by the provisions of the Metropolitan Police Staff (Superannuation) Act, 1875, but the said chief commissioner and assistant commissioners shall be entitled to pension under the provisions of this Act in respect of any emoluments in respect of which they are entitled to a superannuation allowance made under the Metropolitan Police Staff (Superannuation) Act, 1875." So that those particular officers were to come under this Act and have a pension, not upon their pay only, but they were to have the additional benefit that the Act of 1875 gave them, and that benefit was preserved to them. That seems to me to show that "pay" meant pay strictly so called, and that there were other things that might possibly be treated as pay, but which in fact were not treated as pay. Pay in itself would, I suppose, cover any money remuneration for services, and consequently such sums as we have got to consider in this case would primâ facie come within the ordinary meaning of the word pay, but the question is, whether they come within the meaning of the word "pay" in this Act. If it is the fact that pay is distinguished from allowances, and that it had been so distinguished prior to the passing of this Act, then I think when the word "pay" is used in this Act one would treat it as having the special meaning which it had at that time between police-constables and the people who pay them. In this particular case the question arises as to the pay of a constable attending at the House of Lords on permanent duty for the whole year. A considerable number of constables attend at the House of Lords and the House of Commons also during the session only. Let us deal first with those persons. They attend so many weeks, not all the year, and they have one shilling a day while they attend. They are paid it weekly, and a sheet is made out, which they sign, and in that sheet there is their regular amount of pay which has been offered to them when they entered the service, increased, of course, as they have increased in rank; but the pay—pay which is properly and strictly pay—is put in one column, and then from that there is deducted the proportion for the superannuation fund. Then there is added to that, to show the amount they are to receive every week, certain allowances. Some of those things, allowances in lieu of uniform, allowances in lieu of coals, allowances in lieu of boots, and allowances in lieu of other things, it is agreed are not matters that come within the words "annual pay" for the purpose of calculating the pension. This additional one shilling a day for special duties is entered as one of those allowances, and is not entered as an amount of pay. It seems to me, therefore, that when that is given to the constable week by week, it is offered to him not in the character of pay, but in the character of an allowance, such as the other allowances which are there added to it. It is true that it is paid to him in one sense as a money remuneration for his services, and, therefore, if we had nothing else to guide us we should say that it came within the ordinary meaning of the word "pay." But here we have got pay and allowances distinguished, and this money that is given to the constable is given to him as an allowance and not as pay, and is received by him as such, and the deduction is not made from it which would be made from it if it were pay proper. I think, therefore, it is a money payment which is given to him, not as pay within the strict meaning of the word pay, but is given to him in the same way as his allowance in lieu of coals and other things; and it seems to me to be the same in the case of the man who only serves temporarily—the man who serves at the House of Lords and the House of Commons during the session only—and it is the same in the case of the man who goes to a race meeting, or goes to some other special duty, and who, in consequence of so going, through serving perhaps longer hours, gets an additional shilling a day or some other additional sum. In the cases of those temporary employments, even if the sum so given is pay, I do not think it can possibly be said to be "annual pay." Consequently, in reference to those constables I should have no difficulty whatever in saying that in those cases the extra special allowance for the special duties cannot be considered pay to be taken into account when considering the question of pension. The point that causes us difficulty in this case is this: Parliament, I suppose, provides money for the payment of the staff of constables who attend, amongst other places, at the House of Lords, and they provide for so many constables for the whole year and so many during the session, and they provide the funds by which to pay special duty allowances at one shilling per day for six constables for the whole year, and for nineteen constables for the session only. Now, the present appellant is stated in the case not merely to have in fact served during the whole of the last year before he retired—which I think would not put him on any different footing from that of a man who had served so many weeks—but to have served in this special duty for the whole of the period from 1894 down to his retirement in January, 1899. The difficulty, to my mind, and it is a considerable difficulty, is as to the six constables who are upon a different footing and in a different position from the constables who were employed during the session only, because the case says that the appellant having already served nine years as a police-constable at the Houses of Parliament, was selected by the Commissioner of Police for permanent duty at the House of Lords. I do not suppose the appellant was guaranteed his position there any more than any other constable was guaranteed his position; but he was told apparently that if things went on all right, and if he behaved himself properly, and so on, he would be put on the permanent staff there. The result of that, possibly, may not be to make a legally enforceable contract for the extra shilling a day; but in substance he was told he would get an extra shilling a day. Consequently there is very much more difficulty about refusing to say that the appellant's remuneration for his work at the House of Lords was not merely pay because it was a money remuneration for his services, but was also annual pay because he was put in the position that he might expect at any rate to get it all through the year. I think on the whole, although I have great difficulty about it, that it does not make any difference that this sum was paid to the appellant, not as part of his pay—which he must have understood quite well was a separate thing from his allowances—but was paid to him as part of his allowances, notwithstanding that he got it all through the year. On the whole, therefore, although not without considerable doubt, founded solely on that particular statement in the case that he had been selected for permanent duty, I come to the conclusion that this sum of 7s. a week cannot be treated as either "pay" or "annual pay" for the purposes of calculating this pension.

I now come to the remaining point — namely, as to the extra day. As to that, as I have pointed out, the words "annual pay" are not referred to at all in the Act until we come to the schedule. When we get to the schedule, the appellant's pension, the schedule says, is not to exceed two-thirds (and this scale says it is to be two-thirds) of his annual pay. What is his annual pay? It is not a sum contracted to be paid to him by the year. He is not paid so many pounds a year, and consequently it cannot mean that. The police authorities could not say to this constable that he is not paid by the year at all, that his salary is not by the year and that there is no contract to pay him so many pounds a year, and that consequently he has no annual pay. They have not contended that. "Annual pay" does not mean pay under an annual contract for an annual rate—that is to say, for so much per annum. If not, what does it mean? It must mean the sum which the man receives for his services during the year. I do not see my way to saying that it depends upon the number of pay days in the year. Counsel for the appellant has pointed out that if it depended on that there would be some years in which there would be fifty-three pay days. Supposing he retired in the year following such a year, could it be said that therefore his pension should be calculated on the fifty-three weeks' pay, as he was paid fifty-three times during that year? I do not think we could say that, and the consequence is that we must say that he is entitled to the fifty-two weeks and the one day. Those days are all in the year, and as the contract is not an annual contract, the total amount must be the amount which he was entitled to receive annually, and what he receives for his services during the year are fifty-two times thirty-two shillings and the proportionate part for the one day. He is paid in the first week of the next year, and he is paid so many days in one year and so many days in the other, and with regard to the one day which belongs to the previous year, I think that must be added. I do not see my way out of that view of the case, although I can understand how the present practice has grown up. In the result, therefore, my opinion is that this appeal should be allowed to the extent of the necessary alteration of that one day, but not further.

BUCKNILL, J.—With regard to the second point I agree, and I have nothing to add. It is only on the first point that unfortunately we do not hold quite the same opinion. I think I am safe in saying that the object of this Act was to found a new scheme for the pensions of police-constables, because I am quoting the words of the present Lord Chief Justice in the case of Ruff v. Secretary of State for the Home Department, 60 J. P. 343, in which my brother Channell was counsel. Lord Russell, C.J., there says: "The short effect of the Police Act, 1890, was to found a new general scheme of police pensions which was not intended to be binding upon existing constables . . . who declined in writing to accept its provisions." It is quite clear that that Act of 1890 was the first Act of Parliament which gave to police-constables an absolute right in certain events, to receive a certain pension. In this case the appellant was, and had been for a long time before 1894, chosen by those in authority over him for permanent duty at the House of Lords. I suppose he was probably given the opportunity of refusing, and indeed he must have been, as we find it stated in the case that the 7s. now in question was partly as a reward for his past services, and partly as a solatium for his lost chances of promotion which he might have had if he had not gone there. I think, therefore, we may take it that as between the Commissioner of Police and the appellant it was agreed that he should be permanently appointed to serve thereafter at the House of Lords—that is to say, not only from week to week, but from year to year, should he so long remain in the force. There he went and there he remained for five years, during which time he received in fact no more and no less than that money which was in fact allocated to him, as we see by the Parliamentary letter which has been put in, dated the 31st of December, 1897. In that letter, which was submitted from the Treasury, the clerk says: "I am directed by the Lords Commissioners . . . to ask for funds for the payment of the metropolitan police employed within the precincts of the Houses of Parliament in the same way as police are paid for when employed outside public buildings." Then come the figures. First of all there are certain figures for inspectors and constables, mentioning particularly five constables for the session only, and then comes what is called special duty allowance, and under that heading come six constables, of whom the appellant is one, who would receive for the whole year payment of one shilling a day. I do not think it can be said that, because this one shilling a day is called a special duty allowance, it ceases at the end of the year to be in fact annual pay. I think we must take the words of the Act to mean exactly what they say. I will now look at another Act of Parliament to which counsel for the appellant has called our attention, the statute 10 Geo. 4, c. 44. That was a Police Act, and in that Act the words particularly were "salaries, wages, and allowances." We find no similar expression in the Police Act of 1890. The only word which is used in the body of that Act, as distinguished from the schedule, is "pay." When we come to the schedule we find the words "annual pay." How are those words "annual pay" to be construed? In the first schedule, Part 3, it is said that: "In estimating any pension, gratuity, or allowance for the purposes of this Act, a pension or gratuity to a constable shall be calculated according to the amount of his annual pay at the date of his retirement." I say at once, that, in my opinion, it cannot be argued against the appellant that those in authority chose to draw up this pay-sheet in the way which they did. It may be that they had good reason for subdividing it into the column of "amount of pay" and the column of "allowances," under which we find "for special duties" this one shilling a day or seven shillings a week. It is certainly an unfortunate circumstance that the constable has for so long signed that sheet, because it would lead one to think that he was looking upon this seven shillings not as his ordinary wage, but as something in addition to it. I think it would be wrong, simply because he has done that and has signed that pay-sheet, submitted to him by his superiors for signature, because those in authority have chosen to form their pay-sheet in that way, to say that the money received by him, thirty-two shillings his ordinary wage and seven shillings his extraordinary wage, do not make up at the end of the year his annual pay. I think they do, and I think it would be wrong to hold otherwise, unless we see that we are doing violence to the language of the Act. I think that if the Act had meant to exclude such payment as this permanent payment of one shilling a day, for permanent services such as were rendered by the appellant in this case, it would probably have taken care to say so. All it says is, that he shall be entitled to his pension, based upon the amount of his annual pay, at the date of his retirement. I have had considerable difficulty in coming to this conclusion, because I have heard what my learned brother's view is, and I cannot, speaking with respect, quite hold the same opinion that he does, because there is in this same Act this special section—section 32—put in for the protection of certain other persons whose rights were created in 1875, and I cannot come to the conclusion that inferentially it was intended by the Act of 1890 to show that a special allowance was not to be deemed part of a man's usual pay. I prefer to go upon my construction of the plain English in the Act that a man's annual pay is that which he receives in the course of the year, and if he receives annually a regular wage for a permanent and regular service, what he receives is in fact his annual pay.

Appeal dismissed as to the special allowance of 7s. a week, but allowed in respect of the extra day in the year. Leave to appeal.

Solicitors for the appellant, Mann & Crimp.

Solicitors for the respondents, Wontner & Sons.

---

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) — April 30.

ROBERTSON v. MAYOR, &c., OF BRISTOL. (a.)

Local government—Paving expenses—Street—Alteration of width of carriage-way and footway—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 150.

An urban authority has no power under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, when paving and making good a street, to alter the width of the carriage-way and footway.

Appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment of Grantham, J., at the trial without a jury of an action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from altering the width of the footway and carriage-way of a street called Robertson-road.

The plaintiff was the owner of a piece of land in the parish of St. George, near Bristol, which he laid out for building. He submitted plans to the St. George's Local Board as required by their bye-laws, the plans showing a new street called Robertson-road, along part of which there was a carriageway 30ft. wide, and a footway on each side 7ft. 6in. wide, and along the rest a carriageway 27ft. wide and a footway on each side 6ft. 6in. wide. The plans were approved by the local board, and the road was made and duly certified by the surveyor to the local board.

On the 1st of November, 1897, the parish of St. George was incorporated by the Bristol Corporation Act, 1897, in the city of Bristol, and the St. George's District Urban Council (who were the successors to the St. George's Local Board) were dissolved, and all their powers and duties were transferred to the defendants. At that time houses had been built along Robertson-road, but the road had not been taken over by the local authority.

In May, 1898, the defendants served notice upon the frontagers in Robertson-road, under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring them to pave and make good the road according to plans which showed a footway on each side of the road of a uniform width of six feet. Upon failure to comply with the notices, the defendants commenced the work, when the plaintiff brought this action.

Grantham, J., held that the defendants had power under section 150 to deal with the road as they thought best in the public interest both as regards carriage-way and footway. He accordingly gave judgment for the defendants.

The plaintiff appealed.

J. A. Foote, Q.C. (Duke, Q.C., and F. E. Weatherly, with him), for the plaintiff.—The defendants have no power under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to alter the respective widths of the carriage-way and footway of a street. They must pave and make the street as it is dedicated to the public. They cannot alter the dedication. They may, perhaps, after they have taken the street over, alter the width of the carriage-way and footway under section 149, but if they do so they are liable to pay compensation under section 308. The learned judge was therefore wrong.

He referred to Fisher v. Prowse, 2 B. & S. 770.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Clavell Salter, for the defendants.—The defendants, as the urban sanitary authority, have power under section 150 to "pave" the street—that is, they may alter the respective widths of the carriage-way and footway as they think best in the public interest. The only remedy of the owner of the soil is to appeal to the Local Government Board under section 268. The Act gives the local authority power to override the rights of private persons in the interest of the public.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In my opinion this appeal must be allowed. The plaintiff was the owner of a piece of land which he laid out as a building estate. He laid out a road through it. He submitted plans to the local authority which were approved by them, and the road was then made. The road had a carriage-way and a footway on each side. In 1897 the locus in quo was incorporated in the city of Bristol, and the defendants became the local authority for the district. The defendants thereupon served notices upon the frontages along the road under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, requiring them to pave and make good the road, according to plans, which showed that the footway on each side was to be cut down to a uniform width of six feet, and the space so cut off the footway was to be thrown into the carriage-way. In other words, the defendants proposed to alter that which the plaintiff had dedicated to the use of foot passengers, and to convert part of it into a carriage-way. In my opinion section 150 gives them no such power. There is no power to convert any part of the footway into the carriage-way, or any part of the carriage-way into the footway. They can pave and make good the existing carriage-way and footways, or either of them. Whether they ought to have such a power is not for me to consider. They have not got it. The judgment is therefore wrong, and must be entered for the plaintiff.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree. In my judgment the corporation have no power under section 150 to do what they claim to be entitled to do in this case. They must deal with the street as they find it, and it is that street which they can pave and make good. But this case is even stronger against the corporation, because their predecessors have approved the plans of the street with the carriage-way and footways of a certain width, and the street has been made in accordance with those plans. In these circumstances it is the street so approved and made that the corporation can pave and make good under section 150.

ROMER, L.J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Ford & Ford, for Wansbrough, Dickenson, Robinson, & Tayler, Bristol.

Solicitors for the defendants, Robins, Hay, Waters, & Hay, for D. Travers Burges, Bristol.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — April 24, 25.

NATIONAL COMPANY FOR THE DISTRIBUTION OF ELECTRICITY BY SECONDARY GENERATORS (LIMITED) v. GIBBS. (a.)

Patent—Grant to two patentees—Agreement for sale—Covenants for validity—Death of one grantee—Joint and several covenants.

A provision in an agreement for the sale of letters patent granted to two persons that an assignment should be executed and should contain a covenant by the vendors that the letters patent is valid, is enforceable against the representatives of one of the vendors who has died after the agreement and before assignment, and such representatives are liable for damages for breach of the agreement in this respect.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (47 W. R. 518, [1899] 2 Ch. 289), reversed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (reported 47 W. R. 518, [1899] 2 Ch. 289).

It raised a question as to the construction of an agreement to assign a patent granted by two patentees. By an agreement under seal dated the 25th of May, 1883, and made between Lucien Gaulard and John Dixon Gibbs (thereinafter called "the vendors") of the one part and the plaintiff company of the other part, after reciting that the vendors were the inventors of certain inventions in connection with the manufacture and construction of secondary generators for the distribution of electricity and other apparatus connected with electrical lighting for which they had obtained her Majesty's letters patent and of which they had filed specifications and that the vendors had also obtained certain foreign patents, it was agreed that (1) the vendors should sell and the company should purchase the exclusive privilege of using, exercising, and vending all the inventions within the United Kingdom and the other countries named, with the full benefit of all extensions, &c.; (2) that "the vendors and each of them" should from time to time and at the request and cost of the company do all such acts and things as by the company might be considered necessary or expedient for procuring confirmation of any of the patents, and for obtaining extensions and prolongations, and that the vendors would communicate all improvements and other inventions and at the request and cost of the company patent the same and execute assurances for vesting the new patents in the company; (3) that in the event of infringement the company should "be at liberty to commence, carry on and prosecute in their own name, or in the name of the patentees or any of them or the executors, or administrators of any of them or otherwise, all such actions and proceedings" as the company might think fit; (4) that "the vendors and each of them" should at all times thereafter give the company advice as to the use of the inventions. Clause 5 stated the consideration payable, and clauses 6 and 7 were as follows: "(6) The vendors shall without delay, at the expense of the said company and to the satisfaction of the solicitors of the said company, establish a title to all the said inventions and letters patent and privileges hereby agreed to be sold, and assign and transfer the same to, and cause the same to be legally vested in, the said company or such person or persons as the said company shall appoint for the purpose. (7) The assignment and transfer of the said letters patent and and other premises sold shall be prepared by and at the expense of the said company and shall be expressed to be made in pursuance of this agreement and in consideration of the payment of the said sum of £220,000, to be paid in fully paid-up shares and cash as before mentioned, and the said vendors and all other necessary parties, if any, shall at the cost of the said company execute such assignments to the said company or as they shall direct, and such assignments respectively shall contain a covenant by the said vendors that all the letters patent thereby assigned or any letters patent which may thus have been obtained in substitution for the same or in respect of such invention as is protected thereby are valid and in nowise void or voidable, and also such other covenants and provisions as may be reasonably required by the said company for giving effect to the sale hereby agreed to be made. Provided that the consideration money may be apportioned among two or more assignments as the said company shall think fit." All the patents referred to in the agreement were granted to Gaulard and Gibbs and not to either of them separately. Amongst others was an English patent of the 13th of September, 1882 (4,362 of 1882), which was in the usual form of a grant to two patentees. After reciting that Gaulard and Gibbs had presented their petition to the Crown, and that the petitioners had prayed for a grant "unto them, their executors, administrators, and assigns" of letters patent for the sole use, benefit, and advantage of the said invention within the United Kingdom for fourteen years, it proceeded as follows: "Know, therefore, that we . . . by these presents for us, our heirs and successors, do give and grant unto the said Lucien Gaulard and John Dixon Gibbs, their executors, administrators, and assigns, our special licence, full power, sole privilege, and authority that they, the said" Gaulard and Gibbs, "their executors, administrators, and assigns, and every of them by themselves or by their deputy, or deputies, servants, or agents, or such others as they, the said" Gaulard and Gibbs, "their executors, administrators, and assigns shall at any time agree with and no others and from time to time and at all times hereafter during the term of years expressed, shall and lawfully may make, use, exercise, and vend their said invention" within the United Kingdom "in such a manner as to them the said" Gaulard and Gibbs, "their executors, administrators, and assigns or any of them shall in their discretion seem meet, and that the said" Gaulard and Gibbs, "their executors, administrators, and assigns shall and lawfully may have and enjoy the whole profit, and benefit," &c., coming by reason of the invention for the period therein mentioned, "To have, hold, exercise, and enjoy the said licences, powers, privileges, and advantages . . . unto the said" Gaulard and Gibbs, "their executors, administrators, and assigns" for the term of fourteen years; "and to the end that they the said" Gaulard and Gibbs, "their executors, administrators, and assigns, and every of them, may have and enjoy the full benefit and sole use and exercise of the said invention." Gaulard died in 1888, and Mme. Henriette Unesime Ruelle, one of the defendants, was his administratrix.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In the present action, which was brought against Gibbs and Mme. Ruelle, the company alleged that the consideration for the sale of the patents had been paid, that the patents had not been assigned to the company, and were entirely or in part void or voidable, that in some countries the patents had been declared void, and that the company had suffered damage by having to pay costs and by the value of the patents having been reduced. The company, accordingly, claimed (1) that the defendants might be ordered to assign the patents; (2) damages for breaches of agreement and warrants; and (3) repayment of a portion of the purchase-money. As against Gibbs the action was compromised. The defendant Mme. Ruelle alleged by her defence that the plaintiff company had taken proceedings in France against her and others to enforce the agreement of the 25th of May, 1883, and that by an order of the Paris Court of Appeal of the 2nd of June, 1897, the plaintiff company were ordered to pay to her under the agreement the sum of £2,581 3s. with interest, and that this sum still remained unpaid, and she counterclaimed for payment of that amount with interest. At the trial of the action it was objected that the grant of letters patent was to Gaulard and Gibbs jointly, and that on the death of Gaulard the joint interest passed to Gibbs by survivorship, and further, that the obligation created by clause 7 of the agreement was merely a joint covenant, and that the survivor Gibbs was the only person who could be sued upon it.

Cozens-Hardy, J., upheld these objections and came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief against Mme. Ruelle, and he dismissed both the action and the counterclaim. Mme. Ruelle appealed from this decision, so far as it related to the counterclaim, and the plaintiffs served a cross-notice of appeal on Mme. Ruelle, so far as the judgment related to the action.

Eve, Q.C., and Rowden, Q.C., for Mme. Ruelle.—Mme. Ruelle is entitled to judgment on the counterclaim. This is a case in which the courts here will enforce the judgment of a foreign court: Rousillon v. Rousillon, 28 W. R. 623, 14 Ch. D. 351; Schibsby v. Westenholz, 19 W. R. 587, L. R. 6 Q. B. 155.

Gore Browne (Moulton, Q.C., with him), for the plaintiffs.—As to the appeal, an agreement to pay money for property cannot been forced unless the property is transferred. As to our cross-appeal, the agreement is executory, and the courts will enforce it on the footing that what ought to have done has been done. If these patents had been assigned, the proper covenants to insert in the assignment would have been joint and several covenants by the vendors: Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 7; Davidson's Precedents (4th ed.), vol. 2, part 1, p. 359; Key and Elphinstone (5th ed.), vol. 1, p. 409.

Eve, Q.C., in reply.—The question is not what covenants might properly be inserted in the assignment, but whether the purchaser would be entitled to joint and several covenants if the vendors refused to give more than a joint covenant: White v. Tyndall, 13 App. Cas. 263, 36 W. R. Dig. 113.

LINDLEY, M.R.—In this case I am unable after consideration to agree with the view adopted by the learned judge, but I doubt very much whether the practical result of the view which we have adopted will be more beneficial to the parties than the view which he has adopted.

The question arises in this way. There were two patentees, Gaulard and Gibbs, who were entitled to various patents, and amongst others to a patent for England for the distribution of electricity. It is quite obvious from what we learned yesterday that they were not merely co-owners of that patent, but they took out the patent in order to make money by selling it and sharing any profits which they might get out of it; and they agreed to sell it to the plaintiff company by an agreement dated May, 1883, which was afterwards modified by an agreement dated October, 1883. It was in substance an agreement to sell the patents mentioned in the schedule for a very considerable sum of money. It is unnecessary to go into the details of the consideration. The agreement is important in one of its clauses, because the learned judge has taken what appears to me to be rather a short cut in dealing with the rights of the parties under the agreement. After agreeing for the sale and settling the price, we come to clauses 6 and 7, which relate to the method of carrying out the agreement by the vendors Gaulard and Gibbs. They were to assign the patents to the company as the company should direct, and then comes clause 7, which is very important, and which is in effect that "the assignment and transfer of the said letters patent shall be prepared by and at the costs of the company, and shall be expressed to be made in pursuance of the agreement and in consideration of the payment of the consideration money. The vendors and all other other necessary parties hereto shall at the cost of the company execute such assignments to the company as they shall direct, and such assignments respectively shall contain a covenant by the vendors that all the letters patent hereby assigned or any substituted for them are valid and in no wise void or voidable; and also such other covenants and provisions as may be reasonably required by the company for giving effect to the sale hereby agreed to be made." Then there is a proviso which does not appear to be important, that the consideration may be apportioned amongst two or more assignments as the company shall think fit. That, I suppose, has reference to the convenience of drafting if they wanted separate assignments of the separate patents.

This seventh clause, which I have read, to my mind, distinguishes this case in principle from the decision of the House of Lords in White v. Tyndall, upon which, mainly, the learned judge proceeded. He treated this agreement as neither more nor less than a joint covenant by Gaulard and Gibbs to assign these patents and covenant for their validity.

I cannot think that that is a true construction, and the learned judge himself, I think, almost admitted it, because he said it might be that in a proper assignment the covenants of title would be joint and several. I have not the slightest doubt that they would and ought to be joint and several, and that the learned judge has gone too far in deciding the case upon the short ground that the covenants being joint and Gaulard being dead, there was no remedy against his legal personal representative Mme. Ruelle, and that the claim by the company against her failed, and the company could only look to Gibbs, the survivor. It followed from that view that certain rights which Mme. Ruelle set up in her counterclaim, and which proceeded upon the theory that the covenant was a joint and several one, and that she had separate rights against the company, also failed.

By taking that short cut the learned judge dismissed the action and the counterclaim. I cannot think that that view is correct, and what I propose to do—and what my brothers agree with me in thinking ought to be done—is this: we ought to reverse the judgment and declare that upon the true construction of the agreement of the 25th of May, 1883, the right of the plaintiff company against Mme. Ruelle is to be ascertained upon the footing that Gaulard and Gibbs had jointly covenanted to assign the patents mentioned in the agreement to the plaintiff company, and that such assignments should contain joint and several covenants by Gaulard and Gibbs with the company that such patents were valid and in no wise void or voidable. Then declare that the amount due from the company to Mme. Ruelle on her counterclaim is to be ascertained upon the footing of the order of the 25th of March, 1898, which refers to the French proceedings and so on. With those declarations remit the action and the counterclaim for trial.

Then as regards the costs. Each cross-notice succeeds, and what we propose to do is this—to reserve the costs of the action and of the counterclaim and of this appeal, including the costs of the plaintiff company's cross-notice, to be dealt with by the judge at the trial. When the whole case is before him the proper mode of dealing with these costs will be easily arrived at.

I wish to say one word upon the matter discussed yesterday, and that is about the plaintiffs' cross-notice. If the learned judge had not so linked the action and the counterclaim together as he did, and if the counsel in the court below had not more or less acquiesced in that view, I should have thought, and I think my brothers agree, that the plaintiffs would have been wrong in giving their cross-notice of appeal as distinguished from bringing a cross-appeal, inasmuch as that cross-notice was addressed to not merely the counterclaim to which the appeal was confined, but to the totally different matter of their right to relief upon their action, which is a separate and distinct matter altogether. But having regard to the mode in which the two were linked together, we think that in the circumstances of this case that cross-notice ought to be treated—and we did treat it yesterday—as if it were a distinct notice of appeal. It turns on the true construction of the rule which was drawn to our attention yesterday, and the appeal there referred to was the appeal by the defendants on their counterclaim, and looked at strictly and properly, that cross-notice could only be made available as an answer to an appeal on the order from the counterclaim, and ought not to be extended to the totally distinct matter—that is to say, the relief sought by the plaintiffs on their claim. But, as I have said before, and I am prepared to adhere to it, the circumstances of this case were so special by reason of the course taken to which I have alluded, that we think it only just to treat the cross-notice as a cross-appeal, and we do so accordingly.

I wish to be quite clear about this. This declaration is not to exclude any defence which anybody can take to anything. The rights are to be ascertained upon this footing, reserving all defences to anybody. I think the declaration is plain.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree.

COLLINS, L.J.—I also agree.

Solicitors, Edward Betteley; Campbell, Reeves, & Hooper.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — March 16, 19; April 2.

DIDISHEIM v. LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK. (a.)

Lunacy—Person of unsound mind—Foreign domicil—English property of foreign lunatic—Foreign receiver—Next friend, action by—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 134.

An action can be brought in the name of a lunatic not so found by inquisition without the sanction of the Crown.

The administrateur provisoire, with power to collect the personal estate of a lunatic domiciled abroad, can bring an action in England in his own name and in the name of the lunatic, and as her next friend, for the delivery to him of her property in England.

This was an appeal from a decision of North, J.

The action was in the nature of a common law action for detinue, and raised questions as to the right of a person who had been appointed by a Belgian court administrateur provisoire in lunacy, to have handed over to him securities deposited with the London and Westminster Bank amounting in value to between £300,000 and £400,000.

The action related to property which, by the terms of a marriage contract between the late Benedict Leopold Goldschmidt and his wife, whose maiden name was Marie Woog, was held by husband and wife under the Swiss system of legal community. The documents held by the bank comprised certificates of shares and securities and bonds and scrip to bearer, representing investments in English, colonial, American, and foreign companies and Government securities which had been lodged by M. Goldschmidt in his lifetime. The income was collected by the bank and placed to the credit of a current account M. Goldschmidt kept at the bank.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

M. and Mme. Goldschmidt were married at Geneva in 1866, M. Goldschmidt being at the time a German merchant resident at Mayence, his wife being Swiss.

Subsequently to the marriage they went to Brussels and resided there for some twenty-five years, down to the death of M. Goldschmidt in 1892.

He made a will bequeathing one-fourth of the half of the common property to which he was entitled to his wife and giving her a life interest in another quarter. The other parts became distributable among their four children. Mme. Goldschmidt was appointed administrator of her husband's personal estate in England. She satisfied the shares of her three elder children, but the share of the youngest had not been handed over to him because he was under age. The bulk of the property in the custody of the bank was either left or redeposited with them.

Mme. Goldschmidt became of unsound mind and was placed under the care of a Dr. Hertz at Bonn, in Germany, where she still resided.

Under the Belgian law two proceedings can be adopted in the case of a person of unsound mind, by "interdiction" or "administration." The former, it appears, is analogous to a formal finding by a jury in this country, of lunacy, which results in the appointment of a committee of the estate of a lunatic; the latter a proceeding in which a mere receiver in lunacy is appointed. The family adopted the latter procedure, and M. Didisheim was appointed administrateur provisoire accordingly, his position being apparently similar to that of a receiver in lunacy in England. The letters of administration of the estate of her husband, which had been granted to Mme. Goldschmidt, were impounded, and administration de bonis non granted to M. Didisheim. The bank considered that M. Didisheim could not give them a valid discharge and refused to part with the securities.

This action was brought by M. Didisheim and by Mme. Goldschmidt, suing by him as her next friend. The youngest son—Robert, now of age—of Mme. Goldschmidt, who had not received his share of his father's estate, was made a defendant.

North, J., held, upon the authority of In re Barlow, 35 W. R. 737, 36 Ch. D. 287, and In re Brown, 44 W. R. 17, [1895] 2 Ch. 666, that, as the lady had not been found lunatic by a foreign court of competent jurisdiction, M. Didisheim could not compel the bank to hand him over the securities in this country. He therefore dismissed the action.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Haldane, Q.C., and Henry Fellows, for the appellants.—If judgment be given against us, the result will be a deadlock; the moneys will remain in the bank indefinitely. It is said that Didisheim is not the legal owner of the chose in action; even if that is true, the equitable assignee of a chose in action can sue if the legal owner is present before the court. That is the case here: Alivion v. Furnival, 1 Cr. M. & R. 277.

They referred to In re Princess Soltykoff, [1898] W. N. 77; Thiery v. Chalmers, Guthrie, & Co., ante, p. 148, [1900] 1 Ch. 80.

Terrell, Q.C., and McSwinney, for the respondent.—The first question is whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintain an action for detinue under any order of the Belgian court or otherwise. We submit that no court except a Court in Lunacy can make any order as to dealing with the lunatic's property. The Court of Chancery may make an order to protect it, but not to hand it over. Here it is on the face of the record that the plaintiff is a lunatic. In other cases it was not on the face of the record: In re Barlow. The custody of a lunatic's property is vested in the Crown; and the jurisdiction of the court arises under Statute of De Prærogativa Regis: In re Knight, 46 W. R. 289, [1898] 1 Ch. 257; In re Sottomaior, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 677. Domicil in this country is not necessary to found jurisdiction over a lunatic. Sections 96, 131 (3) of the Lunacy Act, 1890, would be useless if the plaintiff's contention were correct. A foreign lunatic ought not to be in a better position than an English lunatic not so found by inquisition. The cases cited are special cases, where it was a question of preventing a lunatic from starving and such like: Beall v. Smith, 22 W. R. 121, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 85. The court will not interfere where it is not necessary: Halfhide v. Robinson, 22 W. R. 448, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 373.

The referred to Jones v. Lloyd, 22 W. R. 785, L. R. 18 Eq. 265; Porter v. Porter, 36 W. R. 580, 37 Ch. D. 420; Howell v. Lewis, 40 W. R. 88, 61 L. J. Ch. 89; Waterhouse v. Worsnop, 59 L. T. Rep. 140, 37 W. R. Dig. 142.

Haldane, Q.C., replied.

A. Fellows, for the defendant R. Goldschmidt.

THE COURT (LINDLEY, M.R., RIGBY and VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.JJ.) allowed the appeal.

LINDLEY, M.R., delivered the considered judgment of the court. He said: In consequence of the arguments addressed to us we will make a few prefatory observations on actions at law and suits in Chancery by persons of unsound mind not so found by inquisition. If before the Judicature Acts an action at law had been brought in the name of such a person to enforce a purely legal demand—say an action on a covenant or an action of assumpsit or of debt, detinue, or trover, there would have been no defence to the action on the ground that the plaintiff on the record was of unsound mind. No plea in bar or in abatement applicable to such a case is to be found in the books. Such an action might, perhaps, have been stayed on an application showing that the action was an abuse of the process of the court—i.e., was brought in the plaintiff's name without his authority: see Waterhouse v. Worsnop, which, however, was since the Judicature Act. Such an action could certainly have been stayed by proceedings in lunacy and the appointment of a committee. Unless the action were stayed it would proceed to trial in the ordinary way, and on proof of the plaintiff's case judgment would have been entered for the plaintiff on the record and execution issued accordingly: see Dennis v. Dennis, 2 Wms. Saund. 729. If the plaintiff had sued by attorney payment or delivery to him would have discharged the defendant or sheriff. If the plaintiff had sued in person a difficulty would obviously have arisen. An application to stay execution on payment into court might, we apprehend, have been successfully made, or the court could, as in Gleddon v. Trebble, 9 C. B. N. S. 367, 9 W. R. C. L. Dig. 70, have ordered payment to his next friend, and so the necessity of instituting proceedings in lunacy would be avoided: see generally 1 Coll. Lunacy, 339, &c. In Chancery it had long been the settled practice to institute suits in the names of lunatics not so found by inquisition by a next friend. Applications to stay such suits were also frequently made with success: see generally on such suits Jones v. Lloyd; Beall v. Smith; Farnham v. Milward, 44 W. R. 135, [1895] 2 Ch. 730; In re George

Armstrong & Sons, 44 W. R. 281, [1896] 1 Ch. 536. The alleged lunatic could make such application himself if he asserted his sanity, and any one willing to act as next friend could make it in the alleged lunatic's name, as in Howell v. Lewis. Even the defendant might apply: see Wartnaby v. Wartnaby, Jac. 377, and Porter v. Porter, per Cotton, L.J. When a lunatic was so found by inquisition the Court of Chancery would stay a suit instituted in his name until the appointment of a committee: see Hartley v. Gilbert, 13 Sim. 596. We are not aware of any case in which a foreign curator has been held to be an improper next friend of the person whose curator he is. Security for costs from such a next friend might be required if he was resident abroad; but no suit could be stayed simply because the next friend filled an official position in a foreign country. The notion that either at law or in equity an action or suit cannot be successfully maintained, if brought in the name of a lunatic not so found by inquisition without the sanction of the Crown, is not supported by authority or sound principle. If this notion were true, the orders for payment made in In re Barlow and other cases which will be referred to presently, would have been clearly wrong. Such orders were not made in lunacy, but by the Court of Chancery, which had no lunacy jurisdiction. It is well settled that until the Crown interferes, or at all events until its interference is invoked by a petition for an inquisition or by an application for the appointment of a receiver, the prerogative of the Crown has no practical legal effect. In other words, no person can avail himself of that prerogative without taking the proper steps to induce the Crown to exercise it. This point was examined by this court last summer, when Seager Hunt's case was before it. In the present case no lunacy proceedings have been taken in this country; nor was any attempt made to stay the action. Having made these preliminary remarks we pass to the question more immediately before the court.

This action is by M. Didisheim and by Mme. Goldschmidt, by him as her next friend. The object is to obtain a large sum of cash and also share, stock, and debenture certificates of great value from the defendants. The defendants are quite ready to pay and deliver them up provided they can safely do so. The bulk of the property sought to be recovered formed part of the assets of M. Goldschmidt, a deceased gentleman, domiciled and resident in Belgium. He died some time ago, and his widow, the plaintiff, Mme. Goldschmidt, obtained letters of administration with his will annexed. By her directions most of the property in the hands of the defendants has been placed in their books in her name. She is domiciled in Belgium and is resident abroad. She has become insane and is in a foreign lunatic asylum. M. Didisheim has been duly appointed her administrateur provisoire, with power to collect and get in all her personal estate. He is also now the legal personal representative of M. Goldschmidt, having obtained letters of administration to his personal assets left unadministered by Mme. Goldschmidt. He and she together, therefore, are clearly entitled to all the property sought to be obtained from the defendants. They do not deny M. Didisheim's right as administrator to such assets of the deceased as have not become Mme. Goldschmidt's property; but they say that owing to what she did when sane, all the deceased's assets in their hands became hers, and they are now accountable to her alone for them. As to the cash and certificates, which are the property of Mme. Goldschmidt, the defendants say they cannot safely hand them over to M. Didisheim, as the ownership of them is still vested in her and has not been legally vested in M. Didisheim. North, J., has held that unless an order is made in lunacy requiring or authorizing the defendants to deliver the property of Mme. Goldschmidt to M. Didisheim they cannot safely deliver such property to him. The relations and friends of Mme. Goldschmidt are particularly desirous of avoiding any formal adjudication of lunacy, and this appeal has been brought on purpose to avoid the necessity of such an adjudication.

The demand of the plaintiffs, it will be observed, is a purely legal title; there is no trust in the case. Under the old practice one action could not have been maintained to enforce a claim by M. Didisheim as administrator and also a claim by Mme. Goldschmidt to recover her own property. Two separate actions of detinue or trover would have been necessary. Our modern practice, however, is less rigid, and the defendants have raised no objection to the two claims being joined in one action. The court, therefore, can properly entertain the action and decide the real question raised by the defendants, which is whether in an action brought by M. Didisheim in his own name and in the name of Mme Goldschmidt and as her next friend the High Court ought to make an order for the delivery to him of her property. The question may be put in another way, whether he is entitled in an action so framed to demand delivery of her property to him. We are of opinion that he is. In Scott v. Bentley, 3 W. R. 280, 1 K. & J. 281, a person resident in Scotland was entitled to an annuity charged on land in England and secured by a covenant entered into with himself. The annuitant became lunatic, and a curator bonis was appointed according to Scotch law. Whether he was judicially declared a lunatic does not distinctly appear. Nor does it appear that the ownership of his personal property was by Scotch law divested from him and vested in his curator. We rather infer that the curator merely had power to collect it and get it in. The annuity being in arrear the curator brought a suit in Chancery in his own name against the executrix and devisee in trust of the grantor of the annuity for payment of the arrears and for payment of the annuity in future. It is to be observed that the demand of the plaintiff was a purely legal demand. He sought to enforce the legal right of the annuitant under the covenant and grant. But the arrears seems to have been set apart as a trust fund, and this was held enough to give the Court of Chancery jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Vice-Chancellor Wood made an order as prayed by the bill. This decision has been much questioned; but unless it be that the suit ought in strictness to have been in the name of the lunatic by his curator as next friend we see no ground for doubting the correctness of the decision. Scott v. Bentley has been questioned mainly because it proceeded to some extent on the supposed authority of a decision in the House of Lords on an appeal from Scotland: In re Morison's Lunacy. This case appears to have been to some extent misunderstood. The Vice-Chancellor refers to it as an unreported case cited in Johnstone v. Beattie, 10 Cl. & Fin. 42, and in Sill v. Worswick, 1 H. Bl. 677-8. In Johnstone v. Beattie (see 10 Cl. & Fin., p. 97) Lord Brougham refers to Morison's case as cited in the note to Sill v. Worswick, as an authority for the proposition that the legally appointed curator in one country was held entitled to act in another. This it is plain was also Vice-Chancellor Wood's view of Morison's case, as is apparent from his remark on p. 285 that in Morison's case the curator sued alone. But the reports of that case to which we have referred in 1 Paton, 454, and Mor. 4595, show that the decision of the House of Lords in Morison's case did not go that length, and Lord Campbell was not satisfied that it did: see 10 Cl. & Fin. 133. We understand the decision as showing that a committee appointed in England of a Scotchman resident in England could not sue in Scotland simply in his own name and as committee for the recovery of the lunatic's personal estate; but that such committee could sue there in the name of the lunatic for the recovery of the lunatic's personal estate. Morison's case, therefore, did not go so far as Vice-Chancellor Wood thought, but it goes a long way to show that the proceedings in this action are properly framed; for this action is brought, not only by M. Didisheim in his double capacity of administrator of Mme. Goldschmidt and curator of Mme. Goldschmidt, but also by her in her own name suing by M. Didisheim as her next friend. In Scott v. Bentley Vice-Chancellor Wood did not by any means base his judgment only on the supposed decision in In re Morison, and after making every allowance for his misapprehension of that case, Scott v. Bentley was, in our opinion, well decided, although we cannot help thinking that if Vice-Chancellor Wood had known the form of the order made in Morison's case he would have directed the bill to be amended by making it in form a bill by the lunatic by his curator and next friend. In Alivon v. Furnival, 1 Cr. M. & R., 277, Baron Parke (p. 296) expressed a clear opinion to the effect that a foreign curator could sue here in his own name for goods and chattels of a person of unsound mind. Scott v. Bentley is consistent with and is really supported by several other cases cited by Mr. Haldane, and of which In re Tarratt, 32 W. R. 909, 51 L. T. Rep. 310; In re de Linden, 45 W. R. 342, [1897] 1 Ch. 453; and Thiery v. Chalmers, Guthrie, & Co, are the most recent and important. In In re de Linden an application was made on behalf of a Bavarian lunatic lady for payment out to two foreign gentlemen of some money in court belonging to her. The application was by her in her own mean by her next friend, who was a Bavarian judge and one of two persons appointed by a Bavarian court to take charge of her and her property. The order was made as asked — i.e., for payment, not to her, but to the two persons appointed as above mentioned. The lady had been judicially declared lunatic, but there was no judicial vesting of her property in the curators. Thiery v. Chalmers, Guthrie, & Co. was a similar case. The lunatic there was a French subject declared lunatic in France and whose property was placed under the care of a duly-appointed tuteur. An action was brought in this country by the lunatic by a next friend and by the tuteur as a co-plaintiff to recover money and securities in the hands of the lunatic's bankers. An order was made for the delivery of them to the tuteur. Kekewich, J., thought that the tuteur might have sued alone in his own name. He regarded the decision in In re Brown as an authority for so holding, inasmuch as both in In re Brown and in Thiery v. Chalmers, Guthrie, & Co. the lunatic had been formally so declared by the foreign court. But In re Brown was not an action; it was an application to the Court in Lunacy under section 134 of the Lunacy Act, and we doubt whether the action of Thiery v. Chalmers, Guthrie, & Co. would have been rightly framed if brought by the tuteur as sole plaintiff. An alteration in the status of a lunatic appears to be necessary in order to enable the Court in Lunacy to exercise the jurisdiction conferred upon it by section 134 of the Lunacy Regulation Act; but it by no means follows that persons, whose status has not been altered by their being judicially declared lunatic, cannot sue by themselves by a next friend for the recovery of their own property. In re Knight turned on the discretion which the court had under section 134 of the Lunacy Regulation Act, and throws no real light on this case. The only difficulty in the way of the plaintiffs is occasioned by In re Barlow. In that case a colonial statute vested in a master in Lunacy the care and custody of the property of lunatic patients—i.e., of persons confined in lunatic asylums but not judicially declared lunatic. A colonial lady, confined in a lunatic asylum in the colony, was entitled to some funds in the hands of trustees in this country, and the colonial master in Lunacy claimed these funds. The trustees paid them into court under the Trustee Relief Act. The colonial master and the lady by her next friend presented a petition for the transfer of the funds in court to the colonial master in Lunacy. The court made an order for the payment out of capital of some past maintenance and for the payment of the income to the master whilst the lady continued in an asylum. But the court would not order the rest of the corpus to be paid over to the master. It is to be observed that the general statutory authority given by the colonial Act to the master as an officer of the colonial court was not supplemented by any order giving the master any express authority as the lunatic's attorney to get in any property not locally within the jurisdiction of the court; and, as we understand Cotton, L.J.'s, judgment, he was much influenced by the omission of any such order. If the master's authority derived from the colonial statute was unsatisfactory, it is obvious that such authority was not improved by his assumption of the right to use the lunatic's name. In that view of the case the fact that the lunatic petitioned in her own name by her next friend did not remove the difficulty. Having decided that the master was not entitled as a matter of right to demand payment to himself, it became necessary for the court, acting as trustees, to consider what it was the duty of trustees to do in such a case as that before them, and they considered that in such a case the trustees ought not to part with the trust fund without seeing to its application, and ought not to part with the fund to the master further than they were satisfied that the interests of the lunatic rendered it necessary to do so. This was the view taken in In re Garnier, 20 W. R. 288, L. R. 13 Eq. 532, where, however, the lunatic was a domiciled Englishman, and we see no reason to dissent from it where the authority of the foreign curator to get in the trust property is regarded by the court as unsatisfactory. But where it is not, the considerations which weighed with the court in In re Barlow do not arise. A person absolutely entitled to trust money is entitled to have it paid to him or to anyone duly appointed by him to receive it, and the trustees or the court acting for them have no discretion to refuse payment. The same principle is, in our opinion, applicable to the case in which trust money belongs to a lunatic, and a person is duly appointed by a competent authority to get in such money for the lunatic. If the title of the lunatic is clear, and the authority to act for him is equally clear, we fail to see what discretion the court, acting for the trustees, has in the matter. The trustees may properly say that they cannot safely act without the sanction of the court, but we fail to see what other discretion there is. Where the lunacy jurisdiction is being exercised, as it was in In re Stark, 2 Mac. & G. 174, other considerations at once arise. If, as in In re Garnier, the lunatic were an Englishman temporarily abroad, we should feel considerable difficulty in holding that the courts of this country were bound to recognize the title of a foreign curator to sue in this country. But here we are dealing with an alien domiciled abroad, and over whom the courts of this country have no jurisdiction, except such as is conferred by the fact that she has property here. All that the court here has to do is to see that the person claiming it is entitled to have it. In this case the order of the Belgian court of the 5th of November, 1899, removes all doubt as to M. Didisheim's authority to take these proceedings and obtain and give a good discharge for the property which he seeks to recover. On general principles of private international law, the courts of this country are bound to recognize the authority conferred on him by the Belgian courts, unless lunacy proceedings in this country prevent them from doing so. What ought to be done in lunacy has not to be considered, and we say nothing on that subject. In our opinion, the appeal should be allowed, and an order be made as asked by the claim. But the plaintiffs must pay all the costs; for the bank was perfectly justified in not complying with M. Didisheim's demands without an order of the High Court—i.e., without proving his title in such a way as to make it unreasonable for the bank to refuse to recognize it. Under the old practice an action of detinue or trover might have failed; for under the general issue the defendants could have given in evidence facts excusing delivery to a person rightfully entitled, but whose title was not such as the defendants could safely recognize: see per Blackburn, J., in Hollins v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 757 at p. 766, 23 W. R. Dig. 238, and the cases there cited. But in practice if in such a case the plaintiff proved his title to the satisfaction of the court and paid the defendant's costs, the plaintiff always obtained delivery. Under the modern practice, if this case had been tried by a jury there would be no difficulty, we apprehend, in ordering delivery to M. Didisheim, and in a proper case like this giving the defendants the costs of the action—i.e., there would be good cause for making the plaintiffs pay the costs, although they succeeded in establishing their title: see Gleddon v. Trebble. If the action were tried without a jury, whether in the Chancery Division, as this was, or in the Queen's Bench Division, the costs would be in the discretion of the judge, and there would be no difficulty in ordering them to pay the costs. However tried, any other result would be very unjust. Mr. Terrell suggested that the order of the court would not protect the bank if the lunatic were to recover and were to sue the bank for her money and property after the bank had paid and delivered it to M. Didisheim. We do not entertain any misgiving on this point. The High Court clearly had jurisdiction to entertain the action and to decide the questions raised in it, and to make the order which this court now declares it ought to have made; and this court clearly has jurisdiction to entertain this appeal. This being clear, and the Belgian court having had jurisdiction to make the order which it made, the bank would unquestionably have a perfectly good defence to any action which the lunatic could bring against it, either by another next friend or by another official curator, or by herself if she should recover.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Stibbard, Gibson, & Co.; Travers-Smith, Braithwaite, & Robinson.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — Feb. 28.

LUDINGTON CIGARETTE MACHINE CO. v. BARON CIGARETTE MACHINE CO. (a.)

Patent—Action for infringement—Petition for revocation—Amendment by disclaimer—Conditions to be imposed—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 18, 19, 20.

Deeley v. Perkes, [1896] A. C. 496, does not lay down any general rule as to the conditions to be imposed on a patentee, who, after the commencement of an action, desires leave to amend the specification of his patent by way of disclaimer, but the conditions to be imposed will depend on the circumstances of each case.

This was an appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J.

The plaintiffs were assignees of a patent granted on the 26th of June, 1896, to S. Pitt for "Improvements in Cigarette Machines," and the action was brought by them on the ground of infringement of the patent.

By their defence the defendants denied infringement and alleged that the patent was invalid.

On the 22nd of September, 1899, the defendants, with the sanction of the Attorney-General, presented a petition for the revocation of the patent on the grounds that Pitt was not the true and first inventor, and that the alleged invention was not new or useful, or the proper subject-matter for a patent.

On the 8th of November, 1899, the plaintiffs issued a summons by which they asked for liberty to apply at the Patent Office for leave to amend the specification by way of disclaimer, and for liberty after that amendment had been made to amend their statement of claim so as to limit the action to the amended specification.

Kekewich, J., gave the liberty required, but he held that Deeley v. Perkes, [1896] A. C. 496, applied, and that the House of Lords had there laid down the general practice as to the conditions which should be imposed in giving liberty in such cases to apply for leave to amend a specification. He therefore ordered that the plaintiffs should not threaten any persons with legal proceedings under the patent until after the amendment should have been made; that the plaintiffs should not bring or maintain any action for the infringement of the patent in respect of any machines or part of machines made prior to the date of the order; and that the defendants' costs of the action and of the petition, including the costs of the present applications, save so far as the same could be utilized for the purposes of the action and petition respectively, after the amendment of the specification, should be borne by the plaintiffs in any event.

The plaintiffs appealed.

The original specification contained twenty-two claims, and of these it was proposed to disclaim twenty. From some further affidavits, which were admitted on the hearing of the appeal, it appeared that the defendants had, since 1896, manufactured and sold a number of machines which were being worked by the purchasers thereof; that the total cost of these machines was from £1,100 to £1,500, but that that part of the whole machine which was covered by two of the claims contained in the plaintiffs' specification which they proposed to retain would not cost more than £2 to make for each machine. The defendants also proved that some of their customers who had purchased or hired machines from the defendants had declined to pay the instalments of purchase-money or rent due because of the action taken by the plaintiffs.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The court also held it proved that the plaintiffs had never made any use of their patent in England.

Bousfield, Q.C., Lewis Edmunds, Q.C., and J. C. Graham, for the plaintiffs.—Deeley v. Perkes, does not lay down any general rule. The circumstances of that case were very peculiar. There is nothing in the circumstances of this case which makes it proper to impose such a condition.

They referred to Bray v. Gardner, 35 W. R. 341, 4 Rep. Pat. Cas. 40; Hopkinson v. St. James's and Pall Mall Electric Light Co., 10 Rep. Pat. Cas. 46; Re Chatwood's Patent, 16 Rep. Pat. Cas. 370.

T. Terrell, Q.C., and A. J. Walter.—Section 20 of the Patents Act, 1883, gives the minimum condition which may be imposed in cases of amendment. Section 19 gives a discretion to the court to impose further conditions. Even if the rule in Deeley v. Perkes be not a general one, the conditions ought to be imposed in the present case.

Bousfield, Q.C., replied.

LINDLEY, M.R.—I do not think there is any real difficulty in this case, although it is of an unusual kind. So far as the appeal raises any question of general practice, I propose to say nothing. It appears to me that each case must depend entirely upon its own circumstances. I am certainly not prepared to take the view that the form of order which the House of Lords adopted in Deeley v. Perkes is to be adopted as a common form. I do not understand the House of Lords to have intimated anything of that kind. There were very special circumstances in that case which, in the view of the House (and I think this must be the view of every one who looks at the facts dispassionately), made it proper to impose the terms which they did impose. It does not at all follow that it would be proper to impose those terms in other cases simply because liberty is asked to apply for leave to amend a specification by way of disclaimer or otherwise.

On the construction of the statute I do not think there is much difficulty. I have no doubt that section 20 applies to all cases in which an amendment has been allowed, whether the application for leave to amend has been made before litigation under section 18, or after litigation under section 19. And section 20 is valuable as showing what the Legislature has thought right to impose as a condition when an amendment has been allowed. Whether that is a minimum condition or not, it is a circumstance to be taken into consideration, and when either the comptroller, under section 18, or the court, under section 19, has to decide what terms ought to be imposed before leave to amend or to apply for leave to amend is given, it becomes important to consider what reason there is for imposing any terms, having regard to what must follow under section 20, if an amendment is allowed. I approach the present case from that point of view, which I think is as favourable to the appellants as possible. In my opinion, the very peculiar circumstances of this case render it just and proper that the condition imposed by the learned judge should stand unaltered. The patent is eight years old, and it has never been worked in this country. The specification makes twenty-two claims (I have not had an opportunity of criticizing it), and eight years after its date this action is brought for infringement. The action is met with the ordinary defences to such an action, and also by a petition to revoke the patent. What do the patentees do? They seek to get rid of twenty out of their twenty-two claims, and to cut down their patent from a large and roaming, and, as we are now entitled to say, an extravagant, claim to a minimum which they hope will hold water. What has been done in the meantime? The defendants have been making machines which the plaintiffs say were made in accordance with their patent before amendment, infringing, I suppose, more than the two claims which they propose to retain. These machines are very costly, and the defendants sold them in the ordinary course of their trade, not supposing until recently that they were doing anything wrong or infringing anyone's rights.

Are we to confiscate these machines, or to tell the defendants that, if the plaintiffs succeed in patching up their patent and obtaining a valid patent by means of the disclaimer which they seek to make, they are to be liable to an action by the plaintiffs which will deprive them of the benefit of what they have done, and, as the law stands, done properly? I do not think that would be at all fair. I think it would be eminently unjust to do that which would in substance amount to confiscating the machines which are in the defendants' hands, and would render it impossible for them to obtain the price of those which they have sold, so far as it has not yet been paid. In my opinion, the age of the patent and its apparent worthlessness until a very recent date are circumstances which render it unjust, inequitable, and unfair to alter the conditions which the learned judge has imposed. I think, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed with costs. But I protest against the notion that the order adopted in Deeley v. Perkes ought to be regarded as a settled form applicable to all cases.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree with what the Master of the Rolls has said, and I do not wish to add anything except upon one point. It has been suggested that the comptroller, following a decision of the law officers, will not now impose any conditions which are not contained in section 20. I daresay it may come to that in many cases, but to lay that down as a matter of law would, I think, be a direct contradiction of the provision of section 18, that "The law officer shall, if required . . . determine whether and subject to what conditions, if any, the amendment ought to be allowed." That must, of course, mean conditions in addition to those mentioned in section 20, and it cannot have become the practice of the Patent Office or of the law officers to say that, considering section 20 to be a very good one, they will not enter into the question whether any other conditions shall be imposed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I entirely agree. If the only special circumstance upon which the defendants could rely had been that they had not only manufactured but sold machines, and the purchasers were refusing to pay for them, I am not sure that I should have thought the conditions imposed by Kekewich, J., fair conditions. But having regard to the other special circumstances, the age of the patent, what has been done under it, and the very large proportion of the claims which have been thrown overboard, I agree with the Master of the Rolls that it would be most unjust and unfair not to impose the conditions which have been imposed.

Solicitors, Wilson, Bristows, & Carpmael; Beyfus & Beyfus.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } May 16.

In re HOFFE'S ESTATE ACT, 1855. (a.)

Practice—Payment out—Petition—Distribution of fund in court—Assignment of share—Rectification of deed—Jurisdiction—Defective title—Subsequent acquisition of good title.

Where a person purports to convey one-sixth of a fund in court representing real estate, though only entitled to one-ninth share, and afterwards becomes entitled to one-sixth, the court will make the good title subsequently acquired available to make the assignment effectual.

Noel v. Bewley, 3 Sim. 103, *followed.

The jurisdiction of the court with regard to rectification of deeds on petition considered.

In re Bird's Trusts, 3 Ch. D. 214, 25 W. R. Dig. 97, and Lewis v. Hillman, 3 H. L. Cas. 607, considered.

This was a petition for distribution of a fund in court.

By a marriage settlement made in 1845 certain lands were settled upon the husband for life, with remainder to his wife for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage as the husband should appoint, and in default of appointment in equal shares as tenants in common. The lands subject to the trusts of the settlement were sold, and the purchase-money was paid into court under a private Act of Parliament, which contained a proviso that for the purposes of title the purchase-money should be deemed to be real estate. The husband died in 1869 intestate, and without having exercised his power of appointment. The wife died in February, 1900. There were nine children of the marriage—namely, the petitioners, and three others who died in infancy.

In 1884 Philip Rideout Hoffe, one of the younger sons of the marriage, believing that he was entitled to a one-sixth share, though in fact entitled only to one-ninth of the fund in court, purported to assign one-sixth share to one Upcraft.

In 1896, J. L. Hoffe, the eldest son of the marriage, having become entitled to the shares of three deceased children as heir-at-law of his father, divided these shares between himself and his brothers and sisters, the result being that the petitioner P. R. Hoffe became entitled to a one-sixth share.

The petitioners asked that the fund might be distributed on the footing that one-ninth only of the fund in court passed under the assignment of 1884 to the respondent Upcraft. The respondent Upcraft and his mortgagee claimed the whole one-sixth share.

Fawcus, for the petitioners, referred to In re Bird's Trusts, 3 Ch. D. 214, 25 W. R. Dig. 97, and Lewis v. Hillman, 3 H. L. Cas. 607.

P. F. Wheeler, for the respondents.

KEKEWICH, J., said: The question here depends upon the effect of the deed of the 24th of May, 1884, which purports to assign one-sixth share of the petitioner, Philip Rideout Hoffe, though he was only entitled to one-ninth. It might be said that in order to determine this question the court must decide that the deed ought to be rectified or set aside. This gives rise to an argument whether a complete distribution of the fund can be made on petition. Reference was made to In re Bird's Trusts and Lewis v. Hillman in each of which cases the court saw its way to determine on petition dealing with a fund in court questions which are generally raised in an action. In each of those cases the petition was presented under the Trustee Relief Act, and in Lewis v. Hillman the Lord Chancellor took care to point out that the express provisions of that Act made it unnecessary to file a bill unless there was urgent reason for such procedure. Here the money was paid in under a private Act, and the considerations which prevailed in Lewis v. Hillman are not directly applicable. Nevertheless, the court should be shrewd to overcome objections to deciding on petition any questions concerning the distribution of a fund in court however it may have been paid in; and even if there were more difficulty here than really exists I should be extremely unwilling to put the parties to the expense and delay of an action. On reflection I think that a conclusion as to the rights of the parties is possible on consideration of the deed of assignment and the subsequent deeds without inquiry whether any case is made for rectification or for restoring the parties to their original position. I may, however, add that rectification and restoration seem to me alike impossible. Under the settlement of the 17th of June, 1845, Philip Rideout Hoffe, the assignor, was, at the date of the assignment, entitled to one-ninth. That the assignment passed this one-ninth, which the assignor actually had, is beyond question, as is also the intention to sell and purchase one-sixth. The property comprised in the settlement was real estate, and this character was preserved on conversion by the private Act. Therefore the three shares which had vested in the deceased infants devolved on the eldest son, who executed a deed of the 4th of April, 1896, under which each of the surviving children became entitled to one-sixth of the fund. The respondent Upcraft, the assignee under the deed of the 24th of May, 1884, and his mortgagee claim the entire one-sixth of the fund, and in my judgment their claim is well founded. P. R. Hoffe assigned as beneficial owner and the covenants implied in such an assignment by the Conveyancing Act, 1881, are therefore imported into the deed. Probably the claim of the assignee might be rested on that ground; but I prefer, as Shadwell, V.C., did in Noel v. Bewley, 3 Sim. 103, to take the broader ground, and to hold that though the assignment was of a defective title, yet as the assignor afterwards acquired a good title to one-sixth, this court will make that good title available to make the assignment effectual. My conclusion, therefore, is that the one-sixth belongs to the assignee and his mortgagee.

Solicitors, Lewis & Sons; William Sharp.

---

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } April 27.

ZUMBECK v. BIGGS. (a.)

*Practice—Evidence—Production of books—Partnership—Order upon person not a party—*Ex parte application—Form of order—R. S. C., ord. 37, r. 7.

An order may be made ex parte against a person not a party to the action to attend before an examiner for the purpose of producing documents.

This was a motion by the plaintiff that the defendant and one Lister, who was his partner, but not a party to the action, should produce before an examiner appointed in the action at such times and

* See also Smith v. Osborne, 6 W. R. 21, 6 H. L. Cas. 375.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by S. E. WILLIAMS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

place as the examiner might appoint for the cross-examination of the defendant (inter alia), the journals, ledgers, account, order, and delivery books kept by Messrs. Lister & Biggs containing all entries made between certain specified dates. The action was for a declaration that the defendant Biggs was a trustee for the plaintiff of a certain business mortgaged to the defendant, and for an account of all moneys realized or which but for the defendant's default might have been realized from the business, and of all profits made by the defendant or his firm by means thereof, and of all his dealings and transactions as mortgagee of the said business. Lister was not a party to the action. Judgment had been given in the action declaring the defendant a trustee for the plaintiff of all moneys realized from the premises comprised in the mortgage, and for an account of all moneys received by the defendant, and which but for his wilful default he might have received in respect of the mortgaged premises or the carrying on of the business. A subsequent order was obtained giving liberty to the plaintiff to cross-examine the defendant before one of the examiners of the court on the account carried in by him and on his affidavits.

Before the examiner the defendant, by his counsel, declined to produce the books of Messrs. Lister & Biggs, on the ground that he could not do so without the consent of his partner Lister, who objected to any of the books being shown to a stranger.

The question was whether the order asked for on the motion could be made as against one who was not a party to the action.

Ord. 37, r. 7, provides that "the court or a judge may in any cause or matter at any stage of the proceedings order the attendance of any person for the purpose of producing any writings or other documents named in the order which the court or judge may think fit to be produced; provided that no person shall be compelled to produce under any such order any writing or other document which he could not be compelled to produced at the hearing or trial."

T. R. Warrington, Q.C., and G. F. Hart, for the motion, referred to In re Smith, Williams v. Frere, [1891] 1 Ch. 323, 39 W. R. Dig. 170; Hadley v. McDougal, 20 W. R. 393, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 312.

W. M. Cann, for the defendant, argued that there was no jurisdiction to make any such order, and referred to Taylor v. Rundell, Cr. & P. 104; Murray v. Walter, Cr. &. P. 114; Kearsley v. Phillips, 31 W. R. 467, 10 Q. B. D. 465.

KEKEWICH, J., said it would be a matter for regret if in a case of this sort production could not be enforced by some summary process. Defendant had used the books for the purpose of preparing the account which he had carried in and which it was impossible to check without the books. Justice demanded that the books should be produced. The defendant objected that he could not produce them because he was only joint owner, and his partner would not consent to their production. Ord. 37, r. 7, however, seems to meet the precise case. In In re Smith, Williams v. Frere a similar order was made ex parte, and North, J., refused to discharge it on that ground. In the present case I must exercise my discretion, and this is a case in which it appears to me that an order ought to be made ex parte. I do not see how the defendant's partner could have been made a party to the action. An order made under this rule is like a subpœna duces tecum and may be made ex parte. Any objection to production of the books can be raised before the examiner, and can, if necessary, be brought here. The order will be that the defendant and his partner do attend before the examiner at such time and place as the examiner shall appoint for the purpose of producing the books, and that they or one of them do produce the books kept by Lister & Biggs.

Solicitors, Watson & Watson; George Terrell.

---

Chan. Div.
Byrne, J. } May 1, 2.

In re MARSHALL AND SALT'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Assignment of leasehold public-house—Covenant by lessee not to assign without lessor's consent—Consent unreasonably withheld—Forcing title on purchaser—Specific performance—Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78).

The lessee of a public-house contracted to sell the lease to a brewery company. The lease contained a covenant that the lessee would not assign, underlet, or otherwise part with the demised premises without the written consent of the lessor, but that such consent should not be unreasonably withheld. The lessor refused to consent chiefly on the ground that he wished to retain the house as a "free house."

Held, that the vendor had not made out a sufficient title which could be forced on the purchaser.

Adjourned summons.

This was a summons taken out under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, asking for a declaration that a good title had not been shown to certain leasehold premises contracted to be sold.

The subject-matter of the sale was a leasehold public-house held under a lease dated in 1896 in which was a covenant by the lessee "that he, the lessee, his executors or administrators, shall not assign or underlet or otherwise part with the possession of the said messuage and premises hereby demised or any part thereof without the written consent of the lessor, his heirs or assigns, first had and obtained, but such consent shall not be unreasonably withheld in the case of a respectable and responsible tenant." There was also a clause providing for re-entry in case of default in the observance and performance of any of the covenants in the lease.

The contract which was entered into between the parties was as follows: "I hereby agree to sell to Thomas Salt & Co. (Limited) the lease of the Emscote Tavern, Emscote-road, Warwick (having eighteen years to run), from the 25th day of March last at or for the sum of £850, subject to the said lease being approved by the purchasers' and vendor's solicitors."

The vendor applied to the lessor for his consent to the assignment, but the lessor replied, "I regret that I cannot comply with your request. I object to the lease being transferred to a brewery, being desirous of retaining it as a free house."

The purchasers' solicitors also wrote to the lessor asking him to state the ground of his refusal, and his reply was, "My chief reason for objecting to the assignment of the lease to your clients is that I wish to keep the house as a free house."

The purchasers thereupon refused to complete, but the vendor insisted that the reasons given by the lessor for withholding his consent to the assignment were so unreasonable that the purchasers ought to be compelled to complete.

The purchasers offered to complete if the vendor would enter into a covenant to indemnify them from all actions, claims, and damages resulting from the absence of the consent of the lessor to the assignment. This the vendor refused, and thereupon the purchasers took out the present summons.

(a.) Reported by R. LEIGH RAMSBOTHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Dibdin, for the purchasers.—The vendor has not shown a good marketable title such as was required by the contract, which is an open contract. If the purchasers were to complete they would, in effect, be buying a lawsuit. The court will not compel a purchaser to buy a lawsuit. If the vendor thought the lessor's objections so unreasonable, why did he refuse to covenant to indemnify? Sear v. House Property and Investment Society, 29 W. R. 192, 16 Ch. D. 387; Day v. Singleton, ante, p. 18, [1899] 2 Ch. 320; In re The Trustees of Hollis Hospital and Hague's Contract, 47 W. R. 691, [1899] 2 Ch. 555; Mason v. Corder, 7 Taunton 9.

T. Willes Chitty, for the vendor.—The covenant against assignment is qualified. Therefore, unless the lessor can show a substantial reason for withholding consent, the assignment without his consent can be forced on the purchaser. The lessor has failed to show a substantial reason. If the purchaser is bound to take the assignment the vendor is not bound to covenant to indemnify him. The assignment to the brewery company will not "tie" the house, because the purchasers will still be bound not to assign or underlet without the lessor's consent. There is no reasonable chance that the purchasers will be involved in litigation over this matter: Treloar v. Bigge, 22 W. R. 843, L. R. 9 Ex. 151; Hyde v. Warden, 26 W. R. 201, 3 Ex. D. 72; Bates v. Donaldson, 44 W. R. 659, [1896] 2 Q. B. 241.

Spencer v. Topham, 22 Beav. 573, 5 W. R. Ch. Dig. 23; and In re Thackeray and Young's Contract, 37 W. R. 34, 40 Ch. D. 34, were also referred to during the argument.

BYRNE, J., stated the facts, and continued: The real question between the parties is whether such a title as has been shown ought to be forced upon the purchasers. The vendor says that this is a title which would in an action for specific performance be enforced, or ought to be, upon the purchaser. The purchaser says: "In the face of the objection taken by the lessor I am not bound to complete in the absence of the lessor's consent to the assignment." The vendor says that this ground taken by the lessor is so unreasonable that it entitles the vendor, the lessee, to assign the lease without regard to that term of his covenant which involved obtaining the consent of his lessor. The real question is, Is the objection taken by the lessor against assignment so unreasonable upon the face of it that I can say (to use the words of Baron Alderson) "there is not a reasonably decent probability of litigation" incurred by the purchaser should he complete under present circumstances.

There is much force in the argument which has been addressed to me that the objection originally alleged by the lessor—viz., that he wished to keep the house a free house, was unreasonable because the "tie" is not created by the assignment to the purchaser, but it could only be created by something done subsequently by the purchaser, and that there being this covenant in the lease in the event of an attempted assignment for the purpose of "tying" the house, the landlord could then raise the question and say, "The purchaser has taken with notice of this covenant contained in the lease and knows that he will take subject to it." But this is not quite all. The form of the objection is that he wishes to keep it as a free house. That is the main objection. I do not read the landlord as saying finally "I have no other reason."

It is urged that, suppose litigation were to ensue, it would be at least extremely difficult for him to allege any other reason than what he has already alleged, but I am not prepared to say, in his absence, that he would be estopped from alleging other reasons in addition to that which he has already given. And then there is this. If he has a genuine opinion that it would not be advisable that the house should be other than a free house, he suspects, as anybody would suspect in the case of a sale of a public-house to a brewery company, that the brewery company intend, either by means of some fresh subletting or by means of some manager of their own, to make the house other than a free house, in this sense, that the person carrying on the business there, whoever he was, would obtain his beer from one source only and not be at liberty, or (if it were a brewery company carrying it on themselves) would not be in the least degree likely, to exercise any judgment as to the person from whom they should get such beer.

When I get to the root of the whole question it is this: Am I satisfied, on the mixed question of law and fact which might be raised by the lessor should he, after completion, bring an action of ejectment against the purchaser, that it is so certain that he could not succeed as to make this objection one which ought not to be had regard to? I may observe that it is not without materiality in the matter to know that the vendor was not prepared to give an indemnity against any possible litigation. It is perfectly true that the vendor is not bound to give any such covenant, but I cannot help thinking that, in a case of this kind, his willingness or unwillingness to give such a covenant has some bearing upon the question whether the objection taken is an untenable one under the circumstances.

Upon a whole review of the circumstances, and having regard to the authorities and that this is, in effect, asking whether specific performance ought to be granted, I do not think that I ought, in the circumstances, to say that a good title has been made out upon that footing. I therefore think that the proper order will be in accordance with that given in Hargreaves v. Thompson, 34 W. R. 708, 32 Ch. D. 454, at p. 457, which I think extends to the reasonable costs of investigating.

Solicitors, Bridges, Sawtell, & Co., for Lowe & Auden, Burton-on-Trent; Kingsford, Dorman, & Co., for Handley, Brown, & Ledbrook, Warwick.

---

Court of Appeal.

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Vaughan Williams, L.JJ.) — March 29, 30; April 30.

In re MARTIN (OTHERWISE GUILLARD). LOUSTALAN v. LOUSTALAN. (a.)

Will—Pre-nuptial will—Subsequent marriage of testator—Revocation—Domicil—Adoption of foreign matrimonial régime by express or inferred agreement—Wills Act, 1837, s. 18.

The validity of a pre-nuptial will, so far as it affects movable property, depends not only on the law of the domicil of the testator at the time of his death, but also on the law of his domicil at the time of his making his will and at the time of his subsequent marriage; but the domicil of the testator on each of these occasions must be determined by the English Court of Probate in the English sense—i.e., according to those legal principles which are recognized in this country and are part of its law.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

To acquire an English domicil in the English sense, not only is a change of residence and place of business required, but there must be an intention to adopt the new residence permanently or for an indefinite period.

According to international law as understood and administered in England, the effect of marriage on the movable property of spouses depends primâ facie on the domicil of the husband in the English sense at the time of the marriage; and, even assuming that it is possible for the parties to accept in this respect by express agreement (e.g., by marriage settlement) a matrimonial régime different from that of the country of the husband's domicil at the time of the marriage, yet no such intention ought to be circumstantially inferred in the absence of such express agreement.

Per Vaughan Williams, L.J.—The rule that a prenuptial will is revoked by the subsequent marriage of the testator is part of the matrimonial régime of England.

Decision of Jeune, P. (68 L. J. P. 106), reversed.

Appeal from a decision of Jeune, P. (68 L. J. Prob. 106), given on the 5th of August, 1899, revoking a grant of letters of administration to the estate of Catherine Euphrasie Guillard, which had been made to her brother, Jean Loustalan, and establishing a will of the deceased woman dated 1870.

Catherine Euphrasie Loustalan, a Frenchwoman by birth and education, came to England prior to the year 1870, in order to earn her living by laundry work.

In 1870, whilst working in a situation near Huddersfield, she wrote for and obtained from her sister in France certain French stamped official paper, on which she executed a holograph will appointing her sister Marie Loustalan her universal legatee. This will was validly executed according to the law of France, but insufficiently attested according to the law of England. When executed it was deposited for safety in the custody of a notary at Pau.

In 1876 the testatrix married in London a Frenchman named Louis Guillard, who had adopted the name of Martin, and was at the time unable to return to France for a number of years under penalty of incurring imprisonment owing to a certain offence committed by him against French criminal law. There was no marriage settlement. Subsequently to the marriage husband and wife carried on the business of a laundry at certain premises in the Edgware-road, but in 1890, the period of his proscription having then expired for some years, the husband deserted his wife and returned to France. The latter, however, continued to carry on the laundry business in London till the night of the 2nd of January, 1895, when she was burnt to death, with a number of her assistants, in a fire which destroyed the premises in the Edgware-road. The existence of the will of 1870 being for the time forgotten, a grant of letters of administration to her estate was sought for and obtained by her brother Jean Loustalan. In the present action her sister, Marie Loustalan, now asked for a revocation of this grant, and for a fresh grant of administration to her sister's estate with the will of 1870 annexed.

Jeune, P., delivered judgment to the following effect on the 5th of August, 1899: (1) In his opinion, the domicil of the husband, which was also that of the wife, was, at the time of her death, French, according to both French and English law. (2) It was said, however, that the parties married, and intended to marry, according to the matrimonial régime of England and not according to the matrimonial régime of France. It was further said that if that were the case the effect would be to import into their matrimonial relations the revocation of a will previously made by the wife. There were, in fact, two points to be considered: (a) First, was it shown that these people married according to the English matrimonial régime, or did they marry according to the French law of communauté, according to which, in the absence of any information to the contrary, they must be considered to have married? The evidence on this point was scanty, but on the whole he had arrived at the conclusion, though not without hesitation, that they intended to marry according to English law. (b) But then there arose the difficult question—was the rule as to the revocation of a will by marriage a part of the English matrimonial or of the English testamentary law? The provision of the English law by which a will was revoked by marriage was very peculiar. It was now embodied in the Wills Act, 1837. That was to say, the Act recognized it as a way in which a will might be considered to be revoked. The law was far older than the Act, and he was unable to say what was its real origin. It was, however, a very peculiar law, and he did not know that it was a very reasonable one. But it was none the less the law of England. As the law of England formerly stood, the wife's property went entirely to her husband, and therefore her previous will would naturally be revoked by her marriage; and had the law been that the wife's will only, and not that of the husband, was revoked by marriage, its origin would have been clear; and he thought that it would then have been possible to have found that it was part of the English matrimonial régime. But that was not the law. The wills of both spouses were equally revoked by their marriage, and therefore he had great difficulty in attaching it to the matrimonial régime at all. On the whole, therefore, he arrived at the conclusion that this provision was in reality part of the testamentary law of England, arising, it might be, from the presumed intention of the parties, or it might be a provision of law having regard to the possibility of children and the desirability of impressing on the parties to a marriage contract, the necessity of making wills for the welfare of such children. Whether these parties married according to the French or English régime he could not suppose that they intended this provision should affect their testamentary powers. The will of 1870 was therefore perfectly good; the existing grant of letters of administration must be revoked; and there would be a grant of administration with the will annexed made to the defendant, as the natural and lawful brother of the deceased.

From this decision the defendant now appealed.

Inderwick, Q.C., and H. D. Grazebrook, for the appellant, cited Marston v. Roe, 8 A. & E. 14; Dalloz' Jurisprudence Générale Recueil Periodique (1854) Part II., 161, (1865) Part I., 418, (1886) Part II., 181; Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 648. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., referred to Doe d. Hodsden v. Staple, 2 T. R. 684.]

H. J. H. Mackay, for the respondent, cited Bremer v. Freeman, 5 W. R. 618, 10 Moo. P. C. 306; Forse and Hembling's cass, 4 Coke's Rep. 61*a*; In re Aganoors' Trusts, 64 L. J. Ch. 521; Jopp v. Wood, [illegible] W. R. 481; Bell v. Kennedy, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 307; Udney v. Udney, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 441; Croker v. Hertford (Marquis), 4 Moo. P. C. 339; Abdul Messih v. Farra, 13 App. Cas. 431, at pp. 439, 441, 44[illegible]

Mayor of Canterbury v. Wyburn, 43 W. R. 430, [1895] A. C. 89; In re Price, Tomlin v. Latter, ante, p. 373.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 30.—LINDLEY, M.R.—The will which is in question in this case was made in this country by a Frenchwoman before her marriage, and was not attested as required by English law. By English law, by which I mean English law irrespective of all foreign law, the will is therefore clearly invalid. But foreign law must be taken into account. Those principles of private international law which are recognized in this country are part of the law of England, and on those principles the validity of the will, so far as it affects movable property, depends on the law of the domicil of the testatrix when she died. The domicil of the testatrix must be determined by the English Court of Probate according to those legal principles applicable to domicil which are recognized in this country and are part of its law. Until the question of the domicil of the testatrix at the time of her death is determined the Court of Probate cannot tell what law of what country has to be applied. The testatrix was a Frenchwoman, but it would be contrary to sound principle to determine her domicil at her death by the evidence of French legal experts. The preliminary question, by what law is the will to be governed, must depend in an English court on the view that court takes of the domicil of the testatrix when she died. If authority for these statements is wanted, it will be found in Bremer v. Freeman, 5 W. R. 618, 10 Moo. P. C. 306, see pp. 359, &c.; Doglioni v. Crispin, L. R. 1 H. L. 301, 15 W. R. H. L. Dig. 8; and In re Trufort. Trafford v. Blanc, 36 W. R. 163, 36 Ch. D. 600. In each of the last two cases a foreign court had determined the domicil: and the English court had also to determine it, and did determine it to be the same as that determined by the foreign court. But, as I understand those cases, the English court satisfied itself as to the domicil in the English sense of the term, and did not simply adopt the foreign decisions. The course universally followed when domicil has to be decided by the courts of this country proceeds upon the principles to which I have alluded.

But, further, the validity of a will of movables made by a person domiciled in a foreign country at the time of such person's death not only may, but must, depend on the view its courts take of the validity of the will when made and on its subsequent revocation if that question arises. These questions may or may not turn in any particular country on the domicil of the testator. For example, in this case it is agreed on all hands that by the law of France the will in question, being a holograph will made by a French subject, was valid when made, whatever her domicil may have been when she made it. It is also agreed on all hands that by French law marriage does not revoke the prior wills of the spouses. But the testatrix married a Frenchman in this country after she made her will, and the question whether her will was thereby revoked as to her movables is the real question on which this case turns. By whatever court this question is to be decided, the English law of marriage, which in such a case involves and, indeed, turns on English views of domicil, must be considered. If this view be ignored, the effect of the marriage will be inadequately, and, indeed, erroneously ascertained. If the domicil of the testatrix is to be treated as English when she became a married woman, her will was revoked by her marriage; for such is the law of England whatever the intentions of the parties may be (1 Jarm. on Wills, c. 7); but if her domicil was French her will would not be revoked by English law, and still less by French law. Both laws are alike in regarding her domicil as that of her husband as soon as she married him. The effect of her marriage must therefore depend on the English view of his domicil. It would be useless and entirely misleading to ask a French expert what effect the French law would give to an English marriage without explaining the English law to him, and no explanation of that law would be adequate or correct if it excluded the English view of the domicil of the parties.

Having thus stated the principles which, in my opinion, ought to be applied to the case, I proceed to consider the facts and the evidence of the experts called at the trial.

The learned President decided, and, in my opinion, rightly decided, that the domicil of the testatrix in the English sense was French when she died. It became necessary, therefore, to determine whether by the law of France her will was valid when she died. Experts were called and examined and cross-examined at great length on a number of points, many of which are not now, at all events, material or in controversy. The experts all agree that the will was valid when made. They also all agreed that according to French law the testatrix was domiciled (in the French sense) in England when she made her will and when she married. They also all agreed that, according to French law and in the French sense, her husband was domiciled in England when he married. Treating the husband and wife as domiciled in England when they married they differed as to the consequences. MM. Guastalla, Gorostarzee, and Mesnil think that the marriage revoked the will. M. Mesnil is quite clear upon the point; the others are less so, but they, I think, take the same view. M. Astone when first called, stated that the marriage did not revoke the will—that it depended on nationality, not domicil, in the French sense. When recalled he apparently adhered to his opinion, but considered that the revocation might depend on the intention of the parties and on the adoption of the matrimonial régime by the spouses. All these experts based their opinion on their view that at the time of the marriage the parties were domiciled in England and they applied the English law of marriage to that state of things. But, as I have already pointed out, the English law of marriage, when considered with reference to its effect on property involves, and in a case like this cannot be severed from, English views of domicil. The learned President came to the conclusion that the domicil of the husband at the time of the marriage was in France, not in England. But he also came to the conclusion that both husband and wife intended to marry according to English law and that the English matrimonial law should and would govern their future property. He further considered that the law by which wills are revoked by marriage was not part of the English matrimonial law but part of the English testamentary law, and that this law did not apply to the case. I confess I have great difficulty in adopting this view of the case. If, as the President considered, the parties were (according to English views) domiciled in France when they married, their marriage would not revoke their previous wills; and French experts should have been told so and should have been directed that their assumption of an English domicil was inadmissible. It is plain from their evidence that, according to French law, the domicil in the French sense of both husband and wife was in England and not in France both when the marriage took place and when the testatrix died. I have no doubt that this conclusion was quite correct, but for the reasons I have already given I consider it necessary to examine the effect of the marriage according to English views of domicil. I proceed, therefore, to inquire whether the President was right in his view that the husband was domiciled (in the English sense) in France and not in England when he married. We start with the fact that the husband had a domicil of origin in France. According to English law the burden of proving that he lost that domicil and acquired an English domicil is on those who assert that he did so. Further the domicil to be acquired must be, not domicil in the French sense, but in the English sense. The experts all tell us that he lost his French domicil in the French sense by coming to England and setting himself up as a teacher of languages here. But to acquire an English domicil in the English sense not only is a change of residence and place of business required, but there must be an intention to adopt the new residence permanently or for an indefinite period: see the authorities collected in Dicey's Conflict of Laws, p. 104 et seq. I cannot come to the conclusion that this intention is proved. I see no proof of any intention to abandon France as his domicil in the English sense, and to acquire a domicil in the English sense in this country. I do not say there is no evidence tending to establish a change of domicil in the English sense, but such evidence, in my opinion, falls short of proof, and is in fact, outweighed by evidence on the other side. The circumstances tending to show an abandonment of an intention to return to France are that the husband came over here and taught here; that he married a woman in business here; that he and she described themselves as then domiciliés à Londres; that he intended to settle here until he could safely return; that he lived here with his wife for some years, and did so after it was safe to return to France; that he took leases in his own name; and that (whether he knew it or not) he had lost his French domicil in the French sense. Against this must be set the facts that he was a French subject and had a French domicil of origin, that he came here to avoid imprisonment, that he dared not go back to France for many years, but that he could safely do so at the end of twenty years from the time he fled from his own country, that he does go back a few years after it is safe to do so, and that he has ever since been and is now settled in his native country and living with his own relatives. If we look at all the facts as we now know them, they in my opinion, point to a retention of his domicil of origin (in the English sense of the word domicil) rather than to an abandonment of such domicil and a subsequent re-acquisition of it when he went back to France. What has happened since marriage throws a great deal of light on what was obscure at the time of marriage. But if we carry our minds back to the time of marriage and disregard all subsequent events (which I do not think we ought to do) the fact that he was then a criminal fugitive who dared not go back to France for a definite number of years but could safely go back when they had elapsed would prevent me from inferring an abandonment of an intention to return to France when he could safely do so: see Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 142. I should not arrive at the same conclusion if he had fled from his country for life unless pardoned as an English criminal fugitive would have done to escape from the operation of the laws of his own country. The definite period after which he could safely return is, to my mind, all important. As to the declaration made by husband and wife when they married that they were "domiciliés à Londres," I have no doubt that domicilié was used in the French sense—i.e., in the sense of residence and not in the sense of what we mean by "domiciled," which has a very different signification. Upon the question of domicil (in the English sense) my own conclusions are that the domicil of the testatrix was French when she made her will; French up to the time that she married; French by her marriage; and French when she died. Her domicil was French by and after marriage because, in my opinion, her husband's domicile was French. The domicil of the testatrix being French when she made her will and when she died, it became necessary to ascertain the effect of her will on her movable property according to the French law. The husband being, in my opinion, domiciled in France when she married, it became necessary to ascertain the effect of such marriage by French law upon her will; and if in order to ascertain this it became necessary for the French experts to be told what the English law was, they should have been told that it depended on the view which an English court would take of the domicil in the English sense of the husband; and if I am right in my view of his domicil, the experts should have been told that by English law the marriage in this case did not revoke the wife's will. It was not necessary or, indeed, proper on this occasion to pursue the inquiry further and to see what matrimonial régime the parties intended to adopt. It is not necessary to cite authorities to show that it is now settled that according to international law as understood and administered in England the effect of marriage on the movable property of spouses depends (in the absence of any contract) on the domicil of the husband, in the English sense. The authorities will be found collected in Foote's Private International Jurisprudence, edition 2. pp. 315, 321, and Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 648 et seq. This being clear, the will was not revoked; and if not revoked, it was clearly valid as regards the wife's movable property. Section 18 of the Wills Act does not apply to the wills of foreigners who die domiciled abroad, and the effect of the marriage was not to vest the wife's property in the husband. French law did not so vest it, neither did international law as understood and administered in this country. The English law applicable to English people, and according to which a woman's personal property formerly vested in her husband on marriage, and according to which her will was revoked by marriage even before the Wills Act, could not on principle apply to French spouses married in England, but (according to English views) domiciled in France when they married. In my opinion the will has been properly admitted to probate, but it will not apply to leasehold property, for that is not regarded as movable property, to which the lex domicilii is alone applicable: Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 72.

RIGBY, L.J.—I see no sufficient reason to differ from the President's conclusion that the mutual rights of the spouses as to movables were to be determined by English law. If it is necessary, in order to support this conclusion, to hold that the husband's domicil at the date of the marriage, or, at any rate, the matrimonial domicil, was English, I should not hesitate to hold that it was. The husband had been brought up to be a teacher or professor of French, and at first, and down to the time of the marriage in 1874, had no other means of gaining his livelihood than by teaching French. His departure from France was brought about by his fear of a prosecution for an offence alleged to have been committed by him whilst he was a professor of French and in connection with his exercise of his professorship. Over and above the punishment to be imposed for the offence, if proved, it is obvious that conviction for such an offence would have an extremely prejudicial, and not improbably a prohibitive, effect on his subsequent exercise of his profession in France. As he did not elect to abide his trial in France, his evasion of a trial was almost, if not quite, equivalent to a renunciation for all his life of his profession in France. He went in the first place to Belgium, and was in his absence convicted and sentenced. The precise date of this conviction I cannot find, but it must have been before his coming to England, which was in 1868 or 1869. He might at any time have gone back to France and submitted to trial, but he did not elect so to do. It appears that twenty years after the date of his conviction he would have been safe from punishment, but he would then have been advanced in years, and if it is suggested that he formed from the first the intention of going back after the twenty years and becoming again a professor in France, such an intention would, in my opinion, be so irrational that, in default of the strongest evidence, it ought not to be imputed to him. Nor could he have had the intention of going back without having the means of supporting himself. Evidence of any such intention does not exist. I take it that the proper conclusion is, not that he had the intention of returning to France at the end of an interval however long, but that he had no intention of returning at all. In England he adopted the name Martin, which might pass for an English name, and at any rate would have the effect of keeping in the background the discredited name of Guillard. He was supporting himself as a teacher of French at the time of the marriage in 1874, when a prospect opened of gaining a probably easier living by means of his wife's laundry. He married (being fifty-one years old) with the clearly formed intention of living by the laundry business, whether or not he assisted with money, or his personal exertions, in carrying it on. I consider the reasonable inference to be that he intended to remain in England, and was domiciled there according to English, as he certainly was according to French, law. It is his intention that governs, not that of the wife, in the absence of any marriage settlement; and I conclude that he intended English law to apply, and that law gave him, immediately on the marriage, the exclusive right to all the wife's movables, that is to say, to everything that could pass by the holograph will of 1870. As by the marriage she would become incapable of making another will, the will of 1870 would be revoked. It matters not that she might subsequently, by an alteration in the law, become entitled to personal property which she could dispose of by will. Such a new testamentary power would not in my opinion revive the will which had already been revoked. I have considered the question of the husband's domicil exclusively with reference to the facts as they existed previously to, and at the date of the marriage. The subsequent events do not in my judgment throw any light upon the question adverse to the conclusion which I have arrived at. The taking of leases for terms of years of various lengths would tend rather to show that his connection with England was permanent than otherwise, though probably it is not of much importance. True it is that at length, not before 1890, when he was already about sixty-seven years old, he returns to France; but in the circumstances that does not give any ground for supposing that he always, from the time when he left France, had the animus revertendi. One of the reasons for returning was the state of his health; another, probably, the unsatisfactory state of his relations with his wife. But probably the most important thing to notice is that his residence in France was rendered possible by his having acquired a considerable fortune from his wife's property, which he had no reason to count upon before the marriage. True it is that the twenty years, the expiration of which brought immunity from punishment for the offence for which he had been condemned, had run; but it was not on the expiration of that period, but at least several years later, that he returned. I am not disposed to hold this evidence of an intention throughout to return which would prevent his acquiring an English domicil. The fact that he took steps for vesting in his wife all his interest in the laundry business would be strong evidence of his intention to remain out of England; and I agree with the Master of the Rolls that in 1895 he, and therefore his wife at her death, had a French domicil.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I agree in the conclusion of Jeune, P., that the husband and wife intended to keep up "an establishment in England," and that they intended to marry under English law and to adopt it as their matrimonial law; but I base this conclusion on the fact, which Jeune, P., does not accept, that at the date of the marriage the husband had an English domicil, for I find no evidence of an agreement embodying that intention, unless it be as an inference from the actual domicil at the date of the marriage. At the time of the marriage the laundry business in the Edgware-road was already a going concern. It had been established by the wife while she was yet a spinster, and it seems to me to have been arranged before the marriage that the husband should bring some money into the business, and that he did so. The husband and wife carried on this business from 1874—when they were married in London according to the prescribed requirements of the English law—until 1890, when the husband returned to France. During all this time both husband and wife had clearly, according to French law, an English domicil. Jeune, P., has held, however, that, according to English law, the wife had a French domicil, and that on the marriage she acquired the domicil of her husband. He has held, also, that the latter—his domicil of origin being admittedly French — had done nothing at the time of his marriage to acquire any other. I certainly should have drawn the conclusion myself that, as far as the wife was concerned, there was ample evidence of the animus manendi; and that she had acquired an English domicil at the date of her marriage according to French and English law alike. This, of course, is not enough, because on marriage she would immediately acquire the domicil of her husband. But even in the case of the husband I should myself draw the inference that he abandoned his French domicil of origin, and intended to adopt, and thus in fact actually acquired, a new (i.e., an English) domicil. He was, and had been for some time, living in this country. He intended to carry on the laundry business in the Edgware-road, and to have his matrimonial home there. He invested money in this business and bought land for the purpose of enlarging it. The evidence seems to me to show that during all this time the husband and wife did not apply the French principle of community of goods to their respective property, but treated everything as belonging to the husband. It is certain that the latter, at the time of his marriage, did not intend to return to France for a period of at least twenty years. All this is evidence of an animus manendi; and although, as a matter of fact, he did return to France at the end of twenty years, I still see no evidence that his stay in England was always intended to be thus limited, whilst there is considerable rea[illegible] believing the occasion and cause of his ultimate return were quarrels with his wife. He may have contemplated the possibility of returning to France after the lapse of time should have rendered it safe for him to do so, but I do not think that this fact prevents his permanent residence in England being cogent evidence of an intention to acquire a new domicil. I suppose the possibility of returning to one's domicil of origin, if circumstances should change, is never excluded from a man's mind, however much he may choose a country other than that of his domicil of origin as his permanent residence; but I cannot doubt that if the husband had died within the twenty years without returning to France, his domicil would have been held, under the circumstances, to be English; and I do not think that one should refuse so to hold because he happened to return to France. This, in my judgment, is sufficient to show that his actual domicil at the time of the marriage was English, according to the law both of England and of France. I gather, however, from the judgment of Jeune, P., that his view is that England became the matrimonial domicil by the agreement of the husband and wife at the time of the marriage; but I do not quite understand where he finds such an agreement, unless it is to be inferred from a change of the husband's domicil. There is no express agreement, and I know of no English decision in which such an agreement has been inferred inconsistently with the fact of domicil. Husband and wife cannot by mere tacit agreement choose a matrimonial domicil. Mr. Westlake (Private International Law (3rd ed.), p. 68) says: "By the matrimonial domicil is to be understood that of the husband at the date of the marriage, with a possible exception in favour of any other which may have been acquired immediately after the marriage in pursuance of an agreement to that effect made before it." If this exception can be supported, for which there is no English authority, no doubt there is evidence from which one may infer that the actual English domicil after marriage was in pursuance of an ante-nuptial agreement. I doubt, however, if domicil can be directly affected by the marriage contract. Such an agreement as to the intended matrimonial place of residence may no doubt be evidence, and cogent evidence, of adoption of a new domicil as from a date anterior to the marriage, or it may be evidence of an agreement as to the law which shall govern the movable property of the parties marrying. But I can find no case in which an inferred agreement, as distinguished from an express agreement, has been allowed to outweigh the primâ facie inference that the law of the country of the husband's domicil is to govern the movable property of the married couple. If my conclusion is right, and if one ought to come to the conclusion from the evidence of the husband's conduct in making his home in England for an indefinite time and in going into such a business as by French law put an end to his French domicil and gave him an English domicil, that he adopted an English domicil at the time of his marriage, then at the time his wife's movables became his property, and I think that, his wife's property in the movables having thereby ceased, it follows, quite independently of the 18th section of the Wills Act, that this loss of the power of disposition put an end to her will, while it was still ambulatory, and rendered it of no effect, and that nothing but republication could revive it. If, however, the French domicil of the husband continued at, and after, the marriage and down to the wife's death, then it would follow that the French law, by which alone this will can be supported (for it is not in the form to satisfy the English Wills Act), must govern the testamentary validity of this will, and also the rights of property of the husband and wife, unless there be found some binding marriage contract determining the relative rights of property of the two parties. Jeune, P., has found, as I understand, that there is such an agreement or contract. Assuming that there is, I differ from his conclusion in law on this assumption, for I think that the rule of the English law which makes a woman's will null and void on her marriage is part of the matrimonial, and not of the testamentary, law of this country, and that probate of this will ought not to be granted. But as I am not sure that we ought to infer that there was at the time of the marriage an agreement that the English law should govern the matrimonial property, I prefer to ground my judgment on the change of the husband's domicil at the time of marriage; and I think that if he did change it from a French to an English domicil, then his subsequent reversion to a French domicil will not prevent English law continuing to govern the matrimonial property. In my opinion the effect of the husband's domicil on the matrimonial property is based on the presumption that you must read the law of the husband's domicil into the marriage contract as a term of it unless there is some express agreement to the contrary; because the husband's domicil at the time of the marriage does not control the mutual rights of the husband and wife to each other's movables otherwise than as being a fact from which the inference is drawn in the absence of evidence to the contrary that the husband and wife intended to make it a term of the marriage contract that the law of the husband's domicil at the time of the marriage should control the mutual rights to movables. I think, therefore, that the decision of the court below ought to be reversed, and the grant of letters of administration with the will annexed revoked.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Blount, Lynch, & Petre; H. Herbert.

---

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) — May 15.

"The Philadelphian." (a.)

Ship — Collision—Anchor lights—Vessel exceeding 150 feet in length—"In the forward part of the vessel"—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, art. 11.

By article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, a vessel of 150 feet or upwards, when at anchor, shall carry "in the forward part of the vessel" a white light, and another at or near the stern.

A vessel, 313 feet in length, at anchor, carried her forward light in the fore-rigging abreast of the foremast, 72 feet from the stem.

Held, that the light was carried "in the forward part of the vessel" within the meaning of article 11.

Decision of Bucknill, J. (ante, p. 431, [1900] P. 43), on this point dissented from.

Appeal from the judgment of Bucknill, J. (reported ante, p. 431, [1900] P. 43).

The action was brought by the owners of The Ella Sayer, a steamship 313 feet in length, against the defendants, the owners of the steamship Philadelphian, to recover damages for a collision.

The Ella Sayer was lying at anchor in the River St. Lawrence, off Quebec, after dark when The Phila- delphian, on a voyage from Montreal to Liverpool, ran into her and damaged her.

(a.) Reported by W. F. Barry, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendants pleaded that The Ella Sayer was not exhibiting proper anchor lights as required by article 11 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897.*

The Ella Sayer was carrying two anchor lights, the forward one being in the fore-shroud of the starboard fore-rigging, abreast of the foremast, and 72 feet from the stem.

Bucknill, J., held that The Philadelphian was to blame for navigating at an excessive speed and for not keeping a proper look-out. He also held that the forward light on The Ella Sayer was not "in the forward part of the vessel" as required by article 11, but that the infringement of the rule could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision. He therefore held The Philadelphian alone to blame.

The defendants appealed.

Joseph Walton, Q.C. (Aspinall, Q.C., and W. S. Glynn with him), for the defendants.—The defendants do not appeal from the finding of the learned judge that The Philadelphian was to blame. It is contended, however, that The Ella Sayer was also to blame. The forward light of The Ella Sayer was not "in the forward part of the vessel" within the meaning of article 11. In construing those words the object of the rule must be considered. The object is to indicate to other vessels, by the position of the lights, the length of the vessel at anchor. Therefore, "in the forward part of the vessel" cannot merely mean forward of amidships. That construction would defeat the object of the rule and render it useless. The rule must mean that the forward light is to be placed somewhere near the stem of the vessel. At any rate, a distance of 72 feet from the stem cannot come within the rule. A light put on the fore-stay would be a compliance with the rule. The learned judge was therefore right upon this point, but he was wrong in coming to the conclusion that the infringement of the rule could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision. [The court intimated that they were against the defendants upon the first point, and that therefore it was unnecessary to argue the second question.]

Laing, Q.C., Dawson Miller, and Adair Roche, for the plaintiffs, were not called upon.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The question we have to decide depends entirely upon the construction of article 11. We must construe the rule according to the language used in it. The Ella Sayer had a proper anchor light in the fore-shroud of the starboard fore-rigging. She had also a proper anchor light at or near the stern. The question is whether the forward anchor light was "in the forward part of the vessel" within the meaning of article 11. My brother Bucknill held that it was not, but he also came to the conclusion that the infringement of the rule could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision, because there was such a bad look-out on The Philadelphian that those on board of her never saw any light at all. In my opinion the learned judge was wrong upon the construction of the rule. The language of article 11 is plain. In the first part of the rule, which deals with vessels under 150 feet in length, the word "forward" seems to me to be used in contradistinction to "aft." In the second part of the rule, which is the part applicable to the present case, when dealing with the position of the forward light, the words used are "in the forward part of the vessel." The rule does not use the words "at or near the stem." The light in the present case was placed about a quarter of the ship's length from the stem. It is clear that the spot where it was placed was not the after part of the vessel. Why is it not the forward part of the vessel? To my mind it is. When describing the position of the after light the rule does not say "in the after part of the vessel"; it uses very different words, "at or near the stern." The learned counsel for the defendants contended that the words "in the forward part of the vessel" ought to be read "at or near the stem." What justification is there for introducing such language as that into the rule? The framers of the rule have said that the forward light shall be in the forward part of the vessel and the after light at or near the stern. Why should we alter those words? It is pressed upon us that if we do not construe the rule as contended for by the defendants, we shall be defeating the object and intention of the framers of it—namely, to indicate to passing vessels by the position of the lights the length of the vessel at anchor. If that was the intention which the framers of the rule had in mind, I can only say that they have not carried out that intention. In my opinion this light, which was in the fore-shroud of the starboard fore-rigging, was, in the words of the rule, in the forward part of the vessel, and The Ella Sayer did not infringe the rule. I may refer, in confirmation of my opinion, to article 2, which deals with the lights which a steamship under way is to carry. That rule says that a steamship under way is to carry on the foremast, or if there is no foremast "then in the fore part of the vessel," a white light. That tends to show what is meant by the fore part or forward part of the vessel. As we hold that the lights on The Ella Sayer were in their proper position, it is unnecessary to go into the question upon which Bucknill, J., decided the case in favour of the plaintiffs. The appeal must be dismissed.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. We have been asked to read article 11 as if the words "in the forward part of the vessel" meant "at or near the stem." I cannot do so. The rule, when dealing with the after anchor light, substantially fixes the spot where it is to be placed by using the words "at or near the stern," whereas, when dealing with the forward anchor light, the rule does not give any precise spot where the light is to be placed, but leaves the fixing of the spot "in the forward part of the vessel" largely in the discretion of the master.

ROMER, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Botterell & Roche.

Solicitors for the defendants, Thomas Cooper & Co., for Hill, Dickinson, Dickinson, & Hill, Liverpool.

---

* Article 11: "A vessel under 150 feet in length, when at anchor, shall carry forward, where it can best be seen, but at a height not exceeding 20 feet above the hull, a white light in a lantern so constructed as to show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light visible all round the horizon at a distance of at least one mile. A vessel of 150 feet or upwards in length, when at anchor, shall carry in the forward part of the vessel, at a height of not less than 20 feet and not exceeding 40 feet above the hull, one such light, and at or near the stern of the vessel, and at such a height that it shall not be less than 15 feet lower than the forward light, another such light."

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) April 25, 26, 30.

VIDITZ v. O'HAGAN. (a.)

Settlement — Domicil — Infant — Husband a domiciled Austrian—Ratification—Repudiation—Austrian law —Application of English law.

In 1864 an Irish lady, an infant, married an Austrian at Berne. Previously to her marriage she executed a settlement. According to the law of her domicil after marriage, which was Austrian, she was unable to ratify the contract, or to place it out of her power to revoke it.

In 1893 the husband and wife executed a document in Austria to annul the settlement.

Held, that the wife never had, either before marriage or after, power to make an irrevocable settlement.

The effect of the change of the domicil was that the English doctrine as to the repudiation of a contract by an infant within a reasonable time became inapplicable by reason of the impossibility of effectually ratifying it.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (47 W. R. 571, [1899] 2 Ch. 569), reversed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (reported 47 W. R. 571, [1899] 2 Ch. 569).

In November, 1864, Mrs. Viditz, an Irish lady, was, at the age of eighteen, married to Mr. Viditz, who was then and still is a domiciled Austrian. The marriage took place in Switzerland.

Prior to the marriage, marriage articles, dated the 24th of November, 1864, were executed at Berne, at the British Embassy, between Mr. Viditz of the first part, Mrs. Viditz of the second part, trustees of the third part, and the lady's father of the fourth part, and it was thereby declared and agreed by and between the parties thereto, and Mr. Viditz covenanted with the trustees, that in case the intended marriage should take place all such personal property as Mrs. Viditz was then entitled to in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, and also all such sums of money, stocks, funds, or other personal property, whether in possession, remainder, or expectancy, as might at any time during the joint lives of the husband and wife come to the lady or to her and her husband in her right under any will, settlement, or by gift or otherwise (save and except pecuniary legacies), should be vested in the trustees upon the usual trusts for the benefit of the lady for life for her separate use, with a restraint upon anticipation, and after her death upon trusts for the issue of the marriage, with an ultimate trust for the father absolutely. There was a provision empowering the father to alter and vary any of the provisions, clauses, matters, or things therein contained, and to add or supply any other provisions, clauses, matters, or things which might be deemed necessary or proper.

Mrs. Viditz attained twenty-one in 1867.

In 1870 Mrs. Viditz, on the death of her mother, became entitled to a sum of £6,000, which was paid over to the trustees of the deed of 1864 and invested in Consols.

In 1880 a deed in English form was executed in Paris, which purported to be a settlement made in pursuance of the articles. Mr. and Mrs. Viditz, the trustees, and her father were all parties to this deed. It recited the investment of the Consols and declared trusts of that sum similar, so far as material, to the trusts in the articles, and it contained a covenant to settle after-acquired property differing from the covenant in the articles, inasmuch as pecuniary legacies were not excepted.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In 1882 the father died, and Mrs. Viditz thereupon became entitled in possession to a sum of £2,000, which was received by the trustees of the settlement and invested. This £2,000 and the £6,000 were sums to which Mrs. Viditz was at the date of her marriage entitled in reversion contingently upon attaining twenty-one. The father by his will left all his property to charity. Litigation ensued, and Mrs. Viditz sought to set aside the will The result was that a compromise was effected in March, 1884, under which a sum of £13,000 was to be settled upon her and her children, and a sum of £5,000 was to be paid to her. In 1892 the trustees informed Mrs. Viditz that the £5,000 payable to her under the compromise would have to be paid to the trustees of the marriage settlement. This led to advice being taken, and on the 18th of November, 1893, a document was executed by Mr. and Mrs. Viditz in Austria, by which they purported to annul and put an end to the settlement. There was evidence that according to Austrian law, it is competent to a husband and wife to revoke a marriage contract, notwithstanding the birth of issue.

Mr. and Mrs. Viditz and their children, who have attained twenty-one, brought this action claiming a declaration that the settlement created by the deeds of 1864 and 1880 had been got rid of by the transaction of 1893.

Cozens-Hardy, J., held that the marriage articles of 1864 were valid and were governed by English law, and that Mrs. Viditz, not having repudiated them within a reasonable time after she attained twenty-one, was absolutely bound by them, and that she could not, therefore, elect from time to time during the joint lives of her husband and herself as property fell in whether she would affirm the articles. Consequently the £5,000 was bound by the settlement.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Dicey, Q.C., and Micklem, Q.C., for the plaintiffs.

Hughes, Q.C., and Ingpen, Q.C., for the trustees.

LINDLEY, M.R.—There are two questions which arise—first, there is the question of the construction of this document—assuming it to be a binding document—I mean the settlement on which so much turns; and the point which arises upon that is whether, upon the true construction of these marriage articles of November, 1864, a sum of £5,000 which has been set apart and is claimed by the lady, under circumstances which I will allude to presently, is comprised in this settlement, or whether it is not.

Now, if this question turned merely upon the wording of the agreement to settle her after-acquired personal property, I should feel very great difficulty in saying that it was not covered by it; but that is not the whole question. In this same settlement there is a clause which deals with her real property, and the agreement to settle her real property was not binding upon her. This sum of £5,000 appears to me, I confess, to be in substance—although not of course in form, because it is money—a portion of the real estate which she claimed. It arose in this way. Her father had died leaving a will giving her a rent-charge of £400 upon some Irish property; and he disposed of the residue of his property amongst some charities (the Mortmain laws do not apply to Ireland), and she disputed the will. She claimed this real estate, and a compromise was come to, and by the terms of that compromise she accepted £13,000, which she ultimately settled, and a sum of £5,000 and a further sum which represented the rent-charge of £400 a year. In consideration of these sums she gave up all claims to these estates. She agreed to abandon some proceedings which she had taken to impeach the will—that was part of the compromise; and the money was not a sum paid down by her opponents to her to get rid of her, but it was the proceeds of the sale of real estate which by the terms of the compromise was to be sold, and she was to be paid under a power contained in the compromise, and the money which she was to receive was to be a portion of those proceeds. Now, when you come to look at that and ask yourself what this £5,000 was, it was not given to her by will or anything of the sort, it was not given to her by any settlement; it came to her otherwise, no doubt; but it was part of a bargain, and it was, in substance, a substitution for the real estate which she was claiming. Having regard to that and bearing in mind what I have said about the introduction of the covenant relating to real estate, it appears that this sum of £5,000 would be covered by the real estate covenant, rather than by the covenant relating to personal estate. This point was not raised, as I understand, by the learned judge; there is no trace of it in his judgment; he decided upon a construction of the words of the personal covenant without anything more. I think that the true view is that the £5,000 was not included in the settlement at all.

Now that brings me to the second point, which is a much more difficult one; and that is the question whether this settlement has become binding on this lady or not. She was an Irish lady. The settlement was executed at Berne, in Switzerland, and in the English language and with English trustees—not in the Consular Court. but in the Minister's Court or the Ambassador's Court, I forget which it is—and it was executed previous to and in contemplation of her marriage with an Austrian gentleman; and it was contemplated that after marriage they should, as they did, go and live in Austria; in other words, that she should become domiciled in Austria. So far there is no doubt at all.

Now according to the English law this settlement by her was a voidable contract, in the sense explained by the House of Lords in Edwards v. Carter, [1893] A. C. 360, to which I will refer presently. She lived two or three years in Austria, and then became of age—twenty-one. By the Austrian law she was unable to ratify this contract or to confirm it, or to place it out of her power to revoke it; and now we have to consider the consequences of that. She did, in the course of her married life, execute certain documents and settlements which, if they are to be governed by our law, would clearly amount to a ratification of her marriage settlement; there is no doubt at all about that. By the Austrian law, some of the documents were invalid in so far as they purported to be irrevocable ratifications.

The position of affairs is a simple one; it is this: This lady never had, either before marriage or after marriage, power to make an irrevocable settlement. Can we hold, therefore, that this settlement has become irrevocable? That is the paradox which is put to us. Cozens-Hardy, J., has taken this view of it. He says, first, that upon the authority of the case of Van Grutten v. Digby, 11 W. R. 230, 31 Beav. 561, this was an English settlement to be governed by English law; and by the English law as expounded by the House of Lords in Edwards v. Carter (which affirmed the decision of this court), covenants in a marriage settlement, or a settlement made on a marriage by infants, are voidable, and are binding unless repudiated within a reasonable time. It is said that she always had power, at all events, to repudiate, and that she could do that by Austrian law and you cannot apply the English law to that state of things, and that inasmuch as she has not repudiated within a reasonable time this contract has become irrevocable. Is that sound reasoning? To my mind it is not, and for this reason: In the first place, as regards the case of Van Grutten v. Digby, the points which we have to consider did not arise for discussion or determination at all. There was no question there about incapacity to contract. It was a settlement made by people of mature age binding upon them when made, and it is clear Lord Romilly was right in saying that that was a contract which was to be decided according to the law of England, regardless of any change of domicil afterwards. But here we are faced with a difficulty which arises from the capacity to contract, and that difficulty does not appear to me to be touched, and still less governed, by the decision in Van Grutten v. Digby.

Now, what is the effect of the English law as expounded by the House of Lords in Edwards v. Carter? No doubt the English law is what the House of Lords there said, but what is the theory of it? The theory of it is this, I apprehend, that there are some contracts of infants which are settled by English law to be absolutely void. There are a few, but not a great many, contracts which in the view of the English law cannot possibly be for the benefit of the infant, and I rather think the common law cases show—take a bond with penalties as an illustration—they are void and an infant cannot contract. There are a few such cases and only a few; there are not many. The great bulk of infants' contracts are voidable. What does that mean? It means this, that when they come of age they can elect to do one of two things — they can elect to affirm them or they can elect to disaffirm them. If they do nothing the presumption is that they affirm them and that the contracts are binding and have been binding on them ever since they attained twenty-one, unless they prove the contrary by repudiating them within a reasonable time. But I think it would be an entire mistake to apply that part of the English law which relates to repudiation within a reasonable time, if you shut out the other part, the ability to ratify.

Now, by the alteration of the domicil here the ability to ratify was lost. Are we, then, to apply the rest of the English doctrine, or what I should call the mutilated doctrine, and say that the doctrine relating to infants was to apply and that this contract was to become irrevocable unless repudiated within a reasonable time. That appears to me to be contrary to good sense, and it would land us in the paradox with which I started, that we should have to hold that the contract had become irrevocable although the lady never had the capacity to enter into the irrevocable contract either before or after she was married. In point of authority the nearest case that has been cited, and the nearest case I know, is Cooper v. Cooper, in the House of Lords, 13 App. Cas. 88, 36 W. R. Dig. 98, where the very same difficulty had to be faced and was faced by the House of Lords, but the point as to the reasonable time did not receive attention. In point of fact, an infant did succeed there in repudiating a marriage settlement after a very long time—after the lapse of more than a reasonable time, if you shut out the change of domicil between the time of the execution of the marriage settlement and the repudiation. The point was not discussed, but so far as it goes it is the only case which appears to me to be at all close upon the question. My view, therefore, is that the effect of the change of the domicil was that the English doctrine became inapplicable by reason of the impossibility of effectually ratifying it. There is an alternative view, and perhaps it is the same view in another shape—that the effect of the change of domicil was to enlarge the time for repudiation. That is not, perhaps, quite so satisfactory a way of putting it, but I do not see, I confess, how we can say that the reasonable time for repudiation had expired when there was no opportunity of doing anything else. That is the second mode of looking at it, involved probably in the first, and I prefer to put it on the broader ground that we are not bound to make such a paradoxical decision as we have been invited to do. I might refer to Lord Watson's dictum in Cooper v. Cooper in 13 App. Cases. At p. 106 he says: "Being of opinion that the capacity of the appellant to bind herself by the marriage contract must be determined by the law of England, I agree with your lordships that the discharge which she seeks to set aside cannot stand in the way of her claiming her legal rights as a Scotch widow. The rule seems to be clear that an infant cannot during minority effectually subject herself to any contractual obligation which cannot be shown to have been for her benefit. She may ratify the contract after attaining majority, and so become liable to implement it; but in the circumstances of the present case, any such ratification of the contract would, according to the law of Scotland, have been revocable by her as a donation inter virum et uxorem," and so on. That, so far as it goes, although I say it does not quite touch the point, appears to me to be the nearest case and, so far, an authority for the conclusion at which I have arrived.

I think, therefore, the appeal must be allowed, and a declaration made as asked by the notice of appeal.

RIGBY and COLLINS, L.JJ., concurred.

Solicitors, Kearsey, Hawes, & Walsh; Blount, Lynch, & Petre.

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } March 8.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. COMPANY OF PROPRIETORS OF MARGATE PIER AND HARBOUR. (a.)

Company—"Company acting in execution of public duties"—Company incorporated by Act of Parliament to manage pier and harbour—Paying a dividend out of profits—Commercial company—Limitation of action—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), Title, s. 1 (a).

A company incorporated by private Act of Parliament for the purposes of completing and maintaining a pier and harbour, and empowered to raise money by rates and dues to be applied for those purposes, and also for the purpose of paying to the shareholders a yearly dividend limited in amount, is a commercial company, and is not a company acting in the execution of statutory or other public duties within the benefit of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.

The dictum of Jeune, P., in The Ydun, [1899] P. 236, 47 W. R. Dig. 166, followed.

This was an action brought by the Attorney-General on the relation of the Corporation of Margate and by the Corporation of Margate as plaintiffs, against the Company of Proprietors of Margate Pier and Harbour as defendants.

The pier and harbour of Margate were, prior to the year 1812, vested by local statutes in "Commissioners of the Pier and Pavement," on whom (in addition to the duties of improving, building, and preserving, &c., the pier and harbour) were imposed the duties of widening, paving, repairing, cleansing, lighting, and and watching the streets of the town of Margate.

In 1812, the duties with reference to the pier and harbour were by a local Act, 52 Geo. 3, c. 186, separated from those with reference to the streets of the town, the former being entrusted to the defendant company which was then incorporated, while the latter remained in the hands of the commissioners.

By the Act of 1812 the defendant company were authorized (inter alia) to complete and maintain the pier and harbour, and to raise money for these purposes by the issue of shares, and to levy rates and duties. And it was enacted that all moneys received on account of rates and duties should be applied: (1) In discharging interest on all moneys due on the credit of rates payable under previous Acts; (2) in payment of a certain sum to the "Commissioners of the Pier and Pavement" for paving and lighting the streets of the town; (3) in paying all interest due on any money to be borrowed by the defendant company under the Act; (4) in payment of the charges and expenses of carrying out, finishing, maintaining, repairing, and preserving the pier, harbour, and works; and (5) that after all such payments had been made the residue of the rates and duties should be divided amongst the shareholders of the defendant company rateably, with the proviso that no dividend in any one year should exceed the rate of 10 per cent. per annum; and that all surplus profit, income, and gains beyond such dividend should be annually set apart as a sinking fund to defray the expenses of any future repairs or improvements of the pier, harbour, and works as the court of directors of the defendant company should from time to time think necessary; and that in the meantime such surplus should be invested and the interest added thereto and accumulated until the sinking fund amounted to £20,000, when no further surplus was to be added. The Act further provided for ultimately paying off all the shares of the defendant company and for its dissolution when the pier, harbour, and works and the sinking fund were to be transferred to, and vested in, the Commissioners of the Pier and Pavement.

In 1857, under a charter of incorporation granted to the inhabitants of Margate, the rights, powers, and duties of the "Commissioners of the Pier and Pavement" became vested in the plaintiff corporation, who thus became interested in the ultimate reversion of the pier and harbour.

The defendant company carried on their duties and accumulated a sinking fund which in the year 1889 amounted to upwards of £11,000. In that year an Act was passed, called the Margate Coal Dues Act, by which a sum of India 3½ per cent. Stock then in court was directed to be carried to the account of the sinking fund and invested and accumulated. And the defendant company were directed to furnish to the plaintiff corporation annually an audited statement of their accounts. These accounts when furnished showed that the defendant company had applied the income arising from the sinking fund and India Stock to their ordinary expenses and to payment of dividends to their shareholders instead of carrying it to the credit of the sinking fund.

In 1897 the dividend paid to shareholders was 9 per cent. The plaintiff corporation contended that the defendant company had not complied with the directions contained in the Acts of Parliament thus affecting the value of plaintiffs' reversion, and asked for an order that the defendant company might be directed before any further dividends were paid to make good to the sinking fund all moneys improperly diverted therefrom. The defendant company contended that they had not acted improperly in applying the income of the sinking fund in expenses for such repairs and improvements of the pier and harbour as the directors thought necessary, that they had furnished accounts since 1889 showing the plaintiffs exactly what had been done, that the plaintiffs had acquiesced in what had been done, and that if the value of the plaintiffs' reversion had been affected thereby, the plaintiffs' action was barred by their acquiescence.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendant company also especially relied on the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.

Macmorran, Q.C., Younger, Q.C., and Christopher James, for the plaintiffs.—The defendant company has not applied their revenue of the sinking fund as directed by their Act of 1812. The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, does not protect them, as they are a commercial company, just as a railway company is a commercial company, and not within the benefit of the Act: Fielding v. Morley Corporation, 47 W. R. 295, [1899] 1 Ch. 1; The Ydun, [1899] P. 236, 47 W. R. Dig. 166. This action is one of account, and does not relate to any public duty.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the defendant company.—The company has always acted bonâ fide; further, it is within the Public Authorities Protection Act. It is not mainly a trading company, but its main purpose is to discharge "public duties." The statute is to be construed benevolently.

KEKEWICH, J., after dealing at length with matters not material to the present report, continued: Then comes a question which is of far greater importance. I say of far greater importance, because up to now I have only dealt with an action brought against this particular pier company, and in which we are now considering the Act of 1812. I have not referred to later Acts because I think that what I have said with regard to the Act of 1812 is sufficient; but now we come to an Act of a general nature; and although the point arises with reference to this particular pier and harbour company, it really is a matter of great importance on which there is at present a dearth of authority. The general Act to which I am referring is one the short title of which is the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, but the title of the Act itself—the long title, if I may use the expression—is, "An Act to generalize and amend certain statutory provisions for the protection of persons acting in the execution of statutory and other public duties"; and if, as the Master of the Rolls says (Fielding v. Morley Corporation), you are entitled to look at the short title in order to understand the meaning of an Act of Parliament, I take it it follow a fortiori that you may look at the title that is put at the head of the Act itself, or, as I have ventured to call it, the long title. That is the title, and it enacts, among other things, that where you are dealing with a body which is within the meaning of the Act (section 1 (a): "The action, prosecution, or proceeding shall not lie or be instituted unless it is commenced within six months next after the act, neglect, or default complained of, or, in case of a continuance of injury or damage, within six months next after the ceasing thereof." I need not pause to question about time. I will not even pause to consider whether this action in its main purport could be brought within this Act at all, seeking as it does declarations, mainly, as to how the accounts of the company ought to be kept, and how the moneys ought to be applied, and I might run off and shirk the question by saying, as I did just now, on the other point, "but as I propose to dismiss the last part of the claim on an entirely different ground, I need not consider that here." But I think the point that has been raised is one of very great importance, and it is right that I should say what it occurs to me to say about it.

The first section of the Act, of which I read the sub-section (a) just now, defines the parties in this way: "Where after the commencement of this Act any action, prosecution, or other proceeding is commenced in the United Kingdom against any person for any act done in pursuance, or execution, or intended execution of any Act of Parliament, or of any public duty or authority, or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such Act." Now, is the defendant company within the meaning of that section which I have just read, craving in aid what I call the long title and also the short title? Let us remember what it is. The company was brought into existence in its present name in the year 1812. In the last century the pier and harbour were vested in commissioners, who not only looked after the pier and harbour, which, no doubt, themselves are of great importance, but they also looked after the "widening, paving, repairing, cleansing, lighting, and watching the streets in the town of Margate." Those, are, no doubt, public duties and have always been recognized as such; and if those commissioners had continued to exist they could not have been regarded otherwise than as public persons—persons within the meaning of the Act discharging public duties. But in 1812 there was a severance, and those municipal duties were kept in the commissioners now represented by the corporation, and the pier and harbour became vested in the company then called "The Company of Proprietors of Margate Pier and Harbour," and they to-day hold them in the way I have mentioned. They have parted from the commissioners, they are a separate entity created by the Act of 1812, and not only their existence, but their duties and liabilities, are defined by that Act. Now, they are a company for maintaining the pier and the harbour. Quite irrespective of Margate, or any other place, a pier and harbour are, no doubt, very important items, I should think, to the public, and the maintenance of them is for the public utility, but the same remarks apply to a railway, a tramway, a canal, and one might mention many other things in the same way. They are to spend their money in paying interest on charges, they are to keep up their pier and harbour, and, beyond that, except that they are limited to a 10 per cent. dividend, and there is to be a sinking fund and the Legislature has thought fit to make provisions about that, they are a commercial company intended to earn, and in fact they have earned, considerable dividends year by year. I do not myself see the distinction between such a company and a railway company incorporated by private special Act with reference to the Lands Clauses Acts and the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and subsequent Acts. They are companies intended to benefit the public. No special Act of Parliament of that kind is ever passed without the recital that the construction and maintenance of the line (or of the tramway or canal, as the case may be) is for the public benefit, and the powers which they are given, such as the power of compulsory purchase of land, are all given on the footing that they are doing a public benefit; and yet they are commercial companies, and it would be difficult to say that they are not, except in the one sense which I am now considering here, public companies doing public duty. If I were left entirely alone I might be very much puzzled to know whether a railway company came within this Act of Parliament. In the long title the words are "acting in the execution of statutory and other public duties." I do not know that the long titles of Acts of Parliament are better drafted than the Acts of Par-themselves, and those are notoriously badly drafted; but I suppose that the draughtsman of this title meant that it was in the execution of public duties which are statutory or otherwise. He says "statutory and other public duties," and if that were to be taken in its most literal construction any company exercising any power by virtue of any Act of Parliament would come within that meaning. I cannot think that that was intended. The Master of the Rolls, in Fielding v. The Morley Corporation, says [1899] 1 Ch. on p. 3: "The act in question is intituled," and then after reading it goes on "I read the title advisedly because now and for some years past the title of an Act of Parliament has been part of the Act. In old days it used not to be so, and in the old books we were told not so to regard it, but now the title is an important part of the Act, and is so treated in both Houses of Parliament." That rather strengthens my observations which I made just now. But the exact point was considered by the President of the Probate Division in the case of The Ydun. That was an Admiralty case. There the President had to consider whether a municipal authority, which was also discharging certain navigation and dock duties, was, for that purpose, a public body. Of course it was a public body as a municipal authority, but was it a public body when it was discharging the duties then in question, as, for instance, if it was discharging the duties of a water or gas company? He expressed the opinion undoubtedly, and that is what he gave his judgment on, that so connected you had undoubtedly a public body, but in some introductory remarks he said: "It is not easy to see why a railway company, for example, a corporation which certainly does acts in pursuance or execution of an Act of Parliament, is not included. This clearly, however, is not what the Act means." That decision was affirmed by the Court of Appeal, but the Court of Appeal took it for granted, I think, that the corporation there was a public body, and, so far as I can see there was no criticism of what was said by the President in the court below. But I have that distinct authority, although it was not necessary for the purpose of his decision for the President to give that expression of his opinion; and I gladly accept his interpretation. On those grounds, therefore, I hold that this action will lie.

Solicitors, Warren, Murton, & Miller, for E. Brooke, Margate; Kingsford, Dorman, & Co., for T. H. Boys, Margate.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J.
(for Wright, J.)

Jan. 24.

In re Vimbos (Limited). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Debentures—Receiver—Agency—Jurisdiction.

Where debentures by way of mortgage over the whole property of a company give power to the debenture-holders to appoint a receiver without stating that he is the agent of the company or what he is to do with any surplus which may come into his hands after paying the debenture-holders, such receiver is the agent of the debenture-holders only, and not of the company.

The liquidator of a company cannot by summons in the winding up obtain an order to make a receiver of it account for any surplus in his hands, as the court has no jurisdiction to consider the matter. If he wishes to enforce such a claim, he must bring an action against the receiver in the ordinary way.

(a.) Reported by C. W. Mead, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Summons by the liquidator of the company that the amount of remuneration payable to the receiver for the debenture-holders might be fixed, and that any balance remaining in his hands should be paid over to the liquidator.

The company had issued debentures in the form of separate mortgages charging by way of floating security all the company's undertakings and heritable and real and personal property with the payment of principal and interest secured by the debentures. Each debenture ranked, pari passu, with the others. Three-fourths of the debenture-holders were empowered to appoint a receiver at any time after the principal moneys became due, the receiver having power (1) to take possession of the property charged by the debentures; (2) to carry on or concur in carrying on the business of the company; (3) to sell or concur in selling any of the property charged by the debentures; (4) to make any arrangements or compromise which they or he shall think expedient in the interest of the debenture-holders of this series.

On the 30th of November, 1898, a receiver was appointed by the debenture-holders. The company went into voluntary liquidation in March, 1899, which was afterwards continued under supervision. The receiver took possession and sold the business and assets of the company, and collected the book debts.

The debenture-holders were paid in full and the receiver handed over to the liquidator a certain sum together with the accounts. He stated in an affidavit that this was done to save the trouble of having to send them to his principals direct, who would in their turn have delivered them to the liquidator. The receiver claimed to retain £1,608 5s. as remuneration.

A. R. Kirby, for the liquidator.—The receiver is really the agent of the company. His duty is to receive income, keep down interest, and account for the surplus to the mortgagor—i.e., the company: Gaskell v. Gosling, [1896] 1 Q. B. 669, 44 W. R. Dig. 132.

Stewart Smith, for the receiver.—The receiver is the agent of the debenture-holders, the mortgagees—not of the company, the mortgagor. There is no general rule which would make him the company's agent. He might be if appointed under the Conveyancing Act, 1881, or if there was a special contract to that effect as in Jeffreys v. Dickson, 14 W. R. 322, L. R. 1 Ch. App. 183. Even if he were the agent of the company, the liquidator can only bring an action against him, he cannot make him account in the winding up.

Cozens-Hardy, J.—The case really resolves itself into a question of jurisdiction. It is an application by the liquidator of a company that the amount of remuneration payable to the debenture-holders' receiver may be fixed, and that he may be ordered to pay the applicant any balance he may have in his hands. I thought it was coming on by arrangement to assess a quantum meruit; but the receiver's counsel takes the objection, which he is perfectly at liberty to take, that I have no jurisdiction to make the order, and it is therefore necessary for me to consider what is the position of the receiver.

Now, the mortgage debentures in this case are in a somewhat peculiar form. There is no covering deed; each debenture-holder had a separate debenture charging, in the most general terms, the present and future property of the company with the debenture, and by the fourth condition of the debenture indorsed upon it, it was stated as follows: [His lordship read the condition, and continued:] It is remarkable that this power differs in almost every material respect from the ordinary power which is given to mortgagees. There is nothing to say that the receiver is to be the agent of the mortgagor, who is solely to be responble for his acts and defaults, as in the Conveyancing Act. There is nothing whatever to say what he is to do with moneys which he receives. There is no direction to him to keep down the interest on the mortgage, or to pay any arrears or surplus over to the mortgagor. There are none of those provisions one finds in an ordinary receivership deed, and it does seem to me that the receiver in these circumstances was the agent of the persons appointing him, not the agent of the mortgagor, and it follows from that, of course, that the debenture-holders themselves would be answerable for all the faults and omissions of the receiver. If that is so it seems quite plain that the liquidator has no right at all in these proceedings to get the remuneration of the agent, not of the company, but of the debenture-holders, assessed by the court. The receiver does not come here asking for remuneration. He has got some money in his hands which the liquidator says is more than he is entitled to. The liquidator says the debenture-holders have been paid off, that the receiver has money in his hands which he ought not to keep. I think, on that footing—viz., that the receiver is agent for the mortgagees, and that this is the money of the mortgagees, and not of the company, that this application must fail.

But suppose I am wrong in that view, suppose that the true view be this, that although it is not expressed it is implied that the receiver is the agent of the mortgagor—that is, of the company, and that the company alone would be responsible for his acts and defaults. I cannot conceive that the liquidator is in any better position. It is not the law that the liquidator can get any claim made by any agent employed by the company assessed by the court in a proceeding like this. Suppose it had been an auctioneer or a stockbroker, who had undoubtedly been employed by the company, and who had some money in his hands, I cannot find any authority whatever for the proposition that I could in this summary manner and in winding-up jurisdiction, direct that the proper remuneration of the auctioneer or stockbroker should be ascertained, and order him to pay over the balance. It seems to me that the ordinary course of law would have to be followed—viz., an action commenced by the liquidator against the alleged agent (the auctioneer or stockbroker in the case I put) claiming this money as the money of the company, and then the auctioneer or stockbroker, as the case might be, would have to raise his contention that he was entitled to retain, out of the money in his hands, the remuneration which he claims. I, therefore, without going at all into the merits of the case, am bound to find that I have no jurisdiction, and that I must dismiss the summons.

Solicitors, Murray, Hutchins, Stirling, & Murray; Sutton, Ommanney, & Rendall.

---

Chan. Div. }
Farwell, J. } March 13.

WATTS v. DRISCOLL. (a.)

Partnership—Mortgage of share by one partner—Dissolution—Right to an account—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 31.

By section 31 of the Partnership Act, 1890, a mortgagee of a share in a partnership has a right to an account and to ascertain what the share of his mortgagor really is from the date of the dissolution of the partnership. The mortgagor is not entitled to say that he has settled the value of his share with his partner before the date of dissolution, and thus take away his mortgagee's right to an account for the purpose of ascertaining that share.

This was an action (1) for a declaration that a partnership carried on between the defendants Dennis Driscoll, and William Seymour Watts was dissolved as from the 12th of September, 1899; (2) that the plaintiff was entitled to a charge on the share of the said W. S. Watts in the partnership assets; (3) for an account.

The defendant Driscoll carried on a retail business. It was agreed between him and the plaintiff that the latter should purchase a share of his business for the benefit of the plaintiff's son, W. S. Watts, who was the other defendant. Articles of partnership dated the 9th of January, 1899, and made between the defendants Driscoll and W. S. Watts, were accordingly drawn up, whereby in consideration of the sums of £1,500 and £141 3s. 2d. expressed to be paid by the defendant W. S. Watts to the defendant Driscoll it was agreed that they should become partners for the term of fourteen years determinable as therein mentioned, and subject to the clauses and stipulations therein contained. The defendant W. S. Watts also agreed to provide £250 as working capital. These various sums were paid to the defendant Driscoll, the money being found by the plaintiff, who took as a security for the advance a deed of assignment dated the 23rd of March, 1899, from the defendant W. S. Watts of his share in the assets and profits of the partnership business. By this deed the defendant W. S. Watts covenanted with his father that he would keep him informed as to the partnership business and give him access to the partnership books and until the advance was repaid would pay the plaintiff the weekly drawings of the defendant W. S. Watts less a weekly sum agreed on. It was held as a fact that Driscoll knew that the money had been advanced by the plaintiff, and had full knowledge and notice of this deed.

Friction arose between the partners, and on the 14th of August, 1889, the defendants agreed to dissolve their partnership on the terms that the defendant Driscoll should buy from W. S. Watts his share in the partnership business for the sum of £500, and that W. S. Watts should accept £40 in consideration of his share of the profits made during the partnership. This agreement was made without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff. Accounts had been made and approved by the partners up to the 30th of June, and by this deed it was determined that the partnership should be dissolved from that date. In consequence of this the plaintiff brought this action.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., and J. H. Boome, for the plaintiff.—The mortgagor, W. S. Watts, here sold his share of the business to his partner for a lump sum; this he had no right to do without the plaintiff's, the mortgagee's, assent. The plaintiff is entitled to the declarations prayed for and to an account.

Hughes, Q.C., and F. P. Onslow, for the defendant Driscoll.—An assignee or mortgagee takes subject to equities: Smith v. Parkes, 16 Beav. 115, Kelly v. Hutton, 15 W. R. 916, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 703. The mortgagee is only entitled to an account from the time he takes possession: Whetham v. Davey, 33 W. R. 925, 30 Ch. D. 574. By section 31 of the Partnership Act, 1890, the assignee of any partner is not entitled to require any accounts, but must accept the account of profits agreed to by the partners. The mortgagee here must therefore accept the share as settled by the partners.

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

FARWELL, J.—In my opinion the defendant's counsel is well founded in the whole of his argument except the one point necessary for his success. I think he is quite right in saying that the true construction is that an assignee or mortgagee takes subject to equities—that is to say, he is right in saying that the partners can, during the continuance of the partnership, settle the accounts as they arise between them in the management or administration of the partnership, and that the mortgagee or assignee has no right whatever to interfere in the management or administration, or to require any accounts, or to inspect the books, but he is bound to take the profits as agreed to by the partners; that is the first sub-clause of section 31. Then the second sub-clause goes on to provide: "In the case of a dissolution the assignee is entitled to receive the share of the partnership assets to which the assigning partner is entitled as between himself and the other partners, and for the purpose of ascertaining that share to an account as from the date of dissolution." That obviously points to a dissolution and to such a dealing between the partners as I have already mentioned—namely, the ordinary dealing in a going concern, with accounts arising from half year to half year, settled between the partners in the ordinary administration of the partnership assets and the partnership business, and this the mortgagee or assignee has to accept. When, however, you come to a dissolution of partnership a different set of circumstances arises, and then, leaving untouched all accounts relating to management and administration of the business during the partnership, you are to proceed to ascertain what the share of the mortgagor partner is, and for the purpose of ascertaining that share, leaving, as I say, untouched all previous accounts such as I have mentioned, the mortgagee is then entitled to an account as from the date of dissolution to ascertain what that share is. Sale appears to me to be a matter outside the section altogether. The deed I have before me purports to sell in consideration of £500; that is the purchase-money for the share of the mortgagor partner, the whole of his share of the business. That, in my opinion, is not within the section of the Act at all. What the Act refers to is, first of all, the due administration of the partnership during its continuance; and, secondly, the settling of the shares of the partners after dissolution. A sale is a matter outside that altogether. This does not say that £500 is during the partnership agreed to be the amount of the share of the partners. It is selling for a lump sum, which is said to be £500, that which the mortgagor had no power to sell without the consent of the mortgagee. It appeared to me that if I were to hold in accordance with the defendant's contention I should be striking out the second sub-clause of the 31st section of the Partnership Act; because it would appear to follow that the other partner might say to the mortgagee of a mortgagor partner: "You are not entitled to any account as from the date of dissolution, because we have already agreed with the partner that, when the dissolution comes, his share is to be so much." To my mind, that would not be in accordance with the Act, and I therefore hold that the mortgagee in this case, the plaintiff, is entitled to the account for which he asks as from the date of dissolution. I cannot interfere with the decision of the partners as to the date which they have agreed shall be regarded as the date of dissolution. There will, then, be a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to a charge on the share of the defendant Watts in the assets as on the 30th of June, 1899; and the plaintiff is entitled to an account as from that date.

Solicitors, T. Durant; W. M. Bond.

Chan. Div.
Buckley, J. } May 16, 17.

ROSENBAUM v. BELSON. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Principal and agent—Sale by agent—Authority—Contract for sale.

An authority given by the owner of land or houses to an agent to sell them is primâ facie an authority to make a sale effectual in point of law, including the execution of a contract in writing where the law requires it.

Action.

This was an action for specific performance of an agreement entered into by agents on behalf of the owner to sell certain houses, and the question was whether the agents had the requisite authority.

On the 4th of December, 1899, the defendant gave to Messrs. Dickson & Newman, auctioneers and estate agents, a memorandum signed by him as follows: "Wellesley-street, Stepney Green. Ground-rent £17 10s. 8d; mortgage £740, reduced to £640; £800. Please sell for me my houses 75, 77, 79, 79A, 81, 83, Wellesley-street, Stepney Green, and I agree to pay you by way of commission the sum of 2½ per cent. on the purchase price accepted. L. BELSON."

Dickson & Newman accordingly obtained an offer from the plaintiff of £785 for the property, which they communicated to the defendant, who on the 7th of December, 1899, wrote to them:

"Dear Sirs,—75 to 83, Wellesley-street.—I hereby agree to accept your client's (Mr. Rosenbaum) offer of £785 for the above property.—Yours faithfully, L. BELSON."

On the 11th of December the agents received £78 10s. as deposit from the plaintiff and gave him a receipt for it, and at the same time signed the following agreement: "It is hereby agreed between Messrs. Dickson & Newman as agents on behalf of the vendor Mr. L. Belson and Mr. S. Rosenbaum, of 5, Bell-lane, Spitalfields, that this 11th day of December, 1899, the said S. Rosenbaum has become the purchaser of the leasehold property (twenty-four years) known and situate at (75-83) Wellesley-street, Stepney Green, for the sum of seven hundred and eighty-five pounds (£785), and that he had paid to the said Dickson & Newman the sum of seventy-eight pounds ten shillings as a deposit and in part payment of the said purchase-money. As witness our hands this 11th day of December, 1899. This contract is made subject to the particulars given by the vendor being correct.

"DICKSON & NEWMAN,
"S. ROSENBAUM."

The defendant having refused to complete, the plaintiff brought this action. The defendant pleaded that Dickson & Newman had no authority to enter into the alleged agreement of sale or to sign the memorandum in writing of the same date, and that the Statute of Frauds had not been complied with.

At the trial the plaintiff adduced evidence that the defendant had, in addition to the written authority, given verbal instructions to the agents to enter into the agreement for sale. This was denied by the defendant.

Jolly, for the plaintiff.—The authority given by the plaintiff to sell includes an authority to enter into an agreement for sale.

W. S. M. Knight (Montefiore with him), for the defendant.—The authority to the estate agents to sell meant only to negotiate a sale and find a purchaser.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

and not to enter into a binding contract: Chadburn v. Moore, 41 W. R. 39, 67 L. T. 257, 61 L. J. Ch. 674. It is not the business of an estate agent to draw up contracts for the sale of land. That is a dangerous thing for anyone but a solicitor to do, and the defendant cannot be taken to have intended to give them any such authority.

The cases of Smith v. Webster, 24 W. R. 894, 3 Ch. D. 49; Hamer v. Sharp, 23 W. R. 158, L. R. 19 Eq. 108; John Griffiths Cycle Corporation v. Humber & Co. (Limited), [1899] 2 Q. B. 414; and Goodall v. Harding, 33 W. R. 160, 52 L. T. Rep. 126, were also referred to during the argument.

BUCKLEY, J.—The contract relied on being signed by agents, the plaintiff must make out that the act was within the agents' authority. The defendant's counsel contended that an agent for sale had not authority to sign a contract unless express authority to sign the contract as distinguished from authority to sell, was proved. In my opinion this is not the law. A sale primâ facie means a sale effectual in point of law, including the execution of a contract where the law requires a contract in writing. I do not find anything in the circumstances of this case which induces me to say that the word "sell" here means less than that. The authorities upon the point are few. In Hamer v. Sharp, the authority was, "I request you to procure a purchaser and to insert particulars in your monthly circular until further notice." In Godwin v. Brind, 17 W. R. 29, L. R. 5 C. P. 299*n*, the advertisement intimated that "to treat and view" applications were to be made to certain persons. In Chadburn v. Moore, the learned judge found the instructions, which were not in writing, to be "to find a purchaser" and "negotiate a sale." In Prior v. Moore, 3 Times L. R. 624, the owner instructed the estate agent "to put the property on his books for sale." In all these cases it was held that the agent was not authorized to sign a contract for sale. None of them, in my judgment, covers the present case. In Hamer v. Sharp Hall, V.C., did not say that the agent had no right to enter into a contract at all, but only into such a one as he had entered into, and he in his discretion refused specific performance. In Saunders v. Dence, 33 W. R. Dig. 229, Field, J., distinguished that case from that of Hamer v. Sharp, and held that the auctioneers had authority to make a binding contract for sale. I have been unable to find any case where it has been held that instructions given by A. B. to sell for him his house and an agreement by him to pay so much on the purchase price accepted is not an authority to make a binding contract, including an authority to sign an agreement. Surely a power of attorney to one to sell would empower him to conclude an agreement for sale. It is not alleged that the agreement is not a reasonable and proper one having regard to the nature of the property. Beyond this question of law I find as a fact that the defendant on the 7th of December was told that Dickson & Newman would sign a contract in exchange for the deposit, and that he assented. The agents had thus, in addition to the letter of the 4th of December, 1899, a verbal authority to sign a contract.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors, Brighten & Lemon; J. B. Sorrell, jun.

---

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div.
(Wright and Phillimore, JJ.) March 12, 15.

In re WARREN.
Ex parte THE TRUSTEE. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Fraudulent preference—Payment by debtor to bank with the object of benefiting debtor's surety—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 48, sub-section 1.

A payment made by a debtor within three months prior to the bankruptcy in order to prevent a surety from being called upon to pay in his default is not a fraudulent preference of such surety.

In re Mills, Ex parte The Official Receiver, 5 Morrell 55, 58 L. T. Rep. 871, 36 W. R. Dig. 15, followed.

In re Paine, Ex parte Read, 45 W. R. 190, [1897] 1 Q. B. 122, not followed.

Appeal against a decision of the county court judge at Manchester.

Mrs. Eliza Warren, the debtor, was insolvent on the 19th of June, 1899. At that date, amongst her other debts, she owed £202 to the Union Bank of Manchester, secured by a joint and several promissory note signed by herself and by her husband, G. W. Warren, as surety, and £250 to the Union Loan and Discount Bank, secured by a joint and several promissory note signed by herself and by her husband and one J. H. Harrison as sureties.

On the 20th of June she paid the debt owing to the Union Bank of Manchester, and on the 22nd of June she paid the debt owing to the Union Loan and Discount Bank, thereby releasing her husband and J. H. Harrison from liability.

A receiving order was made against Mrs. Warren within three months of the 19th of June, she was adjudicated bankrupt and a trustee was appointed, who moved in the county court at Manchester against G. W. Warren and J. H. Harrison for an order directing them to pay to him the sums of £202 and £250, on the ground that they had been fraudulently preferred by the debtor to that extent by the release of their liabilities to the banks as sureties for the debtor's loans.

The county court judge dismissed the application, holding that, although the payments had been made with a view to prefer, they were not in fact preferences, because the payments were not made to the creditors intended to be preferred. In arriving at this conclusion the learned judge relied on the cases of Ex parte Taylor, In re Goldsmid, 35 W. R. 148, 18 Q. B. D. 295, and In re Mills, Ex parte The Official Receiver, 5 Morrell 55, 58 L. T. Rep. 871, 36 W. R. Dig. 15.

The trustee appealed.

Byrne, for the appellant.—I contend that the county court judge should have followed the case of In re Paine, Ex parte Read, 45 W. R. 190, [1897] 1 Q. B. 122, where Vaughan Williams, J., held that a payment by the debtor into his own bank to meet a bill accepted by the respondent for his accommodation was a fraudulent preference of the respondent.

Reed, Q.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the respondent, were not called upon.

WRIGHT, J.—In this case the appellant has to make out that the payment was made by the debtor to or in favour of the respondents, with a view of giving them a preference over her other creditors. The county court judge has found, and no doubt rightly, that the dominant view of the debtor in making the payment was to prefer the respondents. In my judgment there is no sufficient ground for treating the payments by the debtor to the banks as payments to or in favour of the respondents. The money was paid by the debtor to discharge her indebtedness to the banks, and was kept by them, and not applied to any other purpose. The result of this payment was that the promissory notes which had been signed by the respondents as sureties were released. The only difficulty is as to the case of In re Paine, Ex parte Read, and I agree with counsel for the appellant that primâ facie the court there appears to have held that the payment off by the bankrupt of the creditor was to be treated as a payment to, or for the benefit of, the acceptor of the accommodation bill for the bankrupt. I think, however, that the money was there paid in substance to enable the acceptor to take up the bill.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

At variance with that view we have, however, the judgments of the Court of Appeal in the case of In re Mills, Ex parte The Official Receiver; and those judgments, though based on the decision in In re Taylor, Ex parte Goldsmid, nevertheless contain dicta which we cannot overlook. The Lords Justices there seem to take the view that to constitute a fraudulent preference the payment must be made to the person intended to be preferred. I think, therefore, the appeal fails.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The motion here is launched on the assumption that the respondents have received the bankrupt's money. That, however, is not the case; the money was received by the banks. The trustee could not have moved to make the respondents repay the money, nor could he have sued them for money had and received. I think that the proper view of In re Paine, Ex parte Read, is that the payment in that case (though made by the debtor into his own bank) was treated by the court as in substance a payment to the credit of the respondent, the accommodation acceptor. I agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, J. H. Cooper, Manchester.

Solicitors for the respondents, Wheatly, Son, & Daniel, for Cobbett, Wheeler, & Cobbett, Manchester.

---

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } Dec. 11. 18; Jan. 29; Feb. 19.

WARD (OTHERWISE DORMER) v. WARD. (a.)

Divorce—Nullity of marriage—Impotence—No possibility of children—Power to vary settlements—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 108). s. 5—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 19), s. 3.

The powers of the court under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, and section 3 of the Act of 1878, can be exercised in the case of a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of impotence, and are not confined to cases where there are or might have been children.

The words "property settled" in section 5 of the Act of 1859 refer only to the property the benefit of which is by the marriage settlement conferred on the parties or their children in the ordinary way.

There is no power to bring into settlement a fund or estate which is not to come into settlement until a certain event happens—before it happens, in fact.

The ordinary practice of the court of ordering a settlement to be read as if a party to it were already dead is merely a convenient method of carrying out what otherwise the court has power to do, and cannot be used for the purpose of evading the rule as stated above.

This was an application by the wife for variation of settlements, she having obtained a decree for dissolution of marriage against her husband on the ground of impotence.

Dec. 11, 18, and Jan. 29.—Bargrave Deane, Q.C., and Danckwerts, for the petitioner.

Jelf, Q.C., H. J. Parker, and Priestley, for the respondent.

The facts and arguments are fully set out in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 19. — BARNES, J., delivered the following considered judgment: Two questions are raised in this case, one of general importance—viz., as to the construction of two sections of the Matrimonial Causes Acts of 1859 and 1878—and the other depending upon the terms of an ante-nuptial settlement made on the marriage of the petitioner and respondent and dated the 27th of May, 1885. The parties were married on the 28th of May, 1885, the petitioner being then under age, and afterwards they resided together; but on the 22nd of October, 1895, the petitioner commenced a suit in this court against the respondent, claiming a declaration that her marriage with him was null and void, on the ground of the impotence of the respondent. This suit was heard before the President, and a decree nisi was pronounced by him on the 21st of December, 1896, and this decree was made absolute on the 28th of June, 1897. The petitioner on the 12th of June, 1899, by leave of the court, presented a petition to the court under the said Acts to obtain a variation of the said settlement for her benefit. The petition having been referred to Mr. Registrar Pritchard, he reported that the respondent raised, amongst other points, the question of the jurisdiction of the court to vary settlements in the case of a marriage declared void by reason of impotence, and thereupon the matter was brought before the court, and the questions which I now have to decide were by arrangement argued before me.

The first point taken by the respondent was that the powers of the court conferred by the two sections could not be exercised in the case of a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of impotence, and that the sections only applied to cases where there were or might have been children. The fifth section of the Act of 1859 is as follows: "The court, after a final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage, may inquire into the existence of ante-nuptial or post-nuptial settlements made on the parties whose marriage is the subject of the decree, and may make such orders with reference to the application of the whole or a portion of the property settled either for the benefit of the children of the marriage or of their respective parents as to the court shall seem fit." It was decided in the case of Thomas v. Thomas, 8 W. R. 476, 504, 2 Sw. & Tr. 89, that this clause gave no power to the court to deal with settlements in cases where no child of the marriage had been born, and in the cases of Bird v. Bird, 14 W. R. 1023, L. R. 1 P. & D. 231, and Corrance v. Corrance, 16 W. R. 893, L. R. 1 P. & D. 495, that the court had no power to do so unless there was issue of the marriage living at the time of the application. These decisions turned on the use of the word "parents" in the latter part of the section, and the criticisms on the judgments in those cases apparently led to the passing of the third section of the Act of 1878, which is in the following terms: "The court may exercise the powers vested in it by the provisions of section 5 of the Act of the 22nd and 23rd years of Victoria, c. 61, notwithstanding that there are no children of the marriage." The argument for the respondent was that, as under the said fifth section the powers of the court could only be exercised where there was issue of the marriage living at the time of the application, the marriages referred to in the words in the first part of the section "final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage" must be marriages capable of being productive of children, and that the third section of the Act of 1878, in extending the powers of the court to cases where there are no children of the marriage, only did so with reference to the class of marriages contemplated by the said fifth section. This argument is ingenious, but in my opinion endeavours to place a restricted meaning on the first words of the said fifth section which they never were intended to bear. In my opinion the words "final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage" are used in their ordinary meaning, just as they are in other sections of the Matrimonial Causes Acts, and apply to any marriages declared null or dissolved. The section then meant that the court, after any decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage, might inquire as to the existence of settlements, and then, if there was issue living, might make orders as contemplated by the latter part of the section; and now under the third section of the Act of 1878 these orders may be made although there is no issue of the marriage. I am of opinion that under the two sections combined the court has jurisdiction in this case to deal with the settlement in question.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The point raised by the respondent upon the terms of the settlement was that, having regard the terms of the settlement, there is no property settled which in the events which have happened the court can, or ought, in the circumstances to order to be applied for the benefit of the petitioner. Under an indenture of settlement dated the 8th of December, 1874, made between the respondent's father (who died before the date of the marriage settlement) and the respondent and certain trustees, the lands and hereditaments comprised in the schedules to the marriage settlement of the 27th of May, 1885, together with other hereditaments, were limited (subject as to part to a jointure rent-charge of £1,200 payable thereout to the respondent's mother during her life and to a term of 500 years for securing the same) to such uses, upon such trusts, and with and under such powers, agreements, and declarations as the respondent should, by any deed or deeds, with or without power of revocation and new appointment to be executed by him after his father's death, or by his will, or any codicil or codicils thereto, from time to time appoint, but subject and without prejudice to any lease and every contract for a lease or leases subsisting at the date of the said indenture of settlement, and subject thereto, to the use of the respondent and his assigns for his life without impeachment of waste, with divers remainders over; and in the same indenture was contained a power for the respondent after his father's decease by deed or will to charge the settled premises with the payment to himself or any other person of any money not exceeding £8,000 and interest as therein mentioned, and to appoint all or any part of the same premises for any term or terms of years for securing the same, but which power had not at the time of the marriage settlement been exercised. And in the same indenture was also contained a power for the respondent either before or after his marriage with any woman by deed with or without power of revocation and new appointment, or by will or codicil, to appoint to any woman whom he might marry, for life or for any less period as from the day of his death if she should survive him, any yearly rent-charge or rent-charges of any amount whatsoever payable after his father's death, whether the respondent should survive him or not, such rent-charge or rent-charges to be in bar or not to be in bar of dower and free-bench as to the respondent should seem fit, and to be charged upon and payable out of all or any of the premises by the said indenture of settlement assured without any deduction and to be paid at such times and in such manner as to the respondent should seem meet, and to appoint to such woman the usual powers and remedies for recovering and enforcing the same. And to appoint the premises so charged to any person or persons for any term or terms of years with or without impeachment of waste upon trusts for better securing payment of the rent-charge or rent-charges by mortgage (with a power of sale if thought fit), or otherwise as to the respondent should seem meet.

By the marriage settlement made between the respondent, the petitioner, her father, and certain trustees, the respondent in consideration of the intended marriage covenanted with the trustees that if the said intended marriage should take place the respondent would, during the joint lives of himself and the petitioner, pay to the trustees a yearly sum of £200 to accrue from day to day, but to be payable by equal quarterly payments, the first of such payments to be made on such of the quarterly days as should happen next after the solemnization of the said intended marriage, and the trustees were to pay the said annual sum of £200 as the same should become due so long as the same should continue payable to the petitioner, but so that she should not have any power of anticipation. And in consideration of the said intended marriage and in exercise of the special power vested in him by the said indenture of settlement, the respondent limited and appointed to the use of the petitioner and her assigns during her life in case the said intended marriage should take effect and she should survive him the rent-charges following—that is to say, if and so long as his mother should be living, the yearly rent-charge of £1,300, and from and after her death the yearly rent-charge of £1,600, the said rent-charges or such of them as should take effect to be in full for her jointure and in bar of all dower and free-bench whatsoever, and to be charged upon and issuing out of all the hereditaments and premises comprised in the first schedule thereto (subject as to part of the said hereditaments to the said yearly rent-charge of £1,200 and the said term of 500 years, and subject as to all the said hereditaments to the powers of leasing, and sale, and exchange, and management contained in the said indenture of settlement), such rent-charges to be considered as accruing from day to day, but to be payable quarterly without any deduction except succession duty, if any, the first of such payments as to the said rent-charge of £1,300 to be paid at the end of three calendar months after the death of the respondent if the petitioner and the respondent's mother should then both be living, and as to the said rent-charge of £1,600 to be made at the end of three calendar months after the death of the survivor of the respondent and his mother if the petitioner should then be living. And in consideration of the said intended marriage, and in exercise of the special power vested in him for that purpose by the indenture of settlement, the respondent as beneficial owner county court judge has found, and no doubt rightly, that the dominant view of the debtor in making the payment was to prefer the respondents. In my judgment there is no sufficient ground for treating the payments by the debtor to the banks as payments to or in favour of the respondents. The money was paid by the debtor to discharge her indebtedness to the banks, and was kept by them, and not applied to any other purpose. The result of this payment was that the promissory notes which had been signed by the respondents as sureties were released. The only difficulty is as to the case of In re Paine, Ex parte Read, and I agree with counsel for the appellant that primâ facie the court there appears to have held that the payment off by the bankrupt of the creditor was to be treated as a payment to, or for the benefit of, the acceptor of the accommodation bill for the bankrupt. I think, however, that the money was there paid in substance to enable the acceptor to take up the bill.

At variance with that view we have, however, the judgments of the Court of Appeal in the case of In re Mills, Ex parte The Official Receiver; and those judgments, though based on the decision in In re Taylor, Ex parte Goldsmid, nevertheless contain dicta which we cannot overlook. The Lords Justices there seem to take the view that to constitute a fraudulent preference the payment must be made to the person intended to be preferred. I think, therefore, the appeal fails.

PHILLIMORE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The motion here is launched on the assumption that the respondents have received the bankrupt's money. That, however, is not the case; the money was received by the banks. The trustee could not have moved to make the respondents repay the money, nor could he have sued them for money had and received. I think that the proper view of In re Paine, Ex parte Read, is that the payment in that case (though made by the debtor into his own bank) was treated by the court as in substance a payment to the credit of the respondent, the accommodation acceptor. I agree that the appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, J. H. Cooper, Manchester.

Solicitors for the respondents, Wheatly, Son, & Daniel, for Cobbett, Wheeler, & Cobbett, Manchester.

---

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } Dec. 11. 18; Jan. 29; Feb. 19.

WARD (OTHERWISE DORMER) v. WARD. (a.)

Divorce—Nullity of marriage—Impotence—No possibility of children—Power to vary settlements—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 108). s. 5—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 19), s. 3.

The powers of the court under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, and section 3 of the Act of 1878, can be exercised in the case of a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of impotence, and are not confined to cases where there are or might have been children.

The words "property settled" in section 5 of the Act of 1859 refer only to the property the benefit of which is by the marriage settlement conferred on the parties or their children in the ordinary way.

There is no power to bring into settlement a fund or estate which is not to come into settlement until a certain event happens—before it happens, in fact.

The ordinary practice of the court of ordering a settlement to be read as if a party to it were already dead is merely a convenient method of carrying out what otherwise the court has power to do, and cannot be used for the purpose of evading the rule as stated above.

This was an application by the wife for variation of settlements, she having obtained a decree for dissolution of marriage against her husband on the ground of impotence.

Dec. 11, 18, and Jan. 29.—Bargrave Deane, Q.C., and Danckwerts, for the petitioner.

Jelf, Q.C., H. J. Parker, and Priestley, for the respondent.

The facts and arguments are fully set out in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

Feb. 19. — BARNES, J., delivered the following considered judgment: Two questions are raised in this case, one of general importance—viz., as to the construction of two sections of the Matrimonial Causes Acts of 1859 and 1878—and the other depending upon the terms of an ante-nuptial settlement made on the marriage of the petitioner and respondent and dated the 27th of May, 1885. The parties were married on the 28th of May, 1885, the petitioner being then under age, and afterwards they resided together; but on the 22nd of October, 1895, the petitioner commenced a suit in this court against the respondent, claiming a declaration that her marriage with him was null and void, on the ground of the impotence of the respondent. This suit was heard before the President, and a decree nisi was pronounced by him on the 21st of December, 1896, and this decree was made absolute on the 28th of June, 1897. The petitioner on the 12th of June, 1899, by leave of the court, presented a petition to the court under the said Acts to obtain a variation of the said settlement for her benefit. The petition having been referred to Mr. Registrar Pritchard, he reported that the respondent raised, amongst other points, the question of the jurisdiction of the court to vary settlements in the case of a marriage declared void by reason of impotence, and thereupon the matter was brought before the court, and the questions which I now have to decide were by arrangement argued before me.

The first point taken by the respondent was that the powers of the court conferred by the two sections could not be exercised in the case of a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of impotence, and that the sections only applied to cases where there were or might have been children. The fifth section of the Act of 1859 is as follows: "The court, after a final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage, may inquire into the existence of ante-nuptial or post-nuptial settlements made on the parties whose marriage is the subject of the decree, and may make such orders with reference to the application of the whole or a portion of the property settled either for the benefit of the children of the marriage or of their respective parents as to the court shall seem fit." It was decided in the case of Thomas v. Thomas, 8 W. R. 476, 504, 2 Sw. & Tr. 89, that this clause gave no power to the court to deal with settlements in cases where no child of the marriage had been born, and in the cases of Bird v. Bird, 14 W. R. 1023, L. R. 1 P. & D. 231, and Corrance v. Corrance, 16 W. R. 893, L. R. 1 P. & D. 495, that the court had no power to do so unless there was issue of the marriage living at the time of the application. These decisions turned on the use of the word "parents" in the latter part of the section, and the criticisms on the judgments in those cases apparently led to the passing of the third section of the Act of 1878, which is in the following terms: "The court may exercise the powers vested in it by the provisions of section 5 of the Act of the 22nd and 23rd years of Victoria, c. 61, notwithstanding that there are no children of the marriage." The argument for the respondent was that, as under the said fifth section the powers of the court could only be exercised where there was issue of the marriage living at the time of the application, the marriages referred to in the words in the first part of the section "final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage" must be marriages capable of being productive of children, and that the third section of the Act of 1878, in extending the powers of the court to cases where there are no children of the marriage, only did so with reference to the class of marriages contemplated by the said fifth section. This argument is ingenious, but in my opinion endeavours to place a restricted meaning on the first words of the said fifth section which they never were intended to bear. In my opinion the words "final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage" are used in their ordinary meaning, just as they are in other sections of the Matrimonial Causes Acts, and apply to any marriages declared null or dissolved. The section then meant that the court, after any decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage, might inquire as to the existence of settlements, and then, if there was issue living, might make orders as contemplated by the latter part of the section; and now under the third section of the Act of 1878 these orders may be made although there is no issue of the marriage. I am of opinion that under the two sections combined the court has jurisdiction in this case to deal with the settlement in question.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The point raised by the respondent upon the terms of the settlement was that, having regard the terms of the settlement, there is no property settled which in the events which have happened the court can, or ought, in the circumstances to order to be applied for the benefit of the petitioner. Under an indenture of settlement dated the 8th of December, 1874, made between the respondent's father (who died before the date of the marriage settlement) and the respondent and certain trustees, the lands and hereditaments comprised in the schedules to the marriage settlement of the 27th of May, 1885, together with other hereditaments, were limited (subject as to part to a jointure rent-charge of £1,200 payable thereout to the respondent's mother during her life and to a term of 500 years for securing the same) to such uses, upon such trusts, and with and under such powers, agreements, and declarations as the respondent should, by any deed or deeds, with or without power of revocation and new appointment to be executed by him after his father's death, or by his will, or any codicil or codicils hereto, from time to time appoint, but subject and without prejudice to any lease and every contract for a lease or leases subsisting at the date of the said indenture of settlement, and subject thereto, to the use of the respondent and his assigns for his life without impeachment of waste, with divers remainders over; and in the same indenture was contained a power for the respondent after his father's decease by deed or will to charge the settled premises with the payment to himself or any other person of any money not exceeding £8,000 and interest as therein mentioned, and to appoint all or any part of the same premises for any term or terms of years for securing the same, but which power had not at the time of the marriage settlement been exercised. And in the same indenture was also contained a power for the respondent either before or after his marriage with any woman by deed with or without power of revocation and new appointment, or by will or codicil, to appoint to any woman whom he might marry, for life or for any less period as from the day of his death if she should survive him, any yearly rent-charge or rent-charges of any amount whatsoever payable after his father's death, whether the respondent should survive him or not, such rent-charge or rent-charges to be in bar or not to be in bar of dower and free-bench as to the respondent should seem fit, and to be charged upon and payable out of all or any of the premises by the said indenture of settlement assured without any deduction and to be paid at such times and in such manner as to the respondent should seem meet, and to appoint to such woman the usual powers and remedies for recovering and enforcing the same. And to appoint the premises so charged to any person or persons for any term or terms of years with or without impeachment of waste upon trusts for better securing payment of the rent-charge or rent-charges by mortgage (with a power of sale if thought fit), or otherwise as to the respondent should seem meet.

By the marriage settlement made between the respondent, the petitioner, her father, and certain trustees, the respondent in consideration of the intended marriage covenanted with the trustees that if the said intended marriage should take place the respondent would, during the joint lives of himself and the petitioner, pay to the trustees a yearly sum of £200 to accrue from day to day, but to be payable by equal quarterly payments, the first of such payments to be made on such of the quarterly days as should happen next after the solemnization of the said intended marriage, and the trustees were to pay the said annual sum of £200 as the same should become due so long as the same should continue payable to the petitioner, but so that she should not have any power of anticipation. And in consideration of the said intended marriage and in exercise of the special power vested in him by the said indenture of settlement, the respondent limited and appointed to the use of the petitioner and her assigns during her life in case the said intended marriage should take effect and she should survive him the rent-charges following—that is to say, if and so long as his mother should be living, the yearly rent-charge of £1,300, and from and after her death the yearly rent-charge of £1,600, the said rent-charges or such of them as should take effect to be in full for her jointure and in bar of all dower and free-bench whatsoever, and to be charged upon and issuing out of all the hereditaments and premises comprised in the first schedule thereto (subject as to part of the said hereditaments to the said yearly rent-charge of £1,200 and the said term of 500 years, and subject as to all the said hereditaments to the powers of leasing, and sale, and exchange, and management contained in the said indenture of settlement), such rent-charges to be considered as accruing from day to day, but to be payable quarterly without any deduction except succession duty, if any, the first of such payments as to the said rent-charge of £1,300 to be paid at the end of three calendar months after the death of the respondent if the petitioner and the respondent's mother should then both be living, and as to the said rent-charge of £1,600 to be made at the end of three calendar months after the death of the survivor of the respondent and his mother if the petitioner should then be living. And in consideration of the said intended marriage, and in exercise of the special power vested in him for that purpose by the indenture of settlement, the respondent as beneficial owner liability contained in the Act of Congress of the United States approved on the 13th day of February, 1893, relating to navigation."*

Kilburn, for the appellants, owners of the steamship Rodney.—It is admitted that The Rodney was seaworthy as required under the provisions of the Harter Act, but the judge of the court below allowed the defendant to recover on his counterclaim because in the opinion of the court the act of the boatswain in puncturing the drainage pipe in the forecastle and thereby causing the water, which would otherwise have been carried off by the pipe, to damage the cargo was not an error in the management of the vessel; but the term "management" in the exempting section includes just such an act as caused the damage here. In fact this case is governed by the case of The Glenochil, [1896] P. 10, 44 W. R. Dig. 148, where it was held that the not having discovered that the sounding pipe of the ballast tank of a vessel was broken was an error in the management of the vessel. The act here was an act done for the benefit of the crew and of the vessel, and the word "management" brings within the exemption, acts which are much wider than those done in respect of the navigation of the vessel.

He referred to Dobell v. The Steamship Rossmore Co., 44 W. R. 37, [1895] 2 Q. B. 408; The Ferro, [1893] P. 38, 41 W. R. Dig. 223; Good v. The London Steamship Owners' Protection Association, 20 W. R. 33, L. R. 6 C. P. 563; The Sylvia, 68 Federal Rep. 230.

Scrutton, for the respondent, defendant in the court below.—The court below was right and the appeal ought to be dismissed. The breakage of the pipe in the present case was brought about by an act done by the boatswain, not in the management of the ship, but in order that the forecastle might be freed from water and the comfort of the crew better secured. Moreover, the exemptions incorporated in the bills of lading do not exempt the shipowners from damage caused by failure to take proper care of the cargo, and in this case there was a failure to take care of the cargo as the pipe should have led directly overboard and not through the cargo hold, when no damage to the cargo could have resulted from the pipe having been broken.

He cited Norman v. Binnington, 38 W. R. 702, 25 Q. B. 475; Dobell v. The Steamship Rossmore Co.

Kilburn was not required to reply.

JEUNE, P.—The principles laid down in The Glenochil appear to me to apply to this case. This case goes a little beyond that case, because, undoubtedly, in The Glenochil the act done was one which it was necessary to do for the direct purpose of the management of the ship. It consisted in that case, in water being run into the ballast tank of a ship for the purpose of stiffening her, and in so doing the engineer let water into the cargo. That was, as we thought in The Glenochil, an act which was part at any rate of the management of the ship. This case is a little different, but to my mind it is a very little different. The ship experienced bad weather and the forecastle became flooded, and thereupon the boatswain, in order to clear the forecastle of water—especially because no doubt that formed his own quarters—endeavoured to clear a pipe which, if it had been clear, would have carried off the water, but he did the work negligently, and made a hole in the pipe instead of clearing it of the obstacle. Is that an act done in the management of the ship? I think it is. The object was to clear the forecastle of water—that is, to render the forecastle habitable for the crew, for the purpose of rendering the ship proper for the purpose for which it was intended. This case appears to me to fall within the view taken in the case of The Glenochil. To put the matter in a very small compass, I think the court below has somewhat unduly limited the meaning of the word management. The learned judge says: "The cases I think show that the word must be confined to the performance (though improper) or non-performance of such acts as are or ought to be done for the safety of the vessel and for her maintenance in a seaworthy condition." I think that is too narrow a view. The acts need not be done for the safety of the vessel or her maintenance in a seaworthy condition. If you extend them to keeping the vessel in her proper condition, then the act in this case is an act done in the management of the vessel and falls within the principle of The Glenochil.

BARNES, J.—It seems to me, as the President has pointed out, that the court below has unnecessarily confined the meaning of the words "management of the ship." Practically there is little difference, if any, between the case of The Glenochil and this case, except that in the former case there are to be found some expressions referring to the act as having been done for the safety of the ship, but those expressions were not intended to limit the meaning of the words "management of the ship." I think that the words "faults or errors in the management of the vessel" include improper handling of the ship as a ship which affects the safety of the cargo.

Solicitors for appellants, Holman, Birdwood, & Co.

Solicitors for respondent, King, Wigg, & Co.

* Section 3 of the Act of Congress referred to (the Harter Act), provides as follows: "That if the owner of any vessel transporting merchandize or property to or from any port in the United States of America shall exercise due diligence to make the said vessel in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped, and supplied, neither the vessel, her owner or owners, agent or charterers, shall become or be held responsible for loss or damage resulting from faults or errors in navigation or in the management of the said vessel."

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Webster, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — May 22.

In re SANITARY BURIAL ASSOCIATION (LIMITED). Ex parte WINGFIELD. (a.)

Company — Winding up — Voluntary winding up — Liquidator—Subsequent supervision order—Remuneration of liquidator — Costs of solicitor — Priority—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 110, 133 (3), 144, 151—Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890, r. 31.

The costs of a solicitor properly incurred during the voluntary winding up a company are payable in priority to any remuneration awarded by the company to its liquidator.

Appeal from an order of Wright, J., made on the 2nd of August, 1899.

On the 16th of November, 1897, a petition for compulsory winding-up was presented by an alleged shareholder, named Paynter, against the Sanitary Burial Association (Limited); but on coming on for hearing the petition was abandoned by Paynter, and on the 3rd of December, 1897, a creditor, named Ball, obtained leave to be substituted as petitioner in his stead.

On the 8th of December, 1897, the association passed a resolution for voluntary winding up, and appointed Mr. Ehrenfeldt as liquidator; and the latter employed the appellant, Wingfield, as his solicitor in the voluntary winding up.

On the 28th of December, 1897, the petition was heard and dismissed; but on the 28th of March, 1898, the Court of Appeal ordered that the voluntary winding up should be continued under the supervision of the court.

Shortly prior to the 11th of February, 1898, a meeting of the association had voted the sum of fifty guineas to the liquidator by way of remuneration for his services, and this sum the liquidator had retained for himself out of certain moneys of the association which had come to his hands.

On the 17th of June, 1898, the liquidator issued a summons calling on Wingfield to pay to him within three days all moneys which he had collected on behalf of the association; and on this summons being adjourned into court before Wright, J., and on it appearing from the admission of Wingfield that he then had in hand the sum of £173 11s., received by him on behalf of the association as solicitor in the said liquidation, the court made an order for dealing with this money, the short effect of which was that the balance which would ultimately have been retained by Wingfield would not have been sufficient to discharge his costs, unless he had been allowed to have access to the fifty guineas, part of the assets of the association, already alluded to as retained by the liquidator in payment of his remuneration.

From this order Wingfield now appealed.

Eve, Q.C., and A. F. Peterson, for the appellant.—The costs of the solicitor ought always to be paid before the costs of the liquidator: Companies Act, 1862, ss. 110 and 144; Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890, r. 31. This is only just, for the solicitor has no claim against the liquidator personally, but only against the assets: In re Trueman's Estate, Hooke v. Piper, 20 W. R. 700, L. R. 14 Eq. 278; In re Anglo-Moravian Hungarian Junction Railway, Ex parte Watkin, 24 W. R. 122, 1 Ch. D. 130. As for In re New York Exchange Co., [1893] 1 Ch. 371, 41 W. R. Dig. 42, that case applied only to the costs of a liquidator, not to his remuneration at all. Rule 31 of the Companies Winding-up Rules, 1890, is incorporated by section 151 of the Companies Act, 1862, into the process of a winding up under the supervision of the court.

Muir Mackenzie, for the respondent, the liquidator.—Rule 31 applies only to compulsory winding up. In this case, too, the shareholders voted the liquidator's remuneration under the powers conferred on them by section 133 (3) of the Companies Act, 1862.

A. F. Peterson replied.

WEBSTER, M.R.—In this case Wright, J., has held in effect that the sum of fifty guineas, which has been voted to the liquidator by way of remuneration for his services in respect of the period of time during which the company was in voluntary liquidation, before the supervision order was made, is to have priority of payment over the costs of the solicitor employed by him in connection with the liquidation during the same period. The practical result of the judgment is this—that if this remuneration of the liquidator is paid in full, there will not be enough money in the assets of the company to pay the costs of the solicitor. It was decided, moreover, in In re Trueman's Estate, Hooke v. Piper, by Bacon, V.C., that the solicitor in a voluntary liquidation has no claim against the liquidator personally. This, then, is the difficulty that we have to deal with. But in my opinion the remuneration of the liquidator should come after all costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred. The result of the decisions appears to me to be this, that if the money recovered is not sufficient to pay the whole of the costs of the persons who are employed by the liquidator, the money, so far as it will go, should be applied in payment of those costs before the liquidator can receive any remuneration. I should like to draw attention to the scheme of priority contemplated by rule 31 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules of 1890, which scheme is in accordance with the principle I have just laid down. I asked counsel for the respondent in the course of the argument why that principle should not apply here, and I was answered that the terms of that rule did not include such a case as the present one, and that the provisions of section 133 of the Companies Act, 1862, gave the shareholders the right to fix this remuneration. But, in my opinion, the right so given cannot affect the question of priority. It is to be remembered, too, in this case, that the resolution giving the liquidator his remuneration was not passed till after the date of the supervision order. I do not know that that is a conclusive test, but it seems reasonable that such a resolution, passed at such a time, ought not to affect the rights of parties in respect of services rendered before the supervision order was made. I do not think that what I am now saying is opposed to what was said by Kekewich, J., in In re New York Exchange Co. The question for decision there does not arise in this case, and it is only by an attempted extension of the doctrine there applied to a different state of circumstances that that decision can be said to be any authority for what Wright, J., has done here. The appeal must be allowed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, and for the same reasons.

COLLINS, L.J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, W. J. Bernard Blew; Robinson & Stanne

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

the Rolls, and I do not mean to repeat what he has said. As to the authorites, Dayrell v. Hoare only shows that the lessor under such a power cannot impose a burden on the rest of the land. I interpret the language of Littledale, J., as having reference to the case before him, and that only, and I know of no authority for saying that he intended what has been attributed to him. The other case, Buckley v. Howell, turned upon the provision for the re-investment of the purchase-money, and the effect of that decision has been removed by subsequent legislation. There is enough to enable us to say that conveyancers have not taken so narrow a view of the usual leasing power as we are asked to do here. I do not understand that Cozens-Hardy, J., expressed any opinion of his own. He only thought he ought not to overrule the decision of a judge of co-ordinate authority, but to leave it to us to take the responsibility of reversing it.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Farrar, Porter, & Co., for Barker & Rogerson, Chester.

---

From Q. B. Div. (Collins and Romer, L.JJ.) April 9.

GIBBS & CO. (LIMITED) v. NEVILLE & CO. (a.)

Practice — Pleading — Counterclaim — Counterclaim in reply—Right of plaintiff to plead set-off to counterclaim—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 24, sub-section 3—Ord. 19, r. 3; ord. 21, rr. 10-17.

The plaintiffs claimed a balance of an account. The defendants counterclaimed for damages for breach of contract. The plaintiffs in their reply denied the contract, and further pleaded that, if there was such a contract, the defendants had broken it, and they claimed damages for such breach.

Held, that, although the cause of action in respect of which the plaintiffs claimed damages in their reply existed before the issue of the writ, the plaintiffs were entitled to raise the matter in their reply, and were not bound to introduce it into their statement of claim by amendment.

Toke v. Andrews, 30 W. R. 659, 8 Q. B. D. 428, approved.

Appeal from the refusal of Phillimore, J., to strike out a paragraph of the plaintiffs' reply.

The plaintiffs, who carried on business as manufacturers of hot water apparatus, sought to recover from the defendants the sum of £650, the balance of an account for work done and materials supplied.

The defendants by their defence admitted liability under the claim to the amount of £113; but they set up a counterclaim, alleging that prior to August, 1892, the business carried on by the plaintiffs had been carried on by Robert Renton Gibbs; that, by an agreement in writing dated the 20th of June, 1892, between Gibbs and the defendants, Gibbs undertook that he would not for a period of twelve years manufacture or supply any heating apparatus for or to any person in Spain other than the defendants, or canvass or solicit orders for any heating apparatus in Spain; that in August, 1892, the plaintiffs, on acquiring the business heretofore carried on by Gibbs, agreed in writing to take over the liability of Gibbs under the agreement of the 20th of June, 1892, and the defendants assented thereto; and that the plaintiffs in breach of the agreement had canvassed and solicited orders in Spain and sold heating apparatus to customers there. The defendants claimed £3,000 damages.

The plaintiffs, in their reply, joined issue as to the defence, and as to the counterclaim they denied that the liability of Gibbs under the agreement of the 20th of June, 1892, had been taken over by them. They further pleaded in paragraph 13 of the reply as follows: "The defendants from August, 1892, to the year 1898 acted as the plaintiffs' agents in Spain for the sale of and to obtain orders for the installation of heating apparatus, and during such period in breach of their duty towards and of their implied promise to the plaintiffs as such agents, and without the knowledge of the plaintiffs, added unreasonable and excessive amounts by way of commission or remuneration for themselves to the plaintiffs' estimates before submitting the same to the intending customers, and thereby caused the plaintiffs to lose orders and suffer loss, which loss the plaintiffs claim to set off against the counterclaim of the defendants (if any) herein. In the alternative, if the said alleged agreement of the 20th of June, 1892, was ever binding upon the plaintiffs (which is denied), then in breach of their duty towards and of their implied promises to the plaintiffs arising thereunder and from the mutual relationship thereby established, and without the knowledge of the plaintiffs, the defendants added unreasonable and excessive amounts by way of commission or remuneration for themselves to the plaintiffs' estimates before submitting the same to the intending customers, and thereby caused the plaintiffs to lose orders and suffer loss, which loss the plaintiffs claim to set off against the counterclaim of the defendants (if any) herein."

On the application of the defendants the District Registrar of Liverpool ordered paragraph 13 of the reply to be struck out. Phillimore, J., reversed the order of the district registrar.

The defendants appealed.

Leslie Scott, for the defendants.—The question is, whether a plaintiff can counterclaim in his reply. The right to counterclaim is given by section 24, sub-section 3, of the Judicature Act, 1873, and that sub-section expressly limits the right to a defendant, as also do ord. 19, r. 3, and ord. 21, rr. 10, 17. The plaintiffs' proper course is to amend their statement of claim: James v. Page, 85 Law Times, 157. The learned judge thought he ought to follow the case of Toke v. Andrews, 30 W. R. 659, 8 Q. B. D. 428. But there the cause of action in respect of which the plaintiff was allowed to counterclaim was one which arose after the issue of the writ. The case of Alsop and Gandia Railway and Harbour Co. v. Greenhill, 44 W. R. 117, [1896] 1 Ch. 19, was also referred to.

W. D. McConkey, for the plaintiffs, was not called upon to argue.

COLLINS, L. J.—I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed. The plaintiffs, who are a limited company, claim for the balance of an account. The defendants set up a counterclaim on an agreement alleging a bargain which they say the plaintiff company adopted by way of novation, and for breach of which they claim damages. The plaintiffs in their reply deny that the agreement is binding on them, and further in effect say that, if the agreement is binding on them, the defendants broke it, and that the plaintiffs, have a claim against the defendants in respect of such breach for unliquidated damages. They use this claim as a set off against the defendants' counterclaim. The point is now taken that the plaintiffs have set up a counterclaim in their reply, and that the rules do not contemplate such a thing being done. Reference is made to the case of James v. Page, where, however, the counterclaim was one in the full sense of the term—that is to say, it was used as a sword and not as a shield. The defendants contend that the plaintiffs' counterclaim ought to be struck out of the reply, and the statement of claim amended. The question is whether the rules are so strict as to compel us to order the plaintiffs to follow that course. The plaintiffs do not want to rely on the agreement on which the defendants base their counterclaim; and, if they were forced to deal with it in their statement of claim, they would have to set up two inconsistent causes of action, on one of which they would only want to rely in the case of the defendants raising a particular defence. It seems to me it would be obviously unjust to force the plaintiffs to introduce this matter into their statement of claim by amendment. I think they have put it in its proper place by pleading it in their reply. In my opinion the case of Toke v. Andrews establishes a principle which justifies us in affirming the decision of Phillimore, J.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

ROMER, J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Lydall & Sons, for T. & T. Martin, Webb, & Martin, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendants, Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Alsop, Stevens, Harvey, & Crooks, Liverpool.

---

Appeal.
(Collins, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) April 5.

WRIGHT v. JOHN BAGNALL & SONS (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Claim not made within six months—Waiver—Agreement to pay compensation—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 2, sub-section 1.

A workman was injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, which totally incapacitated him from work. His employer paid him half the amount of his average weekly wages from the second week after the accident, and negotiations took place between them as to paying the workman a lump sum in lieu of the weekly payment. The parties were unable to agree upon the amount, and after the expiration of six months from the accident the negotiations ceased and the weekly payment was stopped. The workman thereupon took proceedings to have the compensation assessed under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, when the employer took the objection that the claim for compensation was not made within the six months.

Held, that, in the circumstances, there was evidence of an agreement by the employer to pay compensation under the Act, the only question left open being the amount of compensation, and that, in such a case, the employer was precluded from taking the objection that the claim for compensation was not made in time.

Appeal from the award of the deputy judge of the Walsall County Court under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The appellant, George Wright, was a wagoner in the employment of the respondents, John Bagnall & Sons (Limited), who were iron manufacturers, and on the 23rd of November, 1898, he received personal injuries by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. He was taken to the hospital suffering from permanent injuries. At the time of the accident his wages were 21s. a week. On the 26th of November, 1898, the appellant's wife saw the respondents' clerk, who told her to get a note from the hospital and bring it in three weeks' time to the works, when her husband would be "due for compensation," and that she would get half his wages. At the end of the three weeks she went with the hospital note to the works, and received 10s. 6d., and from that time either the appellant or his wife continued to receive that sum each week until the 6th of September, 1899, either from the respondents or from the insurance company with whom the respondents were insured. About Easter, 1899, the appellant saw the respondents' manager, when an offer of £15 was made to him as compensation, but the appellant refused to take it. A few days afterwards the appellant saw the manager again, when the appellant said that he would take £200. The manager said: "If you talk about £200 we will go to the court with you." At Whitsuntide the manager offered the appellant £30, saying that he thought that the insurance company would give that amount.

The weekly payments having stopped on the 6th of September, 1899, the appellant filed a request for arbitration to assess the compensation payable under the Act of 1897. The respondents, in their answer, took the objection that the claim for compensation was not made within six months from the occurrence of the accident, as required by section 2, sub-section 1, of the Act. In reply to this objection the appellant contended that the respondents were by their conduct precluded from setting it up.

The deputy county court judge held that "the claim for compensation" meant the filing of the request for arbitration, and that, therefore, the application was out of time.* He further said that the payment by the respondents to the appellant each week up to the 6th of September, 1899, of the exact sum to which the appellant was entitled under the Act, and the commencing of such payments at the time required by the Act, were calculated to make the appellant believe that he was receiving these payments by virtue of the Act and to lull him into a state of false security; but, on the other hand, the appellant should have known his rights under the Act, and if he thought that he had arrived at an arrangement with the respondents, he should have got them to enter into a memorandum of agreement embodying the terms of the arrangement, and registered the memorandum. He did not think that the respondents were precluded from raising any defence they might have on account of the lateness of the appellant's claim. He did not think that the respondent's conduct could dispense with the requirements of the statute, the language of section 2, sub-section 1, being peremptory, that proceedings "shall not be maintainable" unless the claim for compensation were made within six months. He accordingly held that the appellant was not entitled to compensation, and made an award in favour of the respondents.

Disturnal, for the appellant.—The respondents by their conduct have waived the requirement of the Act as to making the claim for compensation within

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

* Since the hearing before the deputy county court judge the Court of Appeal decided in Powell v. Main Colliery Co., post, p. 534, that "the claim for compensation," which was required by section 2, sub-section 1, to be made within six months after the accident, meant the filing of the request for arbitration. The decision of the deputy county court judge upon that point was, therefore, not sought to be ...ed.

maintainable unless notice of the accident has been given as soon as practicable after the happening thereof." Then they change the phraseology altogether as used in section 4 of the Act of 1880; they do not say, "unless notice of claim for compensation be given," but what they say is, "and unless the claim for compensation with respect to such accident has been made within six months from the occurrence of the accident." What is the "claim for compensation"? Does it mean a notice by the workman to the master that he claims compensation, or does it mean the initiation of some proceeding which will give to some tribunal the power of deciding under the Act whether he has a right to obtain compensation from the master? Now, there are difficulties in this Act, as one cannot deny. Take section 1, sub-section 3. I should say that the expression "proceedings" in that section does not mean the initiation of legal proceedings in a court. Take section 1, sub-section 2 (b), where you have the expression "and shall not be liable to any proceedings independently of this Act." I think that that means the same as "proceedings" means in section 2, sub-section 1—viz., the initiation of proceedings, whether before the committee, the county court judge, or before the arbitrator who is agreed upon between the parties.

Now, it has been argued that that is not so. It was said: How does a workman commence proceedings which will culminate in an adjudication? I do not see any difficulty myself. The man would go to the committee which represents himself and his master and say, "I have met with an accident in my master's pit, and I ask you to adjudicate between my master and me. Please take up the proceeding and adjudicate thereon." That would be, in my judgment, a claim for compensation. The same thing would happen, in my opinion, with regard to an arbitrator. He might try and appoint an arbitrator, or if an arbitrator was not appointed, he could say, "This is my claim which is to be arbitrated upon between me and my master."

In this case the workman met with an accident on the 21st of December, 1898; on the 2nd of May, 1899, he sent these two notices to the master: "Please take notice that on the 21st of December, 1898, William Powell, of Mount Pleasant," and so on, "was injured," and so on, dated the 2nd of December, signed William Powell. This notice is in print, and evidently is sent out on behalf of the man by some union or agency. Then on the same day the following notice is also sent: "Take notice that I claim the sum of 15s. per week from the 4th of January, 1899, until such date as I shall be able to resume work, as compensation for injuries received on the 21st of December." Now, I should have thought primâ facie, and I did think primâ facie at one time, that that was a good claim for compensation within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1, but having heard this case argued, I have come to the conclusion that it is not so. "Proceedings" in section 1, sub-section 3, may mean something different to what I am going to say: but when I come to sub-section 2 of section 1, I think the meaning of the word "proceedings" and "claim for compensation" can be discovered. Take section 1, sub-section 4, where we find the words, "if within the time hereinafter in this Act limited for taking proceedings." What is the meaning there of the expression "taking proceedings"? Does it mean the sending of a notice to the master that he, the workman, is going to claim compensation? I do not think so. I think it means the initiative proceedings in the court which would culminate in a judgment or in an award. Then what is the meaning of the words in section 2, sub-section 1, "unless the claim for compensation with respect to such accident has been made within six months"? What is the "claim for compensation"? My view is that it is the claim before the court or tribunal which is to decide it.

Now, I wish to point out for myself what would be the position if the other reading is correct. I say that the master is entitled to six months; I mean he is entitled to immunity after six months after the date of the accident. If a man makes a claim, as in this present case—viz., "I claim compensation," and he does not go on, but lets it hang, it may be, for twelve months or fifteen months or twenty months, what is a master to do? It is said "Oh, he can initiate proceedings for himself." I do not agree with that. This Act was passed for the purpose of giving workmen a claim against their masters, although one or two precautions are put in in favour of the master, such as the six months' limit. It is said that all the rules can be altered, but I think it must be admitted that every rule which has been drawn for the purpose of carrying out this Act has only application to the workman taking proceedings and not to the master taking proceedings. It is said that they could all be altered, and they could all be made to fit in with the master taking proceedings against the man. I do not agree; but what I will say is this: That if this Act was drawn with the view that the master should take proceedings against the man so as to prevent a claim (as in the present case) hanging over the master's head, it is strange that the Legislature did not put some explicit provision into the Act; whereas if the claim for compensation be what I say it is—viz., the initiation of the proceedings before the assessing tribunal, if the workman did not go on, the master could compel him to proceed.

Form 1 in the Appendix to the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, is headed thus: "Application for arbitration by an injured workman with respect to the compensation payable to him." That is the heading of the matter. "In the county court of ——." Then they give the name and address of the applicant and the name and address of the respondent. Then "An arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, is hereby requested between A. B." (the applicant) ". . . and C. D. & Co. (Limited)" (the respondents) ". . . as to the amount of compensation payable to the said A. B. . . . under the said Act in respect of personal injury caused to the said A. B. . . ." It then goes on and says, "Amount claimed as compensation. Date of service of statutory notice of accident on respondents, and whether given before workman voluntarily left the employment in which he was injured." Then the name and address of the applicant (the man), and the name and address of the respondent (the master), and their respective solicitors. If a claim for compensation other than this document was contemplated by the statute, is it not a remarkable thing that there should not have been put into these particulars the date when the claim for compensation was lodged or served on the defendant? But there is not a word said about the service of the notice of the claim, or the giving of a notice of a claim upon the master. It is left out. Why is that? It seems to me that that was left out simply because this form, which I have just read, is the very form of the claim for compensation which the statute contemplated the workman should have to give. For these reasons I come to the conclusion that this document which was served on the master is not a "claim for compensation" within section 2, sub-section 1. Seeing that a claim for compensation as in this case has been held to be bad by two of the judges in Scotland, although the other two apparently came to a different conclusion, and it has been equally held to be bad in Ireland, I think myself, without in any way being bound by those decisions, that those learned judges came to the right conclusion, and that therefore the workman in this case was not in time. So far as I am concerned the appeal must therefore be allowed.

COLLINS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. My lord has gone so fully through the grounds upon which he rests his view that I propose to add only a few words. I agree with him that we are entitled to look at the state of legislation at the time when this Act was passed. We find there that it was the policy of the Legislature to impose a limit of six months upon the bringing of these actions, and we find the two conditions which were imposed in the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, reproduced with very slight differences in the Act now under discussion.

I do not think it is possible to give any clear and satisfactory interpretation which will be perfectly consistent with all the provisions of this Act. I have long since come to the conclusion that that is impossible, and therefore I have to make the best guess that I can of what the Legislature must be taken to have meant in the particular sections that we are dealing with, and I think that we have one clear indication contained in sub-section 4 of section 1, and in sub-section 1 of section 2. I think there is a clear indication that the Legislature intended to impose a limit of six months upon the commencement of legal proceedings under this Act. In section 1, sub-section 4, are these words: "If, within the time hereinafter in this Act limited for taking proceedings, an action is brought." Then we look down to see what is the time thereinafter limited for taking proceedings, and we find that the only words that can be referred to are in section 2, sub-section 1, "the claim for compensation with respect to such accident has been made within six months." Those are the words under which the time limit is given. Then what does the Legislature do? It says that if an action is brought, whether at common law or under the Employers' Liability Act, and it is determined in such action that the injury is one for which the employer is not liable in such action, the applicant shall have a right to a remedy under the Workmen's Compensation Act, but only if the action is brought within the time limited in the Workmen's Compensation Act—that is, within six months. Why is that limit imposed in that section, if, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, it is possible to bring an action and to take legal proceedings at any time? If that contention be right, what is the meaning of the Legislature in providing in section 1, sub-section 4, that a workman, who has brought an action otherwise, may claim the benefit "of the Workmen's Compensation Act, but only if the action has been brought within six months." Is not that a clear indication that the legal proceedings shall not be brought after six months after the accident? It seems to me that that is absolutely clear as the intention of the Legislature. It may be that there are other provisions which it is difficult to square with that intention; but I think that is a clear indication of intention which we are justified in following. But it is argued if that is so the word "proceedings" there means "judicial proceedings." I think that is what the word means in that sub-section. But I do not think it is necessary to limit throughout the Act the word "proceedings" to proceedings in a court of law. The meaning which I put upon that word is that there must be proceedings which put in suit the right of the claimant, and which introduce the jurisdiction of that tribunal whose function it is to decide the matter between the parties, to put compulsion upon them; and it does not merely mean anything which indicates an intention on the part of the claimant at some time or other to invoke the jurisdiction of the tribunal. It must itself be the invocation of the jurisdiction of the tribunal. The claim in the case before us is not an initiation of proceedings. It is merely a threat that in certain events legal proceedings will be taken. It does not appear to me to be that step which constitutes the initiation of the proceedings, and therefore is not, in my opinion, a "claim for compensation" within section 2, sub-section 1.

Now, that really is the sheet anchor upon which my decision rests. I agree with what my lord said, that if you look through the forms, they certainly primâ facie are not intended to give the master any right of initiating proceedings at all. If that be so, if the respondent's argument is right, there would be this extraordinary position of affairs, that a master having had this notice served upon him, which does not initiate proceedings, is bound to wait, I do not know how long, with the risk of proceedings being taken against him and with no means of ascertaining finally whether they are going to be taken against him or not. Well, that anomaly has been met very ingeniously by Mr. Evans, who has pointed out words in the different forms which, I do not deny, may by a considerable amount of ingenuity, and I think by some strain upon one's imagination, be made to cover the case of a master initiating proceedings. But I do not think that anyone can look fairly and frankly, uninstructed by the ingenuity of Mr. S. T. Evans, at these rules and come to any other conclusion than that they were designed to do what they purport to do—namely, to deal with applications by the applicant—that is, the workman, and not applications by the master, except in one given case, where the statute itself contemplates either side invoking the jurisdiction of the county court. I am fortified in this conclusion by the decision of the court in Scotland and the decision of the Court of Appeal in Ireland.

ROMER, L.J.—I regret very much that in this case I feel bound to differ from my brethren, especially as I find I also differ from certain learned judges in both Scotland and Ireland on the point, but as I do take a clear view with regard to the construction of this Act I think it is my duty to express that view.

Now, the only section of the Act which really in precise terms puts any time limit to proceedings of any kind is section 2. Section 1, sub-section 4, may be referred to as casting a light upon section 2, but section 2, sub-section 1, in itself must be the section to which you have to refer to find what time limit has been imposed upon proceedings. Section 2, sub-section 1, in itself only says that before proceedings for the recovery under this Act of compensation for an injury can be maintained, apart from the notice of the accident having to be given, a claim for compensation with respect to such accident must have been made within six months from the occurrence of the accident causing the injury. Those words, I should have thought, are reasonably clear in themselves. I agree that they mean a specific claim for compensation made specifically under the Act, but I fail to see why, by mere implication and, as I hope to show, not a necessary implication, one should depart from what appears to me to be really the plain words of the Act. The words of sub-section 1 of section 2 are "unless the claim for compensation . . . has been made within six months"; it does not say "unless proceedings have been taken for arbitration"; it does not necessitate that application should have been made to the special committee referred to in the second schedule to the Act, still less does it refer to any application made to the county court judge as arbitrator. It appears to me that we ought not to enlarge this Act of Parliament unnecessarily. I think what the Act contemplated was that there should be something done within the six months which would place the workman in the position of one who was intending to claim under the Act, and I think section 2 refers to what had been provided in section 1, sub-section 2 (b), by which it is enacted that where the injury had been caused by the personal negligence or wilful default of the employer, the workman may at his option either claim compensation under this Act or take the same proceedings as were open to him before the passing of this Act—that is to say, it appears to me that the policy of this Act was that the workman should, within six months, definitely make up his mind whether or not he is going to claim compensation under this Act. If within six months he has made his claim, it seems to me that he has done all that was required of him under section 2, sub-section 1.

Let me give an illustration so as to show what I mean, if I have not already made my meaning clear. Suppose a workman within six months of an accident serves on his employer this notice: "I hereby claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the following compensation for my injury," giving the particulars of the compensation claimed, and of the injury, so that it is perfectly clear beyond question that it is a claim made for compensation under this Act. Why is that not to be regarded as a claim for compensation within section 2, sub-section 1? I fail to see it. It is to be borne in mind that before you can go to the arbitration at all, either before the special committee or before any other arbitrator there, must be a difference which has arisen between the parties. How can there be a difference which will entitle either party to go to the committee or to the arbitrator unless a claim has been made which is challenged. Then and only then does a difference arise.

The claim for compensation, then, is really the essence of the proceedings by the workman, and it is, as I think I can show from other parts of this Act, contemplated as a proceeding in itself, and, as I am pointing out, it is the most important proceeding, for when the claim is made, unless there is a dispute, the master may accede to it, and the matter is at an end. Suppose a claim has been made under the Act by a workman within the six months, and the master is not certain whether or not he will accede to the terms, and negotiations ensue till the six months have expired, and then it turns out that they cannot agree, and the dispute thus arises, it must then be said against the workman, according to the opposite view, that he is debarred from his remedy. He has made his claim for compensation; he could not have gone, as I wish to point out, to arbitration before, because until his claim had been refused, there was no question in dispute. Of course, if the master was shilly-shallying, the workman could then, I have no doubt, treat that as a refusal to comply with his demand for compensation, and so could say a question had arisen within the meaning of the Act.

Now, I think great light is thrown upon this question by section 1, sub-section 3, which says: "If any question arises in any proceedings under this Act as to the liability to pay compensation under this Act (including any question as to whether the employment is one to which this Act applies), or as to the amount or duration of compensation under this Act, the question, if not settled by agreement, shall, subject to the provisions of the first schedule to this Act, be settled by arbitration, in accordance with the second schedule to this Act." That is to say, and it is important, that before you go to arbitration proceedings under the Act must have arisen. So that in this Act "proceedings" contemplate something done before arbitration. What are those proceedings? They can only mean the claim for compensation and the master's refusal to comply with it. So that in the purview of this Act the claim for compensation is a proceeding under the Act, and so it is, as I have pointed out, the most important proceeding that can be taken.

That sub-section also casts light upon what is meant by sub-section 4. It is really owing to the curious wording of sub-section 4 that, to my mind, the whole difficulty in this case arises, but I think that that difficulty is got rid of when you bear in mind what has been said in sub-section 3, as well as the word "proceedings," which, as I have pointed out, includes something done before you go to arbitration. Now you come to sub-section 4, and a light is cast upon it. Now sub-section 4 says: "If within the time hereinafter in this Act limited for taking proceedings." In other words, for the purposes of that sub-section, as well as for the purposes of sub-section 3, "proceedings" includes the claim for compensation, and under section 2, sub-section 1, proceedings must be taken within six months from the date of the injury.

That, to my mind, makes the whole Act plain and intelligible, and I do not see any reason, either in the Act itself or in principle, why the plain words of this Act should be enlarged. Now, certain forms and rules of the county court have been referred to. I do not propose to go through them. It is sufficient for me to say that in my opinion there is nothing in them which in any way would justify the court in coming to the conclusion that "the claim for compensation" means anything more than what, in my opinion, those words plainly mean.

It was suggested by Collins, L.J., that if my view be correct a difficulty would arise under section 1, sub-section 4, because it was said that a workman might make a claim for compensation within the six months and then bring an action at common law after the six months, and then, if he failed in that common law action, might proceed with his claim under the Act. But in the first place I may observe that if a workman made a claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act and then after the six months brought a common law action, I cannot help thinking he would waive his claim, bearing in mind the provisions in section 1, sub-section 2 (b), as to the obligation cast upon the workman to elect. But even if I were wrong in that view, and the workman is not bound to elect and did not waive his notice by such a common law action, I may point out that the very same difficulty suggested by Collins, L.J., would arise, because if the construction contended for on the opposite view were correct—namely, that some legal proceedings must have been initiated before the special committee or the county court judge—the workman might just initiate those proceedings within the six months and commence his common law action afterwards.

There is, I agree, a more difficult point. It was contended that if the words "the claim for compensation" meant simply the notice of claim served on the master, the master might thereby be kept dangling on for a period of six years, and would not be able to force his workman to proceed with his claim. If that contention were correct I agree it would be a formidable argument against the view I am taking. In my opinion it is not correct. If the workman once makes a claim for compensation and the master contends that he is not entitled to what he claims, what is to be done? I think that the word "proceedings" in section 1, sub-section 3, means the claim made for compensation and its refusal. In the case I have supposed why has not a question arisen in proceedings under this Act. The workman has made his claim and the master disputes it. A question has then arisen, and the Act says that question shall be settled by arbitration. What is there to prevent in such a case the master at once taking the dispute that has arisen to the special committee? Nothing that I can see. If the special committee cannot deal with the question, why should it not then go before the learned county court judge? There is nothing that I can see—nothing either in the Act of Parliament or in the rules. The only thing which can be suggested as showing that he cannot do so is the forms in the appendix to the rules. But forms are mere machinery. If the right to go is clear by Act of Parliament (and in my opinion it is) a form cannot prevent the party going to the tribunal pointed out by the Act. But no difficulty, to my mind, arises on the forms. The forms deal only with the most likely cases to arise, they are not intended to meet extraordinary cases. Now, would it not be an extraordinary case to suppose that when a workman had made a claim for compensation and the master refused to agree to it that the workman should stand by for six years and not proceed. It would be a most extraordinary case. Is it to be wondered at that no form specially dealing with such a case has been made? The objection that the master cannot compel the workman to go on in such a case is theoretical, but assuming the theory, it can be met by a theory—and a good theory too—that the master can force the workman to go on with his claim in such an extraordinary case. That there is no form specially made to meet an extraordinary case need not be wondered at. If there had been no such rule in the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1898, as rule 67, I should still have said the forms are only machinery, and the absence of a special form makes no answer to the right of the master to demand arbitration, when, as I have pointed out, the Act of Parliament has clearly given him the right to demand it. But I do find that n rule 67 this is said: "The forms in the appendix, where applicable, and where they are not applicable orms of the like character, with such variations as he circumstances may require, may be used in proceedings under the Act." The master has only to ake a form adapted to his special case and in my pinion he is entitled to demand arbitration under he circumstances I have indicated, and to compel he county court judge, if there is no special committee, to arbitrate upon the question. Therefore in y opinion this objection taken to the view I have dicated is based on an entirely wrong ground. or these reasons it appears to me that we ought to ep to what I have already said was the clear eaning of the Act. We have no right to extend it implication; and, moreover, I think that doing so ould be to create great difficulties in the way of th master and workman, and would cause great rdships. I cannot think that the conclusion at ich my brethren have arrived is, for the reasons I ve given, the right conclusion. In my opinion the trary ought to have been held, although I agree point is one of some difficulty, and I have differed h great reluctance.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellants, H. P. Becher, for Vazie Simons, Pontypridd.

Solicitors for the respondent, Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for Cuthbertson & Powell, Neath.

---

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Stirling, J. } April 27; May 24.

AINSWORTH v. WILDING. (a.)

Practice—Discovery—Privilege—Solicitor's correspondence and bill of costs—Note by solicitor of order in judge's chambers—R. S. C., ord. 31, r. 18 (2).

A statement in a letter from a solicitor to his client reporting proceedings in chambers, and communicated for the purpose of obtaining information or instructions from the client necessary for the conduct of the action, is privileged as a professional confidential communication. But those parts of a bill of costs which consist merely of memoranda or notes of proceedings in chambers recorded by a solicitor are not so privileged.

Semble, there is no valid distinction between notes of proceedings in open court and of those in chambers.

Greenough v. Gaskell, 1 My. & K. 98, at pp. 102-104, and In re Worswick, 36 W. R. 685, 38 Ch. D. 370, at p. 373, followed.

This was a summons raising a question as to whether certain documents were privileged communications or not, in an action commenced in August, 1890, by T. Ainsworth (since deceased) against Wilding, Smith, and others for an account of what was due on a deed of charge dated the 7th of October, 1877.

In 1878 an action had been brought by Smith (since deceased) against J. & R. Wilding for an account of what was due on the same charge; on the 28th of March, 1878, an order was made that the deed of the 7th of October, 1877, should stand as a security for what was due at that date from Smith to the defendants the Wildings on the balance of account of the dealings and transactions between them, with interest. An account was brought in under the order and was disputed on behalf of Smith by the late plaintiff Ainsworth, then his solicitor.

On the 29th of July, 1879, after Ainsworth had taken his second mortgage, Smith changed his solicitor, and on the 4th of August, there was a settlement of accounts to which Ainsworth was not a party, and which his legal personal representatives, the present plaintiffs, submitted was not binding on him, or if binding, ought to be opened; they said a large sum was charged to Smith for costs which had never been taxed or agreed, and moneys received by the Wildings from mortgagees which ought to have been credited in the account were omitted therefrom, and Smith was charged with moneys not advanced by the Wildings, but by mortgagees, some of whom have since taken possession of the mortgaged property; to this the defendants replied that no suggestion to take the accounts upon the principle of a current account had been made until November, 1894, and that the plaintiffs had throughout been well aware that the defendants had, since the 7th of October,

(a.) Reported by WARWICK H. DRAPER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

1877, claimed to be ordinary mortgagees under the deed of that date; further, that the plaintiffs had by their conduct and acquiescence left the defendant in the belief that the plaintiffs were bound by the proceedings in Smith v. Wilding and the settlement of accounts. In their reply the plaintiffs further said that the question as to the account being continued as a current account was raised in chambers in 1878 and an order made as to the same, to which the defendants in their rejoinder now replied that even if that was so (which they denied) it was not in the presence of the Wildings or either of them. There was now, therefore, an issue as to what took place in chambers as to the principle on which the accounts were taken.

On the 21st of December, 1899, the plaintiffs obtained an order directing the defendant to make a further and better affidavit of documents more clearly identifying certain correspondence and disclosing (inter alia) certain bills of costs in Smith v. Wilding.

The defendant objected to produce (1) the correspondence, on the ground that it was made solely for the purpose of enabling the solicitors for the defendants in Smith v. Wilding to conduct that action; and (2) the bills of costs or certain parts of them, on the ground that they were "copies of or extracts from memoranda or notes made by the defendants' solicitors pending the action of Smith v. Wilding solely for the purpose of enabling them to conduct the litigation and to advise with reference thereto."

By their present summons the plaintiffs asked for discovery of such parts of the correspondence and bills of costs as did not consist of legal professional confidential advice, but merely of statements of facts as to the proceedings in Smith v. Wilding.

Upjohn, Q.C. (O. L. Clare with him), for the plaintiffs.—In order to secure privilege from production for a document passing between solicitor and client it must not only pass between solicitor and client as such, but it must be a communication of a confidential character passing for the purpose of obtaining or giving professional legal advice; if counsel's endorsement of an order or a shorthand writer's report is publici juris, why not a solicitor's notes of an order made in chambers: Gardner v. Irvine, 27 W. R. 442, 4 Ex. D. 49, at p. 53; O'Shea v. Wood, [1891] P. 286, 39 W. R. Dig. 184; Nicholl v. Jones, 13 W. R. 451, 2 Hem. & M. 588; Goldstone v. Williams, Deacon, & Co., 47 W. R. 91, [1899] 1 Ch. 47, at p. 51; Chant v. Brown, 9 Hare, 790; Burton v. Dodd, 35 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 39; Turton v. Barber, 22 W. R. 438, L. R. 17 Eq. 329; In re Worswick, 36 W. R. 685, 38 Ch. D. 370, at p. 373; Nordon v. Defries, 30 W. R. 612, 8 Q. B. D. 508; Annual Practice (1900), vol. 1, p. 414.

Butcher, Q.C. (Austen Cartmell with him).—There is privilege once the legal relation is established; and when there is a professional confidential communication the mere fact of its being sent by the solicitor to the client does not destroy the privilege (Bray on Discovery, pp. 372, 391; Minet v. Morgan, 19 W. R. 374, L. R. 11, Eq. 284; even assuming it is not privileged as a whole, the memorandum of proceedings in chambers which happened to get into a bill of costs is privileged in portions, for it is a note of the general impression of what occurred as recorded by the intelligence of the solicitor for the purposes of his litigation, and so is different from a shorthand note, which is a more accurate record; while a counsel's notes of judgment should be taken as part of his professional duties (Ex parte Skerratt, 28 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 376, Annual Practice (1900), vol. 2, p. 340) and might be disclosed, there is no decision that they ought to be disclosed; there is no authority that chambers are like open court in this respect.

Cur. adv. vult.

STIRLING, J., said: This application is based on the proposition that mere records of what takes place in chambers in the course of a hostile action in the presence of parties on both sides are not privileged. It has been held that a shorthand writer's notes of what takes place in open court are not privileged: Nicholl v. Jones and In re Worswick. The same thing has been held as to the shorthand writer's notes of proceedings before an arbitrator: Rawsons v. Preston Corporation, 33 W. R. 795, 30 Ch. D. 116. In In re Worswick North, J., says: "A mere verbatim report of the evidence, whether by the solicitor's clerk, the solicitor, or counsel, would not, in my opinion, be privileged." With that I agree. I am unable to see that for this purpose any valid distinction can be drawn between proceedings in open court and proceedings in chambers. It is therefore sought to obtain production (1) of correspondence between the solicitor and the client; and (2) entries in the solicitor's bills of costs. Somewhat different considerations apply to the two classes of documents. The foundation of the privilege is stated by Lord Brougham, C., in Greenough v. Gaskell, 1 My. & K. 98, at p. 103, and by Cotton, L.J., in Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co. v. Quick, 26 W. R. 341, 3 Q. B. D. 315, at p. 321. Now, the letters of which production is sought are sworn to be "professional communications of a confidential character . . . having been made solely for the purpose of enabling my solicitor to conduct the said litigation in Smith v. Wilding on behalf of my co-defendants and myself." It is said that a letter or a statement in a letter as to what had been done in chambers is not privileged. I am unable to see why. It may well have been, and I should infer from the affidavit that the communication was made for the purpose of obtaining information or instructions from the client necessary for the conduct of the action. If I were to hold that such letters or statements were not privileged, it seems to me that I should be imposing on the free communication with his solicitor, to which the client is entitled, a fetter hitherto unrecognized in any authority. It seems to me contrary to principle that I should do so. I see no reason to doubt the statements in the affidavit, and I think that this portion of the summons must be refused.

I now come to the entries in the bill of costs. As a general rule a bill of costs relating to litigation, actual or contemplated, is privileged: Chant v. Brown and Turton v. Barber. No objection is, however, raised to the production of the bill as a whole; the bill has been produced, but certain entries in it are sealed up, and privilege is claimed in respect of these entries on the following ground: "That the same are copies or extracts from, &c." (see above) or are not relevant to this action. [His lordship again referred to Greenough v. Gaskell, 1 My. & K., pp. 102, 104.] There has been some discussion as to whether in the first passage the law has not been stated somewhat too widely. I am not concerned to inquire into that: the important point for the present purpose is that memoranda made by the solicitor are placed on the same footing as communications; they are only privileged where communications would be: Lyell v. Kennedy, 31 W. R. 691, 23 Ch. D. 387. It is to be observed that the memoranda or notes are not in the affidavit sworn to be confidential. It is quite consistent with the affidavit that they may be of the character described by Lord Brougham in the second passage (p. 104), as, for example, if they contained a simple note by the solicitor or his clerk of the proceedings at chambers on the occasions as to which discovery is sought. In my opinion the privilege is not effectually claimed by affidavit. [His lordship, having looked at certain of the entries, said that, while portions were clearly protected, too much had been covered up, and suggested that the defendant's counsel would have no difficulty in examining the documents and in seeing what should be disclosed.]

Solicitors, Bower, Cotton, & Bower; Robbins, Billing, & Co.

---

Chan. Div. } April 24, 25; May 18.
Stirling, J. }

In re THE TRUSTS OF THE ABBOTT FUND.
SMITH v. ABBOTT. (a.)

Trustee—Resulting trust—Fund raised by means of circular inviting subscriptions—Death of objects of the fund—Unapplied surplus—Resulting trust for subscribers.

Where funds are raised by circulars inviting subscriptions, and there is no declaration of trust, on the death of the objects of the fund there is a resulting trust for the subscribers.

Originating summons.

Frederica Abbott and Katherine Abbott were the daughters of Mr. Alexander Scott Abbott, who died in 1844.

In 1889 and 1890, Dr. Fawcett, of Cambridge, shortly before his death, collected for the benefit of these ladies, who were in destitute circumstances, the sum of £248 10s. 6d., and placed it at the bank of John Mortlock & Co., to an account called the Abbott Fund. Dr. Fawcett died in 1890, and at that time no part of the fund had been withdrawn from the bank.

After his death the matter was taken up by Mr. James Hamblin Smith, who sent round a circular to various friends of the family detailing the circumstances, and stating that the sum collected by Dr. Fawcett was quite insufficient to secure for the ladies a permanent means of support, and expressing his desire to raise by annual subscriptions, supplemented from the Abbott Fund year by year, an amount which would enable the ladies to continue to reside in lodgings in Cambridge.

After the issue of this circular, the Abbott Fund was transferred by the executors of Dr. Fawcett to Mr. Hamblin Smith and a Mr. Gross, who was a friend of the Abbott family, as treasurers of the additional fund which it was proposed to raise.

From 1891 to 1899 considerable sums were received in response to the circular, and quarterly payments were made to the ladies.

They both died in 1899, the one in April, and the survivor in June of that year, and there was now standing at the bank to the credit of the fund the sum of £366 13s. 9d., the title to which was now in question.

The questions raised by the summons taken out by the plaintiffs, the trustees of the Abbott Funds, were: Whether the subscribers to the Abbott Funds collected for the benefit of Frederica Abbott and Katherine Abbott were, in the events which had happened, entitled to the unapplied balance of the funds, or whether Frederick Charles Abbott was entitled to the unapplied balance as the legal personal representative of Frederica Abbott and Katherine Abbott.

G. Henderson, for the plaintiffs.

Brinton, for the subscribers.

Peterson, for the representatives of the ladies.

STIRLING, J., said that the difficulty arose from the fact that there was no declaration of trust. The case was one which not infrequently happened. The question was whether so much of the fund as remained unapplied belonged to the estates of the deceased ladies, or whether it was subject to a resulting trust for the subscribers. I cannot believe that the fund was ever meant to be the absolute property of the ladies. It was not intended that they should be in a position to demand a transfer of it to themselves, but that it should be administered by the trustees for their benefit. They never became absolute owners of the fund. They had a right in the fund, because it was obviously intended for their benefit, and if the trustees had not done their duty the ladies might have successfully applied to the court to have the fund properly administered. In the view I take there is a resulting trust of the surplus of the fund for the subscribers.

Solicitors, Cole & Jackson, for Eaden & Spearing, Cambridge; Field, Roscoe, & Co., for Ginn & Mathew, Cambridge; Abbott & Hudson.

(a.) Reported by PAUL STRICKLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

---

Chan. Div. } April 26.
Kekewich, J. }

In re CLEMOW.
YEO v. CLEMOW. (a.)

Will—Testamentary expenses—Administration expenses—Costs of probate action—Estate duty.

The expression "testamentary expenses" includes estate duty.

A testator, after giving the income of his residue to his wife for life, directed his executors, after his widow's death, out of the residue to pay "my widow's funeral and testamentary expenses and debts." The testator's wife survived him, and died leaving what purported to be a will. B., one of the two next-of-kin of the widow, brought an action in the Probate Division for a grant of letters of administration of the widow's estate to him. The judge pronounced against the will, but made no order as to costs. Letters of administration were subsequently granted to Y., the other next-of-kin of the widow, with the assent of B. The widow's estate consisted entirely of personalty. Upon summons to determine what costs and expenses ought to be allowed out of the testator's estate as testamentary expenses of the widow,

Held, that costs and expenses properly incurred in the administration of the estate of the intestate widow were within the meaning of the term "testamentary expenses," and that there must be allowed as such testamentary expenses the costs of B. of the probate action and also the estate duty payable on the death of the widow.

Robert Clemow, who died on the 15th of October, 1894, by his will dated the 11th of February, 1893, appointed his wife, Gertrude Clemow, and H. W. Clemow and Mary Yeo, his executors and trustees, and after giving certain legacies gave the residue of his real and personal estate to his trustees upon trust for sale and conversion and to pay the income of the proceeds to his wife during her life for her sole and separate use. And from and after her decease the testator directed his executors and trustees with and out of the residue, "after paying my widow's funeral and testamentary expenses and debts," to appropriate and pay certain sums as therein directed. The testator gave his residue to the persons in his will named.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Gertrude Clemow survived the testator and died in March, 1899, leaving what purported to be a will under which she appointed H. W. Clemow executor.

Mary Yeo and T. A. Buck, the widow's only two next-of-kin, entered a caveat against probate of her will, and T. A. Buck eventually brought an action in the Probate Division to have a grant of letters of administration of her estate made to him, and he obtained a decree against the will but no order was made as to costs.

In December, 1899, letters of administration to the widow's estate were granted to Mary Yeo with the assent of Buck.

The executors of the testator's will paid the funeral expenses and debts of the widow.

This was a summons taken out by Mary Yeo as administratrix of the widow, to which H. W. Clemow (co-executor with herself of the testator's will) and the residuary legatees of the testator were made defendants, to determine whether the executors of the testator were bound or entitled to pay as "testamentary expenses" of the widow (a) the costs of Buck of the action in the Probate Division; (b) all costs properly incurred by Mary Yeo in obtaining the grant of letters of administration to the widow's estate; (c) the estate duty payable on the death of the widow; and (d) the costs, charges, and expenses of, and in connection with, the administration of the widow's estate.

The widow's estate consisted of personal property only.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Manby, for the plaintiff, Mary Yeo.—Expenses incurred in the administration of the estate of an intestate are "testamentary expenses": Sharp v. Lush, 27 W. R. 528, 10 Ch. D. 468. Buck's costs of the probate action and the expenses of taking out letters of administration are testamentary expenses: In re Price, Williams v. Jenkins, 34 W. R. 291, 31 Ch. D. 485; In re Pearce, McLean v. Smith, 35 W. R. 358; In re Shaw, Bridges v. Shaw, 43 W. R. 159, [1894] 3 Ch. 615. Estate duty takes the place of probate duty; it is a testamentary expense: Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 6 (2), 8 (1); Customs and Inland Revenue Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 12) s. 30.

Warrington, Q.C., and W. M. Cann, for the residuary legatees.—There cannot be testamentary expenses where there is no testament. But if there can, Buck's costs of the probate action are not payable as such, for the administratrix is not liable for them. Besides, the judge in the probate action made no order as to costs: In re Prince, Godwin v. Prince, 47 W. R. 25, [1898] 2 Ch. 225. Estate duty is not a testamentary expense.

They also referred to Sharp v. Lush.

R. J. Parker and A. M. White, for the testator's executor.

KEKEWICH, J.—There fall for decision here some curious and novel varieties of a question in itself not novel. What is the meaning of the expression "testamentary expenses"? The novelty consists in the strange peculiarity that this direction for the payment of testamentary expenses is not one for the payment of testamentary expenses of the testator himself, but of someone else—namely, his wife. The first point taken is that testamentary expenses can have no application here, for there are none, as the lady died, according to the decree of the Probate Court, intestate, and that there cannot be testamentary expenses where there is no testament. That is a strong thing to say, though etymologically there is justification for it. I will first decide that point. There are two grounds of argument against it. First, on the construction of the will, the testator contemplates that his executors are to pay not only funeral and testamentary expenses, but also debts, and that what is to be distributed is what may be left after clearing his wife's estate. He contemplates that it might be necessary to expend all his estate in order to clear hers, but hers is to be cleared out of his before his is distributed. Now, it seems to me absurd to say that he intended his wife's funeral and testamentary expenses and debts to be paid if she died leaving a will and only her funeral expenses and debts if she died leaving no will. Of course I am importing, and I think I must consider the testator to have imported, into "testamentary expenses" that meaning which has been attributed to them by judicial decision. Sir G. Jessel says in Sharp v. Lush: "I cannot distinguish between executorship expenses and testamentary expenses. As I understand the words executorship expenses are expenses incidental to the proper performance of the duty of the executor in the same way as testamentary expenses are." But then I am asked to say that if there is only an administrator there can be no testamentary expenses. That is a strained and unnatural construction which I do not think I ought to adopt if I can possibly construe testamentary expenses otherwise, and I think I can independently of the words of the will itself on general grounds. In the first place the term testamentary expenses has received a full explanation in several cases, to two of which I will refer—Sharp v. Lush, before Sir G. Jessel, and In re Prince, Godwin v. Prince, before Stirling, J., who obviously had before him, and adopted, Sir G. Jessel's judgment. Now, the meaning of testamentary expenses as expounded there goes beyond expenses connected with the will. No doubt in the beginning, as I have already pointed out, Sir George Jessel says "expenses incidental to the proper performance of the duty of the executor"; but he goes on almost immediately afterwards to talk of "administration costs," and I do not think that one ought to consider he meant simply administration costs where the administration is at the suit of or against the executor, and not at the suit of or against the administrator. It is only in the particular case of there being no will that this question can arise, for a direction to pay testamentary expenses cannot require to be construed where there is a will, not even if the executor renounces, and there is administration given cum testamento annexo. It is still cum testamento annexo, and you are dealing with administration expenses incidental to a will notwithstanding there is only a grant of administration. The question can only arise in a case of this kind, and therefore of course it was not considered by Sir G. Jessel in the case before him, although he talks of administration in general terms. Reading the judgment through, I cannot see myself that if Sir G. Jessel had been asked, "Do you limit that to the case of an executor?" he would have said otherwise than that he would decide the case as it might arise. But I have authority, as I pointed out during the argument, the authority of a dictionary of some weight, as to the meaning of "testamentary." The Century Dictionary puts as the first meaning of testamentary "relating or pertaining to a will or wills; also relating to the administration of the estates of deceased persons," and it quotes a passage from Blackstone. The word has ceased to have its purely etymological meaning. The existence of a testament does not seem to me now to be essential to the proper use of the word testamentary, and I think it may be equally applied to the case where there is no testament, but where the estate is being administered according to the law of the land. There is one observation I may make here, though it is not the foundation of my decision. No one, according to the law, really does die intestate, because the law makes a will for everyone so dying, and that does illustrate what I have been saying, that testamentary refers to the administration of an estate, whether there is a will or not. That being so, it is admitted that points (b) and (d) would fall within the meaning of testamentary expenses.

Then there is one other point on this part of the case. This widow had made a will and a caveat was entered against the probate by two persons, Mrs. Yeo and Mr. Buck, who were in the same relation to the alleged testatrix, so that they were the persons entitled to letters of administration. They entered the caveat which was warned, and it became necessary to bring an action which might be brought either by Mrs. Yeo or Mr. Buck, or by both, and Mr. Buck brought it and was successful and in the result the will fell to the ground, and letters of administration were issued, which were granted to Mrs. Yeo. The question then arises, can the costs of that action incurred by Buck be paid out of the testator's estate as testamentary expenses of the widow? Can Mrs. Yeo require the testator's estate to pay Buck's costs, she not having incurred them and not being liable to pay them herself? That is the question. If Buck had himself got letters of administration he would clearly be entitled to his costs, but is Mrs. Yeo entitled to get them? To say that she is not must be founded upon the technicality that she herself is not liable to pay the costs and cannot be required to do so. But I myself think that the proper inference is that they were really incurred for the benefit of the widow's estate—that is to say, for the benefit of her next-of-kin, and whether the costs were incurred by one or the other of them, Yeo or Buck, is immaterial. I do not say that Buck acted as the agent of Yeo, but I do say that these costs were incurred for the benefit of the widow's estate, and the next-of-kin would be entitled to nothing unless these costs were paid. The widow's will has been got out of the way at the expense of her estate, and therefore I think that I ought to allow the costs of that litigation—that is to say, Buck's costs, as testamentary expenses of the widow.

Then there is one more argument. It is said that the judge in the probate action did not allow any costs out of the estate. That is quite true. But I do not understand that he said there had been any improper litigation or extravagance in the matter of costs. If he had said that, of course I should pay attention to it and look into it. But all the judge said was that it was not a case in which he would allow the costs of either party out of the estate. That, I think, leaves me at large to allow or disallow these costs. But besides that, I am not considering whether these costs ought to be allowed out of the estate or not; I am considering whether they were testamentary expenses within the meaning of this will. The learned judge in the Probate Court had one question before him, I have a different one—the question of the construction of a will, which he probably never saw and certainly did not attempt to construe. I will call attention to a point here. In re Prince, Godwin v. Prince, Stirling, J., dealing with costs which the judge of the Probate Court thought ought to be allowed out of the estate, said they were not testamentary expenses, showing plainly that the two things are not necessarily the same, and may be quite different.

There is one other point, and that is the question whether estate duty is payable as a testamentary expense. It is not out of place to observe here that we are dealing with personal estate only. I do not say the case would be different if there was real estate, but it might be. At any rate, what I say only applies to personal estate and the estate duty payable under the Finance Act, 1894, s. 6 (2). Estate duty may be said to have taken the place of probate duty—at least, probate duty has been merged in it, and an executor does not now pay probate duty. Was probate duty a testamentary expense? There is no authority on that point. In the case of Sharp v. Lush Jessel, M.R., went into the meaning of testamentary expenses, and he gave several instances, but he did not mention probate duty, and for the reason that in the will he was there dealing with probate duty was expressly included; and in no case that I know of has the question whether probate duty was a testamentary expense been raised. But in any case probate duty had to be paid before the grant of probate or of letters of administration. It was a sine quâ non that you paid that, before you got your grant, whether of probate or of letters of administration, and it almost follows as a matter of course that that duty was a testamentary expense—that is to say, an executorship expense if the executor pays it. I do not see my way out of it. I have considered it carefully. I am reluctant to introduce a new rule and to add to "testamentary expenses" which have already been expounded generously, but having arrived at the conclusion that you could not have refused to treat probate duty as a testamentary expense, I cannot see my way to avoid going on and saying that estate duty which takes its place is also a testamentary expense. For all practical purposes you cannot get a grant of probate or of letters of administration without paying estate duty, any more than you could have got them without paying probate duty, and I myself see no difference between the payment of estate duty and the payment of the half-crown or shilling stamp which must be affixed to the necessary affidavits. They are both costs which the executor or administrator is bound to incur in order to put himself in the position of legal personal representative. It is true that the estate duty may be a large sum while the affidavit sum is but a small one, but all of them, small or large, are incidental, and necessarily incidental, to obtaining the grant. Reluctantly I must say that estate duty is a testamentary expense. I do not see my way to say that it is not. The result is that this estate duty must be paid out of the estate of the testator in exoneration of the estate of his widow.

Solicitors, Boxall & Boxall; Lanfear, Tanner, & Lanfear; W. J. Foster.

---

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Wright, J.) — April 30.

In re VAVASOUR.
Ex parte VAVASOUR. (a.)

Bankruptcy — Practice — Power of trustee to employ solicitor — Permission of committee of inspection— Taxation—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 57, sub-section 3; s. 73, sub-section 4—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 15, sub-section 3.

A resolution by a committee of inspection granting permission to the trustee to employ a solicitor must not be in general terms, but must in some way or other specify the particular purpose for which the solicitor is to be employed.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Application by the debtor for a review of the taxation of the bill of the solicitors employed by the trustee.

The debtor in this case had been adjudicated bankrupt on his own petition upon the 2nd of July, 1897, and the official receiver became trustee in the bankruptcy with a committee of inspection.

Upon the 23rd of July a meeting of the committee was held, at which a resolution was passed that Messrs. Adams & Adams, solicitors, should be employed in certain matters specified by the trustee, the costs not to exceed £200. Messrs. Adams & Adams accordingly acted in the matters specified, and their bill for these matters was duly taxed and paid and no further question arose upon it.

Upon the 4th of May, 1898, the respondent Miller was appointed trustee in place of the official receiver, and on the 18th of May he called a meeting of the committee and stated that he desired to continue the employment of Messrs. Adams & Adams without limit to the costs to be incurred by them.

The committee accordingly passed the following resolution, which was entered in their minute book: "Resolved, that Messrs. Adams & Adams be employed by the trustee when necessary."

During the course of the bankruptcy, the trustee had occasion to let various farms on the bankrupt's estates, and upon each letting he employed Messrs. Adams & Adams as solicitors without any further authorization than the resolution set forth above.

The creditors in the bankruptcy were eventually paid in full, and a surplus was left over for the bankrupt.

When the bills of Messrs. Adams & Adams came before the master for taxation, the bankrupt objected, inter alia, to the costs incurred in letting the farms, contending that the trustee should have obtained from the committee of inspection a separate authorization to employ solicitors in each case. The trustee, on the other hand, laid before the master an affidavit by the members of the committee of inspection, stating that they had intended their resolution to cover all the cases in which the trustee had employed solicitors.

The master held that the employment of the solicitors had been duly authorized, and passed their bill.

The bankrupt applied to review his decision.

Ringwood, for the application.—The trustee ought to have obtained permission from the committee of inspection in each case in which he employed the solicitors. Section 57 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, provides that the permission of the committee of inspection to employ a solicitor shall not be general, but shall only be a permission to employ a solicitor to do a particular piece of work. In the same way, if the official receiver is trustee without a committee of inspection, he has to get permission from the Board of Trade every time he desires to employ a solicitor: In re Duncan, Ex parte Duncan, 40 W. R. 159, [1892] 1 Q. B. 331.

Reed, Q.C. (Carrington and Frank Mellor with him), for the trustee.—The taxing-master was right in passing the bill; his duty under section 73, sub-section 3, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, is to satisfy himself that the employment of the solicitors has been duly sanctioned. He had before him the resolution of the committee of inspection, and the affidavit in which they swore that their resolution was intended to cover all the cases in which the solicitors were employed, and he was satisfied that the employment had been duly sanctioned. It is not necessary that there should be an authorization entered in the minute book in each case.

Ringwood replied.

WRIGHT, J.—This case involves a point of practice which is both difficult and important. By section 73, sub-section 3, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the taxing-master before passing the bill of a solicitor employed by the trustee in bankruptcy has to satisfy himself that the employment of the solicitor has been duly sanctioned. Section 15, sub-section 3, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, enacts that the sanction required under section 73 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, must be a sanction obtained before the employment, and rule 117 requires the trustee to produce before the taxing-master a copy of the resolution sanctioning the employment.

On the other hand, there is no provision in the Acts or rules, nor does any decision on the subject require that the authority should be in any particular form so long as it does not transgress the concluding words of section 57 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883: "The permission given for the purposes of this section shall not be a general permission to do all or any of the above-mentioned things, but shall only be a permission to do the particular thing or things for which permission is sought in the specified case or cases."

Now, the first question I have to decide in this case is, whether it has been proved that the resolution of the committee of inspection was, in fact, intended to cover all the work which has been done by the solicitors. The taxing-master accepted the affidavit of the members of the committee that the resolution was so intended, and I agree with that finding of fact, and think that the committee did intend the solicitor to do what he has done.

The second question is whether the resolution of the committee transgresses the provisions of section 57 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, which I have cited above. I should hesitate long before deciding that fresh authority is needed for every step in an action, but there must be a line drawn somewhere, and I think that the terms of the permission in this case "Resolved, that Messrs. Adams & Adams be employed by the trustee when necessary," are too wide to comply with the provisions of section 57. The resolution must in some way or another specify the particular things to be done or proceedings to be taken, and if I were to hold the resolution before me sufficient I should nullify the provisions of section 57. The case must be sent back to the taxing-master with an intimation to that effect.

Application allowed.

Solicitors for the applicant, Robinson, Wilkins, & Walton.

Solicitors for the trustee, Adams & Adams.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). Feb. 19.

FIELDING v. MAYOR, &c., OF MORLEY. (a.)

Practice — Costs — Solicitor and client costs — Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (6).

Where an action is dismissed against a public body acting in execution of statutory or other public duty, the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1, gives the defendant corporation, solicitor and client costs in the action, but the Act does not apply to appeals.

Decision of the Court of Appeal, sub nomine, Fielding v. Morley Corporation, 47 W. R. 295, [1899] 1 Ch. 1, affirmed.

The appellant brought an action against the respondents to restrain them from doing certain acts which they maintained they were authorized to do by their special Act.

The action was dismissed, with costs as between solicitor and client, and this was affirmed by the Court of Appeal (47 W. R. 295, [1899] 1 Ch. 1, where the facts of the particular action are set out).

The House (Earl HALSBURY, L.C., and Lords MACNAGHTEN, MORRIS, SHAND, JAMES OF HEREFORD, and BRAMPTON) dismissed the appeal.

Cripps, Q.C. (Moulton, Q.C., and Leigh Clare with him), for the appellant, mentioned the question of costs.

Eve, Q.C., and R. J. Parker, for the respondents.

Earl HALSBURY, L.C., said the Act might be a hard one, but was plain as to the costs of the action; it did not apply to appeals.

Orders appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed, with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Firth & Co., for J. E. Craven, Todmorden.

Solicitors for the respondents, Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for R. B. Hopkins, Morley.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith, Vaughan Williams, and Romer, L.JJ.) May 25.

HOGARTH & CO. v. WALKER. (b.)

Insurance (marine)—Policy on ship—Furniture—Grain cargo—Dunnage mats and separating cloths.

Dunnage mats and separating cloths, which are used on board a ship in connection with the carriage of a grain cargo, are covered by a time policy on ship in the ordinary Lloyd's form, although they are not being used on the voyage in the course of which the loss occurred.

Judgment of Bigham, J. (ante, p. 47, [1899] 2 Q. B. 401), affirmed.

Appeal of the defendant from the judgment of Bigham, J., in an action tried without a jury in the Commercial Court, reported ante, p. 47, [1899] 2 Q. B. 401.

The action was brought by the owners of the steamship Felbridge to recover a loss under a policy of insurance subscribed by the defendant.

The policy, which was a time policy, in the ordinary Lloyd's form, was expressed to be "during the space of twelve calendar months from noon June 1, 1897, and ending at noon June 1, 1898, as employment may offer in port and at sea, in dock or graving dock, and on way, gridirons, pontoons, at all times, and in all places and on all occasions, services, and trades whatever and wheresoever under steam or sail, on the body, tackle, apparel, ordnance, munitions, artillery, boats, and other furniture of or in the good ship or vessel Felbridge."

The question was whether the policy covered a loss of dunnage mats and separating cloths used in connection with the carriage of grain cargoes, The Felbridge being a vessel usually engaged in the Black Sea grain trade, in which trade it is customary for the ships to carry these mats and cloths. The mats are used to prevent the cargo from getting damp, and the cloths are used for the purpose of separating the different parcels of goods. At the time of the loss, The Felbridge was on a voyage from America and the mats and cloths were not being used, boards being substituted for the mats, and the cloths not being required as there was only one consignment of goods. The mats and cloths were therefore stored away in the fore peak. During the voyage the ship came into collision with a pier-head, stem on, and a number of the mats and cloths were washed away and lost.

Bigham, J., gave judgment for the plaintiffs.

The defendant appealed.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and J. A. Hamilton, for the defendant.—These mats and cloths formed no integral part of the ship, but merely afforded facilities for the carriage of the cargo. They are therefore not covered by the policy: McArthur on Marine Insurance (2nd ed.) p. 57; Hoskins v. Pickersgill, 3 Doug. 222; Gale v. Laurie, 5 B. & C. 156. There is a distinction between a shipowner in his capacity as owner of a ship and as a carrier of goods by sea. Things required by him in the latter capacity are not covered by a policy on ship, and the word "furniture" in this policy must be construed as referring to something ejusdem generis as "boat" or "artillery." Bigham, J., said this ship would not have been seaworthy without having the mats and cloths on board. That is not so, for the mats and cloths were only used in connection with a particular kind of trade, and had nothing to do with the seaworthiness of the ship from the point of view of the owner.

Robertson v. Ewer, 1 T. R. 127; Brough v. Whitmore, 4 T. R. 206; and Hill v. Putten, 8 East 373, were also referred to.

Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., and Montague Lush, for the plaintiffs, were not called upon.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed. This is a time policy covering a trading ship in the largest possible way, and it is not disputed that the trade in which the ship was engaged was contemplated by this policy. [His lordship read the portions of the policy set out above.] The evidence is uncontradicted that in the Black Sea grain trade dunnage mats and separating cloths are always required on such voyages as that on which the ship usually sailed. If that is so, the mats and cloths, in my opinion, obviously form part of the furniture of the ship. The defendant takes exception to the statement by Bigham, J., that the ship would be unseaworthy if she went to sea with out the mats or cloths. The mats are used for laying on the floor of the ship to preserve the cargo from damage by water, and I agree with Bigham, J., that without them the ship would not be seaworthy. With regard to the separating cloths, there is uncontradicted evidence that they form part of the furniture of the ship. Bigham, J., said as to this: "I can see no distinction between these and movable bulkheads, which it was admitted by the defendant would form part of the ship's furniture." The same admission was made in this court, and if movable bulkheads would form part of the furniture of the ship, why are not the separating cloths also part of the furniture? I see no distinction between the two cases. The appeal must be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(b.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, for the same reasons.

ROMER, L.J.—I agree. A time policy such as this includes fittings and things in the nature of fittings, though not fixed to the ship, if provided by the shipowner for the purposes of the ship and reasonably necessary for the carriage of the cargo ordinarily carried by the ship, even though not actually in use at the time when the loss occurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Botterell & Roche, for Vaughan & Roche, Cardiff.

Solicitors for the defendant, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb & Whatton.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., Rigby and Vaughan Williams L.JJ.) — March 20, 22; April 9.

ALEXANDER v. AUTOMATIC TELEPHONE CO. (a.)

Company — Shares — Subscribers to memorandum of association—Liability on shares—Payments on allotment—Special bargain—Directors—Breach of duty.

Subscribers to a memorandum of association of a company limited by shares are only liable by virtue of their subscription to pay up the amount of their shares as and when called up.

It follows that, in the absence of any special agreement or article requiring a subscriber of a memorandum of association to make some payment on subscription or allotment, nothing is payable by him as a subscriber in respect of his shares until calls are made on them.

Where, however, directors who were subscribers to the memorandum of association of a company allotted to themselves the shares set opposite their names in the memorandum without payment on allotment, but required payment on allotment from other shareholders, and then proceeded to make a further call on the shares without paying the allotment money on their own shares,

Held, that, as the other shareholders had not known or sanctioned the directors obtaining the advantage of deferring their own contributions to the company at the expense of the other shareholders, there was a distinct breach of duty on the part of the directors, and that they were bound to pay up the allotment moneys in the same manner as the other shareholders.

Decision of Cozens-Hardy, J., [1899] 2 Ch. 302, reversed.

This was an appeal from a decision of Cozens-Hardy, J. (reported [1899] 2 Ch. 302, 47 W. R. Dig. 33).

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The action was brought by Messrs. M. J. Alexander and J. D. Gibbs, "suing on behalf of themselves and all the other shareholders" in the defendant company, against the company and three of its directors—viz., Messrs. Max Margowski, J. Woolf Cohen, and H. G. Sworn. The other members of the board were the two plaintiffs.

The company was incorporated on the 1st of July, 1897, with a capital of £100,000 in shares of 5s. each. The eight signatories to its memorandum of association were Margowski for 19,400 shares, the same gentleman as managing director of the Honduras Government Banking and Trading Co. (Limited) for 6,000 shares, the plaintiff Alexander for ten shares, the plaintiff Gibbs for ten shares, Baron Cohen for ten shares, Justin Mendelson for ten shares, the defendant Cohen for 200 shares, and the defendant Sworn for 800 shares.

Clause 5 of the articles of association provided that the shares of the company should be "under the control of the directors, who may, subject to the terms of the company's memorandum of association, issue, allot, or otherwise dispose of the same to such persons, for such consideration, and upon such terms and conditions as the board may determine . . . and may make arrangements on the issue of shares for a difference between the holders of such shares in the amount of calls to be paid and in the time of payment of such calls." The last words of the clause are, it should be observed, justified by section 24 of the Companies Act, 1867. Article 13 provided that the directors might "(subject to any special terms made on allotment) from time to time make such calls upon the members in respect of all moneys unpaid on their shares as they think fit, provided that one month's notice at least is given of the time and place for payment, and that no one call shall exceed 20 per cent. of the nominal amount of the shares, and that such calls shall be made at intervals of not less than one month." The memorandum shares and a number of other shares were allotted, and on all of them, except those held by Margowski, J. W. Cohen, Sworn, and the Honduras Co., the sum of 3s. payable on allotment had been paid. In respect of the excepted shares the plaintiffs alleged that only £784 in all had been paid, and that on these shares there was still due and payable the sum of £3,176, and the plaintiffs complained that the three defendant directors, being a majority of the board, were able to, and did, control its action by their votes, and in breach of their duty as directors and against the interests of the defendant company prevented the passing of resolutions for taking steps to enforce payment by those defendants or the Honduras Co. (in which they were said to be interested), of the amounts due on their shares and the shares held by the Honduras Co. This, however, the plaintiffs complained, did not prevent the defendant directors by means of their voting power making a further call of 1s. per share, and the plaintiff's case was that the defendant directors were acting in furtherance of their own interests and in fraud of the rights of the other shareholders, and were using the powers entrusted to them as directors for their own ends, and not for the benefit of the company. It was also alleged that the defendant directors had control of the majority of the votes of the shareholders of the defendant company. The plaintiffs accordingly asked for a declaration that the holders of the memorandum shares were bound to pay up 3s. per share—viz., 6d. on application and 2s. 6d. on allotment, in the same way as the holders of other shares. For the defence it was pleaded that on the 30th of June, 1897, before the company was incorporated, it was agreed at a meeting of the signatories that nothing should be payable by any of the defendant directors or the Honduras Co. on application or allotment in respect of their memorandum shares, and that the memorandum was signed by them on this condition; that at a board meeting, after incorporation—viz., on the 5th of July, 1897, two resolutions were passed (both plaintiffs being present and voting in their favour) for the allotment of shares; that by the first resolution the memorandum shares were allotted without requiring any payment on allotment, and that by the second resolution a payment of 2s. 6d. per share in respect of other shares was required on allotment, 6d. per share having been already paid on application for these shares. The defendant directors also said that they were acting under the articles and in the interests of the company, and had committed no breach of duty. The case was heard before Cozens-Hardy, J., on the 11th and 12th of May, 1899, who delivered the following judgment:

"In my judgment this action is misconceived. I assume in favour of the plaintiffs — but without in the least deciding, or even expressing an opinion in their favour—that the plaintiffs are competent to sue on behalf of themselves and all other the shareholders of the defendant company. What they ask is a declaration that all the shares allotted to the signatories of the memorandum of association were held upon the same terms and subject to the same conditions as the shares taken by the public, or, in other words, subject to the obligation to pay a deposit of 6d. per share on application and a further sum of 2s. 6d. on allotment. Now, this claim seems to be based upon the ground that there is an immediate debt due from every member of the company in respect of uncalled capital. That appears to me to be an entire fallacy. In the words of Lindley, M.R., in In re Russian Spratt's Patent, 46 W. R. 514, [1898] 2 Ch. 149, uncalled capital is not a debt—it is a right to make a call and create a debt. It is not correct to say that the signatories to the memorandum of association, by virtue of which they agreed to become and became members of the company, became at once debtors to the company to the full amount of their shares. Their position in this case is this, and this only—that they are subject to article 13. What is the effect of article 13? A member is to be liable, apart from any special terms, to pay such calls as the directors may from time to time make upon him; but he is not to be liable and cannot be compelled to pay otherwise than in that way. There is a further limitation that he cannot be required to pay any call exceeding 20 per cent. of the nominal amount of the shares, nor can he be required to pay a call except at intervals of one month. It is quite true that there is a power to make special terms on allotment, but the argument on the part of the plaintiffs seems to have proceeded on the assumption that it is necessary for the signatories to prove that some special terms are made in their favour. On the contrary, as I read article 13, it is for those who allege any obligation to pay otherwise than on account of the calls made at due intervals and with due notice to prove some other special terms or bargain. Now we have the special terms and bargain made with other members with reference to the 6d. and 2s. 6d. The applications for the shares in respect of which those amounts were to be paid were made and were accepted expressly upon those terms—that 6d. should be paid on application and 2s. 6d. on allotment. That was in strict accordance with article 13. But where is any such arrangement made with respect to the shares of the signatories? I can find nothing, and I find evidence of what is clearly inconsistent with any such arrangement. I do not attach weight to what took place on the 30th of June, 1897, which obviously does not bind the company; but it furnishes a motive for and an explanation of what undoubtedly did take place on the 5th of July after incorporation. At the meeting which took place on that day the allotments were made. Not only were separate resolutions for allotments then passed, but applications for allotments were then considered, and it is perfectly clear that in respect of these signatories, with whom alone I have to deal, the allotments were made on the terms that nothing should be payable on application or allotment. This is really an attempt, when allotments have been made and accepted on those terms, to alter the entire contract entered into between the signatories and the company, and strangest of all, it is an attempt made by two gentlemen who themselves approved of and took part in passing the resolutions, and who now ask me to say that these shares could only have been properly allotted upon the terms of the signatories paying 6d. on application and 2s. 6d. on allotment. I can find no foundation in fact and nothing in law to justify me in arriving at such a conclusion. A member of a company is not liable to pay anything except in respect of calls made in the manner provided by the articles. This is an attempt to make members of the company pay for shares otherwise than in accordance with the articles. In my judgment the attempt wholly fails, and I dismiss the action with costs."

The plaintiffs appealed.

Rawlinson, Q.C., and Dobb, for the appellants.—The respondents, on the incorporation of the company, became then and there shareholders to the amount they had agreed to take by the memorandum of association. They became, accordingly, immediately liable to pay the full amount of 5s. per share. Articles 5 and 13 of the articles of association do not apply to these shares at all: Fothergill's case, 21 W. R. 301, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 270, at p. 275. Even if the shares did not pass on incorporation, but only on the 5th of July, 1897 (the day of their purported allotment), yet, since nothing was then said as to their payment, payment in full became immediately due. Even assuming these shares were excepted from payment of application and allotment moneys by agreement of the 30th of June, 1897, application and allotment moneys are not "calls," and the respondents remained liable to these latter. Apart from these technical grounds, these directors were in the position of trustees, and had no right to use their powers to forward their own benefit. [Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., objected that this point was given up in the court below.] (a) The mere fact of their not making calls on themselves is ipso facto evidence of mala fides. (b) But we have also positive evidence to prove mala fides: Gilbert's case, 18 W. R. 938, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 559. [LINDLEY, M.R.—Your two clients did not dissent—they were parties to what was done—how can they now complain of mala fides?] There is nothing to show we understood how the scheme would really work out.

Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., P. F. Stokes, and Hon. F. Russell, for the company and Margowski.—There was no mala fides in the case. We subscribed on these special terms to try and prevent the whole matter falling through.

Astbury, Q.C., and Hamilton, Q.C., for Dr. Sworn.—The charge of mala fides was abandoned in the court below and cannot now be urged against us. Apart from any special agreement the directors had power under the articles to make calls from time to time as they thought fit. Unless mala fides is proved their exercise of their discretion cannot be impeached.

J. W. Cohen in person.

Rawlinson, Q.C., replied.

LINDLEY, M.R.—Subscribers to a memorandum of association of a company limited by shares are liable, and only liable, by virtue of their subscription to pay up the amount of their shares as and when called up. The times when payments are to be made and the amounts to be paid are not prescribed by statute, except by section 38 of the Companies Act, 1862, which only comes into operation when the company is being wound up. But until the commencement of the winding up of the company the times and amounts of payment depend, apart from express agreement between the company and the signatories, on the company's articles of association. In the absence of other articles, Table A will be applicable. That this is the true position of those who sign the memorandum of association is perfectly plain from the Companies Act, 1862, ss. 8, 11, 14, 15, 23, and 38, and Table A, articles 4-7. A subscriber of a memorandum becomes by section 23 a member in respect of the number of shares subscribed for by him, without any further application by him or allotment of shares to him. But as by section 22 all shares have to be numbered, and the numbers must be entered in the register (see section 25), there must be an appropriation to each subscriber of the proper number of shares properly numbered, not to constitute him a member, but to enable a proper register to be kept, and proper certificates to be given and transfers made: see sections 22, 25, and 31, and Table A, articles 2, 3, and 8-16. It follows from this that, in the absence of any special agreement or article requiring a subscriber of a memorandum of association to make some payment on subscription or allotment, nothing is payable by him as a subscriber in respect of his shares until calls are made upon them. This is the strength of the defendants' case. Further, if more shares than those taken by the subscribers of the memorandum are issued by the directors, there is nothing to prevent them from offering those shares on such terms as regards payment to the company on application and allotment as the directors may think expedient. Payments so required to be made are not calls, because the payments are to be made by persons who are not yet members; but, when made, those payments must be treated, unless otherwise agreed, as payments on account of the nominal capital of the company, and as reducing pro tanto the liability of those who pay. Such persons have nothing to complain of if they pay according to their bargain, and the subscribers of the memorandum pay according to theirs. This is the weakness of the plaintiffs' case. From this point of view the plaintiffs have no ground of complaint, and the decision appealed from is unimpeachable. But there is another point of view from which the case must be regarded. There are other elements in the case which have to be taken into consideration, and on which the plaintiffs strongly rely. The directors, who had subscribed the memorandum for an unusually large number of shares, issued shares to other persons on the terms that 6d. per share should be paid on application and 2s. 6d. per share on allotment—i.e., 3s. per share had to be paid by the allottees, whilst the directors themselves paid nothing in respect of their own shares. The directors, in fact, so managed matters as to place themselves in a better position as regards payment than the other shareholders, and they did so without informing the other shareholders of the fact. This, the plaintiffs contend, was a breach of duty on the part of the directors to those who applied for and took shares upon the faith that the directors were not obtaining advantages at their expense. It is no answer to the plaintiffs' case so put to appeal to the contracts alone, for the charge is that the directors were guilty of a breach of duty in procuring those contracts, and in taking advantage of them so as to benefit themselves at the expense of the other shareholders. In the statement of claim and in the court below the defendants were charged with deliberate fraud; but this charge was ultimately abandoned in the court below, and having been abandoned, it cannot be brought forward again, or be listened to on appeal. But, apart from all fraud, and although the directors acted in the belief that they were doing nothing wrong, there may, nevertheless, have been a breach of duty such as is relied upon, and it is necessary to consider whether there was or was not. The company was registered on the 1st of July, 1897. On the 30th of June the memorandum of association was signed and the subscribers had a meeting at which, it is said, they agreed that the defendants should pay nothing in respect of their shares on allotment. Such an agreement, if come to, could not, of course, bind the company, which was not then formed. But the defendants say that the plaintiffs Alexander and Gibbs were then told that the defendants were not to pay up anything on their shares on allotment, and that the plaintiffs assented to this arrangement. The plaintiffs emphatically deny that they knew of or assented to any such arrangement. On the 5th of July the first meeting of the directors was held, and on that day two resolutions were passed. One was that the shares subscribed for by those who signed the memorandum of association should be allotted to them. The resolution treats them as applying for 26,440 shares of 5s. each, and having those shares allotted to them in the quantities applied for by each, "as per applications and allotment sheet marked A now signed by the chairman." This showed that three of those subscribers of ten shares each—viz., Alexander, Gibbs, and Baron Cohen, had paid up or were to pay up 3s. per share in respect of their 5s. shares. There was nothing to show that the other subscribers had paid or were to pay anything on their shares. There was a conflict of evidence at the trial as to whether the defendants did or did not explain to their co-directors that they did not intend to pay up 3s. on their shares. The plaintiffs Alexander and Gibbs distinctly deny that they were told anything of the sort. They deny that they saw the sheet A. The defendant Cohen and the secretary say that it was explained that the others did not intend to pay, and that the sheet A was produced. The learned judge finds that Alexander and Gibbs knew of the resolution and concurred in it, but he does not say that these gentlemen are not to be believed when they deny that they were informed that the other directors were not going to pay. So far as it is necessary for the defendants to rely on any agreement exempting them from liability to pay 3s. like other shareholders, I am of opinion that they fail in proving such an agreement. The resolution of the 5th of July to which I am referring did not by itself, and apart from the conduct of the defendants as directors, either increase or diminish the defendants' liability as subscribers of the memorandum of association. It simply carried out what their subscription involved. The other resolution passed at the same meeting was to allot 9,560 shares to persons who had applied for them on payment of 2s. 6d. per share. This was in addition to 6d. per share already paid on application. Other shares have been issued on similar terms. Both the plaintiffs Alexander and Gibbs are holders of shares besides those for which they subscribed the memorandum of association; and they paid up 3s. per share for all of them on allotment. So far, therefore, they are in the same position as all the other shareholders except the defendants. The fact, however, that three subscribers of the memorandum paid 3s. on their shares whilst the defendants did not, is difficult to reconcile with the existence of any understanding that all the subscribers should stand on their strict legal rights. The defendants rely on article 5 as entitling the directors to issue shares on any terms they think expedient, and to make differences between some shareholders and others. But this, I am satisfied, is an afterthought. The defendants were not, in fact, acting on this article at all. But, even if they did, this article would not, in my opinion, justify them in making a difference in their own favour without disclosing the fact to the shareholders and obtaining their consent to the arrangement. The Court of Chancery has always exacted from directors the observance of good faith towards their shareholders and towards those who take shares from the company and become co-adventurers with themselves and others who may join them. The maxim caveat emptor has no application to such cases, and directors who so use their powers as to obtain benefits for themselves at the expense of the shareholders, without informing them of the fact, cannot retain those benefits and must account for them to the company, so that all the shareholders may participate in them. Gilbert's case is only one of many instances illustrating this principle. In this case there is no question that, by obtaining 3s. a share from the other shareholders and paying nothing themselves, the defendants threw upon the other shareholders a burden which they did not share themselves. It is true that by article 121 dividends were only payable in proportion to the amounts paid up on the shares; and as regards dividends, had there been any, the defendants would have been at a disadvantage. But the advantage they obtained at the expense of the other shareholders was the advantage of deferring their own contributions to the funds of the company at the expense of the other shareholders. This, in my opinion, was a clear breach of duty, unless the other shareholders knew of it and sanctioned it. The defendants say that the memorandum and articles, which named the first directors, gave notice to all the shareholders that nothing was payable by the defendants except when calls were made on their shares. The defendants further say that, at all events, the plaintiffs Alexander and Gibbs knew and assented to what was done, and that this action, therefore, cannot be sustained by them. As regards the notice given by the memorandum and the articles to the shareholders generally, I am clearly of opinion that they give no notice of anything except what they expressly state; they give no notice at all that the directors would so exercise their powers, and so act towards their shareholders, as to benefit themselves at their expense. It is impossible to come to the conclusion that the applicants for shares knew of or sanctioned the conduct of which they now complain. The next question is, whether the plaintiffs Alexander and Gibbs knew of and assented to any arrangement to the effect that the defendants should be in a better position than themselves and other shareholders as regards payment on allotment. As already stated, the plaintiffs emphatically deny that they knew anything of the sort, and they say that they first discovered in July or August, 1898, that the defendants had not paid up 3s. on allotment like other shareholders. They say, that they were unable to see the books and ascertain the facts before that time. They say, and Rhodes, the solicitor, confirms them, that nothing was said when the memorandum of association was signed on the 30th of June, 1897, about not paying like other shareholders; and the plaintiffs say that nothing was said about it when the allotment was made on the 5th of July, 1897. Against this must be set the resolutions then passed, and the testimony of Mr. Cohen and Mendelson, the secretary of the company. I have already referred to the resolutions and the sheet A. Cozens-Hardy, J., was so struck by these that, before hearing Cohen's evidence, he intimated that he was in favour of the defendants. That would certainly not be my own view. But Cohen's evidence must be considered. [His lordship reviewed the evidence, and continued:] In this state of the evidence the only conclusion I can come to is that there was some understanding between some of the persons who signed the memorandum of association that Margowski and one or two of his friends should be treated differently from other shareholders as regards payment on allotment, but that neither the plaintiffs nor any of the shareholders, except Margowski and his friends, ever knew of or assented to the use they made of their powers to secure for themselves advantages as to payment at the expense of their co-adventurers. Having carefully read the shorthand notes of the proceedings of the court below, I cannot help thinking that Cozens-Hardy, J., placed too much stress on the resolutions, and treated them as conveying more information than they really were calculated to convey or did convey to the plaintiffs. If the learned judge had said that he did not believe the plaintiffs, and believed Cohen and Mendelson rather than the plaintiffs, I should feel more difficulty than I do. But the learned judge has not said that he disbelieved the plaintiffs, and I certainly see no reason for doing so. Upon the merits of the case I come to the conclusion that a breach of duty by the directors to the company and the other shareholders in it has been established. It is necessary, however, to consider the form of the action and the relief which can be given. The breach of duty to the company consists in depriving the company of the use of the money which the directors ought to have paid up sooner than they did. I cannot regard the case as one of mere internal management, which, according to Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare 461, and numerous other cases, the court leaves the shareholders to settle amongst themselves. It was ascertained and admitted at the trial that when this action was commenced the defendants held such a preponderance of shares that they could not be controlled by the other shareholders. In these circumstances, an action by some shareholders, on behalf of themselves and others, against the defendants is in accordance with the authorities, and is unobjectionable in form: see Menier v. Hooper's Telegraph Co., 22 W. R. 396, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 350. An action in this form is far preferable to an action in the name of the company and then a fight as to the right to use the name. But this last mode of procedure is the only other open to a minority of shareholders in cases like the present. Apart, however, from the form of the action, the defendants contended that, having regard to the pleadings and to the calls made and paid since the action was brought, and to what took place at the trial, no relief could now be given to the plaintiffs. I have looked very carefully at the pleadings, and have observed that Cozens-Hardy, J., gave the plaintiffs leave to amend their claim by introducing into it the facts stated in their reply to the defence put in by the defendants Margowski and Cohen. Paragraph 6 of this reply raises the point proved at the trial—that the directors practically controlled the voting power of the company. Mr. Eve, who, in the court below, placed the plaintiffs' case on its true equitable basis, gave up the charges of actual fraud, and, calls having been made and paid, he did not ask for an injunction or a receiver. But he pressed for a declaration to the effect that the defendants ought to have paid up 3s. per share on their shares on allotment. This was never abandoned. Having regard to the facts alleged in the plaintiffs' statement of claim and in their reply, and to the leave to amend, and to the mode in which the plaintiffs' counsel opened the plaintiffs' case, and urged the breach of duty of the defendants, I do not think that the defendants can successfully maintain that they have to meet on appeal a really different case from that which was made in the court below. The plaintiffs' case was obscured by charges of fraud, and by being based in their pleadings, and to some extent in argument, on legal rather than on equitable grounds. But the facts which constitute the plaintiffs' case are set out in the pleadings, and were fully investigated in the court below; and Mr. Eve more than once put the plaintiffs' case on its true basis. The plaintiffs' statement of claim is full of charges of fraud. These have been abandoned and the plaintiffs must pay all the costs occasioned by them. But it does not follow that their action ought to be wholly dismissed: see Hilliard v. Eiffe, L. R. 7 H. L. 39, 22 W. R. Dig. 194. The proper order will be: Allow the appeal and reverse the judgment appealed from. Declare that the three defendants—Margowski, Cohen, and Sworn—were guilty of a breach of their duty as directors in not paying to the company in respect of the shares allotted to them on the 5th of July, 1897, 3s. per share, being the amount which they obtained from the other members of the company in respect of shares allotted to them, and let the plaintiffs have liberty to apply for an order for payment if necessary. Order the three defendants to pay the costs of the appeal, and also the costs of the action, except such costs as have been occasioned by the charges of fraud, which costs are to be paid by the plaintiffs. The usual set-off as regards these costs.

RIGBY, L.J.—Two totally different lines of defence are set up by the respective counsel for the directors Margowski and Cohen, and for Sworn separately, on the hearing of this appeal, and the defences are not only different but irreconcilable, if not contradictory.

The first depends on an alleged agreement or understanding that Margowski, Cohen, and Sworn, and a certain company for which Margowski signed, should have time for paying up the money due on the shares taken by them. How much time was to be given is on the parol evidence not very clearly defined, but the time which actually elapsed before any call was made upon them exceeded one year and a-quarter (the 1st of July, 1897, to the 18th of October, 1898), and the call was made after the commencement of the action.

This agreement or understanding is said to have been arrived at on the 30th of June, 1897, or at any rate on the 5th of July, 1897, at the first meeting of the board of the company.

The second defence throws over altogether this alleged agreement, and depends simply upon the signature of the memorandum and articles of association.

On the 30th of June, there was what is called by the defendants a meeting of the signatories of the memorandum and articles of association.

This would be more properly called an appointment to obtain signatures, since it was not ascertained who were the signatories and for what number of shares, and in any event there could be no business transacted beyond the obtaining of the signatures, as the signatories had no business.

Mr. Rhodes, a solicitor, attended for the purpose of witnessing the signatures, and did witness each of them. The company was not incorporated until the 1st of July, 1897. As the company was not yet formed on the 30th of June, no agreement could possibly be then arrived at which would bind the company when formed, and no agreement for the benefit of three out of five directors could be arrived at by resolution of the board at the meeting of the 5th of July, a fortiori, when there was no trace on the minutes of the alleged agreement. At most the plaintiffs, who are two of the directors, might be held, if the evidence established such a case, to be personally barred from commencing an action and so from suing on behalf of themselves and other shareholders, and it is solely with the object of ascertaining whether they are so barred that it is worth while looking into the evidence at all.

But what actually took place at the so-called meeting of the 30th of June, or at the meeting of the 5th of July, is, independently of any contradiction, by no means clearly made out by the defendants, on whom is the onus of proving what, if anything, will be of advantage to them. There is no note in writing of what is alleged to have taken place of earlier date than the 18th of October, 1898, made more than a year and a-quarter after the event, and pending this action, and entered in a minute of the company of that date, the accuracy of which was challenged at the time. Indeed, I should infer that it was the deliberate intention of the defendants not to disclose the agreement or understanding by which, as they say, they were entitled to defer payment of calls.

As to what actually took place on the 30th of June, 1897, the nature of the evidence is remarkable. [His lordship then discussed the evidence, and continued:] I cannot arrive at the conclusion that it was established that the plaintiffs knew anything about any special understanding or agreement which would prevent them from bringing an action, even if knowledge of an understanding or agreement not binding on the company would have prevented them, which I think more than doubtful. That there was in fact no such understanding or agreement which could bind the company or absent shareholders is abundantly clear. The defendants acted throughout and the case was argued on their behalf as if directors were justified in exercising powers vested in them exactly as they pleased so long as they did not violate the express terms of the powers. The equitable doctrine, well established as it is, that they as fiduciary donees of the powers are bound to exercise them so as not to give themselves an advantage over other shareholders was practically ignored, though since the Judicature Act it is the paramount rule not only in courts of equity but in all courts, and though it was expressly invoked by Mr. Eve on behalf of the plaintiffs. Assuming for the moment that counsel for Dr. Sworn were justified in throwing over the agreement which had been relied upon as to a right on the part of the defendants Margowski, Cohen, and Sworn to postpone payment on the shares subscribed for by them, let us see how the matter stood on the articles of association alone. Under article 5 the directors had power to issue and allot shares for such consideration and upon such terms as the board might determine. The defendant directors became at once on the incorporation of the company by reason of their signature of the memorandum and articles members of the company for the full number of shares subscribed for by them respectively, including in the case of Margowski the shares subscribed on behalf of the Honduras Co. (Limited). It was perceived that they would not under the article literally applied become liable for any sums payable on application or allotment, but only under article 13 upon calls made in accordance therewith. Accordingly, in addition to the 10 per cent., or 6d. per share, charged on application, the directors by the second resolution for allotment, passed on the 5th of July, made a further 50 per cent., or 2s. 6d. per share, payable on allotment, the three defendant directors hoping and expecting to escape liability for this 3s. altogether, and only to become liable as and when they made calls on shares. They did not extend this immunity to all the subscribers to the memorandum and articles, but put down on allotment sheet A in a column indicating what sums were payable on application and allotment against the shares subscribed for by all the signatories except the three defendants and the secretary the sum of 6d. on application and 2s. 6d. on allotment, leaving blanks against the shares taken by the three defendants and the secretary. In this manner the three defendants thought to escape liability in respect to the 3s. per share, while charging every shareholder other than themselves and the secretary with that amount, which was at once called up. Whether the secretary paid up the 3s. per share on the shares subscribed for by him does not plainly appear. It is true that the three directors remained liable to calls in respect of the whole 5s. per share in accordance with clause 13, but they did not exercise the power of making calls, and had not done so to any extent at the time of the commencement of the action. Now, doubtless, the shareholders having notice of the articles, might have known that it was quite possible that the powers of the directors might be manipulated after this fashion without violation of the express terms of the articles. But such manipulation gave a clear advantage to the three defendant directors over other shareholders, who, by virtue of the equitable rule, had a right to suppose that no such advantage would be taken. There would have been no more difficulty so far as the terms of the articles were concerned in enforcing payment of the 3s. per share from the three defendants than from the three other subscribers of the memorandum and articles, who were called upon to pay it. In fact they had only to renounce the benefit enabling them according to the letter of the articles to escape payment, and the conclusion would have followed. Counsel for the defendant Sworn argued vehemently that when once it came to a question of waiving right the defendants must succeed, as they could not be compelled to waive. If waiver were necessary to enable them to come on equal terms with the other shareholders they were bound to waive, otherwise by virtue of an immunity which they themselves had provided for by the terms of the articles which they introduced, they would evade the paramount duty of acting equally between themselves and other shareholders. Therefore, even without an agreement in their favour, the defendants would be liable for the 3s. per share. But the director defendants did not even profess to be acting on the articles alone. They set up throughout the action that they had a separate agreement for the benefit of three, and the three only, and the famous minute of the 18th of October, 1898, and the evidence put forward in support of it have no meaning on any other hypothesis. As hereinbefore pointed out, they represented on the 5th of July that they had made an offer to subscribe for shares which was still open and was accepted, and that shares were allotted to them accordingly. And although counsel for Dr. Sworn, after the evidence had all been read and the arguments based upon it had been concluded, tried to withdraw that suggested agreement, it was, in my judgment, altogether too late to do so. It is evident that with an agreement such as that suggested, the question whether the defendant directors had fairly and properly exercised their trust powers would have been very different from what it would have been in the absence of such an agreement. It would not have been possible for the defendant directors to say with any effect that they had altogether abandoned the agreement in their favour and acted independently of it, and on no other hypothesis could they have sustained the proposition that they had fairly and without leaning one way or another exercised the power of regulating the amounts payable respectively on application and allotment and by call. My conclusion is that there was a failure on the part of the three director defendants to exercise the powers as they ought to have been exercised, and that they ought to be held to the representations made by them on the 5th of July, and to be taken to have charged themselves with 3s. as they charged the other signatories of the memorandum and the applicants independently of the memorandum for shares. The learned judge seems to have thought that the acquiescence of the plaintiffs Alexander and Gibbs in the two resolutions for the allotment of shares was of itself sufficient to disentitle them to sue, but in this conclusion I am unable to concur. This exclusive reliance on the resolutions accounts, as it seems to me, for the failure to examine more carefully into the evidence as to separate understanding or agreement. I do not think that the learned judge gave sufficient weight to the equitable rule.

As to the pleadings and the point open to the defendants for argument on the appeal and the costs, I concur with the Master of the Rolls.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The material facts seem to be as follows: [His lordship stated the facts and discussed the evidence, and continued:] All this makes it extremely improbable that any such agreement was made as is recited in the resolution of the 18th of October, 1898.

But assume that it was. The agreement was without consideration, and was in fact no more than an exercise by the directors of the power vested in them by article 13 of making and abstaining to make calls on particular shareholders, and in my judgment the resolution, whether taken in conjunction with the allotment sheet or not, does not amount to an agreement for postponement of any part of the liability of the signatories in respect of the shares that they had taken by signature.

It amounts at the most to an abstinence by the directors from calling up on allotment the 3s. which the ordinary applicants were called on to pay.

If the resolution goes further, it was a resolution which the directors had no right to make in their own favour, and the mere fact that they purported so to do would, without further evidence of fraudulent or improper motive, be sufficient to negative any suggestion that such a resolution was passed in the honest exercise of their judgment by the directors, for a director cannot use his power of making calls for his own interests: see Gilbert's case.

It is impossible to read the evidence without seeing that the case really set up by the defendants was that they signed the memorandum on the express terms that their liability on the shares should be partially postponed, and that any "call" made which was inconsistent with that postponement would be a "call" which the directors, whoever they might be, ought not to make, because it would be a "call" inconsistent with an agreement between the company and the signatories binding on the company.

It is true that this is not the case pleaded, because the case pleaded is merely that the signatories took their shares on the terms that nothing should be payable upon application or allotment, but that such shares should only be paid up on "calls" by the directors as and when such "calls" were required for the purposes of the company, but inasmuch as want of money by the company, and urgent want of money by the company, cannot in fact be denied, the directors were necessarily driven to justify not calling up the 3s. from themselves on the ground of the alleged agreement binding the company never to do so.

Doing so would have provided (having regard to the large number of shares taken by the signatories as such) a larger sum than the 1s. call made on the ordinary shareholders, and this even though the call on the signatory shareholders, had been limited to 1s. a share.

The outcome, in my judgment, is that there was no agreement binding on the company for postponement of the payment by the signatories of any part of the sums which they were bound to pay on their shares; and that any refraining of the directors from calling up the sums from the signatories necessary to put them on a level with the other shareholders on the alleged ground that there was in existence an agreement which entitled the signatories to postponement of liability was based on a misconception by the directors as to the existence of such an agreement binding the company and a breach of trust committed by them for their own interest.

If, on the other hand, the directors seek to justify their refusal to call up the 6d. and 2s. 6d. from the signatories as an exercise of their discretion, it seems to me that, having regard to the want of money by the company and the setting up by the directors of the alleged agreement to postpone as justification for not putting themselves as signatories on a level with the other shareholders, the action of the directors cannot be regarded as an exercise of discretion at all.

They considered that the so-called agreement precluded the exercise of any discretion in the matter. It is said that they could not have called up the 6d. and 2s. 6d. except by calls of 1s. made with proper intervals according to the articles. Well, even if this were so, they had ample opportunity in this manner to call up the 3s., and they have not done it.

The last point which I have to deal with is the suggestion that the plaintiffs, having been privy to the resolution of the 5th of July, cannot as plaintiffs, even though suing on behalf of themselves and others, impeach the resolutions to which they were privy. I say nothing about, the antecedent alleged agreement, for, as I have already said, I do not believe this was communicated to the plaintiffs. The answer, so far as the resolutions are concerned, is that the cause of action here does not impeach those resolutions properly construed, for those resolutions do not involve any agreement for postponement of any liability of the signatories on their shares.

I think, therefore, that the judgment of Cozens-Hardy, J., was wrong and that this appeal ought to be allowed with costs here and below.

As to the pleadings, whatever was originally prayed, ultimately all that was asked was a declaration, and Cozens-Hardy, J., as I understand, said he would make the necessary amendments. If they were not actually made, these amendments, looking to the issue really fought at the trial, ought, in my opinion, to be made.

Solicitors, White & De Buriatte; Spyer & Sons; Haynes & Claremont.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Byrne, J. — March 20.

In re BEDDINGTON.
MICHOLLS v. SAMUEL. (a.)

Will—Gift by testator within the period of twelve months prior to his death of property to legatee—Ademption—Advancement—Sum to be brought into account—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (c); s. 9, sub-section 1.

Where a gift inter vivos of property by a testator to a legatee constitutes an ademption pro tanto of the legacy to such legatee under the will, the sum to be brought into account by such legatee is the amount advanced less the estate duty charged on such gift.

Summons.

This was a summons to determine several points arising on the construction of the will of Maurice Beddington, deceased, who died on the 9th of September, 1898, one of which points only calls for report.

By his will dated the 30th of March, 1896, the testator directed that his residuary estate should be divided into as many equal shares as there should be daughters of his living at his death, or who should have died in his lifetime leaving a child or children who should be living at his death. And as to every share so appropriated to any daughter he directed his trustees to pay the dividends and income to such daughter for life for her separate use and without power of anticipation, and after her decease he directed that the share should be held on trust for her children or child at the age of twenty-one or marriage in the usual form.

In July, 1898, and therefore within a period less than a year before his decease, testator contributed the sum of £4,320 towards the purchase of a residential house for one of his daughters, Mrs. A. R. Micholls.

In 1897, the testator had likewise expended the sum of £4,000 on the purchase of another dwelling-house, which by an indenture of settlement, dated the 20th of June, 1898, he settled on another daughter, Fanny Behrens, her husband and children, on the trusts herein mentioned.

The testator left him surviving seven daughters.

No daughter of the testator died in his lifetime leaving a child living at his death.

The question was raised on the summons, to which three of the executors and trustees of the will were plaintiffs, and certain of the beneficiaries were defendants, whether in ascertaining the share of the residuary estate to be appropriated to Mrs. Micholls and Mrs. Behrens the sums contributed to the purchase of the said houses ought to be brought into hotchpot and accounted for by them. Byrne, J., held that in estimating the shares of these ladies in the residuary estate the sums expended on the purchase of the houses ought to be accounted for. The question then arose whether the whole of the sum advanced, or such sum less estate duty, which was payable at eight per cent., ought to be brought into account.

Norton, Q.C., and Alexander, for the trustees.

Rowden, Q.C., and Wood Hill, for Mrs. Micholls and Mrs. Behrens.—The gifts of the houses were contingently charged with estate duty at the moment they were given, and Mrs. Behren's house, at the moment that the testator gave it, was contingently subject to estate duty: Finance Act, 1894, s. 2, sub-section 1; s. 9, sub-section 1.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Levett, Q.C., and Fawcus, for a daughter of the testator, who represented the class of unadvanced daughters.

BYRNE, J.—If I thought by reserving judgment I should be likely to come to a more accurate conclusion I should do so, but I have formed my view upon it, and I propose to give it.

In this case the question arises by reason of the death of the donor of a certain gift within the year, the consequence of which is that the gift is chargeable with duty under the Finance Act. Now, the question arises by reason of the doctrine of ademption. I have held that the child who is benefited by the gift is bound to bring into account before sharing in the residue, the value of the benefit received by reason of the gift. The question of ademption, of course, never arises until the death of the donor. Then if it be held that the gift is to be treated as an advance, you have to ascertain the amount or value of that advance which has to be brought in. When the gift was made there was a liability which would arise in the event of the donor dying within the year. When he did die within the year, you are not troubled with any question of actuarial valuation as to the probable amount of this contingent liability, but you say, what was the value of the gift which was given to the child? It appears to me that the advance was an advance of property which was subject to be charged with duty in a certain event; that event having happened, the value of the property so advanced was less the amount which became a charge upon it in the event which happened, and therefore, as it appears to me, the amount to be brought in, is the value after deducting this which did become a charge upon the property so first given.

Solicitors, Montagu, Mileham, & Montagu.

---

Chan. Div.
Byrne, J. } Feb. 7, 8; March 9.

COSTA RICA RAILWAY CO. (LIMITED) v. FORWOOD. (a.)

Company—Director—Contracts—Interest of director in contracts—Disclosure—Profits—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), Table A.

The articles of association of a railway company provided for the vacation of his office by a director concerned in the profits of any contract with the company unless he declared in writing the nature of his interest, but that "no director shall vacate his office by reason of his being a member of any corporation, company, or partnership which has entered into contracts with, or done any work for, the company, or by reason of his being interested, either in his individual capacity or as a member of any company, corporation, or partnership in any adventure or undertaking in which the company may also have an interest."

The railway company sought to make the estate of a director liable for profits received by him by reason of contracts made with the company by a company and firm in which he was interested, but which interest he had not disclosed.

Held, following Imperial Mercantile Credit Association v. Coleman, 18 W. R. 570, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 558 (not overruled on this point in 21 W. R. 696, L. R. 6 H. L. Cas. 189), that the exception in the article applied, and that the action must be dismissed, there being no liability to account for profits received by reason of contracts made with the railway company.

(a.) Reported by R. A. DANIELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Action.

This action was originally commenced in 1897 by the plaintiff company against Sir Arthur Forwood, claiming a declaration that the defendant, as a director of the plaintiff company from April, 1886, to February, 1896, was liable to account for all profits made by the Atlas Steamship Co., and the firm of Leech, Harrison, & Forwood, and the firm of Pim, Forwood, & Kelloch; or, alternatively, for all profits received by defendant as a shareholder in the Atlas Co. and as a member of the said firms by means of the "banana" and "syndicate" contracts.

Sir A. Forwood having died before the action came on for trial, the action was revived against his executors, and the question arose how far the executors were liable for profits said to have been made by the deceased out of contracts entered into by the plaintiff company with the above-mentioned company and firms.

The following are the facts:

One Minor Cooper Keith had, previously to 1884, worked under a lease from the Costa Rica Government a railway running from Limon, a port on the Atlantic, inland to Carillo.

By a contract made in April, 1884, between the Republic of Costa Rica of the one part, and Keith of the other part, in consideration of the construction and fitting out by Keith of new railways, and of his repairing and altering the railways then in existence, the Republic conveyed to him the lines then in existence and the new lines for ninety-nine years, and granted him certain land.

The contract also contained a provision that upon the construction of the railways a company should be formed to take over the concession.

Keith grew bananas on a large scale. and exported large quantities of that fruit to the United States; the Carillo to Limon railway connecting the banana-growing districts with that port, whence they were shipped to New York and New Orleans. One line of steamers owned by the Atlas Steamship Co. ran between Limon and New York, and another line, owned by Phipps & Co., ran between that port and New Orleans.

Sir Arthur Forwood, the largest shareholder in the Atlas Steamship Co., was also a partner in Leech, Harrison, & Forwood, their managers, who were entitled to a percentage on the gross earnings, and was also a member of the firm of Pim, Forwood, & Kelloch, their agents in America, who were interested in the profits of the banana trade.

In April, 1886, an arrangement was made between Keith, the Atlas Co., and Phipps & Co. in reference to the railways and the carriage of bananas, which sufficiently appears by the three agreements hereafter referred to.

On 26th April, 1886, the plaintiff company was incorporated with a nominal capital of £1,800,000 in shares of £10 each.

No reference was made to the said agreements in either the memorandum or articles of association.

Article 81 provided for the vacation of office of director "if he is concerned in or participates in the profits of any contract with the company, or of any work done for the company without declaring and setting forth in writing the nature of his interest." Then follow rules as to when such declaration shall be made, and the article continues: "But the above rules shall be subject to the following exceptions:

"That no director shall vacate his office by reason of his being a member of any corporation, company, or partnership which has entered into contracts with, or done any work for, the company: or by reason of his being interested, either in his individual capacity or as a member of any company, corporation, or partnership, in any adventure or undertaking in which the company may also have an interest."

Then follows a provision that in such a case any vote given by him shall not be counted.

By the first agreement, called the "construction agreement," dated the 19th of May, 1886, made between the plaintiff company of the one part, and Keith of the other part, Keith agreed to transfer to the company the concession to construct and equip the railways within a specified time, and to pay interest upon the first mortgage debentures of the company until the completion of the railways, and until they had been taken over by the company: And it was thereby agreed that Keith should be entitled to the whole of an intended issue of first and second debentures of the company, and also to such portion of the share capital as was therein mentioned, with the exceptions therein referred to, and the company was, as and when required by Keith, to issue the whole or part of the said debentures and share capital for public subscription.

A second agreement, called the "banana agreement," dated the 19th of May, 1886, was made between the plaintiff company of the first part, Keith of the second part, the Atlas Steamship Co. of the third part, and Phipps & Co. of the fourth part. After reciting the "construction" agreement, and that Keith was carrying bananas on the Carillo to Limon railway, which he was at the time working himself; that the parties of the third and fourth parts were owners of steamers engaged in the banana carrying trade, which were, according to arrangements made with Keith, being worked in conjunction with the said railway; that the plaintiff company had consented, at the request of the parties thereto of the second, third, and fourth parts, in view of the future transfer to the plaintiff company of the said railways, to grant facilities and make arrangements with reference to the carrying on of the banana trade upon the terms therein appearing; it was agreed that the plaintiff company should, after obtaining possession of the railway, and while the said agreement remained in force, as and when requested by Keith or his agents, carry to Limon and store on vessels to be provided by the parties of the third and fourth parts all bananas tendered by Keith.

The said agreement further contained provisions dealing with the supply of special trains, the provision of berths for the vessels, and the rates of carriage, which were guaranteed to reach a certain amount per annum.

And it was thereby agreed that the privileges thereby granted should be exclusively confined to the parties thereto, and that the plaintiff company should not, while the agreement continued, confer any privileges on anyone else.

By a third agreement, called the "syndicate agreement," dated the 21st of June, 1886, and made between Keith of the first part, the Atlas Co. of the second part, and Phipps & Co. of the third part (which was to be supplemental to the "banana" contract and to be of equal duration), Keith agreed to purchase and ship at Limon all bananas the subject of the contract, and to sell to the parties of the second and third parts as therein provided all bananas in any way under his contract.

The said agreement fixed a maximum number of bananas for shipment in each year; but Keith was precluded from entering into any other contract with any other firm as to the excess.

The Atlas Co. was to sell bananas in New York for the joint account of themselves and Keith; and Phipps & Co. were to sell bananas in New Orleans for the joint account of themselves and Keith.

Provision was also made by the said agreement whereby profits should be divided or losses paid, as therein mentioned, by Keith and the company whose steamer had carried the cargo disposed of.

Sir Arthur Forwood and a member of the firm of Phipps & Co. were directors of the plaintiff company at the time when these three contracts were entered into and Sir Arthur Forwood continued in the office of director until his resignation in February, 1896.

The prospectus of the plaintiff company did not disclose the fact that Sir Arthur Forwood and Mr. Phipps were interested in the contracts of the 19th of May, 1886; nor did Sir Arthur Forwood make any disclosure of interest under article 81.

Profits were earned under the "syndicate agreement."

Neville, Q.C., and Younger, Q.C., for the plaintiff company.

Levett, Q.C., Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and Bremner, for defendants.

The following cases were cited: Imperial Mercantile Credit Association v. Coleman, 18 W. R. 570, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 558, 21 W. R. 696, L. R. 6 H. L. 189; Dunne v. English, L. R. 18 Eq. 524; Dean v. MacDowell, 26 W. R. 486 8 Ch. D. 345; Aas v. Benham, [1891] 2 Ch. 244, 39 W. R. Dig. 146; Cavendish Bentinck v. Fenn, 36 W. R. 641, 12 App. Cas. 652; Whitney v. Smith, 17 W. R. 579. L. R. 4 Ch. App. 513; Farrar v. Farrars (Limited), 37 W. R. 196. 40 Ch. D. 395; Aberdeen Railway Co. v. Blaikie, 1 Macq. 461; White v. City of London Brewery Co., 38 W. R. 82, 42 Ch. D. 237.

March 9.—BYRNE, J., stated the facts and continued:—The plaintiff company do not say that the "banana" contract was an improper contract for the railway company, but they rely on the well-known rule of equity, that no trustee or person in a fiduciary position shall be allowed to retain a profit made by means of the use of any part of the trust estate; and they say that Sir A. Forwood's executors ought to account for all profits made by the Atlas Co. and by Leech, Harrison, & Forwood by means of the "banana" and "syndicate" contracts; or, alternatively, for all profits due to the said contracts received by him as a shareholder in the Atlas Co. and as a partner in the said firm.

The railway and the undertaking of the railway company were part of the property of the plaintiff company; Sir A. Forwood, as a director, being in a fiduciary relationship to it. The "banana" contract was specially advantageous to Keith and others interested in the banana trade, and made the earning of profits easier for them; and as the largest shareholder in the Atlas Co., and senior partner in the firm of Leech & Co., Sir A. Forwood was largely interested in the sale of bananas under that contract.

In my opinion, apart from the articles of association of the plaintiff company, Sir A. Forwood's estate would be liable to account to the plaintiff company for all profits made by him personally out of the banana contract as a shareholder in the Atlas Co. and as a partner in Leech & Co. which can be traced to the benefit conferred by the "banana" contract in reference to the user of the railway.

Taking, however, the view which I do of the articles of association, it is unnecessary for me to decide the question of further liability; but I must not be taken in omitting to deal with the matter, to endorse the view that Sir A. Forwood's estate could, in the absence of articles like the present, be made liable to account for profits made by the Atlas Co. or by Leech & Co. by means of the contract. It is said that it would be hard to ascertain the amount of profit made by Sir A. Forwood owing to the benefit conferred by the "banana" contract. This might be so, but in Docker v. Somes, 2 Myl. & K. 655, at p. 667, the Lord Chancellor points out that the mere fact that it would be difficult to ascertain the amount will not prevent the court from doing so so far as it can.

The articles of association of the plaintiff company by article 81 provide for the vacation of the office of a director "if he is concerned in or participate in the profits of any contract with the company, or of any work done for the company, without declaring and setting forth the nature of his interest."

It is admitted that Sir A. Forwood's executors cannot rely on this clause, as no declaration was ever made; but they rely on the exception, "that no director shall vacate his office by reason of his being a member of any corporation, company, or partnership which has entered into contracts with or done work for the company, or by reason of his being interested either in his individual capacity or as a member of any company, corporation, or partnership in any adventure or undertaking in which the company may also have an interest," with a provision which prevents his vote being counted in such a case. I think this point is covered by the decision of Lord Hatherley, C., in Imperial Mercantile Credit Association v. Coleman. [His lordship read the article in that case and the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, and proceeded:] The Companies Act, 1862, and Table A. clearly recognize that this is a matter which may be regulated by the company's articles.

The present clause is differently worded from the clause in that case, but the reasoning of Lord Hatherley is applicable to the present case.

I had some doubt whether, owing to the use of the past tense, the present clause applied only to contracts which had been entered into prior to the appointment as a director, but I think that construction would be too narrow.

Although Lord Hatherley's decision was reversed in the House of Lords, it remains untouched as regards the present point.

Reliance was placed on what Lord Cairns then said, but Lord Cairns does not touch upon Lord Hatherley's reasoning in respect of a clause of this description, but reserves a right to reconsider the matter.

The plaintiff company therefore fail in their action, which must be dismissed.

Solicitors, Norton, Rose, Norton, & Co.; Ashurst, Morris, Crisp, & Co.

---

Chan. Div.
Cozens-Hardy, J. } March 23, 29.

In re CARTER.
DODDS v. PEARSON. (a.)

Will—Mortgage—Mortgagee in possession—Devise by mortgagee of mortgaged property.

Where a mortgagee in possession devises the mortgaged estate as if he were absolute owner thereof, the mortgage debt passes to the devisee unless, on the facts, a contrary intention can be gathered.

In re Clowes, 41 W. R. 69, [1893] 1 Ch. 214, distinguished.

(a.) Reported by R. SILLEM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Originating summons.

The testatrix Martha Carter by a codicil to her will devised her two houses and stable in George-street, Thornaby-on-Tees, to her friend James Dodds, of Stockton-on-Tees, in fee simple. The two houses and stable in question had been mortgaged to the husband of the testatrix, and the mortgagor having become bankrupt, the husband had entered into possession and was in possession at the time of his death.

By his will the husband devised and bequeathed all his real and personal property to the testatrix, and appointed her sole executrix. The testatrix had entered into possession of all her husband's property and at the time of her death she had no other property at Thornaby-on-Tees.

This was an originating summons to determine whether James Dodds was entitled to the mortgage debt secured on the property, or whether it formed part of the residuary estate.

Eve, Q.C., and St. John Clerke.—The cases show that the question must be determined by what was the testatrix's intention. There is no absolute rule on the subject, and it is clear that here the testatrix must have intended to pass whatever interest she possessed: see Jarman on Wills, vol. 1., p. 643; Woodhouse v. Meredith, 1 Mer. 450; Burdus v. Dixon, 6 W. R. 427; In re Lowman, [1895] 2 Ch. 348, 43 W. R. Dig. 195. In re Clowes, 41 W. R. 69, [1893] 1 Ch. 214, has no application to this case, as there the mortgagee was not in possession.

Micklem, Q.C., and J. G. Wood.—The rule is that the devise by the mortgagee of mortgaged property does not pass the mortgage debt. The testatrix was in possession merely as mortgagee; it was a mistake of the testatrix to assume that the property was hers, and there is nothing to show how the testatrix would have dealt with the matter if she had remembered her true position: Strode v. Russell, 2 Vern. 621, and Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 603, illustrate the true rule and also In re Clowes.

COZENS-HARDY, J., stated the facts and the question to be determined, and said that the devise was intended to pass, and sufficed to pass, such interest as the testatrix had. This was consistent with the decisions of Woodhouse v. Meredith, and Burdus v. Dixon. In In re Lowman Lindley, L.J., said ([1895] 2 Ch. at p. 354): "What, after all, is a devise of land? It is only a devise of such estate or interest as the devisor has in the land, and primâ facie whatever estate or interest this testator has in land will pass under a devise of it by that name if it is specifically referred to so as to show that the testator had that particular land in his mind, and if there is nothing else to answer the description." In re Clowes is distinguishable, as there the mortgagee was never in possession as here; and the position of a mortgagee in possession is peculiar, as the tenants are his tenants and he is their landlord. A mortgagee in possession treats himself as owner and until redeemed he regards himself as such. There is no doubt that Mrs. Carter's intention was to give the applicant the interest in the property that she had, and there is no rule of law which prevents effect being given to her intention, and the mortgage debt goes to James Dodd.

Solicitors, Warriner & Co., for A. H. Sill, Middlesborough; Williamson, Hill, & Co.

Chan. Div. } Jan. 18, 19, 26.
Cozens-Hardy, J. }

WOOLSTON v. ROSS. (a.)

Mortgage—Distress—Receiver of mortgaged property—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 19, sub-section 1 (iii.); s. 24, sub-sections 1, 2, 3.

A mortgagee, under sub-section 1 (iii.) of section 19 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, appointed a receiver of the rents of a mortgaged property. The rent of the property for one quarter was outstanding. The receiver declined to distrain, and thereupon the mortgagor put in a distress without the receiver's authority.

Held, that, after the appointment of the receiver, the mortgagor had no right to distrain, and that the distress was illegal.

The plaintiff in this action was the assignee of the lease of a house in Porchester-terrace.

The original lease was granted to Kelly on the 24th of December, 1896, for a period of twenty-one years.

It appears that some dispute had arisen immediately after the grant of the lease to Kelly, as a part of the first quarter's rent had never been paid, but subsequently rent had been duly paid.

The defendant was the owner of the equity of redemption of the property under a mortgage made since 1881.

On the 12th of July, 1898, the mortgagee appointed a receiver under sub-section 1 (iii.) of section 19 of the Conveyancing Act (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), and notice of this was served upon Kelly, who henceforward paid his rent directly to the receiver.

A question arose as to the paying of the first quarter's rent.

The receiver, after taking legal advice, declined to distrain, and informed the defendant that if he (the defendant) by any process obtained the money it would have to be paid into the account of the house in his (the receiver's) hand.

Proceedings were subsequently taken by the defendant in November, 1899, and a distress warrant was issued against the plaintiff as assignee of the lease, but was withdrawn on the payment of £80 into court.

The plaintiff claimed that distress by the mortgagor after the appointment of a receiver was illegal and asked for damages for an illegal distress.

Eve, Q.C., and Nepean, for the plaintiff, said that the receiver was the proper person to distrain. After notice of the appointment of a receiver had been given the lessee was released from his liability to pay rent to the mortgagor: Waddilove v. Barnett, 2 Bing. N. C. 538; Trent v. Hunt, 1 W. R. 481, 9 Exch. 14; Bayly v. Went, 51 L. T. Rep. 764, 33 W. R. Dig. 106.

Buckmaster, for the defendant.—The mortgagor can distrain, even after the appointment of a receiver, if he procures the consent of the receiver before doing so. Though the receiver did not authorize the mortgagor to distrain, yet he allowed him to take action.

Eve replied.

COZENS-HARDY, J.—Up to the date of the appointment of the receiver the defendant had the right to distrain, but after that date the right was vested in the receiver. The receiver, although appointed by the mortgagee, is the agent of the mortgagor, but the mortgagor cannot exercise the statutory power of distress as principal. In my opinion the distress was illegal. The distress was withdrawn by mutual agreement on payment of £80 by the plaintiff. It is not therefore necessary for me to grant an injunction.

Solicitor for plaintiff, J. G. Dalzell.

Solicitors for defendant, Downey & Linnell.

(a.) Reported by J. H. DAVIES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

---

Chan. Div. } May 11, 12, 14, 15.
Buckley, J. }

DAY v. RILEY & WHITTAKER. (a.)

Trade-mark—Rectification of register—Mark registered under Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57)—Order to expunge simply—Not subject to application to amend.

Semble, leave should not now be given to amend a bad trade-mark, which was originally registered under the Act of 1883.

The court rejected the owner's contention that an order to expunge his mark, which had been registered under the Act of 1883, should only be made subject to an application to amend being made by him within a reasonable time, but made an order to expunge the mark absolutely.

In re Wills' Trade-Mark, [1893] 2 Ch. 262, 41 W. R. Dig. 252, not followed.

Motion.

This was an application by the defendants to rectify the register by striking out two registered trade-marks, No. 70,347 and another, belonging to the plaintiff, and was heard with the plaintiff's action, which was to restrain infringement of the marks, infringement of copyright in a certain label, and passing off by the defendants of their goods as the goods of the plaintiff.

The mark No. 70,347 was in respect of a medicine for horses, cattle, and sheep, called Day & Sons' Black Drink, made by the plaintiff, and the mark consisted of the whole of a label fixed upon every bottle sold by the plaintiff. The label contained on the left side at the head of the label a device with words upon it, with the word "registered" above, and the words "trade-mark" below the device in question. On the right of the device occurred the words "Day & Sons' Black Drink or Colic and Scour Mixture," and then followed directions as to how the mixture was to be used.

This label was composed by the plaintiff in 1887.

The application to register was made on the 6th of December, 1887, and the mark appeared in the Trade-Marks Journal under date the 18th of July, 1888, and was registered on the 19th of November, 1888.

It was now admitted that the mark could not be supported as it stood, but the plaintiff asked that the order to expunge should be made subject to an application to amend being made within a reasonable time, as was done in In re Wills' Trade-Mark, [1893] 2 Ch. 262, 41 W. R. Dig. 252.

H. Terrell, Q.C., and Austen Cartmell, for the motion.

Astbury, Q.C., and Arnold Herbert, contra.

BUCKLEY, J., after granting an injunction against the defendants on the passing off claim, and pointing out that the plaintiff had given up his other claims, continued as follows with regard to mark No. 70,347: The Act of 1888 only came into operation on the 1st of January, 1889, so that the application to register was made under the Act of 1883. Here the respondents on the motion admit that they cannot support the mark as a mark for reasons which I need not go into:

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

but they ask to put the order in the form that was used by Wright, J., in In re Wills' Trade-Mark, making an order expunging the mark unless an application to amend is made within a reasonable time. That is an order I could not make in the absence of the comptroller, because the usual undertaking has been taken; but what I have to consider is whether I ought to make that order at all. It is plain the respondents want the order in that form because they desire to preserve to themselves the benefit of the Act of 1883, and not to register anew under the Act of 1888. If I expunge the mark from the register of course it will be competent to them to make another application to register another mark which may be free from objection; but now that will have to be such a mark as will comply with the Act of 1888. It seems to me that the mark is wrong, and, if it is wrong, I ought not to give the respondent an opportunity of availing himself of the benefit of the Act of 1883, now that an Act which must be taken to be a wiser and more useful Act has passed which took effect in January, 1889. As regards this mark, therefore, I must simply make an order expunging it from the register.

Judgment for the applicants.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Woosnam & Smith, for C. H. Pedley, Crewe.

Solicitors for the defendants, Pritchard, Englefield, & Co., for D. L. Sprake, Accrington.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Darling and Bucknill, JJ.) May 30.

SHERRARD v. GASCOIGNE. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Ground game—Agreement divesting the right of the occupier to kill—Validity—Ground Game Act, 1880 (43 & 44 Vict. c. 47), s. 3.

An agreement by the owner of a farm, whereby he undertakes, in the event of his tenant forbearing to kill the ground game, to compensate him for loss or damage done to his crops by the ground game, is void by section 3 of the Ground Game Act, 1880.

Point of law raised by the pleadings in an action, and set down to be disposed of before the trial.

The action was brought by a tenant to recover from his landlord the sum of £178 15s. alleged to be due under an agreement whereby the defendant agreed to compensate the plaintiff for damage done to the plaintiff's growing crops by ground game.

The statement of claim alleged as follows:

In January, 1895, the plaintiff became, and has since continued to be, the tenant to the defendant of Huddlestone Hall Farm and Newthorpe Farm, in the West Riding of Yorkshire; and during the negotiations for the tenancy the defendant's agent represented to the plaintiff that the defendant was devoted to shooting, and, with a view to induce the plaintiff to leave the ground game on the farms unshot and undisturbed for the defendant's benefit, the defendant's agent, on his behalf, promised that in the event of the plaintiff so doing the defendant would compensate the plaintiff for all damage done to the plaintiff's crops by the ground game. The plaintiff was induced by the said promise to accept the tenancy, and during the year 1898, in reliance upon and induced by the said promise, allowed the ground game on the farms to go unshot and undisturbed for the benefit of the defendant, who ultimately shot over the farms. The growing crops of the plaintiff were damaged by the ground game.

The defendant, among other defences, pleaded that the alleged agreement was void by section 3 of the Ground Game Act, 1880.

Section 1 of the Act declares that "every occupier of land shall have as incident to and inseparable from his occupation of the land the right to kill and take ground game thereon concurrently with any other person who may be entitled to kill and take ground game on the same land."

Section 3 provides that "every agreement, condition, or arrangement which purports to divest or alienate the right of the occupier as declared, given and reserved to him by this Act, or which gives such occupier any advantage in consideration of his forbearing to exercise such right, or imposes upon him any disadvantage in consequence of his exercising such right, shall be void."

Scott Fox, Q.C. (H. T. Kemp with him), for the defendant, cited Anderson v. Vicary, [1899] 2 Q. B. 436.

C. Walsh (Macaskie with him), for the plaintiff.—It is true that the plaintiff's agreement to forbear from shooting the ground game is bad. But the defendant's promise to compensate the plaintiff for damage done by ground game is, nevertheless, good, because it was made not in consideration of the plaintiff's forbearance to shoot or disturb the ground game, but in consideration of the reservation to the defendant in the lease of the concurrent right to shoot the ground game.

DARLING, J.—It appears to me perfectly clear that the agreement alleged in the statement of claim is an agreement which purports to divest or alienate the right of the occupier as declared in the Act, and that it also purports to give him an advantage in consideration of his forbearing to exercise his right. I therefore think that the agreement was absolutely void, and the plaintiff's action must fail.

BUCKNILL, J., concurred.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors for the defendant, Williamson & Son, for Perkin & Perkin, York.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Vincent & Vincent, for North & Sons, Leeds.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Ridley and Darling, JJ.) May 10.

BEAUMONT v. BOWERS (SURVEYOR OF TAXES). (a.)

Inland revenue—Income tax—Deduction—Poor law officer—Contribution to superannuation fund—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 146—Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 50), s. 12.

An officer or servant in the employ of poor law guardians is entitled, by section 146 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, to deduct from the amount of his salary on which income tax is payable the amount deducted from his salary for the purpose of the superannuation fund under the powers conferred by the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896.

Case stated by Commissioners of Inland Revenue.

The appellant was appointed clerk to the Guardians of the Poor of the Wakefield Union and the Assessment Committee and School Attendance Committee of that Union on the 4th of March, 1884, a date prior to the commencement of the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896, which came into operation from and immediately after the 29th of September, 1896. The appellant did not exercise the option allowed to him as such officer or servant by signifying in writing to the aforesaid authorities within three months after the commencement of the Act, in pursuance of section 15 thereof, his intention not to avail himself of the provisions of the Act.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The appellant was assessed to the income tax under Schedule E for the year ended the 5th of April, 1899, in the sum of £510, the amount of his salaries as such clerk. From this sum was deducted £221 for expenses wholly necessary and exclusively borne by him in the performance of the duties of the appointments which he held, such deductions being claimed and made under section 53 of the Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), leaving duty payable on the net sum of £289.

The appellant claimed that the assessment was excessive by the duty on a sum of £15 10s. deducted from or paid and borne by him for contributions made annually by him under the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of the Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act of 1896, and it was admitted by the surveyor of taxes that no allowance or deduction for such contribution had been made in computing the assessment.

Section 12 of the Act makes an annual contribution, according to a scale fixed by section 13, compulsory on every officer to whom the Act applies.

Section 7 provides on certain conditions of resignation or misconduct for the forfeiture of all benefits, and of all contributions made for such benefits, while allowing the employing authority the discretion of returning in such case the whole or part of the contributions made.

Section 8 provides that if an officer who has not at the time become entitled to benefit loses his appointment through no fault or act of his own, the whole of his contributions shall be returned to him. In return for these contributions the Act provides for the superannuation of the officer after serving forty years, or on his attaining sixty-five years of age, and in other circumstances.

These contributions are not set aside to form a special fund out of which the superannuation allowances become payable, but they are paid into the common fund of the union or unions in whose service the officer is for the time being for the years in question, and practically go towards the relief of the rates, and when the superannuation allowance becomes payable it has to be paid out of the common fund of the union in whose service the officer then is at the time, and practically becomes a charge on the rates of that union.

The assessment to income tax in respect of a public office such as the appellant held is laid under the general charging rule of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, s. 2, Schedule E, into which has to be read the rules for charging the duties assessable under the now obsolete Schedule E of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, s. 146, the first of which rules charges all persons holding public offices with tax on all "salaries, wages, fees, perquisites, or profits, after deducting therefrom the amount of duties or other sums payable or chargeable on the same by virtue of any Act of Parliament where the same have been really and bonâ fide paid and borne by the party to be charged."

The appellant based his claim on the words "after deducting the amount of duties or other sums payable or chargeable on the same by virtue of any Act of Parliament, where the same have been really and bonâ fide paid and borne by the party to be charged" in section 146 of the Act of 1842.

The commissioners refused to allow the appellant's claim and confirmed the assessment, subject to this case, the question for the court being whether the amount paid by the appellant under the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of the Act of 1896 was a proper deduction to be made from his salary, fees, and emoluments as clerk to the guardians and of the other appointments held in connection therewith, in arriving at the profits upon which he was liable to be assessed for income tax purposes.

Asquith, Q.C. (Roskill with him), for the appellant.—The appellant is entitled to the deduction claimed, for the payments to the superannuation fund come within the words "duties or other sums payable or chargeable on the same by virtue of any Act of Parliament," in section 146 of the Act of 1842.

Rowlatt (Sir R. B. Finlay, A.G., and Danckwerts, Q.C., with him), for the respondent.—The decision of the commissioners was right. The payment is not within section 146. If it were, it would have been unnecessary to expressly authorize by section 54 of the Income Tax Act of 1853 a deduction similar to, but not including, that made from the appellant's salary. If the appellant's argument is right, the deduction authorized by section 54 of the Act of 1853 might have been equally made under section 146, and the former section would not have been required.

RIDLEY, J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the commissioners was wrong and that this appeal must be allowed. The Poor Law Officers' Superannuation Act, 1896, provides by section 12 that every officer and servant in the employment of the guardians of a union shall contribute annually for the purposes of the Act a percentage of his salary, according to the scale laid down by the Act, and such amount is to be from time to time deducted from the salary of such officer. Primâ facie it appears to me to be rightly contended on behalf of the appellant that the amount so deducted is a sum "payable or chargeable" by virtue of an Act of Parliament within the meaning of rule 1 of Schedule E of the Income Tax Act of 1842, s. 146, and therefore it is right that it should be deducted from the amount of the salary to be charged with income tax. An argument has been raised for the respondent, based on section 54 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, which provides that any person who shall under any Act of Parliament be liable for the payment of an annual sum or to have an annual sum deducted from his salary in order to secure a deferred annuity to his widow or a provision to his children after his death, shall be entitled to deduct the amount of the annual sum paid by him or deducted from his salary from the sum in respect of which he is liable to be assessed. It is argued that as it was necessary to make that express enactment, which does not apply to cases like the present, because the only payments referred to are payments to widows and children after death, therefore payments of this description are not covered by the Act of 1842. The answer to this argument is that a certain portion of the ground is twice covered, but section 54 of the Act of 1853 is only dealing with questions of insurance—that is to say, benefits arising after death. That is the primary object of the section, but, in order that the whole ground may be covered, the section goes on to say that even when the payment for insurance is not voluntary, but is deducted from the salary under some statutory authority, it shall also come within the section and be deducted from the sum on which income tax is payable. That provision is only inserted, in my view, because it is a matter analogous to that which is dealt with by the earlier part of the section. In order to hold that the sum deducted in the present case is not a sum within the words "payable or chargeable" by virtue of an Act of Parliament, one would have to give a very limited meaning to the language of the Act of 1842. In my opinion the argument for the respondent fails, and this appeal must be allowed.

DARLING, J.—I am of the same opinion. The deduction is claimed by the appellant on the ground that he is entitled to deduct from the amount of his salary chargeable with income tax "the amount of duties or other sums payable or chargeable on the same by virtue of any Act of Parliament." This sum, the deduction of which is claimed, is a sum which the appellant has contributed to the superannuation fund by virtue of an Act of Parliament—namely, the Act of 1896. It is perfectly plain from the provisions of that Act that the appellant might have the deduction made from his salary and yet never receive any benefit from it by reason of his death or other circumstances. It would therefore be working a very great injustice if income tax were to be charged on something which the appellant might never receive. The main argument on behalf of the respondent is derived from section 54 of the Income Tax Act, 1853, which section, it is said, would be wholly unnecessary if the appellant's contention is correct. I was at first somewhat impressed with this argument, but in fact section 54 does not cover all the ground of section 146. To some extent, no doubt, the two sections do deal with similar matters, but I am unable to deduce from that fact alone that the language of section 146 is not to be construed in its natural meaning. If so construed, the appellant's case clearly comes within the language of the section.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for appellant, Bridges, Sawtell, & Co., for Fulliamy & Son, Ipswich.

Solicitor for respondent, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

---

Q. B. Div.
(Ridley and Darling, JJ.) April 9.

GUARDIANS OF THE CAMBRIDGE UNION (Appellants) v. GUARDIANS OF THE EDMONTON UNION (Respondents). (a.)

Poor law—Settlement—Removal of pauper—Irremovability—Break of residence.

A., a pauper, having an original settlement in the Union, had by residence become irremovable in the Union, and was sent to the E. Workhouse. Her son was in the C. Workhouse, and, in order to be with him, she obtained her discharge from the E. Workhouse and went to reside for a week with a relative in another union in order to break her status of irremovability in the Union, after which she returned to the E. Workhouse, in order to be sent to the C. Union.

Held, that an order for her removal to the C. Union was rightly made.

Case stated by the court of quarter sessions for the county of Middlesex upon the hearing of an appeal against an order made by two justices of the peace for the county, for the removal from the Edmonton Union to the Cambridge Union of Rebecca Watson, aged 72, an inmate of the Edmonton Union Workhouse.

The court of quarter sessions dismissed the appeal with costs, subject to this case.

The following facts were admitted at the hearing of the appeal: That at the time the said Rebecca Watson left Cambridge, as hereinafter mentioned, the place of her last legal settlement was the parish of St. Mary-the-Less, in the Cambridge Union, and that she had since acquired no other settlement.

That on the 7th of December, 1891, she went from Cambridge to reside with her sister, at 29, Milton-road, in the Edmonton Union, where she lived continuously up to the 11th of September, 1893, when she went into the Edmonton Workhouse, and that by such residence she had, at the time she went into the said workhouse, acquired a status of irremovability from the Edmonton Union.

That the only question for the quarter sessions to decide was, whether she retained the status of irremovability so acquired by her in the Edmonton Union up to the time of making the order of removal on the 26th of January, 1899.

The following facts were proved by the evidence of the pauper and her niece:

That the pauper's son had resided with his mother up to the time of her going into the Edmonton Workhouse and that he went there with his mother.

That on the 8th of September, 1898, he took his discharge from the said workhouse and went to reside with his cousin in the parish of West Ham, in the West Ham Union.

That he subsequently returned to the parish of Edmonton and was re-admitted into the Edmonton Workhouse.

That on or about the 7th of December, 1898, he was removed to the Cambridge Union, where his settlement was.

That Rebecca Watson took her discharge from the Edmonton Workhouse on the 9th of January, 1899, as she wanted to be passed on to the union workhouse at Cambridge where she belonged, as her son had been, who was still there; and went without any warning to the residence of her niece in the parish of West Ham, and asked if she could stay there.

That she stayed with her niece in the West Ham Union until the 16th of January, 1899, when she left with the intention of returning to the Edmonton Union Workhouse, in order to be passed on to the Cambridge Union Workhouse, and went to her sister's house in the parish of Edmonton and stayed until the following day, when she was re-admitted into the Edmonton Workhouse.

The court of quarter sessions found that when Rebecca Watson left the Edmonton Union on the 9th of January, 1899, she left it with the intention of residing with her son in the Cambridge Union Workhouse and with the intention of not returning to the Edmonton Union to live there; and that when she did return to the Edmonton Union it was not with the intention of permanently residing within it, and on these findings they held that Rebecca Watson had, when she left the Edmonton Union on the 9th of January, 1899, broken her residence therein, and lost the status of irremovability therefrom previously acquired by her, and that she was therefore properly removable from the Edmonton Union to the Cambridge Union when the order of the 29th of January, 1899, was obtained.

R. D. Muir, for the appellants (the Guardians of the Cambridge Union).—The question is, did the pauper's visit to West Ham constitute a break in her residence within the respondent union? She had no intention of making a new home at West Ham, and that being so a mere intention to break her residence in the respondent union was not sufficient. A residence in one parish coupled with an intention to reside permanently in another parish is not sufficient to break the residence. The pauper in the present case had no intention of permanently residing at West Ham, she only wished to break her residence in the Edmonton Union in order that she might be sent to the workhouse in the Cambridge Union, where she intended to reside permanently.

(a.) Reported by P. B. DURNFORD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

He cited Reg. v. St. Ives, 20 W. R. 657, L. R. 7 Q. B. 467, at p. 470.

R. Cunningham Glen, for the respondents.—It is immaterial whether the pauper's residence in West Ham was intended to be permanent or not. In order to break a residence there need be no intention to reside permanently in the parish to which the pauper removes. Any break in the residence, made intentionally, and with the object of breaking the residence, is sufficient to destroy the status of irremovability.

He cited Reg. v. Worcester Union, 22 W. R. 572, L. R. 9 Q. B. 340; Newark Union v. Glanford Brigg Union, 26 W. R. 42, 2 Q. B. D. 522.

RIDLEY, J.—In this case we have come to the conclusion that the order should not be interfered with. The facts are rather peculiar, and do not seem likely to occur again, or to form a precedent for other cases; but I do not think that a pauper who wishes to be removed from the union in which he is situated can be transferred to another simply by stopping a week on the way, and then saying that by so doing there has been a break, in the residence which is required in order to give him the status of irremovability.

If that were so, it seems to me that it would be very inconvenient, and I do not find it laid down in any of the authorities, all of which turn upon the question of the period of time necessary to give the status, and whether that period has been broken. In the case of Reg. v. St. Ives the pauper left the parish with the intention of returning to it. In the case of Reg. v. Glossop Union, 14 W. R. 329, L. R. 1 Q. B. 227, there was no intention of returning. In the present case the pauper left with the intention of being sent to the Cambridge Union, and of never returning to Edmonton to reside, but without the intention of residing permanently in the union to which she first went. There is this saving fact which enables us to say that the order is right—that the pauper did in point of fact leave the Edmonton Union for the purpose of being passed on to Cambridge, and that I think enables us to affirm this order. I am anxious to do so, because I think it was the pauper's wish to be sent to the Cambridge Union, and I should have thought it a hardship if she had been prevented from being sent to the union where her son was.

DARLING, J.—I confess that I have less doubt in this case than my learned brother. The facts are that this old woman had a settlement in the Cambridge Union, and she had an invalid son who also had the same settlement. By residing in the union of Edmonton she became irremovable there, and ultimately both she and her son went into the Edmonton Workhouse, and in the end her son was removed to the Cambridge Workhouse as being his place of settlement. His mother being anxious to join him got discharged from the Edmonton Workhouse, and went to a relative at West Ham for a week for the purpose of breaking her irremovability in the Edmonton Union, and then returned to Edmonton Workhouse for the purpose of being sent to join her son in the Cambridge Workhouse. By virtue of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, and the subsequent Acts amending it, she had become irremovable in the parish of Edmonton by having resided there more for than a year. I think that that statute was passed, not to make it more inconvenient for a pauper, but for his benefit, to prevent him from being hustled about from one place to another. I do not think that the statute intended to deprive a pauper of his original settlement if he wished to retain it and took the proper steps to do so. Now, in this case the pauper left the Edmonton Union meaning never to come back as a resident there. That is clear from the case, for it is found that she left the Edmonton Union with the intention of residing with her son in the Cambridge Workhouse. She left, therefore, with the intention of leaving the union for good and of getting to Cambridge and staying there. She could not have been removed because she had acquired a status of irremovability, but she was at liberty to go away if she liked. She did not go direct to Cambridge because she was a pauper, and, I suppose, had not the means, but she went to some friends in another union, meaning to return to the Edmonton Workhouse, not in order to stay there, but in order to be sent by the authorities to her original settlement—that is to say, to Cambridge. Accordingly, after a short visit she returned to the Edmonton Workhouse, and she was sent on to Cambridge, and the question we have to decide is whether the order sending her on is right or not. Now, what is the test? In Reg. v. St. Ives Quain, J., who does not differ from what the other judges decided, expresses it very clearly. "The point," he says, "is not only whether a person has left one parish, but whether he intended to reside permanently in another." Applying that to this case, it is clear that the pauper when she left Edmonton did intend to reside permanently in another—that is to say, in Cambridge. She returned to Edmonton, it is true, but only in order to be sent to Cambridge, just as she might go to a railway station to take a ticket. I do not think that any of the authorities prevent us from saying that she had broken her status of irremovability in Edmonton, and that the quarter sessions were right in affirming the order sending her back to her original settlement in Cambridge.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellants, Congreve, Cambridge.

Solicitor for the respondents, F. Shelton, Lower Tottenham.

Court of Appeal.

App. Bankruptcy.
(Webster, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) May 25.

In re BEBRO.
Ex parte G. GIBBONS. (a.)

Bankruptcy — Petition — Withdrawal of petition on undertaking by debtor to pay sum larger than original debt, interest, and costs—Second petition based on substituted debt—Refusal to make receiving order—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 7, sub-sections 3, 7.

Although it is true that in bankruptcy the court is entitled, under section 7, sub-section 3, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, to look behind the judgment on which a petition is based, and, in cases where it appears that the judgment was obtained under circumstances which constitute de facto extortion, to refuse to make any receiving order; yet the mere fact that a petitioning creditor has withdrawn some previous petition on the terms that he was to receive from the debtor a sum larger than his principal, interest, and costs does not in itself amount to any such de facto extortion.

Per Webster, M.R.—The court ought not to give its leave, under section 7, sub-section 7, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, to the withdrawal of a creditor's petition by consent until it has first been thoroughly satisfied as to the facts under, and the conditions on, which such petition is being withdrawn.

Appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Giffard made on the 14th of May, 1900.

On the 30th of September, 1899, the petitioning creditor, George Gibbons, issued a writ against the debtor, Marcus Bebro, to recover the sum of £115 10s. due to him on a bill of exchange for £115 which had been accepted by the debtor. On the 7th of October judgment was obtained against Bebro for the sum of £115 15s. 4d. and £9 1s. 4d. costs; and on the 26th of October a bankruptcy petition was filed against the debtor in respect of these two sums. The hearing of this petition was fixed for the 14th of November, but prior to that date the creditor agreed with the debtor, at the request of the latter, that on the debtor paying the said sum of £9 1s. 4d. for costs and the costs of the bankruptcy proceedings, and on his giving the creditor a fresh bill for £130 payable at two months, the petition should be dismissed, on its being withdrawn by consent, with the leave of the court, under section 7, sub-section 7, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. A bill for £130 payable at two months was accordingly drawn, and was accepted by Bebro on the 14th of November; and the petition was dismissed on the 28th of November, the registrar being ignorant, at the time of its dismissal, of the terms upon which it was withdrawn.

On the 29th of January, 1900, Gibbons recovered judgment against the debtor for the said sum of £130 and costs; and on the 1st of February a bankruptcy petition was filed by him in respect of the said judgment.

This petition came on for hearing before Mr. Registrar Giffard on the 14th of May, and a receiving order was made against Bebro.

From this decision Bebro now appealed.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., and Muir Mackenzie.—Whenever a petitioner withdraws his petition on the terms that he is to receive more from the debtor than his principal, interest, and costs, that fact in itself amounts to extortion in the eyes of the law: Re G., Ex parte B., 44 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 345. We admit that in the present case there has been no extortion except in this legal sense. But that is immaterial. We rely also on In re Atkinson, 9 Marr. 193; In re Otway, [1895] 1 Q. B. 812, 43 W. R. Dig. 17; In re Betts, 45 W. R. 98, [1897] 1 Q. B. 50; and Smith v. Bromley, 2 Doug. 695.

Rufus Isaacs, Q.C., and Harold S. Simmons.—The principle laid down by the appellant is unsupported by authority; for In re G., Ex parte B., was decided on the point that there existed in that case actual de facto extortion. Unless there is also such de facto extortion in the present case, the mere fact that the petition was withdrawn on the terms that the petitioner was to receive more than his principal, interest, and costs does not now disentitle him to get his receiving order. If it were so to disentitle him, the door would be opened to serious fraud. A debtor might persuade his creditors to withdraw a petition on the promise of paying higher interest, and might then proceed to repudiate his promise in bankruptcy. In the question of what amounts to de facto extortion, it is important to ascertain which side made the first move. Here the first move was made by the debtor.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., replied.

WEBSTER, M.R.—In this case the learned registrar is of opinion that there has been no extortion in fact. But the case has been put on higher ground; and it has been argued that, if a petitioning creditor withdraws his petition, even upon the express and earnest solicitation of his debtor, on the understanding that the latter is to pay him a sum greater than the original debt, interest, and costs, that fact in itself, apart from all actual extortion or harshness, amounts to extortion in law. Now, I think that the true view is that laid down by Fry, L.J., in Re Atkinson, 9 Morr. 193, at p. 196: "In my opinion, the moment the court sees the petition is made a means of extorting money, a petitioner should not be able to get a receiving order." I think, again—though it is, of course, perfectly true that there might still be extortion even in a case where the request to withdraw the petition came in the first place from the debtor himself—that the court must be satisfied, before it will refuse a receiving order, that the petition and proceedings have been utilized in order to get from the debtor a larger amount than would otherwise have been possible. It is said that the court meant to decide more than this in In re G., Ex parte B. As I read that case—and I am subject to the correction of my brother Rigby, who was one of the Lord Justices who decided it—the registrar was there of opinion that there had been actual extortion, and there is nothing in the short report of the judgment to justify the construction that the debtor now seeks to put on it. It is possible, however, that the practice of the court has drifted into too lax an attitude on the matter of consenting to the withdrawal of bankruptcy petitions. I think that section 7 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, should be the real criterion, and that the court should not give its consent without being put into full possession of all the facts and terms.

RIGBY, L.J.—I have arrived at the same conclusion. I agree also with what the Master of the Rolls has said about In re G., Ex parte B. In that case the learned registrar had come to the conclusion that there had been de facto extortion, and when such is the case it matters nothing whether the proposal to withdraw the petition came originally from the creditor or the debtor.

(a.) Reported by J. E. MORRIS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

COLLINS, L.J.—The law has not yet gone far enough to support Mr. Reed's suggestion. I think, indeed, that in In re G., Ex parte B., the learned registrar invited the Court of Appeal to take the wider view, but that the court declined to take the point, and decided purely on the facts of that particular case. It may be that the Legislature would be justified in going a step further, and in making it impossible for a petitioner to withdraw his petition on his own motion. But it certainly has not gone so far at present. Hitherto the courts have shrunk from allowing the larger principle.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Braham Barnett; J. J. Hands.

---

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, M.R., and Rigby and Collins, L.JJ.) — May 3.

ROWLLS v. BEBB. (a.)

Will—Tenant for life and remainderman—Power for trustees to postpone conversion—Power of management—Direction as to income of unconverted property—Property not yielding income.

If a discretionary power to trustees to postpone conversion is coupled with a direction that the tenant for life is to have the income of unconverted property, the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137, is excluded by virtue of such direction, and the trustees can, in exercise of their discretion, postpone the conversion even of property that does not yield any income, so that the remaindermen are benefited at the expense of the tenant for life.

The discretionary power of the trustees is, however, only a power of management, and cannot be exercised so as to affect the rights of beneficiaries, except in the course of the management of the estate as a whole.

Where, therefore, the only item of outstanding estate consisted of a reversion to a sum of Consols set apart under a previous will to answer an annuity to the tenant for life,

Held, that the representatives of the tenant for life were entitled to be recouped the income which the tenant for life would have enjoyed if such reversion had been sold in her lifetime, inasmuch as the trustees had not in fact exercised their discretion, and could not properly—having regard to the state of the testator's property—have exercised their discretion, by postponing the conversion if their attention had been directed to the matter.

This was an appeal from a decision of Stirling, J. The facts were as follow:

Alfred Rowlls Rowlls by his will devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to two trustees upon trust for conversion and investment, with a power for the trustees to vary investments at their discretion; then to pay to or permit the testator's sister, Alice Rowlls Rowlls, to receive the income of the investments during her life, and after her death to stand possessed of the trust funds upon trusts for her children. But if no child of Alice Rowlls Rowlls should attain a vested interest in the trust funds, then they were to go to the trustees beneficially in moieties.

Then came the following clause: "And I declare that no sale of my real or leasehold estate shall be made in the lifetime of my said sister Alice Rowlls Rowlls, without her previous consent in writing, and that my trustees shall have a discretionary power to postpone for such period as to them shall seem expedient the conversion or getting in of any part of my residuary personal estate which shall at my decease consist of stocks, funds, shares, and securities of any description whatever, but the unsold real estate and outstanding personal estate shall be subject to the trusts hereinbefore contained concerning the moneys, stocks, funds, and securities aforesaid, and the rents and yearly produce thereof shall be deemed annual income for the purposes of such trusts, and such real estate shall be transmissible as personal estate under and for the purposes of the ultimate trusts hereinbefore contained."

The testator died in 1887. Part of his residuary personal estate consisted of a reversionary interest in a sum of Consols which had been set apart under the will of his father to answer an annuity in favour of his sister Alice Rowlls Rowlls, the tenant for life under his will. Under the testator's will Alice Rowlls Rowlls became entitled to a life interest in a very considerable property. At the time of the testator's death she was aged thirty-five. She subsequently became a lunatic, and died in 1899 a spinster. As she died intestate and without relations, her estate passed to the Crown. The reversionary interest in Consols fell in on her death, and it was contended on behalf of the Crown that this reversionary interest ought to have been realized in her lifetime, and that this not having been done her estate was entitled to be recouped to the extent of the income which she would have enjoyed if the conversion had been made.

Stirling, J., held, on the construction of the will and the authority of Mackie v. Mackie, 5 Hare 70, that this contention was inadmissible.

The Crown appealed

Before Stirling, J., the question whether the trustees had acted wrongly in postponing the conversion was not raised, and his decision was without prejudice to any claim which the Crown might have by reason of the delay in conversion. It was agreed that the Court of Appeal should decide the question left open by Stirling, J., and evidence was adduced on this point. Upon this evidence the court, as appears from the judgments, came to the conclusion that the trustees had in fact exercised no discretion at all in postponing the conversion of the reversionary interest, but had simply omitted to convert it without considering the question whether it ought to have been converted and the proceeds of conversion invested so as to produce income for the tenant for life.

By their notice of appeal the appellants claimed that interest ought to be allowed at the rate of 4 per cent.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., and Joyce, for the appeal.

Butcher, Q.C., and Hon. F. Russell, contra.

Joyce replied.

The following cases were referred to: Mackie v. Mackie, 5 Hare 70; Johnston v. Moore, 6 W. R. 490; In re Pitcairn, 44 W. R. 200, [1896] 2 Ch. 199; In re Goodenough, 44 W. R. 44, [1895] 2 Ch. 537.

LINDLEY, M.R.—In this case we have to consider a question of some difficulty both on the construction of the will and also upon what has been done under the will since the death of the testator. [His lordship stated the facts and read the clause in the will set out above, and continued:] Here we have not only a discretionary power to postpone for such period as to the trustees shall seem expedient the conversion of the testator's residuary personal estate, but a direction which applies to the income, if any, of the unsold real estate and outstanding personal estate—in other words, if the conversion of any of the testator's residuary personal estate should be postponed, then the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137, as I understand it, is excluded by the words which I have just read. Now, pausing there for a moment and assuming this discretionary power to have been properly exercised and that the conversion of the residuary personal estate was postponed in the exercise of that power, it appears to me, on the authority of Mackie v. Mackie, that the decision of Stirling, J., is right. Mackie v. Mackie covers and decides a point which but for that would be a little difficult—that is to say, whether this clause relating to the produce of the unsold real estate and outstanding personal estate can apply to property which does not yield income. That is a little nut which was cracked in Mackie v. Mackie by the Vice-Chancellor of England holding that it did, and Stirling, J., has taken the same view. It is upon this principle that if you look at the will as a whole the tenant for life is to take the income of the residuary personal estate for better or for worse. Howe v. Lord Dartmouth does not apply against the tenant for life or in her favour. In other words, if the property is yielding more income than she is entitled to, if you apply that principle she is to have it, and if less she is to go without it. Upon that authority (which settles a point of some little difficulty) I have come to the conclusion that upon the true construction of the will the view of Stirling, J., was correct.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

But another point, a totally different one, has been raised before us, and that is as to what has been done since the testator's death. Stirling, J., assumed that the discretionary power had been exercised by the trustees, but it has been by consent agreed that we should investigate that question ourselves upon such evidence as counsel have thought right to lay before us, and they have laid before us some affidavits and exhibits and a letter and an affidavit by the trustees in reply. Now, although it is quite true that these trustees were trustees and executors and residuary legatees, and although it is quite true that it was to their advantage that the reversionary interest which formed a portion of the testator's trust estate should not be converted, yet I am satisfied from the evidence which is against them as well as from the evidence which is for them that they never exercised this power with a view to benefit themselves. I am perfectly satisfied that this point about converting under the rule of Howe v. Lord Dartmouth a reversionary interest to the income of which the tenant for life was entitled under another will never crossed their minds at all, and it requires the keen eyes of an extremely good equity lawyer to see that there is such a point. However, there it is. They did not see it and they never thought of it. I do not mean they did not think of the reversionary interest. They knew that the testator had the reversionary interest and they knew that the sister was receiving the income of it, but they never dreamt that she was also entitled to have the reversion of that sum of which she was already in the receipt of the income turned into money. It never occurred to them at all, and I am satisfied from their own evidence that although they knew they had this discretionary power, and although they knew there was a reversion, they never dreamt that the tenant for life was entitled to have that reversion sold, and the proceeds invested so as to increase her income. It would not occur to ninety-nine men out of a hundred. It was an oversight. Now, before I go further, I will consider what is the scope of this discretionary power. Suupposing they had thought of it, what does it mean? It strikes me, and it follows from what I have already said about Mackie v. Mackie, that if this power had been exercised and the reversionary interest which ought to have been sold had not been sold it would have altered the relative positions of the tenant for life and the remaindermen. I do not doubt that, but it does not at all follow that this discretionary power is anything more than a power of management. What I mean is this, there is nothing in these words, to my mind, which would give the trustees a right to say, apart from managing the estate, "We will postpone selling the reversion in the interest of the children at the expense of the tenant for life." I do not think that would be within the power at all. That means this: "We will, under the power of management which if exercised might and will to a certain extent vary the rights of the tenant for life and of the remaindermen, do more than that, we will make the tenant for life benefit the remaindermen whether she likes it or not." I do not think that is the scope of it, and the method of treating it is this. Supposing the tenant for life had insisted upon the conversion of this reversionary interest, could the trustees have possibly refused? I think not. The position of the property is important. There was no wasting property here. I am not speaking of the leaseholds, because that is another matter; but apart from those, amongst the residuary personal estate there was no property yielding more income to the benefit of the tenant for life than she would be entitled to. There was nothing, therefore, which as a matter of management would justify the trustees in saying "There is some property which might have been converted and that would reduce the income of the tenant for life, but there is a reversionary interest which ought to be sold and which will increase the income, and as a matter of management we will not convert either." They might have done that, but there was no such property. There was nothing to be gained by anybody by preserving this reversionary interest as unsold, except, of course, what would accrue to the remaindermen. I throw this out because I am perfectly satisfied that these gentlemen were not intending to benefit themselves. They never thought of it. If I am right that they never did think about this power, and that they could not if they had thought of it in this particular instance have properly refused to convert this reversionary interest, what follows? It follows that the tenant for life's executors or administrators (now represented by the Crown, she having died intestate and without any relatives) are entitled to have that income which she has lost during her life made good out of the capital of the estate. I think there is no answer to that view unless we take another view of the case altogether to which I will allude now, and which I think is admissible. It has been suggested to us that this lady when her brother died was 35 years of age, and that she thought of marrying and she might have had children, and although the trustees did not think about converting the testator's residuary reversionary estate, still, in point of fact, what they had done was the right thing to do. I cannot come to that conclusion. That conclusion first of all involves the assumption that their discretionary power was a great deal more than a power of management, which I do not think it was. And apart from that I am not at all satisfied that even if they had that power the circumstances which did exist would have justified them in exercising their discretion to the extent of saying this reversionary interest shall not be sold during the life of the tenant for life. If that power had been more extensive than I think it was it would have justified them in postponing the sale to see whether she got married or not, but not in making up their minds that it should not be sold whether she got married or not. When this poor lady became lunatic it was obviously wrong in any method of looking at it at all to keep this reversionary interest unsold. She became lunatic while she was a spinster and before she had any children, and after that it was too obviously wrong however widely you construe this power. But I fall back upon the narrower construction of the power as far as giving them discretion is concerned. I do not think the discretion went so far as to alter the rights of the tenant for life, except that they postponed the conversion of the one portion of the estate rather than another, in the management of it. Therefore I think upon the circumstances as they stand, and without imputing anything whatever against these gentlemen except an oversight, which, as I have said, ninety-nine people out of a hundred, and even ninety-nine solicitors out of a hundred, would very likely have made, the appellants here are in the right and the account must be rectified accordingly. The only other point is as to whether interest should be at 3 per cent. or 4 per cent. I have not looked it up, but I think I am right in saying that the judgment statute says that judgments shall bear interest at 4 per cent. Of course we cannot alter that here. And I think the rules say that legacies are to bear interest at 4 per cent. I think that is so. But there is no rule that I know of, and I do not speak of it without having had occasion to look at it before, which applies in terms to any question such as this or even to making good breaches of trust, and having regard to the rate of interest now, it appears to me, in a case of this kind, even quite apart from the view taken by Kekewich, J., in the case of In re Goodenough, that 3 per cent. ought to be the rate of interest and not 4 per cent. You cannot get 4 per cent. now upon any securities in which trustees have any business to deal. With that limitation I think the appeal must succeed.

RIGBY, L.J.—In this case two gentlemen—solicitors, I think—who are trustees of the will by the appointment of the testator himself for the estate, and in the events which have happened are also the beneficial residuary legatees, claim to hold the residuary estate free from any claim on the part of the representative of the tenant for life in respect of the interest which would have been produced from the sale and investment of the proceeds of a sum of £5,666 Consols. I mention these circumstances particularly, because I think they have some bearing upon the construction of what has been done under the will, but I want to make it plain that to my mind these gentlemen have not been swayed in their exercise of the power that has been given them by the will by any notions of self-interest, and in fact that they have not, except technically, done any wrong whatsoever throughout the whole administration of the estate, nor has any wrong been called to our attention, or suggested in any way. Now what in fact took place with reference to the £5,666 which is the subject of the question that is now raised—raised before Stirling, J., on the construction of the will, but raised here upon such evidence as is forthcoming—which, of course, is very slight—of what has actually been done. In the first place the £5,666 never was realized during the life of the tenant for life. I beg particularly to repeat what I have said, that I do not think anything wrong was done. If the question had been raised (I am only going on an hypothesis which I do not believe in) and clearly brought to the attention of the trustees at the time when, on their petition, the tenant for life was made a lunatic, it would have been obviously their duty, from that time forward at any rate, whatever was true of the preceding time, to provide for her estate an allowance upon the assumption that the £5,666 reversion was sold. It would have been a very grave malversation on their part if they had not made such an arrangement. The chances were enormous at that time that they would gain pecuniarily themselves by continuing to postpone the sale, and I do not hesitate to say that if we had reasons to suppose that they did it deliberately, then we should look upon their conduct in a very unfavourable view; but I am satisfied, from the affidavits which they filed at the time of the lunacy proceedings and from the affidavit which they have now filed, that the whole thing was absent from their minds, and that then and before that time, they never dreamt at all that they had any duty about selling the £5,666 reversion. I should assume that from the letter which they wrote. No doubt that letter could be explained upon production of proper evidence in the way in which it was argued by counsel that it ought to be explained. It may mean that they did not know whether upon the construction of the postponement clause they were or were not entitled to have it sold, but that is not the primâ facie meaning. The primâ facie meaning is that the question altogether—not one aspect of it, but the whole question—was brought before them for the first time, and I believe that was the fact. Then when I come to read this affidavit, I do not suggest that the affidavit was otherwise than a candid and fair affidavit, they are not able to say with truth that they exercised their discretion for one moment upon this question. I do not think they did. I do not think it ever occurred to them. I have pointed out that at the time of the lunacy it was imperative upon them, if they thought of it, to decide in a different way. It so happens—and it entirely depends upon the facts of the case—that there were no wasting stocks—leaseholds I leave out of consideration, as they are not important—but there was no wasting property that could be affected by this power of postponement, and, so far as has been brought to our attention, only one case of a reversion not producing interest. Therefore, not only is it plain that they never did exercise their discretionary power to postpone, but, in my judgment, it is plain also that they never ought to have done so. Doing so would, in effect, be a decision that they would take from the tenant for life the proportion of income to which she was entitled and present it to the remaindermen, either her children or themselves. I do not see any justification for that. I do not say that under the peculiar circumstances of this case they were bound to sell the £5,666 reversion. One knows that the court looks upon that to be as safe as possible; but I think they were bound not to exercise the power to postpone so as to produce an unequal effect between the tenant for life and the remaindermen. I say nothing as to what might have taken place if there had been wasting property that they kept on foot. There was no such thing. The exercise of their discretion must necessarily have had one result and one only, and that was to charge the tenant for life for the benefit of the remaindermen. Probably they thought that the remaindermen would be the children. When a lady has attained the age of thirty-five years, the chance of her not marrying is, well, pretty large, but that is not conclusive, of course, and, therefore, they may have thought probably that the children might be the remaindermen; but they must have known perfectly well that there was a very fair chance of their being the remaindermen themselves, and, as I say, they ought not to have gone upon the hypothesis that the children were sure to be the remaindermen. But even if the children had been the remaindermen, supposing it were quite clear that the children would take vested interests excluding the two trustees, I do not think it would have been justifiable. They have no power to take from the mother what has been mentioned as the £100 a year (I only state that as a possible sum) and give it

